WASHINGTON.—After a series of tests continuing since February the Postoffice Department has arranged for a formal six months' tryout of an invention for delivering and picking up mails by fast trains. As a demonstration of the practicability of the system a live pig, weighing 65 pounds, was recently delivered without injury at Carrollton, Ky., the home of the inventor, without the slightest injury from a train running 25 miles an hour.

For years the Postoffice Department has sought an improved method of picking up and delivering mails over the old catcher-hook system, and the new device was the result of four years' advertising by the postal authorities, urging inventors to produce something that would meet the requirements.

It is 40 years since the catcher hook came into use, and in spite of the progress in railroading and the tremendous improvement in the mail service along other directions no forward step is recorded in the matter of exchanging mail sacks by moving trains. Under this system only one small sack could be picked up at any one station, and it is a matter of official history that not infrequently, instead of catching the suspended sack of mail, the hook, operated by a mail clerk standing in the open door of the car, would snatch up a chicken coop or something else not to be found in any classification of mail matter.

The delivery of mail from moving trains is still more primitive, consisting merely of having the clerk hurl or push the sacks out of the car as the train rushes past the platform. Great numbers of persons have been injured and some killed by being struck by the whirling and rebounding sacks, thrown with the force of a catapult.

The new device has passed through a successful test of six months at Burnside station, and this decided the government to give the more extended trial.

Treasury Department Old Folks Home

I'LL SHOW 'EM
I AM STILL YOUNG

A FEW days ago a woman clerk in the office of the Comptroller of Currency, Treasury Department, celebrated the 90th anniversary of her birth.

The Treasury Department, sometimes facetiously called "the old folks' home," probably has more aged employes connected with it than any other, for it was under the late United States Treasurer, Mr. Spinner, that women were first given employment there. If the truth could be known probably other females in this department are mighty close to the 90-year mark, but, of course, they are not going to admit it, especially as the talk has been getting stronger and stronger that a superannuated list is going to be made up sooner or later, and a way found to get rid of their services.

Not so very many years ago Senator Teller of Colorado has passed in the senate a resolution calling upon the Secretary of State for a complete list of the officials and clerks in his department, together with the ages, when appointed and compensation received.

Quite a number of the venerable women clerks before that had been proud of telling their ages and boasting of how much work they could perform, but on having to give the figures for the scrutiny of the senators it was common talk around the department that a considerable lopping off of years was done, and ever since that information was called for women generally in the government service, who are approaching the sundown of life, have been mighty mum when it comes to discussing ages.

At the last session of congress numerous bills and resolutions were introduced with a view of trying to reach some solution of the problem of what to do with the aged employees of the government. Many speeches were made on the subject, but the more the question has been discussed, the more confused became the congressmen who take enough interest in the matter to be willing to go on record as being in favor of establishing a civil pension list.

Women of Diplomatic Set Are Smokers

I'LL SMOKE
ALL I PLEASE

IN CERTAIN parts of the city where society is familiar with the foreign habits of the diplomatic set and where cigarette smoking is so common among women that it is no longer a matter of much comment, there is a strong feeling that the anti-cigarette agitators have been unfair in directing their criticism at one or two individual women smokers.

The practice, it was pointed out, was not confined to any special few, but was quite general among fashionable women. As a regular feature of practically every ultra-fashionable dinner party here cigarettes are equally provided for the women. The old custom of the women leaving the men at the table to smoke has almost entirely disappeared.

At a recent amateur theatrical performance a purse was stolen from a prominent feminine member of the "younger set." The loss was advertised in the papers and among the contents of the purse was a jeweled cigarette case. The name of the owner was given without any apparent thought of embarrassment. Dealers patronized by fashionable dwellers here carry a large stock of women's cigarettes.

It is not a rare sight to see the wife of a foreign diplomat smoking complacently as she sits on the lawn of her home on a pleasant evening. Some foreign women prominent here have been known to smoke cigars.

Though these facts put the Washington situation in a light slightly different from that of other American cities, the local clergy fail to find any defense for the habit.

Where the Money of the Country Goes

THE TAXES ARE PURTY
HIGH — PURTY
HIGH TAX PAYER

THE cost of the national government is but a small part of the burden on the taxpayer. The expenses of cities are manifold greater to each person than are those of the Union. The census brings together the figures for the 158 cities of the country which have a population of 50,000 and over. Their expenditures for the year 1908 were $16.81 per capita. Boston far surpassed this ratio, and leads in moneys paid for local administration, showing an outlay for each person of $27.58; New York comes next with its municipal budget of $24.71 per capita, while Washington follows close with a cost of $24.68 for each person.

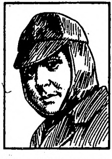
Last year under the laws of Congress for all purposes the nation spent $660,728,353. This amount cared for pensions, the army and navy, the courts, lighthouses, the foreign service and all the departments at the capital. Of this sum $7.33 on the average falls on each inhabitant. Set this over against $16.81, the average cost per capita of local rule in the cities, and $24.71 in New York city. The contrast will show that the national machinery costs less than that at home, under the very eyes of the citizens.

The public schools are maintained in the cities at a cost of $4.70 per capita, while $2.25 is paid for the police and $1.72 for the fire department. Thus schools and the police in cities cost $6.95 a year per capita, or only 38 cents per capita less than the total ordinary disbursements of the national government.

The taxpayers are proud of the public schools and do not begrudge the moneys spent for them. The police is required for the safety of the community, for the maintenance of law and order. If the funds are laid out honestly and wisely, the taxpayer will not scrimp either schools or the police.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

MOISSANT, THE MAN-BIRD



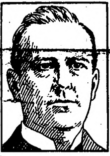
John Moissant, the young Chicagoan who startled the world by his flight across the Dover channel with a passenger on his way from Paris to London, has been a "soldier of fortune" from his early youth. Moissant was born of Spanish parents and is an architect. He suddenly came into prominence when he unexpectedly flew from Etampes to the Issy military ground, passing over the Eiffel tower.

Moissant is thirty-five years old and is of slight build. He is seemingly very jovial in temperament. He first visited Paris some months ago and became interested in the study of aviation. He had two machines built after his own designs and found the subject so fascinating that he determined to become a practical airman.

The Moissant brothers, George, Alfred and John, and two sisters, for many years had interests valued at several hundred thousand dollars in Salvador. In 1907 George and Alfred Moissant were arrested and imprisoned on charges of aiding and abetting the revolutionists. John was actively implicated in the movement against President Figueroa, and handled a rapid-fire gun for the Nicaraguans. When the revolutionists were repulsed John Moissant fled to Nicaragua. His brothers later were released, but their property was attached by the government as a bond to prevent their escape from the country.

When Moissant was sojourning in Honduras a tramp steamer loaded with a cargo valued around $100,000 was cast ashore and abandoned. In a small dugout and in the teeth of a gale Moissant made his way alone to the vessel and took possession. In the morning, when the wind had abated the captain with some of the crew and an agent of the line rowed out to the vessel, which had withstood the fury of the waves, but which was held fast on a bar in the harbor. A shot from Moissant's revolver halted them. After some warm discussion the captain had to row back to shore to inform the American consul that Moissant had seized the ship and her cargo as salvage. During the night another storm came up and finished the work of wrecking the vessel. The American consul found Moissant lashed to the topmost rigging, only a few feet above the water.

HEADS KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS

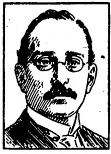


George M. Hanson, recently installed as supreme chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, hails from Maine. Mr. Hanson suggests physical and intellectual strength. Erect, broad shouldered, strong, capable of enduring vigorous and prolonged labor, and equally capable of mental activity and strain, he combines the essential qualities of a forceful and successful chief executive.

By profession a lawyer, he has been one of the leaders of the bar of his state. He has taken part in public affairs and held public office. In the city of Calais, in which he lives, he has been twice elected mayor. He was appointed collector of customs by President Cleveland, and by Governor Cobb of Maine a member of the commission for the revision and codification of the tax laws of that state.

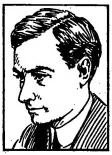
In the order of Knights of Pythias he has attained the highest honor which that organization can confer. He became a knight in 1883, and though a member of other organizations and secret societies, has given of his time and talent chiefly to this organization since that time. He was the second chancellor commander of his home lodge. As soon as he was eligible he became a member of the grand lodge of Maine, and its grand chancellor in 1893. In 1897 he was elected supreme representative and re-elected in 1901 and 1905. In the supreme lodge Mr. Hanson has been a forceful figure, for ten years a member of and for eight years chairman of the judiciary committee, that being the ranking committee of the supreme lodge.

IN THE HOUSE OF GOVERNORS



William George Jordan has been appointed secretary of the house of governors. His selection by the governors is a recognition of his services as the founder of this unique institution, which is likely to become ultimately an official feature of the government. Mr. Jordan proposed the idea several years ago. It was immediately adopted by President Roosevelt and a conference of governors was called at Washington to consider the conservation of national resources. The results of the conference were so important that the governors on their own initiative called a meeting to discuss plans for greater uniformity in state legislation. At that conference it was decided to make the house of governors a permanent institution and a resolution was passed offering a vote of thanks to Mr. Jordan for his part in the foundation and promotion of the third house. William George Jordan is a widely known editor and publicist. Some years ago he gave up editorial work to devote his time to writing. He has written largely on psychological and political topics. Mr. Jordan is the only member of the house who is not a governor.

NEW YORK'S ACTING MAYOR



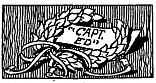
Greater far than the governorship of many states, perhaps than any of them, is the mayorship of New York, which has lately been filled by a young man of only thirty—John Purroy Mitchell, who became the acting chief executive of the metropolis upon the disability of Mr. Gaynor. He is undoubtedly the youngest chief executive any great American city has ever had and it shows the great American capacity for government when so young a man can step into a seat of power so great, of honor so high and responsibilities so vast.

Within an hour after Mayor Gaynor had been struck down by an assassin's bullet it is safe to say that at least half the men in New York who give any attention to public affairs and their management had thought of John Purroy Mitchell, the young president of the board of aldermen, who, under the charter, would succeed to the first office of the city if the mayor's wound should result fatally.

Mr. Mitchell was twenty-eight years old, and had been practising law on his own account for five years, when the making of his public record began. It was in the family to study law, and young Mitchell had determined on that before he went to college. Consequently when he came to the elective courses in his junior year he turned aside from the distinctive studies of the arts and chose those which he believed would help him in his later career. He went in for political science, the science of government, political history, and that sort of thing.

TALES OF GOTHAM AND OTHER CITIES

Light Keeper Who Died for Uncle Sam



DETROIT.—The big lighthouse at Windmill Point is sending out its warning to lake mariners every night, as it has for many years past, but no more does Capt. Edward Chambers attend the big lamp that for two years has been his care. He died recently. With the passing of Captain Chambers, or "Captain Ed," as he was known among the lakefaring people, one of the most picturesque figures of the great lakes is taken.

He was born on Mackinac island in 1852. When he went to work it was for the government, as mail carrier from Mackinac City on the mainland to the island. In summer this is a simple task. But in the winter it is different. The storms that sweep the lakes in the cold months find a clear passage in the Straits of Mackinac, and sometimes traveling over the ice is impossible. It takes a strong and resolute man to face these storms and carry the mail to the beleaguered islanders. Such a man was "Captain Ed." No day was too cold or wind too strong to keep him at home.

Since entering the lighthouse service "Captain Ed" had some of the most arduous assignments Uncle Sam's men get. For 12 years he was in charge of the lighthouse on Stannard rock, in Lake Superior. This is the farthest from land of any light the government possesses, and because of the storms in the spring and fall furnishes about the hardest work. It stands on the top of a submerged mountain, which is only six feet below the surface. Many boats had been wrecked on the rock before the government established the light.

Captain Chambers was in charge of the following lighthouses during his service: Waugoschance, three years; Iroquois, in Lake Superior, nine years, and Spectacle Reef, in upper Lake Huron, six years.

Making Ice Water From the Sunshine

OLLA
A POOR
ICE MAN
ICE MAGNATE

EL PASO, Tex.—Manufacturing a drink of ice water with nothing cooler than the sun's rays and dry tropical air would probably seem under the province of the magician to the easterner. It is nevertheless a fact that from these ever-available agencies the greater part of the population of Texas, Arizona and New Mexico manufacture their own ice water. This not only serves for drinking purposes, but also provides an efficient medium for the ordinary requirements of refrigeration—for in the cruder sections of the great southwest the artificial production of ice is still a trifle too costly to be feasible.

The secret lies wholly in the construction of the little red receptacle in which the water is placed. This is a simple Mexican creation, and in thata language is called an olla, the two l's being silent according to the Spanish pronunciation of the word. In northern Mexico olla making is a very profitable industry to the inhabitants, who carry them over into Arizona on the backs of burros.

The olla is made from a crude clayish mortar. In drying the composition becomes very porous, and it is this essential characteristic which contains the secret of the cooling process.

It is filled with water and hung up, preferably in some place which is exposed to the wind if there be any. The moisture seeps through the porous composition. The process is very slow, and the moisture which exudes evaporates into the receptive, dry atmosphere in such equable proportion that scarcely more than a drop a minute trickles away from the bottom of the olla.

It is this continuous and fairly rapid evaporation which produces the cold. Immediately the sides of the olla become chilled, and the water within grows gradually cooler. In less than an hour from the time the phenomena is begun the water is cold enough for drinking purposes, no matter how warm it might have been when poured into the receptacle. Two or three hours later it is cold enough to fill the ordinary requirements of refrigeration

New York Children Are Taught to Play

SAY, DAT'S FINE!

NEW YORK.—There are places where children have to be taught how to play. You might think that the youngsters wouldn't need instruction of this kind. You would be mistaken. Here in New York men and women spend the better part of their lives teaching thousands of children how to play, not only with their muscles, but also with their minds, writes a correspondent. A great many thousand dollars are spent annually by the city just for that purpose, and experience has proved that the time and money are well spent.

The tall tenements of the East side, as full of people as a warren is of rabbits, swarm with eager children. Their fathers and mothers were immigrants. Most of them had no boyhood or girlhood, as most people think of it. They worked for a living before they came to this country; they were hard at work in shops or factories after they came here. They had no traditions of play to hand down to their children. To them play was a foolishness.

Their children, unable to breathe in the tenements, take to the streets, which are dirty or infested with persons and things that are not good for little people to see and hear. Children who have no play places but the streets are apt to absorb unhealthful ideas as well as microbes. Pickpockets and loafers are developed that way. Besides, there is little of play that children can do in the streets. That ogre in cap and blue coat, the policeman, is always snooping about.

Merchants Offer Inducements to Wed

JUST THINK
WAREHAM
I AM

WAREHAM, Mass.—The merchants of this ambitious Cape Cod town, desiring to increase its fame and population, present and prospective, offer extraordinary inducements to sweethearts to marry here. The merchants could offer no more, save to marry the ladies themselves, and the law against bigamy is very strict.

Of course certain conditions are attached to these generous propositions; the chief is that the married couple must reside here. Wareham is altruistic, but it does not propose to help to add to the population of any other town.

These are some of the marriage inducements offered by Wareham:

Bridal dinner.

A free wedding, including marriage license and clergyman's services.

Church deacon to pass the hat for a collection for the wedded pair's benefit.

Brass band to play the wedding march and other appropriate music.

Motor launch for the honeymoon trip.

Employment for the bride every autumn at screening cranberries if she desires it.

Lawyers to give legal advice on any subject except divorce.

To further its purpose and to make the path to happiness even smoother, Wareham has established a wedding bureau. They will consider applications of those yearning to be married from every point of experience, the wise city fathers consider.

GROWING COUNTRIES.

The census department of Canada estimates the present population of the Dominion to be 7,350,000. The distribution by sections is: Maritime provinces, 1,037,112; Quebec, 2,038,461; Ontario, 2,619,025; Western provinces, 1,371,164; unorganized territories, 58,309. It is not surprising that Canada, with her many resources and her healthful climate and varied opportunities for industrial wealth-seekers, should grow all the time, says the Mexican Herald. A sturdy race which increases by the excess of births over deaths is continually being reinforced by immigration, and that of the best kind. The consuming power of the population of Canada is very large, and accounts for the heavy importations of foreign goods and the excellent support given to home industries. Argentina, with about a million less population than Canada, is rapidly increasing in wealth. It is interesting to see that the influx of immigrants into this country from Spain continues, just as it does in the case of Cuba and Argentina. The ancient Iberian motherland still breeds a sturdy race which send its sons to former colonies.

It used to be "King Cotton." Then corn came into active rivalry for supremacy. And now it looks as though rubber might be the great staple of commerce. There has been an enormous increase in the production of rubber and in importations into the United States. This is due to the rapidly augmenting demand, with rubber as an essential for automobile, bicycle and carriage tires and for other purposes. Word comes from Sumatra, which has been the source of supply for tobacco of a certain grade, that the planters are giving up the "weed" and are converting their estates into rubber farms. It is not believed, however, that tobacco growing in Connecticut, Kentucky and other American states will be supplanted by rubber production.

This is the day of the auto, the airship and the wireless telegraph. But some of the old-time slow coaches still come into play. A wealthy summer resident of Newport who went in his automobile to visit another gentleman found himself with his touring car stuck in soft sand from which it could not be moved unaided. An obliging farmer of the neighborhood hitched up his ox team and drew the machine out of the predicament into which the vehicle had plunged. Could irony further go? Still, the auto is a good and useful invention and has come to stay, although occasionally, in the case of a breakdown, it stays too long in one place.

A new compass which may supersede the compass now in general use is under test on the scout cruiser Birmingham. It is a combination of the conventional compass with the gyroscope, and is said to eliminate all varieties of deviation of the needle. It can also be placed in the interior of a ship, where it is safe from the missiles of an enemy. A compass of this kind would be extremely valuable in naval service, but it would be far more valuable to commerce, as the influences which affect the compass on modern steel ships are puzzling, and sufficient in some instances to cause wrecks through deviations from proper courses.

The census officials expect to add the names of 60 cities in the United States to the list of those having a population of 25,000 or over which was compiled in 1900. Perhaps there will be even more than 60. The invention of machinery for the farm is one of the factors that have contributed to the rise of the cities.

A New York girl who is heiress to a fortune amounting to $6,000,000 is compelled to work for the purpose of getting enough money to pay her board, because the lawyers are busy trying to divide the estate among themselves. The case affords a strong argument in favor of the "give while you live" theory.

Fair Parisiennes have adopted the hobble skirt style of bathing suit. It is absolutely impossible for them to swim when hobbled, but they probably don't mind that. If they wished to go into the water they would probably do so in their bathrooms.

Now that we get the true story of the life of the fly by the aid of the microscope we see that it merits nothing else so little as kind treatment.

Shirtwaists for men will not do. It has been decreed that men must wear coats. Old Grimes is dead, but his soul is marching on.

New York will make policemen out of farmer boys and Kansas is going to find it still harder to harvest its crops.

CONSERVATION IS PATRIOTIC DUTY

Roosevelt at St. Paul Advocates New Methods.

WASTE AND MONOPOLY WRONG

Waterways and Forests Discussed—State and Federal Control—Country Life Institute Is Favored.

St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 6.—Theodore Roosevelt was the central figure in the conservation congress today, and delivered an address that called forth the warmest praise of those who were fortunate enough to hear it. The fact that the former president was to speak attracted to the convention hall a tremendous crowd, and the man who has made conservation one of the chief issues in the United States was given the heartiest kind of a greeting.

Taking "National Efficiency" for his general subject. Mr. Roosevelt said:

America's reputation for efficiency stands deservedly high throughout the world. We are efficient probably to the full-limit that any nation can attain by the methods hitherto used. There is great reason to be proud of our achievements, and yet no reason to believe that we cannot excel our past. Through a practically unrestrained individualism, we have reached a pitch of literary unexampled material prosperity; although the distribution of this prosperity leaves much to be desired from the standpoint of justice and fair dealing. But we have not only allowed the individual a free hand, which was in the main right; we have also allowed great corporations to act as though they were individuals, and to exercise the rights of individuals, in addition to using the vast combined power of high organization and enormous wealth for their own advantage. This development of corporate action, it is true, is doubtless in large part responsible for the gigantic development of our natural resources, but it is not less responsible for waste, destruction, and monopoly on an equally gigantic scale.

The method of reckless and uncontrolled private use and waste has done for us all the good it ever can, and it is time to put an end to it before it does all the evil it easily may. We have passed the time when heedless waste and destruction, and arrogant monopoly, are any longer permissible. Henceforth we must seek National efficiency by a new and a better way, by the way of the orderly development and use, coupled with the preservation, of our natural resources by making the most of what we have for the benefit of all of us, instead of leaving the sources of material prosperity open to indiscriminate exploitation. These are some of the reasons why it is wise that we should abandon the old point of view, and why conservation has become a patriotic duty.

Waterways Development.

One of the greatest of our conservation problems is the wise and prompt development and use of the waterways of this Nation. The Twin Cities, lying as they do at the headwaters of the Mississippi, are not upon the direct line of the proposed lakes to the gulf deep waterway. Yet they are deeply interested in its prompt completion, as well as in the deepening and regulation of the Mississippi to the mouth of the Missouri and to the gulf. The project for a great trunk waterway, an arm of the sea, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Great Lakes, should not be abandoned. The lakes to the gulf deep waterway, and the development of the rivers which flow into it, should be pushed to completion vigorously and without delay.

In nearly every river city from St. Paul to the gulf the water-front is controlled by the railways. Nearly every artificial waterway in the United States, either directly or indirectly, is under the same control. It goes without saying that (unless the people prevent it in advance) the railways will attempt to take control of our waterways as fast as they are improved and completed; nor would I blame them, if we, the people, are supine in the matter. We must see to it that adequate terminals are provided in every city and town on every improved waterway, terminals open under reasonable conditions to the use of every citizen, and rigidly protected against monopoly; and we must compel the railways to co-operate with the waterways continuously, effectively, and under reasonable conditions. Unless we do so the railway lines will refuse to deliver freight to the boat lines, either openly or by imposing prohibitory conditions, and the waterways once improved will do comparatively little for the benefit of the people who pay the bill.

Adequate terminals properly controlled and open through lines by rail and boat are two absolutely essential conditions to the usefulness of inland waterway development. I believe furthermore that the railways should be prohibited from owning, controlling, or carrying any interest in the boat lines on our rivers, unless under the strictest regulation and control of the Inter-State Commerce Commission, so that the shippers' interests may be fully protected.

The National Forests.

If any proof were needed that forest protection is a National duty, the recent destruction of forests in the west by fire would supply it. Even with the aid of the army added to that of the forest service the loss has been severe. Without either it would have been vastly greater.

But the forest service does more than protect the National forests against fire. It makes them practically and increasingly useful as well. During the last year for which I have the figures the National forests were used by 22,000 cattlemen with their herds, 5,000 sheepmen with their flocks, 5,000 timbermen with their crews, and 45,000 miners. More than 5,000 persons used them for other special industries. Nearly 34,000 settlers had the free use of wood. The total resident population of the National forests is about a quarter of a million, which is larger than the population of certain states. More than 700,000 acres of agricultural land have been patented or listed for patent within the forests, and the reports of the forest officers show that more than 400,000 people a year use the forests for recreation, camping, hunting, fishing, and similar purposes. All this is done, of course, without injury to the timber, which has a value of at least a thousand million dollars. Moreover, the National forests protect the water supply of a thousand cities and towns, about 800 irrigation projects, and more than 300 power projects, not counting the use of water for these and other purposes by individual settlers.

Country Life Institute.

The investigations of the Country Life Commission have led the farmers of this country to realize that they have not been getting their fair share of progress, and all that it brings. Some of our farming communities in the Mississippi valley and in the middle west have made marvelous progress, yet even the best of them, like communities of every other kind, are not beyond improvement, while much needs to be done in some other sections to improve country life. As yet we know comparatively little of the basic facts of rural civilization. The means for better farming we have studied with care, but to better living on the farm and to better business on the farm the farmers themselves have given scant attention. One of the most urgent needs of our civilization is that the farmers themselves should undertake to get for themselves a better knowledge along these lines, and then to apply it. Sir Horace Plunkett, for many years a Wyoming cattleman, and now devoting himself in Ireland to the country life problem there, has suggested in his recent book on the "Country Life Problem in America" the creation of a Country Life institute as a center where the work and knowledge of the whole world concerning country life may be brought together for the use of every nation. I am strongly in sympathy with this idea, and I hope to see it carried out with the co-operation and assistance of our own people. Last spring, while visiting the capital of Hungary, Buda-Pesth, I was immensely impressed by the Museum of Country Life, containing an extraordinary series of studies in agriculture, in stock-raising, in forestry, in mining; the exhibits were of the utmost practical importance and were also intensely interesting and instructive.

As a people we have not yet learned to economize. One of the virtues we Americans most need is thrift. It is a mere truism to say that luxury and extravagance are not good for a Nation. So far as they affect character, the loss they cause may be beyond computation. But in the material sense there is a loss greater than is caused by both extravagance and luxury put together. I mean the needless, useless, and excessive loss to our people from premature death and avoidable diseases. Wholly apart from the grief, the suffering, and the wretchedness which they cause, the material loss each year has been calculated at nearly twice what it costs to run the Federal government. In addition to the state and city health officers and organizations, there is urgently needed a Federal bureau of health, to act, so far as the National government properly may, to relieve our people from this dreadful burden.

National Conservation Commission.

One of the most important meetings in our recent history was that of the governors in the white house in May, 1908, to consider the conservation question. By the advice of the governors the meeting was followed by the appointment of a National conservation commission. The meeting of the governors directed the attention of the country to conservation as nothing else could have done, while the work of the commission gave the movement definiteness and supplied it with a practical program. But at the moment when the commission was ready to begin the campaign for putting its program into effect an amendment to the Sundry civil service bill was introduced by a congressman from Minnesota with the purpose of putting a stop to the work so admirably begun. Congress passed the amendment. Its object was to put an end to the work of a number of commissions, which had been appointed by the president, and whose contribution to the public welfare had been simply incalculable. Among these were the commission for reorganizing the business methods of the government, the public lands commission, the country life commission, and the National conservation commission itself. When I signed the Sundry civil service bill containing this amendment, I transmitted with it as my last official act a memorandum declaring that the amendment was void, because it was an unconstitutional interference with the rights of the executive, and that if I were to remain president I would pay to it no attention whatever.

The National conservation commission thereupon became dormant. The suspension of its work came at a most unfortunate time, and there was serious danger that the progress already made would be lost. At this critical moment the National conservation association was organized. It took up the work which otherwise would not have been done, and it exercised a most useful influence in preventing bad legislation, in securing the introduction of better conservation measures at the past session of congress, and in promoting the passage of wise laws. It deserves the confidence and support of every citizen interested in the wise development and preservation of our natural resources, and in preventing them from passing into the hands of uncontrolled monopolies. It joins with the National conservation congress in holding this meeting. I am here by the joint invitation of both.

Pan-American Construction.

When the government of the United States awoke to the idea of conservation and saw that it was good, it lost no time in communicating the advantages of the new point of view to its immediate neighbors among the nations. A North American conservation conference was held in Washington, and the co-operation of Canada and Mexico in the great problem of developing the resources of the continent for the benefit of its people was asked and promised. The nations upon our northern and southern boundaries wisely realized that their opportunity to conserve the natural resources was better than ours, because with them destruction and monopolization had not gone so far as they had with us. So it is with the republics of Central and South America. Obviously they are on the verge of a period of great material progress. The development of their natural resources—their forests, their mines, their water, and their soils—will create enormous wealth. It is to the mutual interest of the United States and our sister American republics that this development should be wisely done. Our manufacturing industries offer a market for more and more of their natural wealth and raw material, while they will increasingly desire to meet that demand in commercial exchange. The more we buy from them, the more we shall sell to them. Their prosperity is inseparably involved with our own. Thank heaven, we of this continent are now beginning to realize, what in the end the whole world will realize, that normally it is a good thing for a nation to have its neighbor nations prosper. We of the United States are genuinely and heartily pleased to see growth and prosperity in Canada, in Mexico, in South America.

It is clear that unless the governments of our southern neighbors take steps in the near future by wise legislation to control the development and use of their natural resources, they will probably fall into the hands of concessionaries and promoters, with single purpose, without regard to the permanent welfare of the land in which they work, will be to make the most possible money in the shortest possible time. There will be shameful waste, destructive loss, and short-sighted disregard of the future, as we have learned by bitter experience here at home.

Unless the governments of all the American republics, including our own, enact in time such laws as will both protect their natural wealth and promote their legitimate and reasonable development, future generations will owe their misfortunes to us of today. A great patriotic duty calls upon us. We owe it to ourselves and to them to give the American republics all the help we can. The cases in which we have failed should be no less instructive than the cases in which we have succeeded. With prompt action and good will the task of saving the resources for the people is full of hope for us all.

State and Federal Control.

But while we of the United States are anxious, as I believe we are able, to be of assistance to others, there are problems of our own which we must not overlook. One of the most important conservation questions of the moment relates to the control of water power monopoly in the public interest. There is apparent to the judicious observer a distinct tendency on the part of our opponents to cloud the issue by raising the question of state as against federal jurisdiction. We are ready to meet that issue if it is forced upon us. But there is no hope for the plain people in such conflicts of jurisdiction. The essential question is not one of hair-splitting legal technicalities. It is simply this: Who can best regulate the special interests for the public good? Most of the predatory corporations are interstate or have interstate affiliations. Therefore they are largely out of reach of effective state control, and fall of necessity within the federal jurisdiction. One of the prime objects of those among them that are grasping and greedy is to avoid any effective control either by state or nation; and they advocate at this time state control simply because they believe it to be the least effective. In the great fight of the people to drive the special interests from the domination of our government, the nation is stronger and its jurisdiction is more effective than that of any state. The most effective weapon against these great corporations, most of which are financed and owned on the Atlantic coast, will be federal laws and the federal executive. That is why I so strongly oppose the demand to turn these matters over to the states. It is fundamentally a demand against the interest of the plain people, of the people of small means, against the interest of our children and our children's children; and it is primarily in the interest of the great corporations which desire to escape all government control.

The Conservation Fight.

On of the difficulties in putting into practise the conservation idea is that the field to which it applies is constantly growing in the public mind. It has been no slight task to bring before 100,000 people a great conception like that of conservation, and convince them that it is right. This much we have accomplished. But there remains much to be cleared up, and many misunderstandings to be removed. These misunderstandings are due in part at least to direct misrepresentation by the men to whose interest it is that conservation should not prosper. For example, we find it constantly said by men who should know better that temprary wthdrawals such as the withdrawals of coal lands, will permanently check development. Yet the fact is that these withdrawals have no purpose except to prevent the coal lands from passing into private ownership until congress can pass laws to open them to development under conditions just alike to the public and to the men who will do the developing. If there is delay, the responsibility for it rests, not on the men who made the withdrawals to protect the public interest, but on those who prevent congress from passing wise legislation, and so putting an end to the need for withdrawals.

Abuses committed in the name of a just cause are familiar to all of us. Many unwise things are done and many unwise measures are advocated in the name of conservation, either through ignorance, or by those whose interest lies not in promoting the movement, but in retarding it. For example, to stop water power development by needless refusal to issue permits for water power or private irrigation works on the public lands inevitably leads many men, friendly to conservation and believers in its general principles, to assume that its practical application is necessarily a check upon progress. Nothing could be more mistaken. The idea, widely circulated of late, that conservation means locking up of the natural resources for the exclusive use of future generations, is wholly mistaken. Our purpose is to make full use of these resources, but to consider our sons and daughters as well as ourselves; just as a farmer uses his farm in ways to preserve its future usefulness. Conservation is the road to national efficiency, and it stands for ample and wise development.

But in spite of these difficulties, most of which are doubtless inevitable in any movement of this kind, conservation has made marvelous progress. I have been astounded and delighted on my return from abroad at the progress made while I was away. We have a right to congratulate ourselves on this marvelous progress; but there is no reason for believing that the fight is won. In the beginning the special interests, who are our chief opponents in the conservation fight, paid little heed to the movement, because they neither understood it, nor saw that if it won they must lose. But with the progress of conservation in the minds of our people the fight is getting sharper. The nearer we approach to victory, the bitterer the opposition that we must meet, and the greater the need for caution and watchfulness. Open opposition we can overcome, but I warn you especially against the men who come to congresses such as this, ostensibly as disinterested citizens, but actually as the paid agents of the special interests. I heartily approve the attitude of any corporation, interested in the deliberations of a meeting such as ths, which comes hither to advocate, by its openly accredited agents, views which it believes the meeting should have in mind. But I condemn with equal readiness the appearance of a corporate agent before any convention who does not declare himself frankly as such.

This congress is a direct apeal to the patriotism of our whole people. The nation wisely looks to such gatherings for counsel and leadership. Let that leadership be sound, definite, practical, and on the side of all the people. It would be no small misfortune if a meeting such as this should ever fall into the hands of the open enemies or false friends of the great movement which it represents.

It is our duty and our desire to make this land of ours a better home for the race, but our duty does not stop there. We must also work for a better nation to live in this better land. The development and conservation of our national character and our free institutions must go hand in hand with the development and conservation of our natural resources, which the governor's conference so well called the foundations of our prosperity. Whatever progress we may make as a nation, whatever wealth we may accumulate, however far we may push mechanical development and production, we shall never reach a point where our welfare can depend in the last analysis on anything but honesty, courage, loyalty, and good citizenship. The homely virtues are the lasting virtues, and the road which leads to them is the road to genuine and lasting success.

What this country needs is what every free country must set before it as the great goal toward which it works—an equal oportunity for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness for every one of its citizens. To achieve this end we must put a stop to the improper political dominion, no less than to the improper economic dominion, of the great special interests. This country, its natural resources, its natural advantages, its opportunities and its institutons, belong to all its citizens. They cannot be enjoyed fully fully and freely under any governmen in which the special interests as such have a voice. The supreme political task of our day, the indispensable condition of national efficiency and national welfare, is to drive the special interests out of our public life.

INDEPENDENCE ON THE FARM

SPLENDID RESULTS FOLLOW FARMING IN THE CANADIAN WEST.

Americans in Canada Not Asked to Forget That They Were Born Americans.

Farm produce today is remunerative, and this helps to make farm life agreeable. Those who are studying the economics of the day tell us that the strength of the nation lies in the cultivation of the soil. Farming is no longer a hand-to-mouth existence. It means independence, often affluence, but certainly independence.

Calling at a farm house, near one of the numerous thriving towns of Alberta, in Western Canada, the writer was given a definition of "independence" that was accepted as quite original. The broad acres of the farmer's land had a crop—and a splendid one, too, by the way—ripening for the reapers' work. The evenness of the crop, covering field after field, attracted attention, as did also the neatness of the surroundings, the well-built substantial story-and-a-half log house, and the well-rounded sides of the cattle. His broken English—he was a French Canadian—was easily understandable and pleasant to listen to. He had come there from Montreal a year ago, had paid $20 an acre for the 320-acre farm, with the little improvement it had. He had never farmed before, yet his crop was excellent, giving evidence as to the quality of the soil, and the good judgment that had been used in its preparation. And brains count in farming as well as "braw." Asked how he liked it there, he straightened his broad shoulders, and with hand outstretched towards the waving fields of grain, this young French Canadian, model of symmetrical build, replied: "Be gosh, yes, we like him—the farmin'—well, don't we, Jeannette?" as he smilingly turned to the young wife standing near. She had accompanied him from Montreal to his far-west home, to assist him by her wifely help and companionship, in making a new home in this new land. "Yes, we come here wan year ago, and we never farm before. Near Montreal, me father, he kep de gris' mill, an' de cardin' mill, an' be gosh! he run de cheese factor' too. He work, an' me work, an' us work tarn har', be gosh! Us work for de farmer; well 'den, sometin' go not always w'at you call de' right, an' de farmer he say de' mean t'ing, be gosh! and tell us go to —well, anyway he tarn mad. Now," and then he waved his hand again towards the fields, "I 'ave no bodder, no cardin' mill, no gris' mill, no cheese factor'. I am now de farmer man an' when me want to, me can say to de oder fellow! you go——! Well, we like him—the farmin'." And that was a good definition of independence.

RANG THE BELL, ALL RIGHT.

Throughout a trip of several hundred miles in the agricultural district of Western Canada, the writer found the farmers in excellent spirits, an optimistic feeling being prevalent everywhere. It will be interesting to the thousands on the American side of the line to know that their relatives and friends are doing well there, that they have made their home in a country that stands up so splendidly under what has been trying conditions in most of the northwestern part of the farming districts of the continent. With the exception of some portions of Southern Alberta, and also a portion of Manitoba and Southern Saskatchewan the grain crops could be described as fair, good and excellent. The same drought that affected North and South Dakota, Montana, Minnesota, Wisconsin and other of the northern central states extended over into a portion of Canada just mentioned. But in these portions the crops for the past four or five years were splendid and the yields good.

The great province of Saskatchewan has suffered less from drought in proportion to her area under cultivation than either of the other provinces. On the other hand, instead of the drought being confined very largely to the south of the main line of the C. P. R. it is to be found in patches right through the center of northern Saskatchewan also. In spite of this, however, Saskatchewan has a splendid crop. A careful checking of the averages of yield, with the acreages in the different districts, gives an average yield of 15½ bushels to the acre.

In Southern Alberta one-fifth of the winter wheat will not be cut, or has been re-sown to feed. There are individual crops which will run as high as 45 bushels on acres of 500 and 1,000 acres, but there are others which will drop as low as 15. A safe average for winter wheat will be 19 bushels. The sample is exceptionally fine, excepting in a few cases where it has been wrinkled by extreme heat.

The northern section of Alberta has been naturally anxious to impress the world with the fact that it has not suffered from drought, and this is quite true. Wheat crops run from 20 to 30 bushels to an acre, but in a report such as this it is really only possible to deal with the province as a whole and while the estimate may seem very low to the people of Alberta, it is fair to the province throughout.

When the very light rainfall and other eccentricities of the past season are taken into account, it seems nothing short of a miracle that the Canadian West should have produced 102 million bushels of wheat, which is less than 18 million bushels short of the crop of 1909. It is for the West generally a paying crop and perhaps the best advertisement the country has ever had, as it shows that no matter how dry the year, with thorough tillage, good seed and proper methods of conserving the moisture, a crop can always be produced.

As some evidence of the feeling of the farmers, are submitted letters written by farmers but a few days ago, and they offer the best proof that can be given.

Maidstone, Sask., Aug. 4, '10.

I came to Maidstone from Menominee, Wis., four years ago, with my parents and two brothers. We all located homesteads at that time and now have our patents. The soil is a rich black loam as good as I have ever seen. We have had good crops each year and in 1909 they were exceedingly good. Wheat yielding from 22 to 40 bushels per acre and oats from 40 to 80. We are well pleased with the country and do not care to return to our native state. I certainly believe that Saskatchewan is just the place for a hustler to get a start and make himself a home. Wages here for farm labor range from $35 to $45 per month. Lee Dow.

Tofield, Alberta, July 10, 1910.

I am a native of Texas, the largest and one of the very best states of the Union. I have been here three years and have not one desire to return to the States to live. There is no place I know of that offers such splendid inducements for capital, brain and brawn. I would like to say to all who are not satisfied where you are, make a trip to Western Canada; if you do not like it you will feel well repaid for your trip. Take this from one who's on the ground. We enjoy splendid government, laws, school, railway facilities, health, and last, but not least, an ideal climate, and this from a Texan. O. L. Pughs.

James Normur of Porter, Wisconsin, after visiting Dauphin, Manitoba, says: "I have been in Wisconsin 25 years, coming out from Norway. Never have I seen better land and the crops in East Dauphin are better than I have ever seen, especially the oats. There is more straw and it has heavier heads than ours in Wisconsin.

"This is just the kind of land we are looking for. We are all used to mixed farming and the land we have seen is finely adapted to that sort of work. Cattle, hogs, horses and grain will be my products, and for the live stock, prospects could not be better. I have never seen such cattle as are raised here on the wild prairie grasses and the vetch that stands three or four feet high in the groves and on the open prairie.

Sir Wilfred Laurier Talks to Americans.

Sir Wilfred Laurier, Premier of Canada, is now making a tour of Western Canada and in the course of his tour he has visited many of the districts in which Americans have settled. He expresses himself as highly pleased with them. At Craig, Saskatchewan, the American settlers joined with the others in an address of welcome. In replying Sir Wilfred said in part:

"I understand that many of you have come from the great Republic to the south of us—a land which is akin to us by blood and tradition. I hope that in coming from a free country you realize that you come also to another free country, and that although you came from a republic you have come to what is a crowned democracy. The King, our sovereign, has perhaps not so many powers as the President of the United States, but whether we are on the one side of the line or the other, we are all brothers by blood, by kinship, by ties of relationship. In coming here as you have come and becoming naturalized citizens of this country no one desires you to forget the land of your ancestors. It would be a poor man who would not always have in his heart a fond affection for the land which he came from. The two greatest countries today are certainly the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the Republic of the United States. Let them be united together and the peace of the world will be forever assured.

"I hope that in coming here as you have, you have found liberty, justice and equality of rights. In this country, as in your own, you know nothing of separation of creed and race, for you are all Canadians here. And if I may express a wish it is that you would become as good Canadians as you have been good Americans and that you may yet remain good Americans. We do not want you to forget what you have been; but we want you to look more to the future than to the past. Let me, before we part, tender you the sincere expression of my warmest gratitude for your reception."

STANDS STRONGLY FOR CONSERVATION

President Taft's Address Before Congress at St. Paul.

DANGER IN CONTINUED WASTE

Chief Executive Outlines Plans Which He Believes Should Be Adopted—Statistics Make Speech Comprehensive to Hearers.

St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 5.—President Taft delivered his long-expected speech before the National Conservation congress here today. Substantially it was as follows:

Gentlemen of the National Conservation Congress:

Conservation as an economic and political term has come to mean the preservation of our natural resources for economical use, so as to secure the greatest good to the greatest number.

The danger to the state and to the people at large from the waste and dissipation of our national wealth is not one which quickly impresses itself on the people of the older communities, because its most obvious instances do not occur in their neighborhood, while in the newer part of the country the sympathy with expansion and development is so strong that the danger is scoffed at or ignored. Among scientific men and thoughtful observers, however, the danger has always been present; but it needed some one to bring home the crying need for a remedy of this evil so as to impress itself on the public mind and lead to the formation of public opinion and action by the representatives of the people. Theodore Roosevelt took up this task in the last two years of his second administration, and well did he perform it.

As president of the United States I have, as it were, inherited this policy, and I rejoice in my heritage. I prize my high opportunity to do all that an executive can do to help a great people realize a great national ambition. For conservation is national. It affects every man of us, every woman, every child. What I can do in the cause I shall do, not as president of a party, but as president of the whole people. Conservation is not a question of politics, or of factions, or of persons. It is a question that affects the vital welfare of all of us—of our children and our children's children. I urge that no good can come from meetings of this sort unless we ascribe to those who take part in them, and who are apparently striving worthily in the cause, all proper motives, and unless we judicially consider every measure or method proposed with a view to its effectiveness in achieving our common purpose, and wholly without regard to who proposes it or who will claim the credit for its adoption. The problems are of very great difficulty and call for the calmest consideration and clearest foresight. Many of the questions presented have phases that are new in this country, and it is possible that in their solution we may have to attempt first one way and then another. What I wish to emphasize, however, is that a satisfactory conclusion can only be reached promptly if we avoid acrimony, imputations of bad faith, and political controversy.

The public domain of the government of the United States, including all the cessions from those of the thirteen states that made cessions to the United States and including Alaska, amounted in all to about 1,800,000,000 acres. Of this there is left as purely government property outside of Alaska something like 700,000,000 of acres. Of this the national forest reserves in the United States proper embrace 144,000,000 acres. The rest is largely mountain or arid country, offering some opportunity for agriculture by dry farming and by reclamation, and containing metals as well as coal, phosphates, oils, and natural gas. Then the government owns many tracts of land lying along the margins of streams that have water power, the use of which is necessary in the conversion of the power into electricity and its transmission.

I shall divide my discussion under the heads of (1) agricultural lands; (2) mineral lands—that is, lands containing metalliferous minerals; (3) forest lands; (4) coal lands; (5) oil and gas lands; and (6) phosphate lands.

Agricultural Lands.

The original homestead law, with the requirements of residence and cultivation for five years, much more strictly enforced than ever before.

The enlarged homestead act, applying to nonirrigable lands only, requiring five years' residence and continuous cultivation of one-fourth of the area.

The desert-land act, which requires on the part of the purchaser the ownership of a water right and thorough reclamation of the land by irrigation, and the payment of $1.25 per acre.

The donation or Carey act, under which the state selects the land and provides for its reclamation, and the title vests in the settler who resides upon the land and cultivates it and pays the cost of the reclamation.

The national reclamation homestead law, requiring five years' residence and cultivation by the settler on the land irrigated by the government, and payment by him to the government of the cost of the reclamation.

The present congress passed a bill of great importance, severing the ownership of coal by the government in the ground from the surface and permitting homestead entries upon the surface of the land, which, when perfected, give the settler the right to farm the surface, while the coal beneath the surface is retained in ownership by the government and may be disposed of by it under other laws.

There is no crying need for radical reform in the methods of disposing of what are really agricultural lands. The present laws have worked well. The enlarged homestead law has encouraged the successful farming of lands in the semiarid regions. Of course the teachings of the agricultural department as to how these subarid lands may be treated and the soil preserved for useful culture are of the very essence of conservation. Then conservation of agricultural lands is shown in the reclamation of arid lands by irrigation and I should devote a few words to what the government has done and is doing in this regard.

Reclamation.

By the reclamation act a fund has been created of the proceeds of the public lands of the United States with which to construct works for storing great bodies of water at proper altitudes from which, by a suitable system of canals and ditches, the water is to be distributed over the arid and subarid lands of the government to be sold to settlers at a price sufficient to pay for the improvements. Primarily, the projects are and must be for the improvement of public lands. Incidentally, where private land is also within reach of the water supply—the furnishing at cost or profit of this water to private owners by the government is held by the federal court of appeals not to be a usurpation of power. But certainly this ought not to be done except from surplus water, not needed for government land. The total sum already accumulated in the reclamation fund is $60,273,-254.22, and of that all but $6,491,965.34 has been expended. It became very clear to congress at its last session, from the statements made by experts, that these 30 projects could not be promptly completed with the balance remaining on hand or with the funds likely to accrue in the near future. It was found, moreover, that there are many settlers who have been led into taking up lands with the hope and understanding of having water furnished in a short time, who are left in a most distressing situation. I recommended to congress that authority be given to the secretary of the interior to issue bonds in anticipation of the assured earnings by the projects, so that the projects, worthy and feasible, might be promptly completed, and the settlers might be relieved from their present inconvenience and hardship. In authorizing the issue of these projects, congress limited the application of their proceeds to those projects which a board of army engineers, to be appointed by the president, should examine and determine to be feasible and worthy of completion. The board has been appointed and soon will make its report.

Suggestions have been made that the United States ought to aid in the drainage of swamp lands belonging to the states or private owners, because, if drained, they would be exceedingly valuable for agriculture and contribute to the general welfare by extending the area of cultivation. I deprecate the agitation in favor of such legislation. It is inviting the general government into contribution from its treasury toward enterprises that should be conducted either by private capital or at the instance of the state. In these days there is a disposition to look too much to the federal government for everything. I am liberal in the construction of the Constitution with reference to federal power; but I am firmly convinced that the only safe course for us to pursue is to hold fast to the limitations of the Constitution and to regard as sacred the powers of the states. We have made wonderful progress and at the same time have preserved with judicial exactness the restrictions of the Constitution. There is an easy way in which the Constitution can be violated by congress without judicial inhibition, to-wit, by appropriations from the national treasury for unconstitutional purposes. It will be a sorry day for this country if the time ever comes when our fundamental compact shall be habitually disregarded in this manner.

Mineral Lands.

By mineral lands I mean those lands bearing metals, or what are called metalliferous minerals. The rules of ownership and disposition of these lands were first fixed by custom in the west, and then were embodied in the law, and they have worked, on the whole, so fairly and well that I do not think it is wise to attempt to change or better them.

Forest Lands.

Nothing can be more important in the matter of conservation than the treatment of our forest lands. It was probably the ruthless destruction of forests in the older states that first called attention to a halt in the waste of our resources. This was recognized by congress by an act authorizing the executive to reserve from entry and set aside public timber lands as national forests. Speaking generally, there has been reserved of the existing forests about seventy per cent. of all the timber lands of the government. Within these forests (including 26,000,000 acres in two forests in Alaska) are 192,-000,000 of acres, of which 166,000,000 of acres are in the United States proper and include within their boundaries something like 22,000,000 of acres that belong to the state or to private individuals. We have then, excluding Alaska forests, a total of about 144,000,000 acres of forests belonging to the government which is being treated in accord with the principles of scientific forestry.

The government timber in this country amounts to only one-fourth of all the timber, the rest being in private ownership. Only three per cent. of that which is in private ownership is looked after properly and treated according to modern rules of forestry. The usual destructive waste and neglect continues in the remainder of the forests owned by private persons and corporations. It is estimated that fire alone destroys $50,000,-000 worth of timber a year. The management of forests not on public land is beyond the jurisdiction of the federal government. If anything can be done by law it must be done by the state legislatures. I believe that it is within their constitutional power to require the enforcement of regulations in the general public interest, as to fire and other causes of waste in the management of forests owned by private individuals and corporations.

I have shown sufficiently the conditions as to federal forestry to indicate that no further legislation is needed at the moment except an increase in the fire protection to national forests and an act vesting the executive with full power to make forest reservations in every state where government land is timber-covered, or where the land is needed for forestry purposes.

Coal Lands.

The next subject, and one most important for our consideration, is the disposition of the coal lands in the United States and in Alaska. First, as to those in the United States. At the beginning of this administration they were classified coal lands amounting to 5,476,000 acres, and there were withdrawn from entry for purposes of classification 17,-867,000 acres. Since that time there have been withdrawn by my order from entry for classification 77,648,000 acres, making a total withdrawal of 95,515,000 acres. Meantime, of the acres thus withdrawn, 11,371,000 have been classified and found not to contain coal, and have been restored to agricultural entry, and 4,256,000 acres have been classified as coal lands; while 79,788,000 acres remain withdrawn from entry and await classification. In addition 336,000 acres have been classified as coal lands without prior withdrawal, thus increasing the classified coal lands to 10,168,000 acres.

Under the laws providing for the disposition of coal lands, the minimum price at which lands are permitted to be sold is $10 an acre; but the secretary of the interior has the power to fix a maximum price and sell at that price. By the first regulations governing appraisal, approved April 8, 1907, the minimum was $10, as provided by law, and the maximum was $100, and the highest price actually placed upon any land sold was $75. Under the new regulations, adopted April 10, 1909, the maximum price was increased to $300, except in regions where there are large mines, where no maximum limit is fixed and the price is determined by the estimated tons of coal to the acre. The highest price fixed for any land under this regulation has been $608. The appraisal value of the lands classified as coal lands and valued under the new and old regulations is shown to be as follows: 4,303,921 acres, valued under the old regulations at $77,644,329, an average of $18 an acre; and 5,864,702 acres classified and valued under the new regulation at $394,-203,242, or a total of 10,168,623 acres, valued at $471,847,571.

For the year ending March 31, 1909, 227 coal entries were made, embracing an area of 35,331 acres, which sold for $663,-620.40. For the year ending March 31, 1910, there were 175 entries, embracing an area of 25,412 acres, which sold for $608,-012; and down to August, 1910, there were but 17 entries, with an area of 1,720 acres, which sold for $22,810.60, making a disposition of the coal lands in the last two years of about 60,000 acres for $1,305,000.

The present congress, as already said, has separated the surface of coal lands, either classified or withdrawn for classification, from the coal beneath, so as to permit at all times homestead entries upon the surface of lands useful for agriculture and to reserve the ownership in the coal to the government. The question which remains to be considered is whether the existing law for the sale of the coal in the ground should continue in force or be repealed and a new method of disposition adopted. Under the present law the absolute title in the coal beneath the surface passes to the grantee of the government. The price fixed is upon an estimated amount of the tons of coal per acre beneath the surface, and the prices are fixed so that the earnings will only be a reasonable profit upon the amount paid and the investment necessary. But, of course, this is more or less guesswork, and the government parts with the ownership of the coal in the ground absolutely. Authorities of the geological survey estimate that in the United States today there is a supply of about three thousand billions of tons of coal, and that of this one thousand billions are in the public domain. Of course, the other two thousand billions are within private ownership and under no more control as to the use or the prices at which the coal may be sold than any other private property. If the government leases the coal lands and acts as any landlord would, and imposes conditions in its leases like those which are now imposed by the owners in fee of coal mines in the various coal regions of the east, then it would retain over the disposition of the coal deposits a choice as to the assignee of the lease, or of resuming possession at the end of the term of the lease, which might easily be framed to enable it to exercise a limited but effective control in the disposition and sale of the coal to the public. It has been urged that the leasing system has never been adopted in this country, and that its adoption would largely interfere with the investment of capital and the proper development and opening up of the coal resources. I venture to differ entirely from this view.

The question as to how great an area ought to be included in a lease to one individual or corporation, is not free from difficulty; but in view of the fact that the government retains control as owner, I think there might be some liberality in the amount leased, and that 2,500 acres would not be too great a maximum.

By the opportunity to readjust the terms upon which the coal shall be held by the tenant, either at the end of each lease or at periods during the term, the government may secure the benefit of sharing in the increased price of coal and the additional profit made by the tenant. By imposing conditions in respect to the character of work to be done in the mines, the government may control the character of the development of the mines and the treatment of employes with reference to safety. By denying the right to transfer the lease except by the written permission of the governmental authorities, it may withhold the needed consent when it is proposed to transfer the leasehold to persons interested in establishing a monopoly of coal production in any state or neighborhood. The change from the absolute grant to the leasing system will involve a good deal of trouble in the outset, and the training of experts in the matter of making proper leases; but the change will be a good one and can be made. The change is in the interest of conservation, and I am glad to approve it.

Alaska Coal Lands.

The investigation of the geological survey show that the coal properties in Alaska cover about 1,200 square miles, and that there are known to be available about 15,000,000,000 tons. This is, however, an underestimate of the coal in Alaska, because further developments will probably increase this amount many times; but we can say with considerable certainty that there are two fields on the Pacific slope which can be reached by railways at a reasonable cost from deep water—in one case about fifty miles and in the other case of about 150 miles—which will afford certainly 6,000,000,000 tons of coal, more than half of which is of a very high grade of bituminous and of anthracite. It is estimated to be worth, in the ground, one-half a cent a ton, which makes its value per acre from $50 to $500. The coking-coal lands of Pennsylvania are worth from $800 to $2,000 an acre, while other Appalachian fields are worth from $10 to $386 an acre, and the fields in the central states from $10 to $2,000 an acre, and in the Rocky mountains $10 to $500 an acre. The demand for coal on the Pacific coast is for about 4,500,000 tons a year. It would encounter the competition of cheap fuel oil, of which the equivalent of 12,000,000 tons of coal a year is used there. It is estimated that the coal could be laid down at Seattle or San Francisco, a high-grade bituminous, at $4 a ton and anthracite at $5 or $6 a ton. The price of coal on the Pacific slope varies greatly from time to time in the year and from year to year—from $4 to $12 a ton. With a regular coal supply established, the expert of the geological survey, Mr. Brooks, who has made a report on the subject, does not think there would be an excessive profit in the Alaska coal mining because the price at which the coal could be sold would be considerably lowered by competition from these fields and by the presence of crude fuel oil. The history of the laws affecting the disposition of Alaska coal lands shows them to need amendment badly.

On November 12, 1906, President Roosevelt issued an executive order withdrawing all coal lands from location and entry in Alaska. On May 16, 1907, he modified the order so as to permit valid locations made prior to the withdrawal on November 12, 1906, to proceed to entry and patent. Prior to that date some 900 claims had been filed, most of them said to be illegal because either made fraudulently by dummy entrymen in the interest of one individual or corporation, or because of agreements made prior to location between the applicants to co-operate in developing the lands. There are 33 claims for 160 acres each, known as the "Cunningham claims," which are claimed to be valid on the ground that they were made by an attorney for 33 different and bona fide claimants who, as alleged, paid their money and took the proper steps to locate their entries and protect them. The representatives of the government in the hearings before the land office have attacked the validity of these Cunningham claims on the ground that prior to their location there was an understanding between the claimants to pool their claims after they had been perfected and unite them in one company. The trend of decision seems to show that such an agreement would invalidate the claims, although under the subsequent law of May 28, 1908, the consolidation of such claims was permitted, after location and entry, in tracts of 2,560 acres. It would be, of course, improper for me to intimate what the result of the issue as to the Cunningham and other Alaska claims is likely to be, but it ought to be distinctly understood that no private claims for Alaska coal lands have as yet been allowed or perfected, and also that whatever the result as to pending claims, the existing coal-land laws of Alaska are most unsatisfactory and should be radically amended. To begin with, the purchase price of the land is a flat rate of $10 per acre, although, as we have seen, the estimate of the agent of the geological survey would carry up the maximum of value to $500 an acre. In my judgment it is essential in the proper development of Alaska that these coal lands should be opened, and that the Pacific slope should be given the benefit of the comparatively cheap coal of fine quality which can be furnished at a reasonable price from these fields; but the public, through the government, ought certainly to retain a wise control and interest in these coal deposits, and I think it may do so safely if congress will authorize the granting of leases, as already suggested for government coal lands in the United States, with provisions forbidding the transfer of the leases except with the consent of the government, thus preventing their acquisition by a combination or monopoly and upon limitations as to the area to be included in any one lease to one individual, and at a certain moderate rental, with royalties upon the coal mined proportioned to the market value of the coal either at Seattle or at San Francisco. Of course such leases should contain conditions requiring the erection of proper plants, the proper development by modern mining methods of the properties leased, and the use of every known and practical means and device for saving the life of the miners.

In the last administration there were withdrawn from agricultural entry 2,820,-000 acres of supposed oil land in California; about a million and a half acres in Louisiana, of which only 6,500 acres were known to be vacant unappropriated land; 75,000 acres in Oregon and 174,-000 acres in Wyoming, making a total of nearly 4,000,000 acres. In September, 1909, I directed that all public oil lands, whether then withdrawn or not, should be withheld from disposition pending congressional action, for the reason that the existing placer mining law, although made applicable to deposits of this character, is not suitable to such lands, and for the further reason that it seemed desirable to reserve certain fuel-oil deposits for the use of the American navy. Accordingly the form of all existing withdrawals was changed, and new withdrawals aggregating 2,750,000 acres were made in Arizona, California, Colorado, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming. Field examinations during the year showed that of the original withdrawals, 2,170,-000 acres were not valuable for oil, and they were restored for agricultural entry. Meantime, other withdrawals of public oil lands in these states were made, so that July 1, 1910, the outstanding withdrawals then amounted to 4,550,000 acres.

The needed oil and gas law is essentially a leasing law. In their natural occurrence, oil and gas cannot be measured in terms of acres, like coal, and it follows that exclusive title to these products can normally be secured only after they reach the surface. Oil should be disposed of as a commodity in terms of barrels of transportable product rather than in acres of real estate. This is, of course, the reason for the practically universal adoption of the leasing system wherever oil land is in private ownership. The government thus would not be entering on an experiment, but simply putting into effect a plan successfully operated in private contracts. Why should not the government as a landowner deal directly with the oil producer rather than through the intervention of a middleman to whom the government gives title to the land?

The principal underlying feature of such legislation should be the exercise of beneficial control rather than the collection of revenue. As not only the largest owner of oil lands, but as a prospective large consumer of oil by reason of the increasing use of fuel oil by the navy, the federal government is directly concerned both in encouraging rational development and at the same time insuring the longest possible life to the oil supply.

One of the difficulties presented, especially in the California fields, is that the Southern Pacific railroad owns every other section of land in the oil field, and in those fields the oil seems to be in a common reservoir, or series of reservoirs, communicating through the oil sands, so that the excessive draining of oil at one well, or on the railroad territory generally, would exhaust the oil in the government land. Hence it is important that if the government is to have its share of the oil it should begin the opening of wells on its own property.

It has been suggested, and I believe the suggestion to be a sound one, that permits be issued to a prospector for oil giving him the right to prospect for two years over a certain tract of government land for the discovery of oil, the right to be evidenced by a license for which he pays a small sum. When the oil is discovered, then he acquires title to a certain tract, much in the same way as he would acquire title under a mining law. Of course if the system of leasing is adopted, then he would be given the benefit of a lease upon terms like that above suggested. What has been said in respect to oil applies also to government gas lands.

Phosphate Lands.

Phosphorus is one of the three essentials to plant growth, the other elements being nitrogen and potash. Of these three, phosphorus is by all odds the scarcest element in nature. It is easily extracted in useful form from the phosphate rock, and the United States contains the greatest known deposits of this rock in the world. They are found in Wyoming, Utah and Florida, as well as in South Carolina, Georgia and Tennessee. The government phosphate lands are confined to Wyoming, Utah and Florida. Prior to March 4, 1909, there were 4,000,000 acres withdrawn from agricultural entry in the ground that the land covered phosphate rock. Since that time, 2,322,000 acres of the land thus withdrawn was found not to contain phosphate in profitable quantities, while 1,678,000 acres was classified properly as phosphate lands. During this administration there has been withdrawn and classified 427,000 acres, so that today there is classified as phosphate rock land 2,115,000 acres. This rock is most important in the composition of fertilizers to improve the soil, and as the future is certain to create an enormous demand throughout this country for fertilization, the value to the public of such deposits as these can hardly be exaggerated. Certainly with respect to these deposits a careful policy of conservation should be followed. A law that would provide a leasing system for the phosphate deposits, together with a provision for the separation of the surface and mineral rights as is already provided for in the case of coal, would seem to meet the need of promoting the development of these deposits and their utilization in the agricultural lands of the west. If it is thought desirable to discourage the exportation of phosphate rock and the saving of it for our own lands, this purpose could be accomplished by conditions in the lease granted by the government to its lessees. Of course, under the constitution the government could not tax and could not prohibit the exportation of phosphate, but as proprietor and owner of the lands in which the phosphate is deposited it could impose conditions upon the kind of sales, whether foreign or domestic, which the lessees might make of the phosphate mined.

Water-Power Sites.

Prior to March 4, 1909, there had been, on the recommendation of the reclamation service, withdrawn from agricultural entry, because they were regarded as useful for water-power sites which ought not to be disposed of as agricultural lands, tracts amounting to about four million acres. The withdrawals were hastily made and included a great deal of land that was not useful for power sites. They were intended to include the power sites on 29 rivers in nine states. Since that time 2,475,443 acres have been restored for settlement of the original four million, because they do not contain power sites; and meantime there have been newly withdrawn 1,245,892 acres on vacant public land and 211,007 acres on entered public land, or a total of 1,456,899 acres. These withdrawals made from time to time cover all the power sites included in the first withdrawals, and many more, on 135 rivers and in 11 states. The disposition of these power sites involves one of the most difficult questions presented in carrying out practical conservation.

The statute of 1891 with its amendments permits the secretary of the interior to grant perpetual easements or rights of way from water sources over public lands for the primary purpose of irrigation and such electrical current as may be incidentally developed, but no grant can be made under this statute to concerns whose primary purpose is generating and handling electricity. The statute of 1901 authorizes the secretary of the interior to issue revocable permits over the public lands to electrical power companies, but this statute is woefully inadequate because it does not authorize the collection of a charge or fix a term of years. Capital is slow to invest in an enterprise founded on a permit revocable at will.

It is the plain duty of the government to see to it that in the utilization and development of all this immense amount of water power, conditions shall be imposed that will prevent monopoly and will prevent extortionate charges, which are the accompaniment of monopoly. The difficulty of adjusting the matter is accentuated by the relation of the power sites to the water, the fall and flow of which create the power. In the states where these sites are, the riparian owner does not control or own the power in the water which flows past his land. That power is under the control and within the grant of the state, and generally the rule is that the first water user is entitled to the enjoyment. Now, the possession of the bank or water-power site over which the water is to be conveyed in order to make the power useful, gives to its owner an advantage and a certain kind of control over the use of the water power, and it is proposed that the government in dealing with its own lands should use this advantage and lease lands for power sites to those who would develop the power, and impose conditions on the leasehold with reference to the reasonableness of the rates at which the power, when transmuted, is to be furnished to the public, and forbidding the union of the particular power with a combination of others made for the purpose of monopoly by forbidding assignment of the lease save by consent of the government. Serious difficulties are anticipated by some in such an attempt on the part of the general government, because of the sovereign control of the state over the water power in its natural condition, and the mere proprietorship of the government in the riparian lands. It is contended that through its mere proprietary right in the site, the central government has no power to attempt to exercise police jurisdiction with reference to how the water power in a river owned and controlled by the state shall be used, and that it is a violation of the state's rights. I question the validity of this objection. The government may impose any conditions that it chooses in its lease of its own property, even though it may have the same purpose, and in effect accomplish just what the state would accomplish by the exercise of its sovereignty. There are those (and the director of the geological survey, Mr. Smith, who has given a great deal of attention to this matter, is one of them) who insist that this matter of transmuting water power into electricity, which can be conveyed all over the country and across state lines, is a matter that ought to be retained by the general government, and that it should avail itself of the ownership of these power sites for the very purpose of co-ordinating in one general plan the power generated from these government owned sites.

Arguments Against Idea.

On the other hand, it is contended that it would relieve a complicated situation if the control of the water-power site and the control of the water were vested in the same sovereignty and ownership, viz., the states, and then were disposed of for development to private lessees under the restrictions needed to preserve the interests of the public from the extortions and abuses of monopoly. Therefore, bills have been introduced in congress providing that whenever the state authorities deem a water power useful they may apply to the government of the United States for a grant to the state of the adjacent land for a water-power site, and that this grant from the federal government to the state shall contain a condition that the state shall never part with the title to the water-power site or the water power, but shall lease it only for a term of years not exceeding fifty, with provisions in the lease by which the rental and the rates for which the power is furnished to the public shall be readjusted at periods less than the term of the lease, say, every ten years. The argument is urged against this disposition of power sites that legislators and state authorities are more subject to corporate influence and control than would be the central government; in reply it is claimed that a readjustment of the terms of leasehold every ten years would secure to the public and the state just and equitable terms.

I do not express an opinion upon the controversy thus made or a preference as to the two methods of treating water-power sites. I shall submit the matter to congress and urge that one or the other of the two plans be adopted.

I have referred to the course of the last administration and of the present one in making withdrawals of government lands from entry under homestead and other laws and of congress in removing all doubt as to the validity of these withdrawals as a great step in the direction of practical conservation. But it is only one of two necessary steps to effect what should be our purpose. It has produced a status quo and prevented waste and irrevocable disposition of the lands until the method for their proper disposition can be formulated. But it is of the utmost importance that such withdrawals should not be regarded as the final step in the course of conservation, and that the idea should not be allowed to spread that conservation is the tying up of the natural resources of the government for indefinite withholding from use and the remission to remote generations to decide what ought to be done with these means of promoting present general human comfort and progress. For, if so, it is certain to arouse the greatest opposition to conservation as a cause, and if it were a correct expression of the purpose of conservationists it ought to arouse this opposition. As I have said elsewhere, the problem is how to save and how to utilize, how to conserve and still develop; for no sane person can contend that it is for the common good that nature's blessings should be stored only for unborn generations.

I beg of you, therefore, in your deliberations and in your informal discussions, when men come forward to suggest evils that the promotion of conservation is to remedy, that you invite them to point out the specific evils and the specific remedies; that you invite them to come down to details in order that their discussions may flow into chanels that shall be useful rather than into periods that shall be eloquent and entertaining, without shedding real light on the subject. The people should be shown exactly what is needed in order that they make their representatives in congress and the state legislature do their intelligent bidding.

FISHING TIME IN THE PASIG

Swimming in Myriads Near Surface They Are Snared and Speared by Filipinos.

Friday morning Filipinos snaring eels and other fish in the Pasig near the old captain of the port building by the aid of fish snares caught the largest eel ever seen on the water front. It was fully ten feet in length.

Both banks of the Pasig and all the ships and lighters moored in the stream were thronged with hundreds of Filipinos with snares and spears trying to catch the fish that in myriads were swimming near the surface of the stream.

Natives when asked in regard to the phenomenon were almost unanimously in their statement to the effect that at this time of the year the bottom of the river gets hot and that the fish have to leave the depths of the stream and flash back and forth on or near the surface.

Another theory that seemed to have a great many adherents was to the effect that at this time every year there was a change in the character of the water, this change acting on the fish as a stimulant.

This theory was advanced by an old pilot who has witnessed the phenomenon for many years.—Manila Times.

Read the announcement of Albert Berg published in an other colum, and see the, clear cut indorsement of the Republican party platform. That's the man to send for state senator from this district!

The Socialist party have a full legislative ticket in the field. Both the candidate for senator and representative live at Bemiji, but they will get a good vote in the town of Highlanding, which will help some.

The Red Lake Falls and Thief River Falls papers are in a red hot county division fight, and are sending out lots of free sample copys, but free sample newspapers are like boughten kisses, they lack the flavor. But go to it gentelmen! Both towns have a few "smarties" who think they know it all, and somemore.

If Senator Hanson expepcts to get republican votes for his nomination, why does he persist in in refuseing to indorse the republican platform? Republicans of the 61st, District! Do you want to send a man down to St. Paul to represent you in the legislature, that is going down there with the avowed intention of fighting the REPUBLICAN PARTY? If you do, vote for Hanson.

The farmers of Polk county should stand loyaly by senator A. D. Stephens, in his fight for nomination for state senator. There is not another man in the northern part of the state that has worked so faithful and done so much in the state legislature, for the advancement of the northern Minnesota farmers interests, as has Senator Stephens. Be sure to go to election and give him a vote on September 20th,.

The latest returns from the Steenerson campaign indicate that he will be renominated for his return to congress by a large majority. In view of this fact we hope that the voters of the eleven towns will not be caught naping by "roar backs", and cheap cartoons, of "The man behind the plow", or a picture of Bjorge choping the roots off from a stump, but remember to stand and vote for the man that has always stood the steadfast friend of the settlers on this reservation; Halvor Steenerson.

The Democratic party have no candiddates filed for the nomination for congressman from this district, or for state senator, or representative. The republican party have two candidates filed for the nominatitio for all of these offices, one of which is sure to be elected for our congressman, or representatives in the state legislature. Any well posted democrat, that votes the democratic state and National ticket has a choice of which one of the differat candidate on the republican ticket he would prefer to have represent him. The only way he can do this is to call for a republican primary election ballot and vote it. You have a perfect right to do it, and in doing so, you do not in any way pledge yourself to vote the republican state ticket in November. The same roule would apply to socialists and prohibitionists.

Remember, that a vote for Hon. Albert Berg at the primaries mens a vote for a man that stands pledged for Reapportionment, and has the ability to accomplis something.

Read the announcements of the different candidates for office in your local paper, then talk the matter over with your wife and family, then go to election and vote, and you will be pretty apt to vote for the right man.

To new voters of the state of Minnesota, we will give the information, that Hon. Albert Berg served three terms as secretary of the state of Minnesota, and would have been there yet, if it had not been the roule of the Republican part that it was time to step out and give another man a chance, and we will say to the voters of the 61st, district that if you elect him for your state Senator, and he should be a candidate for reelection four yeass from now that he would not have any opposition at all, but you would pat him on the back, and say: "That's the "stuff". let us have four more years of it."

The Thief River Falls newspapers have created the impression that there is a gold mine, in being county Commissioner of first district, which has stired up a hot campaign down there. Say! How Big is Lindquists new barn? We would like to know, as there has been several big barns built up this way the past year, and we could tell whether they were built by honest earned cash or "boodle" if we could just find out the size of Lindquists barn.

THE PONY EXPRESS.

Fearless Riders and the Dangers and Hardships They Faced.

Perhaps the most picturesque figure on the old trail was the pony express rider. The overland stage proved too slow for mail and express in its flight from the Missouri and the Pacific. True, it had cut down the months of the old ox team to twenty-five days, and still there was a clamor that the east and west be brought closer together, and it was done. The pony cut the time to ten days.

Those who were personally acquainted with the famous pony express of those days could never forget the intrepid rider who braved all peril, forgetful of self, intent only on the speedy delivery of his precious mochila to the next hardy horseman. Hard and fast he rode over mountain and plain, across scorching desert and icy snow, through sunshine and rain, past friend, away from foe, to the final achievement—the safe delivery of his charge.

Forty fearless horsemen in saddle riding west, as many more riding east—and this novel but useful enterprise was in motion. For two years the pony express carried messages of business and love across 2,000 miles of western mountains and plains, over a country peopled with a hostile race, destitute of cultivation or development, through a region wild, desolate and little known.

It was in 1850 that the pony express was established. The route, briefly stated, was due west from St. Joseph to Fort Kearney, up the Platte to Julesburg, thence, by Fort Laramie and Fort Bridger, to Salt Lake City, thence to Camp Floyd, Ruby valley, the Humboldt, Carson City, Placerville and Folsom, to Sacramento and San Francisco by boat.

The intention of the pony express was to carry letters only and not more than ten pounds at a trip. It was decided that the safest and easiest mode of carrying the mail was to make four pockets, one in each corner of the mochila, a covering made of heavy leather for the saddles and generally used by the expert Mexican and Spanish riders. The mochila was transferred from pony to pony and went through from St. Joseph to San Francisco, the pockets containing the mail being locked and opened only at military posts en route and at Salt Lake City. These precious letters were wrapped in oiled silk to protect them, but even this precaution sometimes failed. Rivers had to be crossed; horse and rider swam together.—W. C. Jenkins in National Magazine.

The Red Lake Falls Gazette advises the farmers to organize to fight county division. A very good idea. A brilliant thought. Now all you have to do is to just sit down and watch them organize.

POLITICAL DOINGS.

Ira C. Richardson, our present Judge of Probate is a candidate on the Republican ticket for that office. Mr. Richardson has been practicing law at Thief River Falls for 18 years, and is known as a man who is always ready to do business, and he is certainly competent to do the importent work in the probate office.

Farmers should take time to go to the primary election and vote September 20th. and not allow the city fellows to do all of the nominateing of the ticket that you expect to vote next November.

Charles Fellman of St Hilaire is making a stong campaign for nomination for sheriff, against Lewis A. Nelson. Where Mr. Fellman is best known he is best liked, and we understand that he will carry St. Hilaire with a solid vote. Mr. Nelson has had this office for four years, and if you are of the opinion that one man should have all the political favors, while another man works in a saw mill to support his family, why vote for Mr. Nelson, as he is all right for the position But if you are of the opinion that the taxpayers pie should be passed arround, and not let one man eat it all, vote for Fellman. It is up to you!

A. A. Latendress filed for the nomination for County Auditor at the eleventh hour, but he will not need to make any campaign, as there is not a farmer in Red Lake county that has had anything to do with geting county ditches, the past year, that will not vote to keep him in that office. He lives in Red Lake Falls and is satisfactory to Thief River Falls, and the next time we see him we are going to look for his wings, for he must be an Angel.

THAT COUNTY DITCH.

As we have heard that we got Mr. Martz to make a turn in the, so called Swanson ditch we will make this statement: We will at any time sign an affidavit that we never mentioned the course of said ditch to Martz, or any of his surveyors, until after the survey was made and the ditch established. We further want to state that we know of our own knowledge that Walter McAndreas had nothing to do with it, and that him and ourself would have preferd to have had that ditch followed the course it was petioned to go than to have made this turn. Furthermore it would not have made any differance if we had, as Mr. Martz has given bonds for the faithful discharge of his duties and is not a man that can be told by farmers of country newspaper publishers how to take levels and survey a ditch.

The whole trouble is, that a few people living in this corner is trying to get a road so the farmers can get to the Highlanding creamery with their cream, and we are going to get it, and don't you "forget it", so get your fences and hay stacks out of the road for we are comeing.

PIRATES OF HONGKONG.

They Are the Real Old Fashioned Bloodthirsty Kind.

There are pirates in Hongkong—not the usual kind that greet the gentle stranger with an expansive smile and take what he has for worthless rubbish, nor yet the petty thieves that go by that name on our own water fronts; but the real old fashioned, murderous kind, who count not the victims as they reckon the spoils.

Of course they do not swagger in costume, as all real pirates should, or ply their trade in Hongkong's immediate waters, but among the thousands of fishermen, stevedores and coal handlers that crowd the harbor's edge they mingle and gossip water front news, knowing well when a particularly rich cargo is due from the interior.

And in the purple twilight a junk darts out of one of the many estuaries far up the West of Pearl river and swoops with the suddenness of a hawk on the heavily laden prize. The struggle is short. Over the hills on the naked backs of a swarming crew the loot disappears forever from a smoking hulk in the rice swamps, or, as happened in the case of the Sainam, half a hundred take passage in the crowded hold of a river steamer and when the handful of unsuspecting whites gather at dinner raise a heathenish yell on the startled air, and the ship is taken. Rifles thrust through bolted doors subdue the pitiful fire that lasts a little while from behind the shot torn tablecloth, but the ship is already headed for the bank by the quartermaster with a rifle at his ear, and one more tragedy is added to the long list of crimes on the Sikiang.—W. J. Aylward in Harper's Magazine.

An Unfortunate Response.

The problem of too many churches in a given locality is often a perplexing one. It is said that the churches in a certain village, on opposite sides of the streets, were so close that when the congregation in one church sang "Will There Be Any Stars In My Crown?" the congregation in the other church promptly responded, "No, Not One; No, Not One." Fortunate is it if the seeming contradiction is confined to the unintentional inharmonious responses in songs.—Lippincott's.

Suicide by Swallowing Gold.

Suicide by swallowing gold is sometimes accomplished in China. The following is an authoritative account, written by a very learned Chinese for the Westminster Gazette, of how this much contested form of suicide is accomplished:

"In swallowing gold it is not loose gold leaf or gold dust that is swallowed, but a solid lump of gold, or even a gold ring, weighing about half an ounce. Gold is not at any time of a corrupting nature, but when a lump of it is swallowed and gets into the bowel it fails, on account of its intrinsic weight, to rise and surmount the convolutions of the bowels and can therefore never complete its passage. After two or three days it therefore sinks through the bowel and destroys life without any suffering."

Barrie and Kipling.

Mr. Barrie was one day at Waterloo station in a hurry to catch a train. He was hastening from the bookstall laden with papers, "a good many sixpenny ones among them," he dolefully relates, when, in rushing around a corner, he fell into the arms of Rudyard Kipling, equally in a tearing hurry. They turned on each other with scowling faces, then smiled in recognition and asked each other whither he went. Then Kipling, exclaiming, "Lucky beggar, you've got papers!" seized the bundle from Barrie, flung him some money and made off. "But you did not stoop to pick up his dirty halfpence, did you?" queried one of Mr. Barrie's hearers amusedly. "Didn't I, though?" returned Barrie, and added ruefully, "But he hadn't flung me half enough."—St James' Gazette.

Bread In Sweden.

In Sweden the bread of the people is for the most part hard, thin as a dinner plate and about the size of one. It is baked without yeast, and the water is practically all extracted in the process of baking; hence, relatively, per pound of bread, its cost is much higher than in the common forms of bread as we know them, containing one-half their weight in water that has cost nothing. Loaf bread and rolls in Sweden are a luxury.

The Publisher's Claims Sustained

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

A Shipping Error.

The young duchess of Westminster, wife of the richest peer in England, recently gave birth to her third child, a daughter. Thus there is no heir to the immense Grosvenor fortune, Earl Grosvenor, the duchess' second child, having died at the age of four.

Apropos of all this, a rather cruel story is being told in Newport about Lady Ursula Grosvenor, the eight-year-old daughter of the young duchess.

A friend, the story goes, called at Eaton Hall, and as she sat in the drawing-room, little Lady Ursula entered.

"Oh, good afternoon," she said, gravely. "Mamma can't see any one today. She's upstairs with the new baby. They sent her, you know, a girl when she'd ordered a boy, and she's so upset that she's quite ill."

Where Size Counts.

Edna thoughtfully considered a cow that was calmly grazing in a meadow across the way. "Mamma, how old is that cow?" she finally inquired. "She is four years old," answered Edna's mother. Edna considered the answer and from time to time appeared to be comparing herself with the cow. "Well,' was her parting comment on the question, "I'm five and that cow is big enough to be fifty."

Partly Made Over.

"Weren't we engaged last summer?" inquired the girl.

"Your face is familiar," faltered the man.

"NO FRILLS"

Just Sensible Food Cured Him.

Sometimes a good, healthy commercial traveler suffers from poorly selected food and is lucky if he learns that Grape-Nuts food will put him right.

A Cincinnati traveler says: "About a year ago my stomach got in a bad way. I had a headache most of the time and suffered misery. For several months I ran down until I lost about 70 pounds in weight and finally had to give up a good position and go home. Any food that I might use seemed to nauseate me.

"My wife, hardly knowing what to do, one day brought home a package of Grape-Nuts food and coaxed me to try it. I told her it was no use but finally to humor her I tried a little, and they just struck my taste. It was the first food I had eaten in nearly a year that did not cause any suffering.

"Well, to make a long story short, I began to improve and stuck to Grape-Nuts. I went up from 135 pounds in December to 194 pounds the following October.

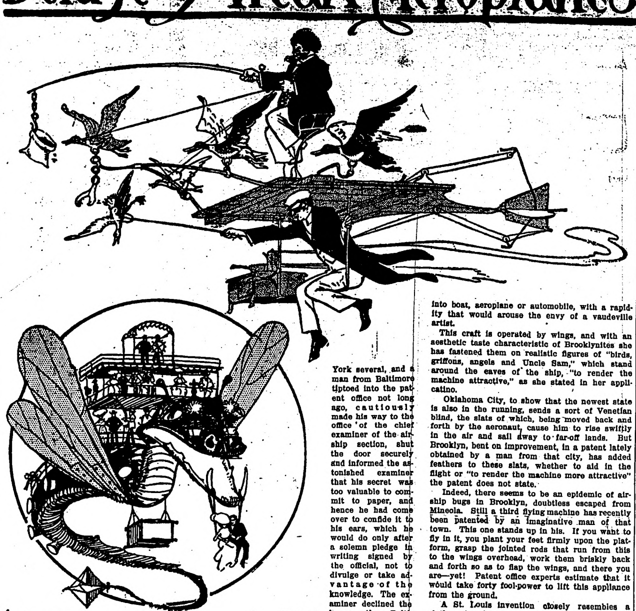
"My brain is clear, blood all right and appetite too much for any man's pocketbook. In fact, I am thoroughly made over, and owe it all to Grape-Nuts. I talk so much about what Grape-Nuts will do that some of the men on the road have nicknamed me 'Grape-Nuts,' but I stand today a healthy, rosy-cheeked man—a pretty good example of what the right kind of food will do.

"You can publish this if you want to. It is a true statement without any frills."

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Deluge of Freak Aeroplanes



If THE publishers of the Patent Office Gazette ever conclude to add a comic supplement to their weekly edition, we can supply them with all the material without their having to hunt in other divisions."

So spoke an official in the aeroplane and airship section of the examining division of the patent office at Washington, when asked as to the character of inventions now being offered for patent in this line.

"Before Wright startled the country with his flight of more than one hour over here at Fort Myor a couple of years ago," continued the official, "there were not many applications of this kind filed. Since that time, however, they have steadily increased, until now we are getting them in at the rate of more than 150 a week. They are now far ahead of all other kinds of invention in number filed, and, I may add, in freakishness.

"The large majority offered are not allowed, and of these the public can know nothing. But these rejected ones have by no means a monopoly as examples of an unique form of lunacy. Many of those for which we are obliged to issue patents would be mighty dangerous evidence if offered in court against the sanity of the inventor."

An inspection of a number of the patents lately issued to those aspiring to soar shows that the patent office man knew what he was talking about. Were it not that these freak airships were formally patented, and that it had cost the inventors at least $100 apiece to obtain such patents, it would seem, from examination, that many of them had been trying to perpetrate a practical joke on the patent office officials.

The wildest flights of whimsical imagination cannot reach beyond some of the crazy combinations recorded as airships and aeroplanes in the Washington archives. Could the claims made by some of the fathers to these weird machines be practically realized, the magic carpet of Prince Ahmed and the fabulous rock of the "Arabian Nights" would hide their chagrined heads under the bed and go out of the flying business.

What adds to the grotesque humor of these patents is that their claims are all couched in strictly scientific language, reading like a report of an aeronautic society.

Also the strict attention to minutest detail is amusing; railings to prevent the passenger from falling over in the scenery, muffs to keep hands and ears warm while soaring through the zero latitudes of the upper air, comfortable sleeping beds carefully arranged with springs, so that the jar of alighting will not awake the folks, telescopes arranged on swivels at convenient places about the decks that the curious traveler may discern what continent he's flying over—these and a score of other details are carefully inserted, doubtless to show intending purchasers how their comfort has been looked after.

In many of the drawings the aeronaut is shown, invariably sitting with hands placidly folded, to show it's just as e-e-asy! All manner of means of propulsion have been brought into requisition from dynamite to ducks. Wings, air, aeriform and liquid torpedoes all come in for a share.

Occasionally, too, one comes across an inventor who has worked out all the problems to a nicety—and then has failed to provide a motive power. But this trifle is dismissed with some such remark as "Any convenient form of motive power may be used."

No single locality can boast itself the home of these erratic geniuses. They stretch across the country and overlap Europe from Colorado to Budapest, in Hungary. Washington has one, New York several, and a man from Baltimore tiptoed into the patent office not long ago, cautiously made his way to the office of the chief examiner of the airship section, shut the door securely and informed the astonished examiner that his secret was too valuable to commit to paper, and hence he had come over to confide it to his ears, which he would do only after a solemn pledge in writing signed by the official, not to divulge or take advantage of the knowledge. The examiner declined the honor, the Baltimore man insisted, and upon further refusal waxed wrathful, whereupon the examiner called the bouncer.

An inventor in Highlands, Col., recently obtained a patent upon an airship that contains all the comforts of home. In the drawings it resembles an enlarged picture of some sort of a bug, with a row of eyes along the side and a ruffle down its back; on inspection the ruffle resolves itself into the railing along the upper deck and the eyes into windows of the various staterooms on the ship.

The lace curtains of each window are carefully looped back so as not to obscure the view. A staircase leads down from the hatchway that modest women may alight without undue exposure of lingerie. Everything man can want is shown, even to the buffet—that is, all except the machinery, which is probably in the cellar of the craft with the laundry tubs and the furnace.

A man of Bergen, N. J., has patented what looks like a large metallic box turned upside down. There is no bottom in it. In the side walls are circular openings, and in these are rotary fans, which suck the air into the box. The aeronaut sits in a car suspended from the box.

When the Bergen man wants to fly he turns the power onto his fans; these pump air into the box. It can only escape downward, and the reaction from this powerful draft will force the box upward, causing it to fly—so runneth the patent specification.

An expert of the patent office figured out that a blast strong enough to lift the combined weight of machine and aeronaut would blow a hole in the ground big enough to hide an elephant. What happens to the unfortunate hero who sits below in the teeth of this tornado will probably be told in the supplemental application recently filed.

A genius from Clarksville, Tenn., would fly by incasing himself in a rubber suit, much like that of a diver, to which are attached hollow wings filled with liquid air. The release of the air through valved vents downward and backward propels him upward and forward. There are no eyeholes in the casing, "but," naively remarks the inventor, "the air pressure from without will enable the aeronaut to determine his direction," which is rather a vague sort of compass.

From gay Paree comes Edouard Wulff, with a patented scheme for flying by means of "eagles, vultures or condors." True to the instincts of his native city, he fits out his birds with "corsets," the specifications of which as to trimmings, binding, etc., are carefully set out.

B. Szantmiklosy, from Budapest, Hungary, also has patented a bird-driven airship, but limits his motors to ducks; why ducks is not set forth.

Of course Chicago has to shy her castor into the ring. She turns up with a combination balloon-hotel-boat-airship, with bay windows and balconies in the body of the building, "eminently adapted for flying through the air or navigating the water," saith the patent. It has a hull-shaped body, and the vessel can go from air to water and from water to air without disturbing the poker game in the smoking room.

But a woman from Brooklyn goes the Chicago man one better. If some night the lonely wayfarer is startled by the appearance of a huge, nondescript bird that alights in the roadway and goes steeplechasing cross country with a Barney Oldfield speed until it reaches a nearby lake, over which it rapidly skims, until, landing on the further shore, it rises into the air again, and disappears over the horizon with a parting flirt of its tail, let not that wayfarer hasten to the nearest parsonage and sign the pledge. The bird he has seen is real, for it is only the lady from Brooklyn taking an after-dinner spin in her newest invention, a ship that can make a lightning change into boat, aeroplane or automobile, with a rapidity that would arouse the envy of a vaudeville artist.

This craft is operated by wings, and with an aesthetic taste characteristic of Brooklynites she has fastened them on realistic figures of "birds, griffons, angels and Uncle Sam," which stand around the eaves of the ship, "to render the machine attractive," as she stated in her applicatino.

Oklahoma City, to show that the newest state is also in the running, sends a sort of Venetian blind, the slats of which, being moved back and forth by the aeronaut, cause him to rise swiftly in the air and sail away to far-off lands. But Brooklyn, bent on improvement, in a patent lately obtained by a man from that city, has added feathers to these slats, whether to aid in the flight or "to render the machine more attractive" the patent does not state.

Indeed, there seems to be an epidemic of airship bugs in Brooklyn, doubtless escaped from Mineola. Still a third flying machine has recently been patented by an imaginative man of that town. This one stands up in his. If you want to fly in it, you plant your feet firmly upon the platform, grasp the jointed rods that run from this to the wings overhead, work them briskly back and forth so as to flap the wings, and there you are—yet! Patent office experts estimate that it would take forty fool-power to lift this appliance from the ground.

A St. Louis invention closely resembles a clothes pin with the operator sitting between the forks. Where the head of the pin would be is set the electric dynamo, showing a contemptuous disregard for the laws of gravitation. The machine is moved by the flapping of wings, which are built on the plan of the cellar door of childhood.

There is something really unique in the patent obtained by a Cleveland man. The device consists of a cigar-shaped gasbag, much like that in the Baldwin or Zeppelin airship. Around it, from stem to stern, runs a spiral fin or vane like the threads on a screw. The aeronaut sits on a saddle suspended below. When the machine rises into the air he propels himself by operating a pedal which revolves the gasbag. The fin or vane, thus revolved, bores itself through the air like the propeller of an ordinary aeroplane. This inventor carries along a sort of aerial bathing suit with auxiliary flying attachment, whereby he may disport himself in the great air ocean above.

No one can gainsay the foresight of the "improvement in airships" made by a resident of Hot Springs, Ark. The first claim in his patent is that his balloon is so constructed that if it bursts the bagging will "nest in the rigging above and form a parachute whereby the aeronaut may descend safely to the earth." This is commended to anxious mothers whose small boys have the airship bug.

A Boston inventor upholds the reputation of that town for erudition by prefacing his application for patent with a learned discourse on the fact that heated air rises.

"But," he continues, "disaster frequently occurs through the use of oiled silk or other fragile or inflammable material as a receptacle for such air in balloons and airships." He remedies this by substituting therefor a "large cylinder of some light metal, preferably aluminum," as his specifications state. Immediately beneath this cylinder is placed a cozy furnace. The man who wants to see his name in the paper gets out of bed and builds a fire in this furnace. This heats the air in the aluminum cylinder, the heated air rises, taking along cylinder, furnace and man, and away they go! This principle, according to a patent office man, explains why many boilers go up with furnace and engineer.

An Omaha, Neb., man shows a western predilection for firearms by trimming the rear of his airship with cartridges. When these are exploded in succession he expects to be driven through the air to his destination with neatness and dispatch, the exploding cartridges lending a homelike air to the surroundings. When his cartridges are expended he loads her up again as one would the chambers of a revolver.

With so many bizarre airships in embryo in her midst, Washington had to take a hand. The man of the capital goes one better than the Arkansas inventor mentioned, who turns his "busted" balloon into a parachute. This man's airship, when it blows up or he gets tired of sailing among the clouds balloonwise, turns itself into an aeroplane without the slightest effort. When the gas is out of the bag the thing is done. He carries a gas generator on board so that when he wants a little more ballooning he can fill it up again.

This ship also has a hotel attachment with twelve rooms—in the drawings. It is propelled by a kind of Archimedes screw propeller which he has been thoughtful enough to have "encased in aluminum housings," so that ladies' skirts will not become entangled. He, too, provides all manner of comforts on board, each one painfully detailed in the patent.

These are but a few of the freak patents lately issued for airships and aeroplanes, but they are enough to convince any inventor that if he wants to spring anything novel on the people in the line of hand-made birds of burden he's got to get up mighty early in the morning and work as long as there's light to see.

PROBLEMS MANY YEARS OLD

Children of Today Puzzle Over Them Just as They Did a Thousand Years Ago.

When King Alfred the Great was reigning over England, a thousand years ago, school children pondered over problems in arithmetic much as our boys and girls do now.

"The swallow once invited the snail to dinner. He lived just one league (three English miles) from the spot, and the snail traveled at the rate of only one inch a day. How long would it be before he dined?"

"An old man met a child. 'Good-day, my son,' he said. 'May you live as long as you have lived, and as much more, and thrice as much as all this; and if God gives you one year in addition to the others, you will be a century old!' What was that boy's age?"—The Comrade.

HOW A DOCTOR CURED SCALP DISEASE

"When I was ten or twelve years old I had a scalp disease, something like scald head, though it wasn't that. I suffered for several months, and most of my hair came out. Finally they had a doctor to see me and he recommended the Cuticura Remedies. They cured me in a few weeks. I have used the Cuticura Remedies, also, for a breaking out on my hands and was benefited a great deal. I haven't had any more trouble with the scalp disease. Miss Jessie F. Buchanan, R. F. D. 3, Hamilton, Ga., Jan. 7, 1909."

Kept with Barnum's Circus.

P. T. Barnum, the famous circus man, once wrote: "I have had the Cuticura Remedies among the contents of my medicine chest with my shows for the last three seasons, and I can cheerfully certify that they were very effective in every case which called for their use."

Slightly Confused.

All of us become confused and all of us mix our language sometimes, but the preparation of an old negro preacher's sermon was the greatest confusion of metaphors I ever heard, says a traveler. When the lengthy discourse was nearing its close and he had reached his "Twenty-third and lastly, brethren," he wound up by the following elaborate figure:

"Everywha, bredren, we see de almighty—all down de untrodden paths of time, we see de footprints of de Almighty hand."—Human Life.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

THE PINK PEARL

By TEMPLE BAILEY

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

Angela, having lived in a rose-colored atmosphere all her life, could not understand why Edwin should not give her a pink pearl for an engagement ring.

"No man is too poor to buy the right kind of ring for the girl he is going to marry."

Angela's mother, who had worked in a factory when she was young, and had known what it was not to have any rings at all, shook her head.

"If I were poor," said Angela, "I would live in a cottage with roses around it, and bake cakes for Edwin."

At that Angela's mother sighed, for she knew that poverty is not a thing of roses and of sweet cakes, but of a struggle for dry bread without any butter on it.

"I have sometimes wished," she began, and stopped.

"What?" Angela demanded.

"That you had fallen in love with a rich man," her mother sighed, "you have always had everything you wanted—and it won't be easy for you to go without."

"You think I am just a child," Angela raged, with her blue eyes flashing, "and so does Edwin—I—I think you are dreadful—"

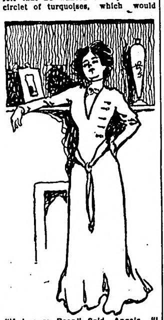
Of course, she got the pink pearl, for her mother spoke to Edwin tactfully. "Angela loved pearls," she said, "and I have some unset ones which I can sell to you cheaply—they won't cost any more than any other ring."



"If I were Poor," Said Angela, "I Would Live in a Cottage With Roses Around It."

Edwin protested. In his heart he felt that he wanted to buy a little circlet of turquoises, which would match Angela's eyes. He could have afforded such a ring, and he would not have had the bargain-counter feeling which oppressed him when he accepted the offer of his future mother-in-law.

He gave Angela the pink pearl and she was happy. He did not tell her where he had bought it. Her mother had asked him not to tell.

"Angela is such a baby," she had said, "and it might spoil her pleasure."

That Edwin's pleasure was spoiled did not trouble her. She thought only of her daughter, whose wishes had never been denied.

The incident of the pink pearl was one of many others. Angela's mother put her money at the disposal of the young people. She was diplomatic, and when Edwin suggested the buying of a cottage she offered the land for the site, she furnished it and finished it until all of its simplicity was lost. She chose an exclusive neighborhood, and when the young couple moved in they found themselves the center of a wealthy circle of neighbors.

And in the midst of all the luxury Angela pined. She grew pale and thin and languid, until her mother and Edwin were alarmed.

"She must go away," the mother told the young husband, but Edwin shook his head.

"What Angela needs," he said, "is to feel that she means something in the world. There are so many idle, unhappy women—and somehow I believe that Angela is more of a woman than we will let her be. We coddle her, and wrap her up in cotton wool because we love her, but she is a woman with all a woman's right to make a home. Should we keep on making a baby of her?"

"But what," the mother demanded, "can we do?"

"Let us try an experiment," Edwin said. "Let her think you have lost your money, that we must all go away from here to the old farm, and I will come back and forth on the train—we will see how she stands real life."

"But she is such a baby—"

"She is a woman," Edwin insisted. "Now and then she lets me see deep into her heart, and I know, but we never let her have a chance."

Angela's mother agreed, reluctantly. "You tell her," she said at last.

Angela bore the shock bravely. "Poor mother," she said, "it will be hard for you," and at once she began to treat the elder lady with a tenderness which was surprising and comforting.

It was wonderful to see how she took up her burdens. Work seemed to agree with her. Instead of growing faded and thin she waxed plump and rosy. She planted a garden and watched with enthusiasm the growth of her lettuce and radishes and onions. She baked cakes and put up pots of jam and served a delectable fish chowder to Edwin when he came home late on chilly nights.

"I didn't think she had it in her," Angela's mother told her son-in-law as late one autumn day they watched the little wife baking pancakes in the warm cozy kitchen. She had on a red house gown, with a blue linen apron that almost covered her up. Her curls were gathered into a topknot with a black bow and she was flushed and smiling.

"I sometimes think," Edwin mused, "that she has just reverted to type. You used to love to get supper for her father, didn't you, when you were poor and lived in this cottage?"

"Indeed I did," responded Angela's mother. "That recipe for chowder is the one I used, and he used to smack his lips over it."

"And behind you is a race of good housekeepers, and yet you expected Angela to live like an idle princess—and as long as she felt she had your money back of her she had no incentive—but now—you see—"

"Yes, I see," the mother agreed.

But the climax came when, one day, the pink pearl ring disappeared from Angela's finger.

"Where's your ring?" Edwin demanded.

"Oh," Angela blushed, "oh, I—I don't think I can tell you just now, Edwin.

But the secret was out when one day she led him to her dressing room. It had been refurnished in pale pink and white swiss, and in one corner there was a crib with rosebuds embroidered on the cover. And in another corner was a very low white rocking chair with a pink cushion.

"I shall call it my 'pink pearl room,'" Angela stated, "I was just hateful to make you buy such an expensive thing for me, Edwin—perhaps if I hadn't always demanded so much for myself you wouldn't have to work so hard now—for us."

Her husband folded her in his arms. "Dearest, dear," he said, brokenly.

"Your mother didn't lose her money," Edwin explained, "but I wanted you to come to your hearthstone heritage as a housewife, and you couldn't when you were having things showered on you."

"Well, we won't go back to the city," Angela decided with a shake of her curls; "it is ever so much nicer here—and I couldn't leave my garden and my chicks—and besides," she hid her face against his shoulder, "the country will be the best place to bring up the baby in—won't it, Edwin?"

In the months that followed Angela's mother had to have her way about spending. She bought everything from a silver porringer to a golden rattle.

But Edwin bought back the pink pearl ring. "I want you to wear it because it is like you," he said to Angela, ardently, "a thing all rosy and sunshine, and of perfect beauty."

Logbook of the Monitor.

The original logbook of the famous Monitor, covering the period of her engagement with the Confederate ironclad Merrimac, in Hampton roads, on March 9, 1862, has been given to the navy department to be preserved among its historic records. The restoration of the log to the department was due to Capt. Louis Stodder of the United States revenue cutter service, now living in Brooklyn, N. Y., and an officer on the Monitor during her entire service.

For years he has treasured the log among his most valuable possessions, but as old age advanced he desired to see it placed where its preservation might be assured. Hence it was that he forwarded it to the library of the navy department.

Golden Mirrors.

It is now possible, by the Cowper-Cowles process, to provide glass mirrors coated with a film of gold for the reflectors of automobiles. Hitherto only glaring white reflectors have been employed with lens mirror projectors, and it is said that the gold mirrors not only afford a more agreeable light, but one which possesses greater penetrating power in fogs. Another improvement in automobiles is the substitution of horns that emit harmonious sounds, instead of the shrieks, groans and grunts of the ordinary apparatus used for warning pedestrians to look out for their lives.

People study political economy to make a better nation? What? Just the same as they study law? To help the skinners of humanity pull its skin in a constitutional way, eh?

GOV. RULES SHERIFFS

POWER OF STATE'S EXECUTIVE IS ABSOLUTE, ATTORNEY-GENERAL DECIDES.

POWER SIMILAR TO THAT OF KING

Removal From Office Is Declared Proper Action.—Opinion Has Particular Reference to Liquor Law Cases.

St. Paul. — The sheriffs in Minnesota are the personal representatives of the governor and as such are responsible to him for the conserving of the peace not only by apprehending criminals, but by preventing the commission of any crime. In the event that he fails to perform the duties the sheriff can be removed by the governor either for malfeasance or nonfeasance.

This is the sum and substance of an opinion handed down by Attorney General Simpson in response to a letter from Governor Eberhart asking what were the powers, duties and obligations of a sheriff.

Numerous complaints have reached the office of the governor and the attorney general from all parts of the state, particularly upper Minnesota, with regard to the alleged violation of law, not only affecting the sale of liquor, but in other sections. Sheriffs and other officials in the past have refused to do anything without warrants or complaints in hand. Mayors of towns have stated positively that there was no violation of law within their limits, even though complaints have ben made direct to the governor.

Many instances of violation have been reported, notable among them the case of the city of International Falls. It has been reported that the town was "wide open." Officials were unable to cope with the situation. In his opinion the attorney general states that the sheriff has, with but two exceptions, the same power now that he had in the days when he acted as the personal representative of the king. In a like manner he is now responsible to the governor for all that he does.

Mr. Simpson points out that the sheriff gives bond for the faithful performance of his duties to the state of Minnesota and not to any county or other subdivision therein.

"Under the laws of this state, as under the common law, where the sheriff was a representative of the king, so is he the arm of governor in each county in the state, whose duty it is to see that the laws of this state are enforced and for his neglect or failure he may be removed from office upon proper cause being shown."

Further in his opinion, the attorney general defines the duties of the sheriff as follows: "As a conservator of the peace, it is the duty of the sheriffs of the state not only to apprehend and jail those who have committed crime and otherwise act as a server of process, but it is likewise the duty of the sheriffs to prevent the violation of the law, whether as to the sale of intoxicating liquors or otherwise is of no moment. It follows that for a failure to either serve process that is delivered to him or failure to preserve the peace is ground in a proper proceeding before you to remove such sheriff from office. It is not enough for a sheriff to state that no complaint has ben made to him with regard to the alleged violation of law, and that no warrant has been placed in his hands for service. The duty of the sheriff is broader than this, for when complaints made to him that a law is about to be violated or when it is brought to his knowledge or he has reason to believe that the peace of his county is about to be broken, a duty rests upon the sheriff to conserve the peace, and for that purpose he may call to his aid as many citizens of the county as are necessary."

It is thought that with the powers thus defined for the sheriff that hereafter there will be little excuse for the violation of the liquor law in upper Minnesota. The governor will notify all sheriffs of his intention to see that they comply with the letter of the law. He has stated that action will be taken against the first who does not obey.

COTTAGES NEAR COMPLETION.

Sauk Center Industrial School Work Progressing.

Sauk Center.—Work has progressed so rapidly on the four cottages of the State Industrial Training school for girls that the roofs will be on in ample time to permit the interior work being done this winter. Mrs. Fanny French Morse, the superintendent, has been on her annual vacation, and in consultation with the Board of Control at St. Paul. The four cottages will be large enough for twenty-five girls and a matron. They are colonial in style, and it is expected that they will be ready for the transfor of the girls from Red Wing late this year or early in 1911.

MINNESOTA PIONEER KILLED.

John Gleason, of Crookston, Meets Death in Accident.

Crookston.—John Gleason, auditor of Polk county from 1894 until 1900, during the Populistic regime, and later a member of the board of appeals of the State Railway and Warehouse Commission, was struck by an interurban car at Oregon City, Ore., and instantly killed. He was a pioneer of Polk county, and lived on a river fruit farm.

DROP DUCK CASE.

Charge Growing Out of "Big Feed" Dropped.

Cass Lake.—The much talked of case of the State of Minnesota vs. Ed. Warren, in which the defendant was charged with serving wild ducks at a dinner given to a number of the Cass county officials, was held here before Justice Frank Ives. By reason of the fact of County Auditor Byhre, County Treasurer McKeown, Judge of Probate Jamison and Sheriff Delury being subpoenaed as witnesses, the village court room was packed with spectators long before the case was called.

Each of the officials in answer to the questions as to what he had for dinner on the day of the party swore he had chicken and dumplings, and did not see nor taste any wild duck. After the state had rested the county attorney made a motion to dismiss the action on the ground that the state had failed to prove a cause of action and asked that the defendant be released from custody. The motion was granted.

E. L. Warren, the defendant, is proprietor of a general merchandise store at the new station of Federal Dam, and on July 25 a party of Cass County officials went to Federal Dam by boat and were furnished with dinner by Mr. Warren. Upon their return to Walker one of the party jokingly made the remark they were royally treated to a "wild duck" dinner. One of Walker's citizens hearing this informed the game and fish commission in St. Paul of the alleged duck dinner, who in turn asked Deputy Game Warden M. L. Tolle to file a complaint.

PINCHOT DATE IS SET.

Rochester to Be Scene of Deposed Forester's First Speech.

Rochester.—Gifford Pinchot, the deposed forestry chief, will wage war against Congressman James A. Tawney of the First district in an address to be given in Rochester Friday night, September 2, according to present announcements which Mr. Pinchot gives in a letter received in this city. Pinchot, who is close to Roosevelt and is supposed to echo his sentiments, will urge the candidacy of Sydney A. Anderson of Lanesboro for Congress. The progressives of the First district are wild with joy over the prospects of securing a man of national reputation to assist them in the battle now on in the First district.

Mr. Pinchot comes to Wisconsin to speak in the interests of La Follette, and then he agrees to come to the First district. The Rochester date may be the only meeting that he can hold in the district, as he will probably attend the National Conservation congress the week following in St. Paul.

Congressman Tawney visited Rochester and called upon some of the political leaders of the city. He is very optimistic over the outlook and feels that his prospects for election are bright. He was not aware that Gifford Pinchot was to visit the district until he arrived in this city, but the announcement did not appear to give him much concern.

Duluth. — John Q. Teetzel, who claims Detroit as his home, was bound over to the grand jury to stand trial on a charge of swindling. At the hearing, Teetzel was charged with selling to a local hardware concern a right which had no value, to handle the instruments. The hardware company gave Teetzel a check, but stopped payment on it after some investigation.

Strong Healthy Women

If a woman is strong and healthy in a womanly way, motherhood means to her but little suffering. The trouble lies in the fact that the many women suffer from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism and are unfitted for motherhood. This can be remedied.

Cures the weaknesses and disorders of women. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned in motherhood, making them healthy, strong, vigorous, virile and elastic.

"Favorite Prescription" banishes the indispositions of the period of expectancy and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It quickens and vitalizes the feminine organs, and insures a healthy and robust baby. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits.

THE ordinary resident of the United States has no conception of what Alaska really is. He has heard of the "Klondike" for the last 14 years, and he wrongly thinks it is in Alaska. He has heard of great glaciers and high mountains, and that somewhere the thermometer occasionally registers 80 degrees below zero. Beyond this his knowledge is likely to be even more fragmentary and unreliable. In reality, Alaska is on continental dimensions, and one can no more state briefly what its characteristics are than he can similarly describe those of the entire United States; yet a few words concerning its most salient features will not be amiss.

Alaska was purchased from Russia in 1867 for $7,200,000. The value of all its products since that date has been nearly $350,000,000. It has an area of 586,000 square miles, or 375,000,000 acres, or more than ten times that of the state of Illinois. From southeastern Alaska to the end of the Aleutian islands is as far as from Savannah, Ga., to Los Angeles, Cal. Its northernmost and southernmost points are as widely separated as Canada and Mexico. Its range of temperature is greater than that between Florida and Maine.

More than one-third of this immense territory is yet but little explored, despite the many years that it has been in the possession of the United States, and despite the active efforts of prospectors, of traders and of representatives of various branches of the national government. The permanent population at the present time is estimated at some 40,000 whites and 25,000 natives; about half of the latter are Eskimo in the region adjacent to Bering sea and the Arctic ocean. The most important product is gold, of which the output in 1908 was valued at more than $19,000,000. Fisheries rank second, and the salmon packed in 1908 had a value in excess of $10,000,000.

Most of the internal improvements of Alaska have been made by the war department. The telegraph system is constructed and operated by the signal corps, with offices at all important points. Transmission depends not only upon cable and land lines, but on high-power wireless stations as well. Roads are built chiefly by the corps of engineers of the war department. Railroads, except for short lines running out to a few mining camps, are utterly lacking, and the total railway mileage does not exceed 350. Transportation in summer is by steamboats on the larger streams and by poling boats on the smaller ones; in winter, by stages where the roads are good enough, and more generally by dog teams. Alaska has 4,000 miles of navigable rivers; without them most of the present development would have been impossible.

Alaska does not have even a territorial form of government, though during the past few years it has had a delegate in congress. Called a territory by courtesy, its anomalous standing for years was that of a customs district. It has executive and judicial officers appointed by the president and the senate, but no legislature; all legislation is by congress.

(1) The Pacific mountain system, which, in southeastern Alaska, is a continuation of the mountains of British Columbia, extends northwest to the Mount McKinley range, and then swings sharply to the southwest, with a prolongation far into the Pacific ocean, represented by the Aleutian islands.

(2) The central plateau region, which includes most of the Yukon and Kuskokwim basins.

(3) The Rocky Mountain system, which bounds the central plateau region on the north and northeast.

(4) The Arctic slope to the northward of the Rocky mountain system.

The Pacific mountain region is characterized on the coast by innumerable fiords and inlets, by deep inland passages and mountains which rise thousands of feet almost straight up from tide water. In the interior it culminates in Mount McKinley, the highest point on the North American continent. There is very little level land in this region, especially in the southeastern part. The mountains are great masses of rock and the upper parts of them are covered with perpetual snow and ice. On the coast many glaciers reach tide water, but in the interior they are confined to higher altitudes.

The central plateau region is not so much a plateau as it is a rolling hill and low mountain country with wide stream valleys. Its area is nearly as great as that of the other three combined. The raising of this region above an earlier level has resulted in stream-cutting, which obscures its original plateau character. It is in the extensive valleys and on the adjacent slopes of the Yukon, Tanana and Kuskokwim rivers and their tributaries that the interior forests reach their best development.

The Rocky mountain region is a comparatively narrow elongation of the Rocky mountain system of North America, and stretches across northern Alaska nearly from east to west. The mountains of this region reach a considerable though in no case a noteworthy height. On their southern slope head many streams which empty into the Yukon; those on the northern slope empty into the Arctic ocean.

The Arctic slope region, lying north of the Rocky mountain region, is composed of rolling tundras, in which truly Arctic conditions prevail. It has been less explored than any other portion of Alaska.

In many places in the interior the post-glacial silts and sands form an excellent soil, and upon them whatever future agriculture there may be in Alaska will chiefly be developed.

The climate of the southern and southeastern coast region of Alaska is mild and wet. The annual precipitation at Juneau and Sitka is from 80 to 90 inches. At these points the precipitation is chiefly in the form of rain, and only during a short time in the middle of the summer are there likely to be days when rain does not fall. In the mountains immediately above tide water, however, the snowfall is very great. This increases to the northward, and at Valdez a winter's snowfall of nearly sixty feet has been recorded. The lowest temperature on record at Sitka is 4 degrees F. below zero, and the highest 87 degrees. At Juneau the lowest record is 10 degrees below zero, and the highest 88 degrees. The Sitka temperature is but little cooler than that of the northern part of Puget sound or of Scotland.

Sharply contrasted with the climate of southeastern and southern Alaska is that of the central plateau regions of the interior. The Pacific mountain system cuts off the warm, moisture-laden ocean winds so that the interior has a semi-arid continental climate subject to sudden changes and great extremes. Satisfactory records are lacking, but such as are available indicate an annual precipitation in the Yukon valley of about fifteen inches, including melted snow. As low as 80 degrees F. below zero has been registered in winter, and in the summer as high as 93 degrees. The summers are short and comparatively hot; the winters long and intensely cold.

Despite the low temperatures and long winters of the Yukon valley, there is ordinarily a good growing season of at least three months. During much of this time daylight is almost continual, and growth is rapid. This compensates in a marked degree for the shortness of the season; and since the evaporation is not great the vegetation is by no means of an arid character, notwithstanding the small precipitation. The frozen-subsoil is practically impervious to water, which accumulates in poorly drained areas and causes the many swamps and "muskegs."

The differentiations between forest types are as sharp as those between the topographic and climatic, and, of course, depend upon them. The coast forests of southern Alaska are the northernmost extension of the coast type of Washington and British Columbia. The interior forests are an extension of the interior Canadian forests. The forests of the Susitna and Copper river basins are somewhat intermediate in character, since these rivers rise in the interior and break through the mountain barrier to the southern coast. On the coast of southeastern Alaska trees grow to large size; in the interior the timber is much smaller. The higher mountain areas are completely above timber line. Climatic conditions in the region adjacent to Bering sea and on the Arctic slope make forest growth altogether impossible, so there are great stretches of tundra whose vegetation consists chiefly of moss, sedges and a few small shrubs. Moss may be said to be the garment of Alaska, and layers of it 12 to 18 inches thick are not at all uncommon either on the coast or in the interior.

It is estimated that the total forest and woodland area of Alaska is approximately 100,000,000 acres, or about 27 per cent. of the land surface of the territory. Of these, about 20,000,000 acres may constantly bear timber of sufficient size and density to be considered forest in the sense that much of it can be used for saw timber, while the balance, or 80,000,000 acres, is woodland which bears some saw timber, but on which the forest is of a smaller and more scattered character and valuable chiefly for fuel.

There is not sufficient information upon which to base any satisfactory estimate of the total stand of timber in Alaska. It has been estimated, for instance that the coast forests contain 75,000,000,000 feet of merchantable saw timber, but this estimate might be much exceeded were both the spruce and hemlock closely utilized. More than twenty cords per acre have been cut in good stands of birch and aspen in the interior, but, on the other hand, there are large areas of black spruce that is too small to use for any purpose; so that it is still impossible to give a satisfactory estimate of the total stand.

The coast forests of southeastern and southern Alaska are nearly all included in the Tongass and Chugach National forests, which comprise 26,761,626 acres; and a large proportion of this area is forested. The species are chiefly western hemlock (Tsuga heterophylla), Sitka spruce (Picea sitchensis), western red cedar (Thuja plicata), and yellow cedar (Chamaecyparis nootkatensis). On the coast the timber line is low. On deer mountain at Ketchikan, for instance, spruce saw timber stops at about 1,500 feet, and the peak, with an elevation of 3,000 feet, bears only stunted black hemlock.

In the coast region the stand is generally dense, and as much as 25,000 feet per acre has been estimated for considerable tracts. Sitka spruce probably averages 20 per cent. of the stand, and western hemlock about 75 per cent. The spruce reaches a large size, and occasionally attains diameters of more than six feet and heights of 150 feet. Diameters of three to four feet are attained by western red cedar. While by far the most abundant species, western hemlock, does not produce as large individual trees as the spruce or the cedar.

Practically the entire forest of the coast region is overmature. It has been accumulating for ages uninjured by fire or cutting. Shallow, rocky soil, steep mountain slopes, or poor drainage often prevent thrifty growth, and on such sites "stagheadedness" and decay are common. In favorable situations the rate of growth of the coast trees is fairly rapid. The following are typical:

A western red cedar stump in good soil on the south slope of a gorge above Ketchikan showed 235 rings. The diameter of this stump outside the bark was 38 inches. A 40-inch Sitka spruce stump in the same locality had 230 rings. This tree had been 125 feet high. Near Wrangell three Sitka spruce logs averaged 32 inches in diameter at the butt inside the bark, with 262 annual rings. Two examples of extreme age in Sitka spruce were noted in Portage bay between Petersburg and Juneau. A section of a log 54 inches in diameter taken 25 feet above the ground had 600 rings; another log 54 inches in diameter 8 feet above the ground had 525 rings. Both were entirely sound.

Logging in southeastern Alaska employs the crudest of methods. It is now carried on entirely by hand, though logging machinery was used in a few earlier operations. Only the best spruce trees at the edge of tide water are cut. The logs are frequently made the entire length of the tree, and are jacked up and rolled into the water, where they are tied into rafts and towed to the sawmill by tugs.

The annual lumber cut in the coast forests of Alaska is about 27,000,000 board feet. This consists almost entirely of spruce, since hemlock is but little used. There are about 25 sawmills on the coast, at Cordova, Douglas, Juneau, Katalla, Ketchikan, Petersburg, Seward, Sitka, Valdez, Wrangell, and other points, most of them rather crude in character and of small capacity. A large proportion of the output, probably more than one-third, is used for salmon cases, and much of the best lumber goes into them.

The southern and southeastern coast of Alaska has a much greater timber supply than there is any reason to think will be needed locally for a long time to come. The permanent industries of the region are fishing and mining. The mountainous character of the country will forever prevent agricultural operations of any magnitude. The total stumpage is large, much of it overmature, and the proportion of hemlock too great. The timber should be cut and utilized as soon as possible and the spruce, which is more valuable than the hemlock, should be given an opportunity to increase. Under present conditions, with the well-known ability of the hemlock to reproduce under shade and upon decaying logs and debris, it has the advantage of the spruce.

Since the Alaska coast forests do not contain timber of either as high quality or as great variety as grows in Oregon and Washington, there is little likelihood that lumber from them will compete largely in the general market with lumber from those states. In fact, some lumber used in southeastern Alaska is imported from the Pacific coast states, but good management on the part of the Alaska mills should enable them to supply the home demand for common kinds of lumber. While Alaska may eventually export considerable material of this sort, it must continue to import timber like Douglas fir for heavy construction work. Utilization for other purposes than for lumber should be encouraged. The most promising of these is for pulp. Both the spruce and hemlock are undoubtedly good pulp woods, and, taken together, they comprise almost the entire forest.

The cutting which has so far taken place on the coast of Alaska has had small effect upon the forest. The bulk of it is yet untouched. Clearly, utilization should be encouraged as much as possible. With respect to the coast forests, there is little in the statement sometimes made, that the timber in Alaska should be held for the sole use of Alaskans. It should be manufactured into the most suitable forms and sold wherever it best can be marketed. Natural barriers, so far unsurmounted, prevent it from being of benefit to the interior, where the need is greatest and the price highest. Moreover, the coast forests are not capable of producing a great deal of the structural material that will be needed in the interior when the latter region is more fully developed and made accessible by railroads.

The annual growth of the coast forests is far in excess of the local needs, and unless methods of utilization are developed which will result in the export of forest products these forests cannot be handled rightly.

The forests of interior Alaska are practically all included within the drainage basin of the Yukon and Kuskokwim rivers. They are chiefly of the woodland type, and are estimated to cover approximately 80,000,000 acres, but probably not more than 40,000,000 acres bear timber of sufficient size and density to make it especially valuable for either cord wood or saw logs.

Several times as much timber is used each year in the interior of Alaska for fuel as is used for lumber. The interior of Alaska depends entirely upon wood for heat, light and power.

Obviously all the forests of Alaska, whether on the coast or in the interior, should be protected and made of the utmost permanent use. The coast forests, which include most of the saw timber of the territory and by far the heaviest stands, are nearly all protected by national forests. They have not been damaged by fire and are but slightly reduced by cutting. They are overmature. Carefully planned cutting should take place as soon as possible. Every effort should be made to have them utilized for lumber, and especially for pulp. They should be so managed as to increase the stand of spruce and decrease that of hemlock. In the interior forests, situated entirely upon public lands, unregulated cutting and devastating fires are going on. The coast forests were reserved before they were impaired. Those of the interior have already been seriously damaged. Their protection cannot begin too soon. While the products of the coast forests need a foreign market, the interior forests with the best of treatment are not likely to supply more than a part of the home demand. If protected they will continue to furnish logs for cabins, low-grade lumber and fuel indefinitely. Higher grade lumber required by the interior must always be imported.

A PRIMITIVE POST OFFICE

Uncle Sam, in His Growth and Prosperity, Hasn't Yet Outlived This Borderland Relic.

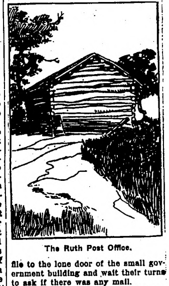
Jefferson City, Mo.—Without exception the most primitive post office building in Missouri is an old one-room log cabin situated on the crest of one of the highest hills of the Ozark mountains, in Stone county, about two miles south of Reed Springs. The old post office was known as Ruth, and furnished mail to the natives of a large section of Stone county for many years before the Missouri Pacific railway was built through the county. While the railway was in the course of construction, the members of the construction gang, who for many months camped about the big spring, which has since become the center of the little railway town known as Reed Springs, walked daily to the little old log cabin government building, two miles away to receive the tidings from some other quarter of the country.

The digging of one of the longest tunnels in the state, that just east of Reed Springs a little more than a half mile long, which connects the valley in which the town is, with the Roark country, kept the railway laborers in camp near the post office for more than six months. In this time the business of the diminutive post office increased and became in the words of Sam Davis, the postmaster and keeper of the only store in Ruth, "so bulky that I'll be gosh blamed ef I don't hef to put up another goods box to keep the papers in."

It appeared for a while that in order to have room for the large amount of letters, papers and packages which found their way to the ten by twelve feet post office, the government official would have to devote all his time to the work of distributing the mail and move his few caddies of tobacco, boxes of soap, barrels of sugar and salt, and other staple articles necessary to a country store to some other shelter.

"Wall, by gollies, I never did see the like," exclaimed the postmaster one evening, as he emptied the contents of a well-filled mail pouch which the carrier had just unloaded at the Ruth office. "Them fellers down yonder do beat all fer gittin' mail, I' vum. It keeps me busy looking over all this mail till I ain't got much time to tend to my customers."

The old post office became the central point of interest for the people for miles around, while the big business continued. The old farmers, the farmers' sons and even the housewives and their shy daughters took to going to the store of an evening after quitting time, not that they had any particular business there, but to see the long line of railway workers file to the lone door of the small government building and wait their turns to ask if there was any mail.



The Ruth Post Office.

But the rush of business for the log cabin post office of Ruth was only the boom before the slush. With the completion of the big tunnel of solid rock the construction gang moved on, leaving the post office as before. With the completion of the railway came the settlement of Reed Springs, to which place, in a short time, the Ruth post office was moved.

OF GREAT ECONOMIC VALUE

Our Many Harmless Insects and Birds That Prey Upon the Myriads of Destroying Insects.

Indianapolis.—"The average person has little appreciation of the economic value of certain harmless insects in preying upon and destroying insects like the brown-tail and gypsy moths which has done such damage, particularly in New England. These harmless insects," said Dr. A. K. Peterson of this city recently, "have a vital relation to civilization, just as the birds. It will not be long before there will be a general recognition of the demand of the Audubon society for uniform laws looking to the protection of nearly all the birds, for, with the possible exception of the English sparrow, they are a real force.

"The nighthawks, whippoorwills, swallows and swifts, which are in the air just after sunset every night, kill more moths and other insects than the imagination can estimate. The flycatchers are just as busy by day, and anyone who has ever observed a woodpecker running up and down a tree trunk knows that neither bug nor borer escapes. The birds are invaluable as insect destroyers and they destroy immense quantities of seeds from harmful plants."

Census Returns Show Lure of City

IT LOOKS GOOD TO HIM ALL RIGHT ALL RIGHT

WASHINGTON.—The census bureau has made public figures concerning enough localities to indicate certain interesting trends in the growth of American population. What stands out first is, of course, the general increase in population all over the country. While this growth is perhaps more striking in the middle west, or even in the far west, the east is little behind those sections. Increases in city population rarely fall below 20 per cent. for the last ten years. Often the increase is considerably in excess of 50 per cent.

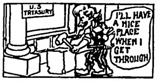
This growth has been expected, but there will probably be some surprise to find how far the growth of the cities exceeds that of the rural districts. Here, save in a few localities, there is an increase, but generally it is below ten per cent.

The center of population has moved almost due westward since 1790, when it was at a point 23 miles east of Baltimore. From 1790 to 1800 it moved almost due west to a point 18 miles west of Baltimore. In the next ten years, from 1800 to 1810, it moved westward and slightly southward to a point about forty miles northwest by west of Washington.

During the ten years between 1890 and 1900 the "center" moved westward a little over 14 miles and southward a little less than three miles, and halted at a point six miles southeast of Columbus, Ind. This movement between 1890 and 1900 was the smallest in 100 years.

The "center" will have to travel something like 70 miles to get beyond the borders of Indiana this year.

Overhauling the Treasury Building



U. S. TREASURY
I'LL HAVE A NICE PLACE WHEN I GET THROUGH

THE treasury building is undergoing another overhauling, which this time costs $180,000. The renovators have been at work on the treasury building for a good many years. Not very much has been done to the inside of the great pile of masonry, where the United States money is kept, but more or less work is all the time going on on the outside. All of the original sandstone or soft limestone that faced the outside of the building has been at last removed, and granite has been put in its place. The principal change that will now be made will be to eliminate the huge granite entrance steps on the Fifteenth street side. Several new passenger elevators will be installed. Lockers will be furnished sufficient for all of the clerks; the money-handling divisions will be segregated on the ground floor; supplies will be shipped from the west entrance instead of the Fifteenth street; frieze windows will be placed on the third floor, and a general adjustment of bureaus and divisions will be made to facilitate the work. The treasury department has been seriously overcrowded for a number of years. One of the very first improvements was the elimination from the building of the branch printing office, with its combustible inks, oils, etc. With the great Fifteenth street steps removed, a fine entrance at grade will be provided for the employes, and a count will be kept of the people entering and leaving the building, which at the present time seems to be impossible. At the present time the employes are obliged to carry their clothing, hats, rubbers, umbrellas and everything of that character into their working rooms, so that lockers are imperative. It will certainly be $180,000 mighty well expended, for in the present condition of the treasury department it is impossible to keep it clean or to run it on businesslike methods with departments of the various bureaus widely separated, so that the chief of one of these spends most of his time traversing the corridors in his attempt to keep track of his clerks and of his work.

Uncle Sam Watching Aeroplane Men

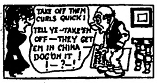
THE experts in both the army and the navy are watching with keen interest the development of the heavier-than-air craft. While the officials are not willing to say much publicly about the possibilities of the use of airships in time of war, they are saying privately that the probability is that when the next great war comes the airship will play a more effective part than battleships, land batteries, or great masses of troops.

The prediction is freely made by army and navy officials in private that not a dollar will ever be spent in fortifying for the protection of the Panama canal. They have arrived at this conclusion because they think they foresee that within a few years the airship will be brought to a stage of perfection that will enable it quickly to destroy any fortifications that might be erected along the route of the canal.

Congress at the recent session declined to appropriate money for the fortification of the canal. No public reason for this failure to make an appropriation was ever announced, but it is now pretty well understood that the experts in both the war and navy departments suggested that it would be well to defer action until the government understands better what to expect of the airship.

Officials in the army and navy departments are greatly impressed with the performances of Glenn Curtiss with his aeroplane at Atlantic City recently. Those performances were not under the auspices of either the war department or the navy department, but agents of each of the fighting arms were present, and were deeply impressed with what Curtiss was able to do.

Coy Curls Are Coming in From China



TAKE OFF THEM CURLS QUICK!
TELL YE—TAKE 'EM OFF—THEY GET EM IN CHINA—DOG'ON IT! !—?—!

VICE-CONSUL General Stuart J. Fuller of Hongkong sheds light on a problem which has vexed the brain of man for many moons—where all the hair comes from which goes to make up the wide expanse of coiffure which adorns the head of woman.

Much as he would like to believe that all womankind has suddenly come into the secret possessed by the Seven Sutherland Sisters, detached wisps, curls and occasional plaits, to say nothing of startling variation in texture, has forced upon the most unobservant suspicion that she bedecks herself with a foreign product. Our representative at Hongkong clinches the evidence with brutal statistics. He gives the following data of the quantities and value of hair shipped from that port in the last three years:

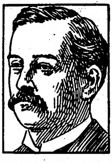
Year.	Pounds.	Value.
1907	56,132	$ 14,830
1908	207,232	82,209
1909	445,733	327,559

Note how the price has soared. In 1907 hair was worth only about twenty-five cents a pound, wholesale, and we imported only 56,132 pounds of it, while in 1909 we brought in 445,723 pounds, with the price at something more than seventy cents. Such a rate of growth in face of so rapid an increase in price is almost unprecedented in other lines of commerce and is another illustration that woman wants what she wants when she wants it and is going to have it—expense be hanged!

Our diplomatic representative leaves us in the dark as to what woman in China is doing for hair. If the trade keeps on, she will certainly be bald in course of time. He pays a compliment, however, to the genius of the Chinese artist by remarking that "Chinese hair is treated at home in various ways so as to match almost any texture desired."

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

JURIST ON THE RACE TRACK



Exchanging a seat on the federal bench of the old Oklahoma Territory for a seat on a sulkey behind fast-stepping trotters and pacers and filling both places in a satisfactory manner, John L. Pancoast, now a resident of Blackwell, northern Oklahoma, has been making the Oklahoma-Kansas racing circuit the past summer with a string of horses that have pulled down numerous purses for their erstwhile ermine-wearer owner.

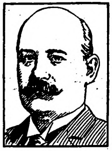
The love of horse flesh is the only reason why Judge Pancoast has changed from bench to sulkey. He is still a practising attorney and is admitted to practise before the United States Supreme court, but he prefers to see the steppers coming down the home stretch in a whirl of dust and hear the shouts of the onlookers as the animal he is driving perhaps noses out a head under the wire.

Judge Pancoast was always a devotee of the racetrack. He has always owned a string of fast horses and during his days on the bench he watched with interest the progress of his horses. In early life, however, in Ohio, where he was born, in 1852, and admitted to the bar in 1878, he made up his mind that he would some day wear the ermine. This fact he kept steadfastly before him. He had that "bee in his bonnet" when he located in western Kansas in 1879, going through with the usual experience of a young lawyer and afterwards moving to Oklahoma.

During territorial days in Oklahoma the federal judges named by the president were also the district judges of the territory and in addition to being district judges, the seven of them sitting together at the capital constituted the supreme bench of the territory. Thus John L. Pancoast became not only a federal judge, but also judge of the Seventh Oklahoma district with headquarters at Alva and a member of the territorial supreme bench with the title of associate justice.

Pancoast was appointed in 1902 by President Roosevelt and again in 1906 by the same president. Being a judge on the bench, with his one ambition in life realized, Pancoast did not forget his horses. It was his one relief from the bench, his vacation, his pastime, his fad. He served as judge until statehood abolished the court.

A PICTURESQUE PITTSBURGER



The most picturesque millionaire in Pittsburg and one of the most bizarre in the country is Alexander R. Peacock, who recently came into public notice on account of a bad egg. Because he got one for breakfast he spent nearly $70,000 to start a hennery with which to supply his table with eggs fresh from the nest. He has the reputation of being the most irascible individual in Pittsburg. What happened to his chef when Mr. Peacock tasted the cold storage egg that caused all the trouble may be imagined. After he had relieved his feelings he called up a real estate dealer.

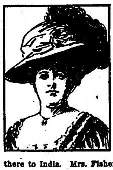
"I want a farm," he said, "a farm that is big enough to raise a lot of chickens."

Before night the real estate man had the farm; within two days a chicken house, 200 feet long and 30 feet wide, was well under way. The farm cost $60,000, and the henhouse about one-tenth that sum. It has been rushed to completion. It has steam heat, electric lights, tile flooring and electric incubators. Mr. Peacock received the first of his very expensive but superlatively fresh eggs recently.

Peacock's life story reads like an oriental romance. He was a clerk at the linen counter of a Pittsburg dry goods store when in the course of his duties he became acquainted with Mr. Carnegie. The ironmaster took a liking to the young Scotch lad, aided him in various ways, and his career thenceforth was meteoric.

Peacock married a daughter of a Brooklyn police captain, named Bedell. They have three children—two boys and a girl, the oldest of whom is twenty-one and the youngest ten.

CIRCLES GLOBE IN AN AUTO

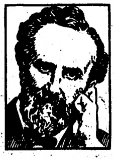


Mrs. Harriet Clark Fisher of Trenton, N. J., holds the unique record of being the only woman who has girdled the earth in an automobile. Mrs. Fisher's trip in her 40-horsepower machine makes new history in the automobile world, and particularly in the realm of women. With her on the trip were her secretary, Harold Fisher Brooks, who drove; a man and maid servant and Honk Honk, her pet bull terrier, who was taken along as a mascot. In addition, the car, which was especially built for the trip, carried a complete stock of tires, parts and cooking utensils.

The party landed in France, toured leisurely through it; thence through Germany and Switzerland; crossed to Italy, where a brief stay was made at Como. Thence they visited Vienna, Rome, Naples and Port Said, taking ship from there to India. Mrs. Fisher's letters referring to their experiences are interesting in the extreme.

The party met with several exceptionally exciting experiences that came near sending them back. After landing in San Francisco and starting east across her own country, Mrs. Fisher's trip was uneventful except for her arrest in Sandusky, O., for exceeding the speed limit.

AN ENGLISH PRISON EXPERT

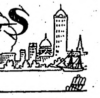


At the invitation of the United States government Thomas Holmes comes from England to attend the International Prison conference. Mr. Holmes is the secretary of the Howard association in London, which is devoted to the double work of reforming prison administration. He is admittedly the foremost of practical English criminologists. He has made a lifelong study of criminals. Before he became the secretary of the Howard association he was for many years a court missionary.

For a long time Mr. Holmes has been advocating the right of offenders to pay their fines by installments and thus, in a measure, equalizing the glaring disparity in treatment which the law makes between the rich and the poor. At present the poor man or youth who commits some trifling offense—is bundled off to jail if he cannot immediately hand over the pecuniary atonement for his misdemeanor which blind justice demands of him. On the other hand, the offender with a well-lined pocket, to whom the payment of the fine is no hardship, escapes the ignominy of imprisonment altogether.

Now, Mr. Holmes seems to be within measurable distance of getting his pet reform adopted by legal enactment. A few days ago, on behalf of the Howard association, he obtained an official interview with Winston Churchill, the home secretary, whose special business it is to look after the administration of justice, and Mr. Churchill since then has announced his intention of inaugurating this reform.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES



Many Americans Abroad This Season

LETTRE DE CREANCE
1001½ RUE MORGUE
DURN SECH A LANGUAGE

LONDON.—The American season in London, Paris and Berlin is the best since the three golden years preceding the panic of 1907. The hotels of all the capitals of Europe are thronged with well-to-do Americans, who are spending money with the traditional lavishness that pleases the hotelkeepers and shopkeepers everywhere.

Europe has learned that not all Americans are millionaires, and so it is that less is heard each year of extortion and attempted extortion. American tourists, too, seem to have learned the ropes and they know just where to go to get the most for their money.

Comfortable new hotels that charge reasonable prices have been built in all the capitals of Europe within the last five years and in Paris, London, Berlin, Rome and Vienna, new hotels invariably have many baths, while some that appeal to the wealthier visitors have suites with baths that are as modernly luxurious as anything New York can offer. What with comfortable and reasonable priced hotels, with express trains with dining cars attached connecting all the capitals, Americans find traveling in Europe nowadays much more simple and comfortable than it was 15 years ago.

Paris, despite the moderness of Berlin and its nocturnal brilliancy, continues to be the Mecca of Americans.

The season, both in London and Paris, this year has been marred by almost constant rain. In London a cold rain fell daily for almost three weeks from the middle of June. The weather was so chilly that newly arrived Americans were compelled to wear heavy overcoats and wraps. Paris, too, has been rainy and cold, and shopkeepers and restaurant keepers complain bitterly of the effects of the cold upon their trade.

Thanks to the American invasion with its train of gold, Parisians have reason to be fairly glad they are alive.

Home for Drunkards' Wives Is Closed

KANSAS CITY, Kan.—The home founded by Carry Nation, the Kansas "joint smasher," in this city as a refuge for drunkards' wives, will probably be closed and the property returned to Mrs. Nation. The reason is, there are not enough wives of drunkards in the largest city of Kansas to warrant the continued operation of a refuge for them. Mrs. Nation has requested of the Associated Charities, the organization which is managing the home, that the property be deeded back to her.

The home has accommodations for 40 women but there are no drunkards' wives in it now. The Associated Charities is using it as a home for unfortunate and homeless women. About fifteen women now occupy the home.

Peter W. Goebel, president of the board of directors of the Associated Charities, admits that the home is a failure as far as being a place for the housing of drunkards' wives.

"That is the 'distressing' condition that exists," Mr. Goebel said. "There is no use in denying it. We cannot find drunkards' wives to live there.

"Mrs. Nation has asked that we return the home to her. The members of the board of directors differ as to whether or not this should be done. She has agreed to pay us for what repairs and improvements have been made at the home and at present the association needs the money that would be thus received for other branches of work. At our next meeting we will finally determine what stand to take concerning holding or releasing the property."

Mrs. Nation secured most of the $4,000, which she originally paid for the property, from the sale of the small souvenir "Carrie A. Nation hatchets" which she and her friends sold for 25 cents.

The Busy Money Changers of New York

AND I CAN'T SPEND ANY UV IT EITHER

NEW YORK.—Four big banks in the Wall street district of New York city resemble the great gold mines of the west in one striking feature. They have three eight-hour shifts of toilers, and the work never stops. One set takes up the routine where the other leaves off. All night long, Sundays and holidays, a staff of men in each of these banks is busy opening thousands of letters, sorting and listing innumerable checks and drafts that represent fabulous sums of money, and getting them ready for the day force, which is the only one the public comes in contact with or ever hears about. If this work were not carried on incessantly, the banks would soon be overwhelmed with a mountainous accumulation of detail.

Two shifts—the "scouting force," as they call themselves—work between five o'clock in the afternoon and nine the next morning. Each bank has a big drawer in the general post office. Messengers clear this of its letters every hour all night long. Three thousand letters a day is the average mail of one of these large banks. Two-thirds of it comes in during the night. These letters, in the case of one of the biggest of these banks, contain from 35,000 to 40,000 checks and drafts. At times these inclosures represent as much as $30,000,000. Rarely does the total fall below $20,000,000.

The letters are opened as fast as they are received, the checks are counted, and the totals verified with the footings of the lists. The letters are then stamped, which shows that they have been "proven in," as the banks call it. After that they are turned over to the clerks who send out the formal acknowledgments of the remittances they contain. The various checks are assorted according to the numbers of the books in which they are to be entered and otherwise; the sight drafts are grouped according to the routes of the bank's messengers, and all is made ready for turning the night's accumulation over to the day force, so it may be handled by it as expeditiously as possible.

Aged Ice Regarded Safe for Health

I BELIEVE THERE'S GERMS IN THET ICE
NARY A ONE MAM

PHILADELPHIA.—The Natural Ice Association of America, including dealers in natural ice in Philadelphia, has begun a "campaign of education" to inform the public that aged ice is free from bacteria.

Bacteria are the little wigglers in water that get into the insides of people and often give them typhoid, diphtheria and other diseases. A quart of water contains a million or two of these bacteria. Some of them, not all, are dangerous to health.

But the natural ice men say—and they produce scientific argument to support their assertions—that although the bacteria are frozen into the ice when the water congeals, they are killed off so rapidly that in 24 hour 90 per cent. of them are dead, and within a few weeks the ice is sterile—absolutely free from bacterial life of any kind.

One Philadelphia natural ice dealer said recently: "Natural ice is cut in December, January and February. Seventy per cent. of it is used between June and September, when it is anywhere from sixteen to twenty weeks old, and when the bacteria are frozen in it, and have been without air, motion, warmth and food from four to five months."

"The buyer of ice should really be as anxious to obtain, and the dealer in natural ice as quick to advertise, that he sells old ice, as the green grocer is to seek trade on the strength of the freshness of his tomatoes or peas, and the butter and egg man on his new-laid or freshly made products. Old ice is pure ice, sterile ice, free from bacteria harmful or helpful."

The business of legislators seems to be that of putting new patches upon the social pants.

WAR MADE IMPOSSIBLE.

If all the "advanced" ideas were adopted it would seem that war would soon be made impossible. Many schemes have been exploited in the shape of skillfully written newspaper or magazine articles, but the building of big warships continues. The latest claimant for attention at Washington is an individual who has conceived the brilliant plan of having ships carry a reel of barbed wire at the stern, so arranged that an end can be thrown overboard while the vessel steams swiftly around the enemy until the latter's propellers are so tangled up that they cannot turn. Then, says the inventor, "all the fleet need is to sail away and leave its enemy's men to starve and its ships to rust." But the naval authorities have filed away this most impressive suggestion along with that of the man who a few years ago wanted the government to adopt a projectile filled with a gas that would anaesthetize all on board an enemy's ship, so that capture would be easy. The day of the inventor is not yet past. Nor that of the crank.

When the summer vacation season opens the rush of Americans to Europe taxes the capacity of the outgoing steamships. Long before the end of the summer vacation season the pressure of the returning tide of travel is felt. People who desire to journey in comfort and who neglect to engage their passage a long time ahead, find themselves at the present juncture obliged to pay extreme prices or wait. A special from Berlin tells of a wealthy New Yorker who wanted to come home and applied for first-class accommodations on the Hamburg-American line. The cheapest price at which he could procure a cabin suite, he found, was $2,000. The North German Lloyd boats are similarly crowded, both companies being "booked up" for several weeks. It pays the ocean traveler to be forehanded.

The house fly is frequently expounded upon as the most dangerous disease purveyor of summertime, says Chicago Journal. Let us not forget that the rat is also a dangerous marauder, and a menace to public health. San Francisco employs 80 rat trappers, who average more than 8,000 rats a month captured, and unknown armies of the pests poisoned in the sewers. Chicago should take measures to rid herself of the rat plague, which not only facilitates the distibution of disease but causes an annual loss of thousands of dollars by its sharp teeth and inordinate appetite.

A dispatch from Honolulu says that doctors have succeeded in isolating the germ of leprosy, that they are now trying to develop a serum, and that this means ultimately the cure for the disease. Unfortunately this is not the first time that we have been told we are on the eve of the discovery of a cure for leprosy. But it is 46 years since Hansen discovered the bacillus of leprosy.

They are laughing at a man in east New York who, waking suddenly, shot off his big toe thinking his foot was the face of a burglar. Chicago, which brags of its size in everything but feet, has the incident already noted for its comic almanac of next year.

A St. Louis astronomer has discovered a sun spot 50,000 miles wide and a Massachusetts astronomer has found a new comet. Nevertheless we expect things to move along the earth about as usual.

If anything can revive the Shakespeaean drama the rendering of "As You Like It" in Esperanto will do it. Even if it were dead it would rise up and kick.

It may be true that the average American eats 82 pounds of sugar a year, but he does not act the part when the umpire makes a bad decision.

Being chauffeur to an aeroplane is exhilarating, but for a fat man who is fond of his meals and his fireside fishing is better.

A Chicago man has a fiddle that has been played for 400 years. It does not state how many men it has driven to drink.

It would seem that about the only way for an aeroplane to get into print is to break in.

LORIMER IS BARRED

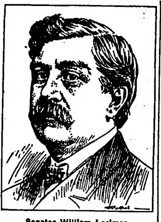
COMMITTEE GETS ULTIMATUM

Colonel Demands That Hamilton Club Withdraw Invitation—Telegram Is Sent Asking Senator to Be Absent From the Dinner.

Freeport, Ill.—Colonel Roosevelt and Senator Lorimer did not sit at the same banquet table Thursday night. While here Mr. Roosevelt positively refused to attend the dinner given by the Hamilton club at Chicago if the junior senator from Illinois was to be present.

A committee of 16 members of the Hamilton club, headed by ex-Judge John H. Batten, came to Freeport from Chicago in a special car and met Colonel Roosevelt, who attended the county fair here. They came to make arrangements for the dinner. The committee men met him at the fair grounds and the colonel at once asked who was to attend the dinner.



Senator William Lorimer.

"Is Speaker Cannon to be there?" he asked.

"Yes," Mr. Batten replied. "He accepted the invitation."

"How about Senator Lorimer?" he asked.

"Senator Lorimer is a member of the club," he was told. "He has accepted an invitation to the dinner."

"Then I must decline to go," said the colonel. He added that he would feel the same about the presence of Senator Lorimer as though members of the Illinois legislature, who are involved in the graft investigation, should be present at the dinner.

The members of the committee told the colonel that they would go back to Chicago and inform Senator Lorimer of his views.

"No," Colonel Roosevelt replied. "Send him a telegram, telling him that I will not attend the dinner if he is there."

President Batten consented to withdraw the invitation. The telegram was written and submitted to Colonel Roosevelt. He approved it, and Mr. Batten took the following message to the telegraph office:

"To William Lorimer, Chicago: Colonel Roosevelt positively declines to sit at the same table with you. Our invitation to you for this evening is therefore hereby withdrawn.

ILLINOIS COAL STRIKE ENDS

AGREEMENT REACHED BETWEEN MINERS AND OPERATORS.

Practically Every Demand of Men Is Granted—40,000 Workmen to Resume Work.

Chicago. — Forty-four thousand Illinois coal miners will resume work at once after an idleness of more than five months as a result of an agreement reached between the officials of the mine workers and the Illinois Coal Operators' association.

Practically every demand of the men has been granted. A contract exending up to April 1, 1912, was signed.

The average increase to the miners in wages will amount to eight cents per ton, or an aggregate of $4,000,000 annually. The installation of safety appliances and general betterments which the operators agree to give the men will increase the cost of putting coal on the market nearly 12 cents per ton.

Of the 72,000 miners who quit work April 1, more than 28,000 already have signed up and assume work. The balance will begin active work so soon as the mines can be pumped out and put into condition for operation. It is thought that by the middle of next week every mine in the state will be in full operation. Several are in condition to start mining at once.

It is estimated that the strike has caused a shortage of at least 20,000,000 tons; a loss in wages amounting to $15,000,000, and a net loss to the operators of nearly $10,000,000.

STATE PRIMARIES' RESULTS

La Follette in Wisconsin and Charles E. Townsend in Michigan Win in Senatorial Fight.

Milwaukee, Wis. — United States Senator Robert M. La Follette carried Wisconsin at the recent primary election by an overwhelming majority over Samuel A. Cook of Neenah. In Milwaukee county the senior senator's plurality easily will reach beyond 8,000 and estimates are given of his nomination over his opponent by a vote of 5 to 1, a larger majority than was anticipated.

There is no doubt that La Follette will have control of the candidates' platform convention at Madison and that he will have the next legislature back of him. So big was his vote that it carried with it a large majority of the legislative nominees. The La Follette state ticket, headed by Francis E. McGovern, also is nominated by a safe majority.

Aside from the Republican state ticket and the United States senatorial contests, few of the nominations were contested.

Detroit, Mich. — Congressman Charles E. Townsend is conceded by supporters of Senator Burrows to have swept the state in the fight for the Republican indorsement for United States senator at the primaries. Townsend's plurality is admitted to be more than 17,000. Chase S. Osborn of Sault Ste. Marie has a lead nearly as good for the Republican nomination for governor. Returns from two-thirds of the precincts in the state give these figures:

For governor—Osborn, 38,993.

For lieutenant-governor — Kelley, 24,014; Amos S. Musselman, 24,911.

29 PERISH IN LAKE

THIRTY-THREE ARE SAVED

Believed That 28 Freight Cars Became Loose and That Water Rolled Into Vessel's Stern During Heavy Sea.

Milwaukee.—Twenty-nine lives were lost in Lake Michigan when the Pere Marquette's car ferry, No. 18, sank from unknown cause twenty miles off Sheboygan, Wis., Friday.

It is declared one of the worst marine disasters in the history of Lake Michigan navigation. The boat was valued at $400,000, and the cargo, which included thirty-two loaded cars, estimated to be worth $150,000.

At the sacrifice of two of her own seamen, and after terrible hours of struggle the steel car ferry Pere Marquette No. 17, which went to the assistance of No. 18, reached this port with three dead, and twenty-nine survivors of the crew of her sister ship.

Twelve of the rescued were in one of the ship's boats, the remainder were clinging to the wreckage or floating about buffeted by the debris.

The catastrophe occurred approximately thirty miles off from Port Washington. No. 17, bound from Milwaukee for Ludington, reached the wreck just as the No. 18 sunk out of sight. Several miles away a lone boat was floundering in the surge and swell of the waves, and on all sides were the shrieks and screams of the poor wretches soaked through and through with the almost ice-cold water and gripped by the strong winds. Only a few had time to dress.

The Pere Marquette No. 20, out from Ludington bound for Milwaukee and manned by a crew most of whom come from the same city as those on the sunken vessel, was the third craft to reach there. Just prior to its arrival the fishing tug Tesler, out from Port Washington, had picked up six dead, among them Capt. Kilty, which were transferred to the No. 17 and taken back to Ludington.

In marine circles it is believed that the string of twenty-eight cars became loose as the ferry was buffeted about and that the water rolled into the vessel's stern, which is wide open. This seems plausible in view of the fact that the sea was rolling from the north, the most dangerous on Lake Michigan, while the steamer was heading southwest by south.

BROWNE FOUND NOT GUILTY

ILLINOIS LEGISLATOR FREED OF BRIBERY CHARGE.

Chicago.—The jury in the second trial of Lee O'Neil Browne, leader of the minority in the Illinois legislature, charged with bribing Representative Charles A. White to vote for Senator Lorimer, returned a verdict of not guilty in the criminal court Friday. In the first trial of Browne the jury disagreed.

The speedy verdict was a surprise to the many who had watched the progress of the second trial and had feared that a repetition of the tedious deliberations of the first jury would close the case. The verdict was returned before Judge Kersten after the jury had deliberated a little over twenty-one hours.

Altogether eight ballots were taken. The first poll showed them 8 to 4 for acquittal and several ballots were taken thereafter with the same result. Then there was a slight change to 9 to 3. Later the vote was 11 to 1, and on the eighth poll the full 12-to-0 vote was recorded.

As the words "not guilty" fell from the clerk's lips a cheer went up. Scenes of confusion followed. It was with difficulty that the bailiffs restrained the crowd. It was then that Browne jumped from his chair, seized Attorney Erbstein around the neck and they embraced each other. A moment later Browne was torn from his counsel by his friends. They pushed him around the room in almost a frenzy to offer their congratulations. Browne then tried to reach the jury box to thank the jurors.

"I thank—" he began, but he did not finish, his emotions overcoming him. Tears ran down his face.

The second Browne trial started before Judge Kersten August 1. It was fought stubbornly by both sides every moment and cost the county and the interests back of the defendant many thousands of dollars.

Browne was indicted by a special grand jury, May 6. The bribe was said to have ben paid White at the Briggs House, June 16, 1909, in accordance with an agreement made May 26, 1909.

St. Paul, Minn.—Before the conservation congress here Wednesday Senator Beveridge in an eloquent speech argued for national control of conserving the natural resources of the country, while James J. Hill spoke squarely against that idea.

Gifford Pinchot received an ovation that furnished the most dramatic moment of the congress. The former forester, the object of a wild demonstration by the audience, stood with tears streaming from his eyes until the outburst of cheers had subsided and the spectators were seated.

Just what Senator Beveridge was trying to say complimentary to Mr. Pinchot was drowned in the roar that rose the moment the trend of his remarks became apparent.

"Gifford Pinchot," said the speaker, and the outburst started. It grew until every one was yelling and the whole house was on its feet waving hats and handkerchiefs.

Senator Beveridge had no sooner retired than cries of "Pinchot! Pinchot!" rang through the house. He was dragged forth by President Baker. His voice shook as he spoke.

"It is magnificent," he said, "to hear the sound policies of conservation acclaimed as has been done here. Conservation has won out. I thank you."

YOUNG MAN'S IDEA BEVERIDGE'S TEXT

Indiana Senator Addresses Conservation Congress.

ACT FOR NATION AS WHOLE

Only as Entire Nation Is Prosperous Can Any State Be Prosperous—Waste of People's Wealth Must Stop.

St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 8.—United States Senator Albert J. Beveridge of Indiana was the principal speaker at today's session of the National Conservation congress. Senator Beveridge spoke at the morning session on the subject of "The Young Man's Idea." He said:

The United States is. The American people are a Nation—not forty-six nations.

Our history is the story of the struggle of the National sentiment of all the people, which special interests for their selfish purposes sought to discourage, against the provincial sentiment of some of the people, which special interests for their selfish purposes sought to encourage.

The parents of the provincial idea in American government was the British crown. The British kings believed that if the Colonies were separated by local pride, prejudice and jealousy the British policy would be easier. They knew that if the colonists were united by common interests, sentiment and purpose, the British policy would be harder. And that policy was to permit the special interests of the United Kingdom to exploit the people of the colonies.

Therefore from King James to King George the British crown fostered local pride, prejudice, jealousy and hostility among the colonies. Divided in geography for convenience of British government, the British kings kept them divided in spirit for the interests of British manufacturers. Every British law which forced the revolution was a law to help the special interests of the United Kingdom monopolize the markets of the separated colonies. The revolution was the war of the people, for the moment united, against the special interests that had plundered them when divided.

Such is the historic origin of American provincialism. Washington and his continentals were the infant National idea in uniform and manning the shotted guns of of liberty; the British and their Tory and Hessian allies were the full grown provincial idea behind the bayonets of oppression. The colonists entered the conflict under many flags; the American people emerged from the struggle carrying a single banner.

Provincial Idea Failed.

Our first attempt at government was a failure because the royal British idea of provincialism still was powerful. The local pride, prejudice and jealousy of separate colonies sprang up when their common dangers was over. The Articles of Confederation was the unhappy result. Washington declared that that government was contemptible. It was the provincial idea carried to its logical conclusion. And so it fell.

The people's cruel necessities compelled the reassertion of the National idea, and the constitution was that idea's immortal child. The Articles of Confederation declared that "we, the states" formed the government; the constitution declares that "we, the people," formed the government "to promote our general welfare." Yet into that "great ordinance of nationality," as Chief Justice Marshall calls our constitution, crept defects which the statesmen of that day could not prevent—defects which have been the source of most of our troubles since; and most of them come from that provincialism which we had inherited from the policy of the British kings.

As the constitution was adopted, "States' rights" were not mentioned. Washington was elected president; congress was in session and the National government was under way. The tenth amendment came to quiet these who were preaching the paradox that the general government of all the people would oppress the people. Noisiest of these was Patrick Henry, then governor of Virginia, who refused to attend the constitutional convention and opposed the ratification of our fundamental law. Upon the embers of provincialism he threw the inflammable brushwood of his excited rhetoric.

National Spirit Victorious.

Being in the constitution, the states' rights provision is as valid as any other amendment. But such is its orgin and spirit; and its misinterpretation never must be permitted to nullify the Nation's interests, waste the Nation's resources, plunge the Nation into war or prevent the general welware of the whole people. Now, as always, the danger has been not so much that the Nation will interfere with the rights of the states, as that the states will interfere with the rights of the Nation.

After the National government was started its first conflict with provincialism was in the whisky rebellion in Pennsylvania; the special interests who dealt in rum in the name of state sovereignty defied the execution of the Nation's laws; but Washington put down that first states' rights rebellion in the name of the government of all the people.

Then came the resistance of special interests to the laws of all the people in Andrew Jackson's day. The voice of Jackson in his day, like the voice of Washington in his day, was the voice of a united people against special interests who, behind the shield of provincialism, sought to exploit all the people.

Then came the special interests that thrived on slavery and under the provincial interpretation of "states' rights" sought to destroy the Nation they could not control. But the National spirit responded to Abraham Lincoln's call to arms; and in the mightiest war of history a million bayonets again wrote across our constitution these words of the American people's immortality: "This is a Nation."

Special interests were robbing and corrupting the whole people by lotteries; special interests were poisoning morals with the leprosy of obscene literature. They existed under state protection. The Nation alone could stop them. They denied the Nation's right to interfere. But the Nation did stop them and the supreme court sustained the Nation's power.

It was the same with special interests that were selling diseased meats, poisoned foods and adulterated drugs to the masses; these special interests again fought the Nation's effort to protect the Nation's people. Yet today National laws shield the health and lives of the people. These evils flourished under the provincial idea of the people divided; they perished under the National idea of the people united. And again today we see these two ideas arrayed in battle for and against the National control of corporate capitalization upon which so largely depend just rates and prices to the people.

Just as the idea of provincialism has worked other evils, so it has worked the waste of our national resources. The provincial idea was that the natural wealth belonging to all the American people should be handed over for nothing to special interests. This was done under the plea of encouraging individual enterprise and the hastening of local development.

And so forests which once belonged to all the people have been ruthlessly felled and upon their ruins have risen the empires of our lumber kings. Priceless deposits of coal, iron ore and copper which once belonged to all the people have been surrendered freely to special interests; and these sources of the people's revenue which should have flowed into the people's treasury to pay the expense of the people's government have been diverted by the ditch dug by the provincial idea, into the treasury of multi-millionaires until the peril of their swollen fortunes is one of the problems confronting American statesmanship.

Waste Must Be Stopped.

All this waste and robbery of the people's wealth must be stopped. No ancient and provincial interpretation of states' rights must prevent the enforcement of the people's rights. No special plea for hasty local development must hinder healthy general development. No temporary state politics compelled by the wealthy few must impair permanent National statesmanship for the general good of all.

Had we kept the natural resources of all the people and made private interests pay the people a just return for exploiting those resources, the Nation's income thus derived would now pay most of the Nation's expenses; those resources would have been wisely used and not exhausted; and our whole growth would have been rational and sound instead of unbalanced and defective. We would have enjoyed all the benefits from our natural resources and yet our children would have inherited colossal National wealth and small National burdens instead of private interests enjoying all the benefits of our national resources and their children inheriting colossal private wealth and small private burdens.

The Nation must keep and administer for all the people those natural resources belonging to all the people. Every state should aid and not hinder the Nation in doing this great duty. The state should preserve for the public good the resources belonging exclusively to it, the municipality the resources belonging exclusively to it; and both should help the Nation in doing the same thing with resources belonging to all.

Had certain states conserved their resources which the Nation gave them, instead of turning them over to private exploitation, the people of those states would be better off today, their children better off tomorrow and their economic condition better now and for all time to come.

Had the Nation conserved the resources which belonged to all the American people instead of abandoning most of them to cunning, strength and greed, our progress would have been sounder and more sure.

Common Sense Policy.

Co-operation of municipality, state and Nation to correct past mistakes and preserve and administer for the general good of all the people the natural resources yet remaining—this is the policy of common sense and common honesty. Strife and division to the end that the reign of waste and pillage under the false name of development shall go on and the feverish upbuilding of private wealth upon the ruins of the people's resources shall continue—this is the policy of private avarice and private plunder. Forests and coal, water powers and phosphates—all the wealth that belongs to all the people must be kept and developed for the benefit of all the people.

This great policy for the welfare of all the people is now well under way. Let us beware how we hinder or retard it. It is another step in the glorious process of the building of the Nation. Already it has saved the people much that remains of their resources; it must save the people all that remains of their resources. "Honor to whom honor is due"—let us not forget that the man who in thought, deed and word has championed this vast and historic reform until today he is its personification, is that courageous, pure, unselfish young American, the president of the National Conservation association, Gifford Pinchot. For years he has fearlessly fought, and ceaselessly toiled, to save and protect for the people the property of the people; and in that nationwide battle has been the field officer of the man who first made this mighty movement a permanent and practical policy of American statesmanship, Theodore Roosevelt.

The soul of our prosperity as a people, our very life itself, depends on the idea of our unity and our brotherhood—municipality, state and Nation each working within its province for the common good of all the people instead of municipality, state and Nation within its province conniving at the perilous enrichment of the few to the injury and impoverishment of all. The economic and honest care of the people's common welfare means the just advantage to which individual ability, industry and thrift are entitled; the uneconomic and immoral upbuilding of special interests by the sacrifice of public wealth means the denial of that just advantage to which individual ability, enterprise and thrift are entitled. This is a government of all the people; it should be conducted for all the people.

The duty of the young men today in working for themselves is to think and act for what the constitution calls "the general welfare" of the Nation as a whole. Only as the entire Nation is prosperous can any state be really prosperous. Only as the entire Nation is powerful can any state be really safe from foes foreign and domestic. Young men of today are not the heirs of the provincial ideal which has hindered so much the real progress of the people, wasted so much of their resources, shed so much of their blood.

No, the young men of today are the heirs of all the advancement that our struggling millions have made toward their common brotherhood. The young men of today are the heirs of all the victories which statesmen and heroes have won for the general welfare. The young men of today are the heirs of the unifying work of all the inventions by which the genius of man has woven all the American people into one great family.

The young men of today are in a different environment than that which saw the birth of the provincial idea. And so the young men of today must think in the terms of the Nation; the blood of our common citizenship must pulse in their veins; their thoughts and acts must be for the common good of all. On that foundation only can be built the individual good of each; and though "the rains descend and the floods come and the winds blow" upon the house builded upon such foundations, "it shall not fall, for it is builded upon a rock."

Why was the American Nation founded? What is the purpose of this Republic? It is to create a greater human happiness than the world has known; it is that millions of men and women may co-operate in the upbuilding of clean, honorable, prosperous homes. Let us move forward in a common effort for our common good that the American Nation shall set for all humanity a successful example of common brotherhood.

PISTOL DUEL; 1 DEAD

A. G. RAY, GREAT NORTHERN SPECIAL AGENT, KILLS MAN WHO FIRES ON HIM.

IN COMPANY'S GENERAL OFFICES

C. T. Welsh, Discharged Employe, Tries To Slay Chief—First Hurls Nitro-Glycerine, Then Shoots Five Times.

St. Paul. — C. T. Welsh, a former employe of the Great Northern, tried to assassinate A. G. Ray, special agent of the Great Northern, and was shot and killed by his intended victim. The attack was made in the St. Paul general offices of the Great Northern as Ray was going over his morning mail.

Welsh went into the office and inquired for mail. When told that there was none for him, he left, saying that he would return in three days. Later, Ray went to his office and started reading his morning mail. Without warning Welsh rushed in again and started shooting.

Ray, who travels armed, drew his weapon and started shooting at his would-be assassin. He shot at him four times, every bullet taking effect in the man's body. Ray was unharmed, for Welsh, evidently being nervous, was unable to hit him.

Hurls Nitro-Glycerine.

Just after he had fired the first shot, Welsh threw a pint bottle of nitroglycerine, already fused, at Ray, but the bottle went wild, the thick wrapping paper preventing its explosion. There was enough nitro-glycerine in it to destroy the entire Great Northern building. In his pockets other fuses and percussion caps were found.

Welsh, according to railroad officials, shot "Little Tommy," a burglar, in Duluth last fall when on duty as a watchman. He was acquitted. He was single, about 45 years old.

L. S. Hess, chief clerk in Ray's office, was present when Welsh came in the second time, and as soon as the shooting started he ran into the vault. He was the only witness.

ROCHESTER SCHOOL IS BURNED.

Queen City Without Water as Result of Fire Disaster.

Rochester.—Rochester was visited by one of the most disastrous fires in its history when the Central school building was almost totally destroyed. The fire was caused from a defective flue, as a short time previons the janitor had built a trial fire in the furnace with some old papers and the blaze originated in the roof.

The building is an old one and its ornamental roof was an easy prey to the flames, which were discovered by Superintendent C. I. Woodfield. Low water pressure at the time made fire fighting difficult and the department was given one of the battles of its life to save the building and surrounding property. The building is practically ruined, but is well covered by insurance.

The destruction of the school house, which was the main grade school of the city, places Rochester in a bad condition for the opening of the city schools Monday. The old high school building has just been torn down to make way for a new one, and it was with difficulty that the board of education was able to provide accommodations for the high school students for this year. The fire also worked havoc with the water supply. The immense amount of water used on the building completely exhausted the city supply, and river water is being run into the mains. The board of health has taken stringent measures and is warning the public to boil all water used for drinking purposes.

CUYUNA SHIPMENTS ABOUT DUE.

New Iron Range Preparing to go Into the Market.

Duluth. — The new Minnesota Iron Range, the Cuyuna, will make its initial shipments in commercial quantity this fall. Fifty thousand tons of ore from the Kennedy mine, controlled by the Rogers-Brown company of Buffalo and New York, will be railed by the Soo line to Ashland, via Duluth, and from there shipped in boats to Lake Erie.

The ore movement from Cuyuna after this season will be received at Duluth and transferred from cars to boats here. The Soo Line will build an ore dock on Superior bay this winter for that purpose.

Shriners to Build at Duluth.

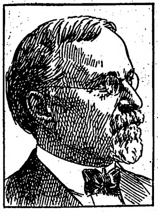
Duluth.—Aad Temple, Mystic Shriners, will build a home costing approximately $100,000 and a committee from the temple is now considering the purchase of a site, three or four locations being under consideration. There are almost 1,000 Shriners in Duluth and they feel that they should branch out and establish their own temple, relieving the crowded condition of the Masonic Temple, which now houses all of the Masonic orders in the city.

MAYOR HAYNES OPPOSED.

Hugh T. Halbert, St. Paul, Is Out for Congressman Stevens' Place.

Minneapolis. — Hon. George B. Esterman, alderman of the Seventh ward, filed for the Democratic nomination for mayor, making an entirely new alignment in the Minneapolis mayoralty situation.

The filing of Mr. Esterman for mayor is probably the most sensational event in Minneapolis politics. In the state arena, the filing of Hugh T. Halbert, of St. Paul, for congressman, in opposition to Fred C. Stevens was equally important. Mr. Halbert, as head of the Roosevelt club, has held the banner of insurgency in St. Paul and his opposition to Congressman Stevens will reproduce in St. Paul the same situation that exists in Minneapolis where Albert H. Hall is endeavoring to take the nomination away from Frank M. Nye.



FREDERICK C. STEVENS.
Congressman from Fourth District of Minnesota.

Mr. Esterman's Career.

George B. Esterman, who filed for the Democratic nomination for mayor against Mayor J. C. Haynes, is engaged in the laundry business and up to two years ago was unknown in politics. Since then he has been a prominent figure in the Democratic situation and at the time of the Democratic state convention was made a member of the committee on credentials by Chairman W. S. Hammond.

HUNTERS TAKE FIELD.

Many Twin City and Duluth Nimrods Expected in Crookston.

Crookston.—Regardless of every other crop the crop of prairie chickens in this section this year is without doubt the largest in many years. The spring was early, and the birds are all extraordinarily large, with the exception of second hatches, of which there are many. The grain was so short this year that the cover in the stubble fields will be poor, and the hunting will be in the grass and wherever cover is afforded.

Many of the hunters have left the city for their favorite preserves and every available livery rig in the city has been hired for the opening days. Within a couple of miles of the city there are scores of coveys.

Many hunters have arrived from St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth, taking the branch line trains out to Stephen, Warren, Middle River, Fosston and other points which they particularly favor, and they probably will have the finest sport in years. Bird dogs are at a premium because of the good hunting prospects, and are bringing big prices where they can be secured at all.

Game Warden Munch and other wardens of this section now have their scouts so well organized that law violators are rare, as, in addition to being costly, it is fast coming to be looked upon as disgraceful to join the sooners and take advantage of fair sportsmen.

ANNAPOLIS SEEKS RECRUITS.

Washington, D. C. — Senators and representatives will be called upon by the navy department to nominate about 500 candidates for the naval academy before next spring. There are about 450 vacancies existing or in prospect at the academy. According to reports which have reached the navy department, out of the total of 583 candidates who have taken the examination for next year's class, only 199 have passed. This percentage of those who qualified is unusually small and a frantic appeal was sent out by Rear Admiral R. F. Nicholson, chief of the bureau of navigation, to the senators and members of the house, asking them to name competent young men who are ambitious to shine in history as naval heroes.

By his circular letter Admiral Nicholson informed the Minnesota senators that they will have two vacancies to fill by graduation and the Minnesota members of the house that six vacancies already exist and three more will be created by graduation.

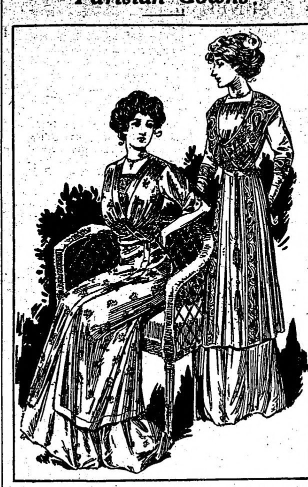
FIVE SAWMILLS SHUT DOWN.

Low Water at Cloquet Makes 1,000 Men Temporarily Idle.

Duluth.—The five sawmills at Cloquet are shut down for the second time this season, on account of the low stage of water in the St. Louis river, and 1,000 men are temporarily idle.

The mills will resume operation again as soon as rains improve the conditions for driving logs. Millions of feet of logs are high and dry on the banks of the river.

Parisian Gowns



THE gown at the left is of pure mauve figured voile. The plain skirt is covered with a long princess tunic, which is slightly draped at the waist and bordered all around with a band of plain mauve silk.

The little quastron is of white lace.

The other gown is of straw-colored crepon. The skirt is plain; the Russian blouse, with long, full skirt, is trimmed with bands and revers of batiste printed in soft colors, blue predominating. A silk cord and tassels form the girdle.

GLORIES OF THE NEGLIGEE

Present Styles Well Adapted for Making Garment Both Comfortable and Well-Looking.

The popular "negligee" is an interesting part of the average wardrobe. In the past, when the "wrapper" held sway with housewives, this phase of the wardrobe was a thing to be deplored. It was possibly the "Mother Hubbard's" strenuous use late in the last century that ousted the style completely. It was about that time that the tea gown came into strenuous vogue, and even since that era the negligee has been more sightly—whether the "Mother Hubbard" wrapped and the tea gown had anything to do with the transforamtion or not.

The limp materials used now and the "picture" styles are all suited to the house gown, and unless a woman is very seriously incapacitated from obtaining pretty clothes there is no reason why even the little morning "slip on" should not be becoming and attractive. One finds in the shops all sorts and kinds of pretty dressing sacques at wonderfully small prices. They may be made at home with still less expense, to be sure, and with better finish, if one is a good sewer. But a large part of the feminine population is too busy in one way or another to do sewing that can be obtained ready made, and it certainly costs less to buy garments ready made than to hire them made.

There are women who have a seamstress to help out with the sewing, but such helpers are as hard to find as the proverbial hen's teeth. Good sewers seem to have abandoned their rightful profession for something else.

Many of the thin cottons and silks that are selling at reduced prices are just the thing for little house dresses and sacques. For morning wear in the family many women have come to wear a white or colored linen or cotton wash skirt with a pretty sacque. Such sacques come with belts that give them a trim look and have collars or kimono fronts.

The sacque with fitted back and kimono front and belt that may be dipped well at the waistline is universally becoming. Some very fine, well finished batiste ones of this kind sell for less than a dollar. The fronts and backs are tucked, there is a kimono band down the front and around the neck, and the sleeves are of three-quarter length with tucked cuffs.

Roses and Rosettes.

Big roses fashioned of white borderie Anglaise are allied to the hat of stretched borderie Anglaise over white straw, which is so fashionable, and which has for a finish a narrow band of black velvet around the brim, while there are hundreds of tweed and leather hats in all colors which will be trimmed with leather scarves in the same or a contrasting shade and leather or tweed buckles.

Gingham Gowns.

Ginghams with grounds of gray or of the "blond" shades seen in cloths lend themselves particularly well to combination with bright plaids, and some charming frocks of these tones are made up with flowered, striped, or plaid materials, piped with brilliant blue, red, or green, to which are added other accents, such as a belt or stiff little bows of the same brilliant tone.—Harper's Bazar.

JEWELS NEED BEST OF CARE

Precious Stones Quick to Resent Neglect—How They Should Be Treated for Good Results.

Women who own valuable jewelry should take personal care of it and intelligent care at that. Leaving fine gold and precious stones to rattle around in a dusty jewel box is giving them not attention, but neglect.

Clean gold and silver by scrubbing with solft soapsuds with a solft toothbrush. After washing cover them with sawdust to dry. Rubbing half a lemon on silver will keep it from blackening and tarnishing.

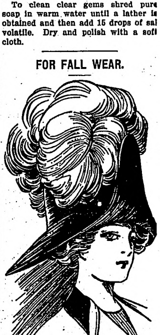
Diamonds must also be brushed lightly with soapsuds and rinsed in cologne water. Keep the edges in the diamond setting clean, scraping them gently with a clean toothpick, not hard enough to loosen the stone.

To cleanse pearls never use water. Water turns pearls black and spoils all their beauty. Foolish as it may sound, shutting them up with a piece of ashwood will keep them white without any further precaution. Pearls are the most sensitive of all gems and show easily the bodily and mental health of the wearer. Moreover, they lose their luster and die if not worn at all.

A but of putty rubbed on a chamois skin will keep opals clean. These most beautiful of all stones in spite of their bad reputation, will shine with undimmed radiance forever if gently treated by this method.

To clean clear gems shred pure soap in warm water until a lather is obtained and then add 15 drops of sal volatile. Dry and polish with a soft cloth.

FOR FALL WEAR.



A shape which will be much worn this fall. This hat is made of "peau de sole," with soft feathers in shades of old rose.

New Silk Weave.

There is a new silk liberty showerproof weave for dresses and coats, which is very effective. This silk, 3[illegible] inches wide, is in the Tyrian texture, and makes up delightfully into dresses for all occasions.

Entered as Second-class matter August 20 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

We don't suppose the farmers in the town of Highlanding would have known how to vote, if Mr. Ramstad had not taken a run out in his autimobile to have told them.

The farmers over in O.A.Lindqists district are going to retire him from any furthur prospect of being elected to represent them as county commissioner on September 20th,. May the dead rest in peace.

There is no longer any doubt that Halvor Steenerson will be renominated for congressman from this district by an overwhelming majority, so be sure and vote for him and the majority.

It don't seem like a square deal for two Hansons to jump on Bergin the state senator race, but as he locks to be a big husky Norsk, from the north, he will likely put them both in the clear next Tuesday.

There is n o reson whatevaer for changing the office of county treasurer. Mr. Ives has only had it part of one term and as he has given the best of satisfaction in that office he should receive the indorsement of the voters for one term, at least.

If a man that intended to vote for G.L. Hanson should make a mistake and vote for A. L. Hanson, it would be a bad mistake. But if a man that intended to vote for A. L. Hanson should make a mistake and vote for G. L. Hanson it would be a lucky mistake.

And now comes Peter Ramstad, the banker from Thief River Falls rideing around in an autimobile tacking up Hansons county option cards. He will be careful to see that his machine is in good order to make speed, if he goes near any of the farmers that he has been makeing horse deals with.

There is one certainty, and that is; that there is no fight being made agaist the nomination, or election of Senator Hanson by any of the opponents of county option, as they do not want anything eaiser to handle than G.L. Hanson-hold on we meant a.L.Hanson. They simply set him up in a corner, and there he sits and draws his salary until the legislotur ajourns, then he coms home and tells people what he expects to do, if they will elect him again. A. great man that Hason!

The bull dog editor supporters of senator Hanson, at Thief River Falls, are unchained by the autimobile banker candidate from Ada, and ordered to "chaw up" the carcass of one G. L. Hanson, a respeciable farmer from town of Lake Plesent, all because he has filed for the republican nomination for state senator of this District. Mr. Hanson of this county is in every way better qualified for the position and is worthy of your support. So if you are going to vote for Hanson be sure and not make a mistake and vote for the banker Hanson, instead of the farmer Hanson. But the sure way would be to vote for Albert Berg, then you would know you was right.

We fail to see what people who favor county option can expect to gain by voteing for senator Hanson. Did you not have him for four years and found out he could do nothing? Albert Berg is not runing for state senator to represent the wholesale liquor dealers but the PEOPLE. Give him your votes, then get up a patition for your county opition, and you will hear something drop in St. Paul. You have everything to gain and nothing to loose by voteing for Berg.

THE MANTILLA.

A Spanish Woman Answers the Question, "Why Do You Wear It?"

The writer once asked of a well known lady of the Spanish aristocracy who was seated in the box of the president of a corrida in Madrid. "Why do you wear a mantilla?" and the fair duchess replied: "Because we all wear a mantilla at a bullfight or at any truly Spanish function. It is the proper thing to do, and we do it."

A little later as I strolled among a group of aficionados I ventured to ask a woman of the people over whose head and shoulders was also thrown a mantilla why all Spanish women, to whatever class they belonged, wore this national headgear, if it may be called thus.

This woman was sitting in the open air, and I was thinking that a large straw hat would have protected her better from the burning rays of the sun and been quite as picturesque She replied in that droning, warm tone so typical of the Spanish: "Well, I happened to have often thought of this, and I think the reason why we all wear the mantilla is because we Spanish women are most careful about our hair. We think the chief charms of a woman are her eyes and her hair And, as you may see, we all have splendid, thick, lustrous hair, and we are supposed to have, many of us, fascinating eyes. Now, why should we hide our elaborately arranged hair under a hat and conceal our eyes in the shade cast by the brim of a hat?"

No doubt this woman was right. Parisian elegance to the Spanish women of the upper classes may have its attractions, but they, as their less fortunate compatriots, all agree that beautiful hair and expressive eyes are more important. * * * And both of these may be cultivated.—London Mail.

THE FIRST WINDMILLS.

Could Work Only When the Wind Blew From a Certain Point.

Windmills are said to have been introduced into England by the Knights of St. John, who observed them in use among the Saracens in the Crusades, but how long they had been in existence before this it is not possible to ascertain. A water mill was built in Bohemia in the year 718, for an old chronicler mentions it, going on to say that "before that time all the mills in Bohemia were windmills set upon the summit of hills."

For hundreds of years windmills were among the most important adjuncts of industry, yet they hardly changed from the rude and primitive design of earliest days. They were fixed in one position, and so could only be worked when the wind blew from a certain quarter, while the four sails boasted no slats or checking apparatus of any kind, which must have been most inconvenient at times.

The first idea of arranging a mill so that it could be worked "whene'er the wind did blow" was that of tethering an ordinary mill in the middle of a pond by means of ropes. When the wind shifted the ropes were loosed and the mill dragged around until the sails were caught by the wind, and it was then again tethered as before.

Later on a great pole, which was worked on the principle of a turntable, was affixed to the mill. Not until 1500 did Holland, the land of windmills, introduce a movable dome carrying the sail axle. The dome ran on rollers and was shifted around by means of the pole mentioned above. These ancient mills were often of massive build, being made of brick or stone, and later entirely of wood.—London Globe.

Source of Supply Gone.

"Why don't you bring out an umbrella on a drenching day like this?" inquired a man of a neighbor's son.

"Since father gave up his club he's never brought home any more umbrellas," replied the lad.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Good Reason.

"Well, Johnny, do you wish you were a grownup man?"

"You bet I do."

"But why?"

"So people wouldn't ask me such fool questions."—[illegible]

She left the place. She would lay another egg tomorrow.—Princeton Tiger.

The Helmet That Fell.

Roquelaure, the deformed jester of Louis XIV., contrived to get out of many a scrape by his ready wit. One day he went to the king to ask his pardon for having struck off the helmet of one of his sentinels who had failed to give him the military salute. Louis, who knew his man, wondered that Roquelaure should crave his pardon for so venial an offense and said to him, "This is a serious matter, Roquelaure, but I will pardon you this time."

It afterward turned out that the soldier's head was in the helmet and fell with it to the ground.—Argonaut.

The Astonishing Part.

Lord Townshend at the battle of Dettengen was standing quite near a drummer boy whose brains were dashed out by a cannon ball. His lordship gazed on the horrible spectacle for some moments in silence.

At last an old officer spoke up and said: "Why is your lordship surprised? Such things must happen in war."

"I know it," was the reply, "but what astonishes me is that a boy with so much brains should be here at all."

A Bright Outlook.

"Do you—er—do you think, Miss Dobleigh, that you will be—er—engaged next Thursday evening?" asked Tompy very bashfully.

"Well, really, Mr. Tompy," replied Ethel, "I don't know, but if you can get up spunk enough between now and then to do your share I think there's a fair prospect that I shall be."

And Tompy did.—Harper's Weekly

Henry Arndt threshed on last Monday a fine crop of grain for this year. Although the yeaild is not heavy the extra quality, and price will go a long way toward evening up, besides there will not be so many sacks of grain to to tug around.

Walter McAndress, John Quirk and James O'Brien threshed this week. All the wheat was of No 1 quality, and Mr. McAndress wheat yeallded a little over 17 bushels an acre, but we did hear how much the others had per acre.

Something went wrong with the Erickson seperator Tuesday and they sent after an expert to make the seperator seperate. The straw is very short this year, and care should be taken to not crowd the machines, if you expect to save your grain.

Oscar Swanson has been threshing in this neighborhood this week. He has a new small sized J. I. Case seperator, which is just the thing for this part of the country, as it does first class work and is easily moved from one seting to another.

Burt Umlind, the Clearwater county surveyor was over here Tuesday to do some expert surveying on the, so called Swanson ditch. We understand that he came to the conclusion, that there was six foot fall on the section line from the south east corner of section 28 north to the river, and that John Polonies house was in the public highway between section 28 and 29. Of course "we dont know noding only what we hear, dat's all."

THAT NEW COURT HOUSE.

The Elveve Towns devotes a half colum of their valuable? space to critizing us for not answering a corespondent about whether Pennington county will be compelled to pay for their share of the new court house in the event of division. We have answed this question twice, and here goes for the third time, and we hope our friend up at Erie will cut this out and paste it in his hat, so he wont forget it. No you don't have to pay your share of the new court house, in the event of division, but you will have to pay your share of them $37,000 bonds given to pay for the building of that court house, and now please don't forget it, again.

FOR COUNTY AUDITOR.

I fully intended entering another vocation and had no intention of filing for the office of County Auditor but have been constantly and repedtely urged to become a candidate for the office by your township and school officials and other men throughout the county with whom I have come in close contact through my relations with them as County Auditor. I have therefore decided to enter the race for County Auditor on the Republican ticket at the primaries to be held September 20.

A. A. LATENDRESS.

We wish to state, as school clerk of school District No. 87 that we indorse what he says regarding school officers, and the people can be sure that their public school business will be well attended to with him in the Auditors office. W. G. Hunt, clerk.

POLITICAL DOINGS.

Farmers should take time to go to the primary election and vote September 20th, and not allow the city fellows to do all of the nominateing of the ticket that you expect to vote next November.

Charley Fellman of St. Hilaire was calling on the eleven towns voters this week, solicting their votes for his nomination for sheriff. Mr. Fellman is a man well qualified for this office, and if you believe in passing the honors around, give him a vote next Tuesday.

It is very evident from the panic in the Senator Hanson camp, occasioned by the fileing of G. L. Hanson, that they rely on them to support A. L. Hanson for reelection for senator from this district that don't know A from G. The fellows that do know their letters won't make any mistakes, for they will vote for Berg X for Senator.

Last May, governor Ebehard selected Ira C. Richardson for Probate Judge of this county; and Mr. Richardson with his twenty-five years experience as a lawyer in this state, is certainly well qualified for the office and we see no reason why the people should turn him out for any new and inexperienced man. Remember Richardson at the Primaries.

Although the campaign between Hanson and Berg has been rather hot, for state Senator, we had hoped that it would not degenerate into a mud throwing contest. But the last circulars sent out by the Hanson campaign Committee are the dirtiest pack of lies that was ever sent out in any election, and anyone that will stoop to such dirty low politics are not worthy of the support of honorable people who hate a liar, and believe in fair play.

The Mississippi of Streets.

A street is like a river, with its human current carrying all manner of drift between its banks of residences or shops on either side. And if this simile be appropriate then New York's Broadway is the Mississippi of streets. Probably no other avenue in the world presents so many contrasts in the flotsam and jetsam it carries from Harlem to the Battery. Every type of humanity—uprooted saplings from farms and orchards, proud hulled craft in silks and satins—may be described in the surging mass. Banker and bootblack, the swaggering swell and the draggled derelict, walk shoulder to shoulder—rub, rather, for Broadway is a maelstrom, the embodiment of New York's bustle and hurry, the place where nothing can stand still. Pensions From Napoleon.

Paris has a dozen old soldiers who draw pensions that come to them from the great Emperor Napoleon I. These are not heroes of his epoch, for the last of those died long years ago. But Napoleon by his will devised several millions of francs to his companions in arms, and this capital in default of heirs of the grand army was deposited in the public treasury. Today the revenue this fund produces is paid out in the form of pensions of 200 francs each to old soldiers in French territory, and Paris has twelve of these beneficiaries to whom at the first of the year these little pensions are remitted.—Paris Figaro.

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly revised in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her

Knoxville, Iowa.—"I suffered with pains low down in my right side for a year or more and was so weak and nervous that I could not do my work. I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, and am glad to say that your medicines and kind letters of directions have done more for me than anything else and I had the best physicians here. I can do my work and rest well at night. I believe there is nothing like the Pinkham remedies."—Mrs. Clara Franks, R. F. D., No. 3, Knoxville, Iowa.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills, and suffering women owe it to themselves to at least give this medicine a trial. Proof is abundant that it has cured thousands of others, and why should it not cure you?

If you want special advice write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. It is free and always helpful.

Shrewd Scheme Stopped Run.

Many years ago, in consequence of a commercial panic, there was a severe run on a bank in South Wales, and the small farmers jostled each other in crowds to draw out their money. Things were rapidly going from bad to worse, when the bank manager, in a fit of desperation, suddenly bethought him of an expedient. By his directions a clerk, having heated some sovereigns in a frying-pan, paid them over the counter to an anxious applicant. "Why, they're quite hot!" said the latter as he took them up. "Of course," was the reply; "what else could you expect? They are only just out of the mold. We are coining them by hundreds as fast as we can." "Coining them!" thought the simple agriculturists; "then there is no fear of the money running short!" With this their confidence revived, the panic abated, and the bank was enabled to weather the storm.

The Enemies.

Apropos of the enmity, now happily buried, that used to exist between Minneapolis and St. Paul, Senator Clapp said at a dinner in the former city:

"I remember an address on careless building that I once heard in Minneapolis.

"'Why,' said the speaker in the course of this address, 'one inhabitant of St. Paul is killed by accident in the streets every 48 hours.'

"'Well, it ain't enough,' it said."

Outlining Treatment.

"I want you to take care of my practise while I'm away."

"But, doctor, I have just graduated. Have had little experience."

"You don't need it with my fashionable patients. Find out what they have been eating and stop it. Find out where they have been summering and send 'em somewhere else."

PRESSED HARD.

Coffee's Weight on Old Age.

When prominent men realize the injurious effects of coffee and the change in health that Postum can bring, they are glad to lend their testimony for the benefit of others.

A superintendent of public schools in a Southern state says: "My mother, since her early childhood, was an inveterate coffee drinker, had been troubled with her heart for a number of years and complained of that 'weak all over' feeling and sick stomach.

"Some time ago I was making an official visit to a distant part of the country and took dinner with one of the merchants of the place. I noticed a somewhat peculiar flavor of the coffee, and asked him concerning it. He replied that it was Postum. I was so pleased with it that, after the meal was over, I bought a package to carry home with me, and had wife prepare some for the next meal; the whole family liked it so well that we discontinued coffee and used Postum entirely.

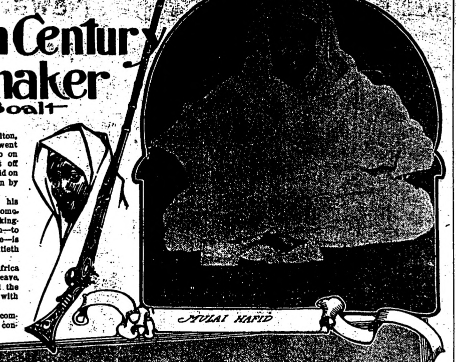
"I had really been at times very anxious concerning my mother's condition, but we noticed that after using Postum for a short time, she felt so much better than she did prior to its use, and had little trouble with her heart and no sick stomach; that the headaches were not so frequent, and her general condition much improved. This continued until she was as well and hearty as the rest of us.

"I know Postum has benefited myself and the other members of the family, but in a more marked degree in the case of my mother, as she was a victim of long standing."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

A Twentieth Century Kingmaker

by Fred A Boalt

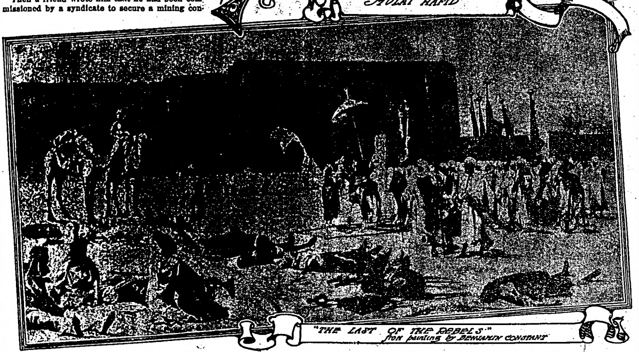


MULAI HAFID

TWO years ago Andrew Belton, twenty-six years old, went from London to Morocco on an impulse, kicked Aziz off the throne, put Mulai Hafid on it and returned to London by the next boat.

Now he is twiddling his thumbs and waiting for something to turn up in the kingmaking line. Kaid Belton—to give him his correct title—is the newest thing in twentieth century kingmakers.

Belton was in South Africa in 1908. He came to London on six months' leave. Two weeks of London fogs and drizzle and the prospect of a half-year of inactivity filled him with disgust.



"THE LAST OF THE REBELS"
from painting by BENJAMIN CONSTANT

Then a friend wrote him that he had been commissioned by a syndicate to secure a mining concession in Morocco from a pretender to the throne named Mulai Hafid. Would Belton like to go along?

He met the friend in Tangier, and the two were joined by a third Englishman, Redman, who had been brought up in Morocco, knew the natives and spoke Arabic fluently.

At Larache, a port eighty miles south of Tangier, they succeeded, by the aid of the British vice consul, in hiring mules to take them to Alcazar, a town twenty miles inland, which was held by the troops of Sultan Aziz.

The sultan had issued an edict forbidding natives to assist Europeans. Their muleteer refused to go further than Alcazar, as the tribes were carrying on the jehad (holy war) against the Christians. So they employed a notorious brigand and horsethief, one Abselem, to take them through to Fez.

Dressed as Moorish women, the Englishmen reached the gates of Fez on July 13, to be informed that the pretender and his court had arrived three days before.

Next morning they sent a messenger to the grand vizier that three Englishmen desired an audience with the sultan. At noon the following day two soldiers came to them from the vizier and escorted them to a house which had been placed at their disposal at Mulai Hafid's order.

They remained indoors until the 18th, when a mounted escort conducted them to the palace.

Arrayed as Moors of the highest class, they were received by Kaid Meshwar, the master of ceremonies, who carried a tall wand with a silver knob, and who preceded them up a staircase and into a long, narrow room, where, at the further end, sat Mulai Hafid, cross-legged on a dark green velvet couch.

His two viziers, El Glawi and Si Aissa, were sitting on his left. Walking slowly the kaid advanced to within three paces of the throne, bowed, introduced the Englishmen simply as three strangers anxious for an audience, bowed thrice, and retired a little way.

The pretender smilingly motioned them to be seated on three chairs placed on his right, and then said: "Marrhaba bi kum" ("You are welcome").

Belton's first impression was that he had never seen a handsomer man. This is his description of him: "A very high, broad forehead, with large black eyes full of light, which sparkle with genuine merriment when he is amused; a big, straight nose; fairly full cheeks, a square, resolute jaw, and the firmest of mouths, set off by a black beard and a small mustache. His complexion is a deep olive; and when he stood up I saw he was well over six feet in height, and finely proportioned to a magnificent physique." He came to business at once.

"Why are you in Fez?" he asked.

The concession was named, the price stated, and the pretender ordered Si Aissa to go into the matter further.

"And you?" questioned Mulai Hafid, pointing to Belton.

"I am a soldier," said the future kingmaker. "I have come to offer my services."

"Allah, Allah!" the pretender repeated very slowly; then asked many questions.

Then came Redman's turn. What did he want? He would be useful to Belton as a khalifa (right-hand man).

On the 25th Belton and Redman were again summoned before the pretender, this time in an inclosure close by the palace, where 4,000 troops—infantry, cavalry and artillery—were drawn up and waiting.

"There are some of my soldiers," the pretender said; "see what you can do with them."

The boy—he was little more—was game. The maneuvers that afternoon were distinctly "smart." At the finish he was given command over 7,000 troops of all arms.

He made those half-wild tribesmen drill as they had never drilled before. He overhauled the arsenal and government stores. He wrote to his commanding officer in South Africa tendering his resignation. He was no longer Lieut. Belton of a British regiment of infantry; he was Kaid Belton, kingmaker.

The mahalla of Aziz at Alcazar deserted and proclaimed Mulai Hafid sultan. The event swelled the pretender's army by 1,200 fighting men. All through the fall and winter Belton worked on his raw material, and by spring had a superb fighting force, disciplined as well as fearless.

In June of last year Aziz dispatched a strong mahalla to march against Marrakesh. Belton, with 15,000 men and artillery, met the sultan's army within four hours of Marrakesh, routed it with heavy loss, and scattered it. Aziz himself only escaped by hasty flight to Settat, the nearest French military post, from which he afterwards journeyed to Casablanca under a French escort.

The tribes and towns proclaimed Mulai Hafid sultan amid great rejoicing. He, on learning of the victory of his southern mahalla, notified the diplomatic corps at Tangier of his wish to be recognized by the powers of Europe and assuring them of his readiness to accept the act of Algeciras.

The whole of the diplomatic corps, with one exception, ignored the communication. The exception was Dr. Vassel, the German consul, who recognized Mulai Hafid as the rightful ruler of Morocco.

On Sept. 10 Belton received from the hands of Mulai Hafid his commission, giving him control over the whole of the army and conferring upon him the title of Kaid of Ascaar (kaid of the troops).

Aziz was safe in Tangier, but his brother, Mulai Mohammed, whom Aziz had imprisoned when he came to the throne, had been released and was starting another revolution in Casablanca. Belton met and defeated Mulai Mohammed's army and took him prisoner.

That was in October of last year. On Nov. 18 Mulai Mohammed was brought to Bab el Buchat, where Mulai Hafid was. On the following morning, in the presence of 4,000 of Belton's troops, Mulai Abselem M'rani, an uncle of Mulai Hafid, was tried for treason by the cadis. He had been in treasonable correspondence with Mulai Mohammed.

The cadis found him guilty and sentenced him to have the palms of his hands cut and sewn in a single leathern glove so that he could write no more letters. The punishment was carried out.

That same day Belton took his courage in both hands and address Sultan Mulai Hafid in this wise: "You are still waiting for European recognition. You will wait long if you continue such practises. The powers will hear of this punishment through the French press, which is hostile to you."

The remonstrance had its effect. A week later Belton saw the uncle. The glove had been taken off his hands and the wounds were almost healed.

One by one the power recognized Mulai Hafid, and Kaid Belton was an amused witness of a tug of war between the diplomats of Germany, France and Spain, who were all pulling for favors and concessions from the man they had been so loath to recognize. Naturally, Dr. Vassel, the German consul, was the new sultan's favorite. German syndicates got valuable mining concessions which France wanted.

France retaliated by re-establishing the military mission which had been with Aziz at the time of his defeat. This move threatened Belton's supremacy. The sultan gave him an opening.

"You looked worried, commander, when I saw you on parade. What is wrong?" he asked.

Kaid Belton replied: "I am worried. Are these French officers going to serve under me, or am I going to serve under them?

"I cannot give you an answer to any of those questions tonight," the sultan replied, "but whatever happens, remember this, that people who are forced on me will never be my friends."

That very night Belton dispatched a mahalla against Ait Yussi, who was plundering caravans and travelers. The force was held in check by tribesmen and the sultan ordered Belton to conduct the campaign against the bandit in person. He went reluctantly, for the court was tense with intrigue and the French were straining every nerve to get their military mission established.

He caught up with Ait Yussi and after five hours of hard fighting defeated him, compelled him to surrender and collected heavy indemnities. Then he hurried back to Fez, wondering what his enemies had been doing in his absence.

Ominous news awaited his return. Germany had agreed to give France a free hand in Morocco on condition that Germany's commerce was not restricted. The French minister had visited Fez.

Belton went straight to the sultan who said: "You have heard the news?"

"The agreement? Yes. It was a surprise to me."

"A greater surprise to me," the sultan replied.

Germany had kept, not only the sultan, but her own consul, Dr. Vassel, in ignorance of the negotiations. While Dr. Vassel was assuring the sultan that Germany would not desert him in his time of need, Germany was doing that very thing. Neither knew the thing was going to be done until after it was done.

The next six weeks Belton spent in studying French diplomacy. The French officers shunned him, cut him, described him as a renegade. The sultan replied to these slanders that Belton had served him well. The French replied that French officers would serve him equally well.

In the spring there were uprisings, which Belton put down. At Fez the undercurrent of intrigue continued to flow, and the French were slowly gaining ground. The treasury was empty. The creditors of Aziz were clamoring to be paid. France was the chief creditor, and the French were offering further loans.

Belton broke the power of the bandit tribes and posted back to Fez. He demanded to see the sultan. An audience was refused. He waited days and weeks, repeating his demand. He appealed to the grand vizier, reciting what he had done in the sultan's service. The hardships he had borne and the excitements and the dangers had turned his hair white. His health was broken.

The sultan would not see him, would not explain. He, worried, harrassed and bullied by the French, was ashamed to face the young Englishman who had placed him on the throne and confess to him that he had no choice but to let him go.

He decided it would be better to resign at once than to be kicked out later by the French. He tendered his resignation to the sultan through the foreign minister.

The resignation was accepted, presumably with regret, and Belton lost no time in returning to London. Since his return the sultan has conferred on him the insignia of a grand officer of the Orders of Moghrebia and Mulai Indrees for distinguished services to the Moroccan empire.

Two badges and a star are all he has to remind him of the days when he essayed the role of kingmaker.

An Affair at Rose Manor

By DONALD ALLEN

Copyrighted, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

Miss Melincent Davis, daughter of the widow Davis, of The Beeches manor house, had lived twenty years without in the least suspecting that she was a born artist. She became aware of it at last through her mother. She made a little crayon sketch of the creek and the bridge below the house, and the mother had scarcely glanced at it when she said:

"Well, this settles it. We will sell the place and move into the city where you can attend an art school."

The daughter hesitated until she had made another sketch—this time of an old stub in a field with a woodpecker grubbing at it in search of breakfast. Then the mother said such talent must be cultivated, no matter what the cost—the cook said that the woodpecker looked as natural as an old hen, and the hired man said that any one who took that old stub for a weeping willow would have to settle with him.

"You go right over to Rose Manor tomorrow morning and put the property in the hands of a real estate agent," commanded the mother. After that, the thing was looked upon as good as settled. America was sighing for more landscape artists, and she should have at least one recruit.

Miss Melincent had an electric runabout. It was brought out for her next morning and she started for the village of roses. She remembered having seen a very small real estate man and a very large sign on a street corner, and she decided to call upon him first. If he said that manor houses were a little dull in the market just then she would call on a bigger man with a smaller sign.

She was making good time over the smooth pike, and wondering whether to ask $10,000 or $15,000 for the property, when the unexpected happened.

Mr. Eugene Bamford had returned from Europe. He was fairly rich and fairly lazy. He was no artist, but he knew when his coat set well. He did not know a woodpecker from a robin, but he could run an automobile. Just then he was visiting a sister at Rose Manor and driving himself around the country more or less. He was out on this morning. He thought all the rest of the United States was sitting in its back dooryard, and in making a turn in the road he did not decrease speed, and he did not consider his right hand side from his left.

Miss Melincent was in a hurry to get to that real estate office. Thousands of would-be buyers of manor houses might be waiting there. She was going pretty fast when she reached the turn. She might have been on the right side or the wrong side or in the middle of the road. A good-looking young lady is always entitled to the benefit of the doubt in such cases.

Presently there was a shout from Mr. Eugene Bamford! And there was a scream from Miss Melincent Davis!

Then, a turn of the wheel and both ran into the ditch and things crashed and snapped and sputtered! Both machines were damaged—hers worse than his, but no one was hurt. Mr. Bamford was gentleman enough to ask if she was mortally injured—to insist it was all his fault—to present his card—to climb the roadside fence for her hat—to declare that he would pay all damages and to ask if he couldn't take her home. His machine had lost lamps and mud guards, but was still in running order.

"I wouldn't care so much," replied the girl in a hystericky way, "but I was going to Rose Manor to sell some real estate. It may go down in price now."

"Too bad—too bad! I think I can tow your machine home behind mine, agent myself. If you have property to sell—that is, if you have property to dispose of—that is—"

"Why, how lucky," she replied. "You can go home with me and see mother and ask her a lot of questions. If you have enough money with you we may make a sale right off—today. I assure you we are willing to take a fair price. It isn't possible that you are an artist, too?"

"Yes'm!" he boldly replied, though he wanted to club himself the next instant.

"You may want to change the landscape around the house, if you buy?" was suggested as they were chugging toward The Beeches.

"Yes. I have changed landscapes."

"How splendid! Mamma thinks if the creek had another bend toward the house it would add to the scenery."

"If so, I'll fix it. I am a creek bender. That is, I can put all kinds of twists in a creek."

Miss Melincent was awed. She had taken the young man for a gentleman of leisure and he had turned out to be a real estate man, an artist, a landscape gardener and a creek twister. She was glad of the accident. She was glad she had not gone on to Rose Manor and dealt with the little man with the big sign.

Mr. Eugene Bamford looked at The Beeches through the eyes of a real estate man, and he looked at Miss Melincent Davis through the eyes of a young man rapidly falling in love. He had the mother to deal with, however, and after spending an hour looking over the property and taking his departure she said of him:

"Well, Mr. Bamford is the queerest real estate man I ever saw. We have four acres here and he thought there must be nine. He at first thought the place ought to sell for $20,000, and then came down to $7,000. Didn't you hear him speak of the house as a Queen-Anne?"

"I think the accident must have rattled him, mother."

"It was either that or he is just learning the real estate business."

Mr. Bamford called the next day and brought a man to repair the runabout. He wanted to know the lowest cash price for the property; he went down and looked at the creek that needed another twist; he hunted for landmarks and looked over old deeds, and by and by, he was at liberty to look at and criticise Miss Melincent's two sketches. He scratched his ear and looked very serious and finally asked if the creek was not running uphill instead of down. In the other he readily recognized the woodpecker as a quail.

"Can you make him out?" asked the mother after he had gone.

"Why, he seems to be a very nice man," was the reply.

"But he called that woodpecker a quail."

"Perhaps that accident broke a rib for him and he's bravely trying to hide the fact from us," replied the daughter.

In two days Mr. Bamford was back to look over those deeds again. On this occasion he decided that the creek ought to have two twists in it. He also called that woodpecker a blackbird. He thought he could pay $17,000 cash down for The Beeches, and then spoke of buying on the installment plan. Then he sat for an hour on the veranda with Miss Melincent and talked about books and poetry and Europe to her, and not one word of real estate. The next time he called in he made the excuse that he was just going past and thought he would stop for a moment to see if that creek didn't want as many as three twists, but he remained for two hours. At his next call he heard a voice saying to him:

"Mr. Bamford, I have heard of your mother and heard of you. You are no real estate agent."

"No, ma'am."

"You are no artist!"

"No, ma'am."

"You are no landscape gardener!"

"No, ma'am."

"You are no creek-twister!"

"No, ma'am."

"Then what are you?"

"Just a young man who admires your daughter, and proposes to fall in love with her, and make her fall in love with him, and then ask your consent to marry her and keep the dear old Beeches in the family."

And impostor that he was, he won the girl in less than a year.

How Dumas Won a Wager.

For rapidity of composition the prize among novelists must be awarded to Alexander Dumas, who died with over three thousand books to his credit, in all of which he had some share. According to Mr. Arthur F. Davidson, one of his biographers, he often declared that when once he had mapped out in his mind the scheme of a novel or a play the work was practically accomplished, since the mere writing of it presented no difficulty and could be performed as fast as the pen could travel. Some one disputed this; the result was a wager.

Dumas had in his head the plan of the "Chevalier de la Maison Rouge," of which he had not yet written a word, and he made a bet of 100 louis that he would write the first volume of the novel in 72 hours. The volume was to be formed by 75 large foolscap pages, each page containing 45 lines and each line 50 letters. In 66 hours Dumas had done the work in his fair flowing hand, disfigured by no erasions—and the bet was won with six hours to spare.

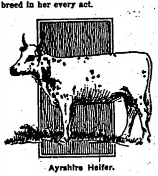
The DAIRY

PROGRESS OF AYRSHIRE COW

Experiments at Iowa Station Show Breed Making Rapid Strides in Popularity.

During the past few years, since the Ayrshire Breeders' association instituted official tests conducted by and under the supervision of the experiment stations, the Ayrshire cow has made rapid progress in popularity, as the perfect dairy cow, writes C. M. Winslow, secretary of the American Ayrshire Breeders' association, in an exchange. This official testing has brought to the front a class of dairy Ayrshires, noted for utility, and has more and more influenced the breeders in trying to eliminate any defects she might have, and bring to the front her remarkable qualities as a profitable dairy cow for every day service. One hopeful feature of the breed is that she has built herself up on all lines of dairy utility in dairy conformation and dairy lines of beauty, and the Ayrshire cow stands today unique among the dairy breeds, with no aristocracy of family distinction, but maintains her popularity from her individual and breed qualities.

While there are minor differences in her appearance, under different breeders, and in different countries, the Ayrshire is an Ayrshire wherever found, and shows the same strong breed characteristics, of shapely udder, strong constitution and vigorous appetite, shows herself to be a great dairy cow under any and all conditions, and carries the type of the breed in her every act.



Ayrshire Heifer.

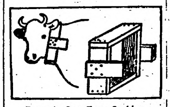
In Scotland, in Canada and in the states she has been bred not for family booms, or individual phenomenal excellencies, but all along the line she has been pushed as a breed of uniformly dairy superiority.

This is I believe greatly to her advantage, and greatly to the advantage of all purchasers of Ayrshire cows, for the uniformity of her dairy excellence makes all buyers pleased with their purchases and maintains the general good name of the Ayrshire cow. In studying the results of the testing for advanced registry the two facts are strongly brought out that there is great uniformity in the breed in production at the pail, and while we cannot boast of any world beater in one or two individual cows, we rejoice in the fact that there are none very poor, the general run being from good fair cows to very superior ones.

PREVENT COW FROM SUCKING

Excellent Device Is Illustrated and Has Proven Very Satisfactory—Is Easy to Make.

The accompanying illustration shows a device for preventing a cow from sucking herself. It consists of a box-like arrangement of boards. The side pieces should be of 2x6s to make it sufficiently strong, and the pieces nailed to them at the sides should be long enough to touch her just before the shoulder blade when the head is turned. This has proven very satisfactory, having done its work where others have failed.



Prevents Cow From Sucking.

Buying Separators.

It might be well to mention a few points on buying separators. In the first place, see that they skim clean. Select one of the standard makes of machines, even if it costs a little more than some other make. Don't be in a hurry to invest in some new and untried make of machine under the pretext that they will do about as well. Suppose one machine leaves two-tenths of one per cent. of fat in the skimmilk more than another, with a herd of 20 cows giving 100,000 pounds of milk annually, it means a loss of 200 pounds of butter fat at 20 cents per pound, which means $40 annual loss by the use of inferior machines.

Value of Dairy Cow.

The true value of the dairy cow, is by necessity fixed by the amount of fat there is in her milk and what it costs to produce it.

TINY BABY'S PITIFUL CASE

"Our baby when two months old was suffering with terrible eczema from head to foot, all over her body. The baby looked just like a skinned rabbit. We were unable to put clothes on her. At first it seemed to be a few mattered pimples. They would break the skin and peel off leaving the underneath skin red as though it were scalds. Then a few more pimples would appear and spread all over the body, leaving the baby all raw without skin from head to foot. On top of her head there appeared a heavy scab a quarter of an inch thick. It was awful to see so small a baby look as she did. Imagine! The doctor was afraid to put his hands to the child. We tried several doctors' remedies but all failed.

"Then we decided to try Cuticura. By using the Cuticura Ointment we softened the scab and it came off. Under this, where the real matter was, by washing with the Cuticura Soap and applying the Cuticura Ointment, a new skin soon appeared. We also gave baby four drops of the Cuticura Resolvent three times daily. After three days you could see the baby gaining a little skin which would peel off and heal underneath. Now the baby is four months old. She is a fine picture of a fat little baby and all is well. We only used one cake of Cuticura Soap, two boxes of Cuticura Ointment and one bottle of Cuticura Resolvent. If people would know what Cuticura is there would be few suffering with eczema. VERTICAL SUN-DIAL AND MODEL OF A TEMPLE PYLON.

AN ETHIOPIAN KING FROM MEROE

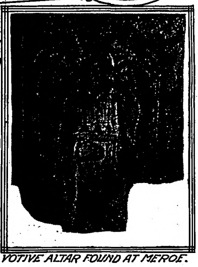
STATUE OF AN ETHIOPIAN QUEEN

EXCAVATION OF THE HIGH ALTAR AND HALL OF COLUMNS IN THE TEMPLE OF AMON.



VOTIVE ALTAR FOUND AT MEROE.

SINCE the excavation in Crete, which changed the Minoan myths into historical fact and revealed the existence of a great island empire that existed in the Aegean long before Greek civilization began, there have been few discoveries of greater interest and importance than those which have recently been made by Professor Garstang at Meroe, in the Sudan.

Professor Sayce in 1909 located the site of the city of Meroe on the east bank of the Nile, between the Fifth and Sixth Cataracts, and the excavations carried on by Professor Garstang at the end of 1909 enabled the details of the Ethiopian capital to become known. The Temple of Amon, where the Ethiopian Kings were crowned, was also discovered. Even more interesting is the excavation of the beautibul Sun Temple, which was discovered at the edge of the khor, or meadow, thus confirming the account of Herodotus, who tells us that Cambyses sent to the Ethiopian King to inquire about "the Table of the Sun" in a meadow "in the suburbs of the capital, where cooked meats were set each night." There is no doubt that this building is referred to in the Homeric legend that Zeus and the other gods feasted every year for twelve days among the blameless Ethiopians. Many others buildings were also explored, and the Temples of the Lion and the Kenisa were discovered. It may be noted that the lion emblem was of frequent occurrence, and may probably have been the totem of the district. Many beautiful objects were dug up by the expedition, including forty inscriptions in the hieroglyphics of Meroe, two royal statues, and a great many vases of a new kind of pottery, objects of wood and glass, titles and pottery. Especially interesting was the pottery which is almost as thin as biscuit china, and gives evidence of Roman influence. Professor Sayce found Greek inscriptions showing how the city was destroyed at the end of the fourth century A. D., by a King of Axum, since which event the city was unoccupied.

Ethiopia was the name given by the Greeks to a country south of Egypt variously conceived as including only Nubia (Aethiopia Aegypti), or Nubia, Sonnar, Kordofan and Abyssinia, or a region extending indefinitely east and west from the Upper Nile, but applied after the fall of Meroe more particularly to Abyssinia. The name is said to have had its origin from the fact that it was alluded to by the Greeks as a country of sunburned faces.

Historically there were three distinct kingdoms known as Ethiopia, those of Napata, Meroe and Askum. There is no definite evidence that either of these included at any time all the territory between the southern border of Egypt and Bab el Mandeb.

Already in the time of the old empire the Egyptians had relations with their southern neighbors. From the forests of Nubia they obtained a large proportion of their timber, and the city of Abu (Elephantine) derived its name from the ivory which found its way to this place from the interior of Africa. King Uncas (c 3290-3260 B. C.) employed warriors belonging to six Nubian tribes in his war upon the Bedouins. The early pictorial representations of Nubian archers do not suggest that they were negroes. A regular conquest of the country south of Syene apparently was not undertaken until the twelfth dynasty (c. 2522-2323). The most powerful Nubian people at this time was Kash or Kosh, the Hebrew Cush. It is probable that the stock was originally Hamitic, though in course of time it absorbed various Negritic tribes. Usertesen III (c. 2409-2372) established his frontier north of the second cataract and built for its protection two forts at Semneh and Kummeh on opposite sides of the river. Whether the Hyksos kings ever held possession of this territory is doubtful. At any rate it had to be reorganized by Aahmes (1575-1553), the founder of the eighteenth dynasty and his successors. Napata probably had been the capital of the independent kingdom, since it was made the residence of the viceroy, entitled prince of Kosh, who governed the new Egyptian province. In the time of Rameses II there was an unsuccessful rebellion. Pianchi I, who seems to have reigned in Napata since 777, availed himself of the weakness of Egypt at the end of the reign of Uasarken III to make an invasion of Egypt. He defeated twenty petty rulers and forced a treaty. Shabaka, a grandson of Pianchi, united all Egypt with Ethiopia under one crown. Napata was destroyed by Cambyses in 524.

A new kingdom gradually arose in the south after the fall of Napata, with Meroe as its capital. The kings, Arura, Harslot, Nastasen, who reigned in the fifth and fourth centuries, conquered considerable territory south of Meroe in Sennar and Kordofan, and possibly in Abyssinia. While the suzerainty of the Ptolemies seems to have been recognized for religious reasons, King Ergamenes, by putting to death the priests who had demanded that he should abdicate in the time of Ptolemy IV Philopator (221-204), paved the way for independence. Ptolemy V. Epiphanes (204-181) was able to resist his attack upon Egypt, but not able to prevent his asserting of sovereignty in Ethiopia. Queen Candace seems to have extended her power in the north, and twenty-five provinces are said to have been tributary to her. But her invasion of Egypt was successfully resisted by Caius Petronius in B. C. 24. Napata, that had been rebuilt, was destroyed by the Romans. Another Queen Candace is mentioned in Acts viii. But gradually Meroe itself fell into ruins. To guard against invasion by the Blemmyans, a people akin to the Bugaitae, the modern Beja, Diocletian moved the Nobatae, negro tribes of the same stock as the population of Kordofan, from the oasis of Khargeh into the Nile valley.

The mountain region of Abyssinia was probably inhabited in very early times by Semites as well as Hamites. Whether the original home of the former was in Africa or in Arabia the overflow population would naturally set in the direction of this Alpine country. As the native name shows, the Semitic Ethiopians were still in the nomadic state when they entered this territory, priding themselves on being wanderers, roaming freely wherever they liked. There were evidently successive waves of immigration. If the Egyptian Hbst is of Semitic origin, as can scarcely be doubted, they were apparently kinsmen of the Yemenites in Eretria and on the Somali coast c. 1500 B. C. Sebaean inscriptions found in Yeha, the ancient Awa, may be as old as the seventh century B. C.

As long as the Ptolemies dominate the Erythrean coast from Adulis, Berenice and Arsinoe, a strong Abyssinian kingdom could not well develop. But in the reign of Augustus, when the Romans suffered serious reverses in Arabia, and were occupied in Africa with Queen Candace, while the Arsacid conquests in eastern Arabia forced the Yemenite States to seek compensation for their losses elswhere, the Semitic element in Ethiopia seems to have been reinforced, and the kingdom of Askum founded. The "Periplus maris Erythroei," probably written by Basiles between A. D. 56 and 67, refers to a king of Askum by the name of Zoscales, who controlled the coast from Massowah to Bab el Mandeb, and was a friend of Greek culture. It is possible that some of the Greek coins with Greek legends that have been preserved should be assigned to the second and third centuries A. D.

On a marble throne in Adulis, Cosmos Indicopleustes found and copied in the sixth century an inscription commemorating the power of a great king whose name is not given. He is supposed by some scholars to be the founder of the Askumite kingdom, but it is more probable that he reigned at the end of the third century A. D. King Aizana is known to have reigned in the year A. D. 356. In his time Frumentius preached Christianity in the country. The political relations that had long existed between Askum and Rome were such as to favor his mission. In 378 Askum was reduced to its African territory. In A. D. 525 Elesbaas, king of Askum, with the aid of the Sabaen and Hadramautian rulers, made an end to the Himyarite kingdom of Dhu Nuwas, and Ethiopia again controlled Arabian territory. Before the end of the century, however, the Askumites were driven back to Africa, and never again extended their conquests to Arabia. According to a letter addressed to a king of Nubia in the time of the Patriarch Philotheus of Alexandria (980-1002), preserved in the fourteenth century "Life of the Patriarchs" and in the "Ethiopic Synaxar," a woman who reigned over the Beni el Hamuna had recently invaded the country, burned the churches and monasteries, and driven him from place to place. Marianus Victor speaks of this woman as the founder of the Zague dynasty, and as having married a ruler of the province of Bugna, a name afterwards corrupted into Beni el Zague. Eleven kings of the so-called Zague dynasty reigned until 1270.

The earliest monuments of Semitic speech in Ethiopia are the inscriptions found at Yeha. These are written in the consonantal Sabaen script and indicate that the writers used the lesana Gees, the language of Semitic Ethiopia, as early as the seventh century B. C. Geez is today represented by two dialects, Tigre and Tigrai or Tigrina. The latter is spoken in Tigre, and the former is spoken in the districts north and northwest of Tigre, and shows great similarity to the old Geez.

Ways of Berlin Women

"I believe that the typical German hausfrau is a myth," said a New York woman who returned the other day from a year's residence in Germany. "I don't see how the average German woman finds any time to be a hausfrau. I sometimes wondered when the German woman found time to do anything at home.

"I spent eight months in Berlin with my daughter, who was studying music. From eleven to twelve in the morning the cafes were packed with German women, who go out to take their second breakfast in the public restaurants, a thing unknown in America.

"They take along their sewing or embroidery and sit an hour or two over their cup of coffee or glass of beer. At the concerts, too, they take their work and spend hours day after day listening to the music. You can spend an afternoon listening to beautiful music, a magnificent orchestra with fine vocal artists, for 16 cents. That is an illustration of some of the things that help to exile Americans.

"At three in the afternoon again you will see the cafe crowded with German women taking their afternoon tea. I think American women are more domestic than German, because I never heard of American women who left their homes in the evening to pass the time at the club. A German friend took me one evening to the German women's club. The club has a magnificent suite of apartments, including auditorium, reading room, parlor, cafe and smoking room.

"When she took me into the last apartment it almost feazed me for a minute. It was blue with smoke. I had never before seen a room filled with elegantly gowned, cultivated women all smoking. These were the wealthy society women of Berlin, titled some of them.

"They were cosmopolitan in their dress and manners and did not present any striking points of difference from the American women except in the smoking. It made the occurrence of last summer, when our immigration officials detained a second class passenger, a woman art dealer, for inquiry into her sanity because she smoked cigarettes, appear very funny in retrospect.

"The German women's clubs, like those of the Englishwomen, are based on the same principle as men's clubs; these are places for social enjoyment and for the convenience of members in taking meals, entertaining friends and so on. They do not take up work in study, philanthropy, reform and so on, like the women's clubs in America."

MIAMIS CHIEF DEAD

Broken-Hearted Because of Loss of His Wealth.

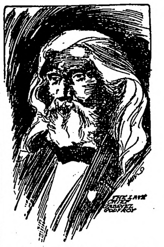
Peru, Ind.—Gabriel Godfroy, last chief of the Miamis, died the other day of a broken heart, because he had lost all his wealth, $50,000, through politics. He was urged by his friends to run for road supervisor, and he won the office, though he afterward declared that he did not want it. Godfroy and his people were persuaded to vote. Chief Godfroy bitterly repented of this later, for, when his people exercised that function, they were called upon to pay taxes, from which they had been previously exempt, and this started litigation which continued for years and wiped out the holdings of the chief, who was the banker for his people.

Chief Godfroy, "the Last of the Miamis," he might be called, was seventy-six years old, and was born in Blackford county, just adjoining the county in which he lived all his life and in which he died. His father was Chief Francis Godfroy, of French descent, who as a warrior was, next to Little Turtle, the greatest chief of the Miamis. He ranked close to Tecumseh, the Napoleon of the red race. Little Turtle formed a powerful federation of the Weas, the Shockneys, the Pankakaws and the Pottawatomies, which defeated General Eamer October 19, 1790 and General St. Clair November 4, 1791. At the battle of Tippecanoe, Chief Francis Godfroy gave the signal for the attack of the combined Indian forces and was joint commander with Deaf Man in the drawn battle of Mississinewa against Colonel Campbell, the last battle of the Miamis.



At the treaty of St. Mary's, Godfroy was granted six sections of land on the north bank of the Wabash, embracing nearly all the present site of the city of Peru. This ancestral estate, it might be called, dwindled until at the death of the son. Gabriel, only about forty acres of the original tract remained, and this was in the possession of Gabriel's children, to whom he had deeded it a few years ago.

When his father died, in a house which is part of the present home of the Godfroy family, and was buried just across the road, Gabriel became chief. He was married three times. His first wife was a granddaughter of Frances Slocum, who was stolen by the Indians when she was six years old.

Frances Slocum was stolen in 1776 from her home near Wilkesbarre, Pa., by the Delaware Indians. She was passed to the Miamis and became known as the "White Rose of the Miamis." Her brothers never gave up the search for her. Finally, in 1837, she was located in Miami county as a member of the Indian tribe, and her brothers journeyed from Pennsylvania to take her home. When the object of their visit was explained, she said she had lived so long among the Indians, and they had treated her so well, that she would not desert them. Her brothers went home brokenhearted. Godfroy's third wife is still living.

Twenty years ago Chief Godfroy had a fine farm of about a hundred acres and was worth about $50,000. He was called on scores of times to pay fines against Indians. For seven years he paid the expense and stood the worry of a legal battle which the county commissioners brought to compel him and others of his tribe to pay taxes on their lands. They claimed the lands to be exempt because of the treaties by which they were deeded to them by the government. When his fortune had disappeared the suit was compromised, and his people should be exempt for ten years.

When this decision was announced, Chief Godfroy advanced to the bench and, in a voice trembling with emotion, told his story of wrongs. The aged chief told how the poor Indians had again been crushed and humiliated by the cruel "pale face;" how they had lost their lands and their rights. When he had finished he strode from the courtroom with all the dignity becoming a great chief, but from that moment until he died he seemed oppressed with grief. He died without any property. The "Last of the Miamis" has gone to the "Happy Hunting Grounds."

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Greater New York's Increased Needs

MY TOWN HAS GROWN SOME ALL RIGHT

NEW YORK.—That the New York city government has, in some ways at least, kept pace with the city's growth as shown in the census returns is manifest from a budget study compiled by the city statisticians. The census returns show an increase in the population of 38.7 per cent. In the same ten-year period the city budget has grown from $90,778,972 to $163,030,270—an increase of over 74 per cent. The figures estimated for the expenditure of the actual city, as apart from the county, were for 1900 $79,201,763, and for 1910 $158,775,145, or 94 per cent increase.

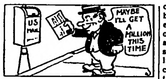
The increased cost in the city government is partly accounted for, according to the budget officials, by the widened scope of municipal enterprise. For example, ten years ago the domestic relations courts in Manhattan and Brooklyn, the special schools for defective children or tuberculosis patients and the establishment of playgrounds were entirely outside the general conception of what the city government should do.

The expense of maintaining the city's police force has increased more than a third in the decade. The board of education now requires twice as much as in 1900—$28,500,000, instead of $14,600,000. The street-cleaning department spends 50 per cent more—$7,500,000, instead of $5,000,000. The health department's appropriation has grown 125 per cent—from $1,050,000 to $2,750,000. The fire department costs 80 per cent more—$8,150,000, in place of $4,850,000.

The figures seem to show that the growth in church membership is 1.3 per cent ahead of the population growth. This growth, it is estimated, is divided about evenly between Protestants and Roman Catholics. At present it is calculated that there are 440,783 Protestants to 869,648 Roman Catholics.

There are at least 66 separate Christian bodies at work in New York, of which the four which obtain the largest tax exemptions on account of property are the Roman Catholic, the Protestant Episcopal, the Presbyterian and the Jewish.

Souvenir Postal Saves Heir $20,000



US MAIL
MAYBE I'LL GET A MILLION THIS TIME

CHICAGO.—An unusual story of a lost heir to a $3,000,000 estate, whose chance mailing of a souvenir post card will bring him $20,000, was revealed in the probate court the other day. The man is Cornelius Carney, now a resident of Oklahoma City, who was thought to have perished in the San Francisco earthquake and fire in April, 1906.

The story he told in court ran like this: He was born 30 years ago in Troy, N. Y., a member of a large family whose head, John Carney, was for more noted for his convivial habits than for his thrift and industry. Consequently the little Carneys found life in Williams street alley a struggle in which dirt and want were daily factors. After being very bad for a long time the condition of the Carney family became worse, and Cornelius was sent to a children's asylum.

There wasn't much in life in Williams street alley but liberty—there was plenty of that—and the comparative comfort of the asylum couldn't compensate Cornelius for the loss of his freedom, so when he was old enough to care for himself—13 years old, to be exact—Cornelius ran away and started out to see the world. After several years of wandering, Charley enlisted in the United States marine corps. He served for six years, and in that time visited every port you ever heard of and more besides. Early in 1906 Carney was in China and wrote home that he was sailing soon for San Francisco. That was the last his relatives heard of him in years.

In 1908 Mrs. Anna F. Baker, who was Mrs. Carney's sister, died in Chicago, leaving an estate of $3,000,000, of which a considerable part went to the Carney children, who had grown up and prospered in Troy. To settle up the estate it was necessary to find Cornelius alive or prove him dead, and one was about as hard a task as the other. Finally the courts decided Cornelius was dead—although he was married and living in Oklahoma.

Within a short time Cornelius' share in his aunt's estate would have gone to Cook county, but just in the nick of time Cornelius sent a souvenir post card to his sister, Mrs. Lizzie Pratt of Troy, who at once wrote him that he was an heir to his aunt's estate. In court Carney proved his heirship and will get the $20,000 before long.

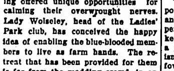
Hog Raising a Social Eccentricity

LONDON.—Women of title, jaded by the fatigues of the season, are being offered unique opportunities for calming their overwrought nerves. Lady Wolseley, head of the Ladies' Park club, has conceived the happy idea of enabling the blue-blooded members to live as farm hands. The retreat that has been provided for them is far from the madding crowd, in an antique country house in Middlesex county.

Duchesses tired of the social whirl go there to commune with nature and to enjoy the delightful luxury of plain fare. Life on the farm will be almost severe, for the spoiled darlings of society. They are not allowed to play bridge or to smoke cigarettes within the charmed walls of the farmhouse. But there is nothing to prevent a countess from sneaking away to enjoy a whiff in the cow shed.

Titled farm hands may also disport themselves among the poultry, and carry feed to hungry hogs. Experts are on the premises to teach bee keeping, bread making, how to run a poultry farm and how to spin. It isn't compulsory for countesses to kill fowls for the market, though wayward fancy may lead them to enliven their week-ends by waiting on the pigs.

Ants Are Driving Kansans From Home



WICHITA, Kan.—Grasshoppers, chinch bugs and Hessian flies, and a few other such pests, have visited Kansas in bygone days, eaten the crops, trimmed the leaves off the trees and driven more or less hardy pioneers back to their wives' folks in the East, but never until this year have ants in sufficient numbers been noticed to cause people to desire to leave their once happy homes in the Sunflower State.

From several towns come reports of ants in such numbers as to cause actual worry by the inhabitants. The people are not unaccustomed to the little black ant and the red ant which visit the sugar bowl occasionally, but they can't account for the swarms of all sores and breeds of ants which are now in evidence. Kiowa and other towns in Harper county tell of the visits of the ants.

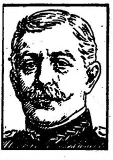
Almost the entire residence portion of Kiowa, a town of more than one thousand inhabitants, is in the grasp of untold millions of ants. At first the earth seemed literally to be alive with them. There were big ants, little ants, red ants, blond ants and brunette ants. They all seemed to be hungry and they got into the houses. Not content with the food in the pantries, they infested carpets, beds, chewed clothing to pieces and caused a great deal of havoc.

Openwork stockings and porous underwear had to be abandoned for close-knit clothing by the residents, because the ants didn't remain on the floor or in the beds, but swarmed over human beings.

In certain sections of the town families actually moved out to get away from the ants, thinking it was cheaper to move than to lose their household goods. Others are devoting their time to fighting the pests by fumigating the houses and inundating the floors.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

IN CHARGE AT WEST POINT

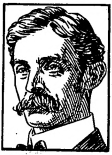


Maj. Gen. Thomas H. Barry, U. S. A., who has become superintendent of the United States Military academy at West Point, is what Supreme Court Justice O'Gorman recently termed "a typical product of New York city." He was born and reared in the old First ward, and there are now in New York men who will tell you that "Tom" Barry was the handsomest boy in the old ward, and that when he came back from West Point on furlough the younger boys were wont to point him out as their hero.

General Barry was one of the popular cadets during the four years he was at the academy. As an athlete he stood in the front rank, and he stood high as a student. In June, 1877, he received his diploma, and as a second lieutenant was assigned to the famous Seventh cavalry, Custer's old command. After three years in the Seventh General Barry was transferred to the infantry arm and assigned to the First infantry as a first lieutenant. Two years later he was promoted captain, and after that passing through every grade until in August, 1903, President Roosevelt made him a brigadier general. In April, 1908, the same president promoted him to his present rank, the highest under the present law that an army officer can attain.

General Barry as superintendent at West Point is the second officer of his rank to hold that post since West Point was founded. The other was Lieut. Gen. John M. Schofield, who was a major general when appointed superintendent in 1876.

FEDERAL CHIEF OF MINES



In the appointment of Dr. Joseph A. Holmes to be director of the new bureau of mines it is conceded in Washington that probably the best equipped man for the position in the United States has been gained for this important post.

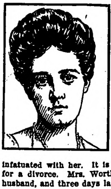
Ever since congress passed the bill creating the bureau and giving it authority to investigate mine disasters, make experiments and suggest means whereby accidents may be decreased and the yearly casualty list shortened, efforts have been made by hundreds of interested persons to have Dr. Holmes selected as chief. The indorsement of all the coal operators' associations has been given, every prominent mining engineer in the country, including John Hays Hammond, has made his plea for Dr. Holmes, and the miners' union has added its efforts in his cause.

Three great delegations visited Washington early in the summer to urge the appointment, the managers of sixty collieries joined in the laudatory chorus, and sixty-two senators put their names to a petition in his behalf.

All this recognition was won by Dr. Holmes while serving as chief technologist of the technological branch of the geological survey. In this capacity he was carrying on in a minor way the work which he now will develop to the fullest extent.

The work of making mines safe has occupied the attention of Dr. Holmes for years, and he has made rapid advancement in the finding of effective means to the end which he has sought. He gained the confidence of labor and capital, and it is well known here that his subordinates are loyalty itself to the chief.

WOMAN WHO COST A MILLION



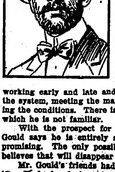
The series of exquisite gowns worn by Mrs. William B. Leeds of New York, Newport and London, has been the feature of the season at the ultra-fashionable watering place of Deauville, France. She is reported as having had great social success and has given a succession of delightful entertainments. Mrs. William B. Leeds, it will be remembered, is the woman who cost her husband one million dollars, and who refused the importunities of royal and noble suitors who were after her fortune, estimated at thirty times that amount.

Her maiden name was Nannie Stewart. She was the daughter of a wealthy Cleveland banker and was said to be the handsomest girl in Ohio. She married George E. Worthington. They disagreed, and Leeds, also a married man, became infatuated with her. It is said that Leeds paid his wife one million dollars for a divorce. Mrs. Worthington also secured a legal separation from her husband, and three days later the wedding took place.

Leeds made his new bride the present of jewelry worth over a million, a steam yacht, and a two million dollar palace in New York city. While on a visit to Paris, Leeds bought his wife a $200,000 pearl necklace. She wore this on several occasions, had them unstrung and they were exported in a bag to the United States and entered at the custom house as loose pearls.

Then began her battle with the treasury, which has become celebrated. Although the pearls were apparently imported by a Paris jeweler, the customs authorities considered the action a subterfuge and demanded the 60 per cent. customary duty on a necklace. Mrs. Leeds insisted that they were dutiable at 11 per cent. as indiscriminate pearls and won the day and incidentally some $50,000 which otherwise would have gone to the government.

TO HEAD THE GOULD FAMILY



One of the sons of the very rich who does not believe that his life should be given up to idleness and sports is Kingdon Gould, the eldest of the seven children of George Jay Gould. Kingdon is only twenty-three years old, but he knows a whole lot about his father's interests and, for that matter, about the interests of the entire Gould family. This is as it should be, for he is destined to take his father's place as the head of that multi-millionaire family. He is a well-educated man without evil habits and with a love for work. This week he left to join the rest of the Gould family in Europe. He would have gone with them last spring, but he felt that he wanted to familiarize himself with the Gould railroad system in the southwest. So instead of lolling about the various resorts of the old world he has been working early and late and has gone over every foot of the 9,000 miles of the system, meeting the managers, foremen and even the laborers and studying the conditions. There is hardly a mile of track in the whole system with which he is not familiar.

With the prospect for a continuation and increase in good times Mr. Gould says he is entirely satisfied. Conditions in the southwest are very promising. The only possible deterrent influence is a political one and he believes that will disappear after the fall elections.

Mr. Gould's friends had difficulty in recognizing him after his return to New York, for during his stay he had acquired a beard which makes him appear much more mature.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Uncle Sam's Bug Sleuths After Cats

I THINK THEY'RE GOING A BIT TOO FAR DOWN AT WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON.—A bitter war on the house cat has been declared by the department of agriculture. Experts in the biological bureau of that department are making exhaustive investigations of the cat as a spreader of disease. Already they have found out enough to convince them that as much danger lurks in a cat as in a rat, and rats are known to be fatal distributors of plague.

Upon the completion of these investigations efforts will be made by the Federal authorities to have cat license laws passed. It is much more desirable, they say, to have a license for cats than a license for dogs.

"We know that cats carry disease," said H. W. Henshaw, chief of the bureau, in discussing the fight against tabby, "but we do not know to what extent. We are practically certain they carry diphtheria, scarlet fever and ringworm, and we suspect they carry tuberculosis. All this we want to find out. Of course the fight to bring about a cat license will be a hard one. Such a suggestion will be scoffed at. But in time people will come to realize what a menace cats are. That is what we hope to do—bring the people to such a realization."

Dr. A. K. Fisher, of the bureau of biology, is at work on a bulletin on the house cat. He has been studying the question for years and knows the general habits of cats thoroughly.

"There are lots of fallacious theories regarding the usefulness of cats," says Dr. Fisher. "As a matter of fact they do almost no good and a great deal of harm. The difficulty in following the question, of the extent to which they carry disease is measured by the difficulty of following the cat. And yet there is no doubt in the world that many a child who, for no apparent reason and from no discernible cause, develops a case of diphtheria or scarlet fever owes its illness and often its death to the cat it has been fondling. Moreover, cats are as susceptible to hydrophobia as dogs.

When Britishers Burned the Capitol

NOT MUCH LIKE A COW PASTURE NOW, EH WOT!

SOMETIMES it does us good to reminisce a little bit, and this leads us to remark that 96 years ago, the British forces burned the capitol. There were about 6,000 in number landed from the British vessels on the Patuxent August 20, and on the 24th they reached the capital. There were only about 3,200 men available for defense of Washington in the American army, and they only had 17 pieces of artillery. So when the British made their raid on Washington, although they were met with splendid resistance, the American army was compelled to retreat, and the red coats made a triumphant entry into Washington and began to carry out the threat of the commanding invader, who said: "I will make a cow pasture of these Yankee capitol grounds." Just as soon as the British got possession of the city they set fire to the capitol, the White House and other public buildings. It was at this time that Dolly Madison cut the famous portrait of Washington from its frame, where it stood in the great east room of the White house, and, rolling it up, had it carted away with the few effects which she was able to remove from the White House. The British description of what went on in the capital at that time is as follows:

"The blazing houses, ships and stores, the report of exploding magazines and the crash of falling roofs was one of the finest sights to be conceived. The sky was brilliantly illuminated by the conflagration. The scene was as striking and sublime as the burning of St. Sebastian's. Toward morning a violent storm of rain, accompanied by thunder and lightning, came on, whose flashes seemed to vie in brilliancy with the flames which burst from the roofs of burning houses, while the thunder drowned the noise of falling walls and was only interrupted by the occasional roar of cannon and of large deposits of gunpowder as they exploded, one by one." But we don't look much like a cow pasture now, don't you know.

JUNK FOR SALE
IT'S A SHAME

DO YOU remember how proud we were of our Spanish warships And now they are all in the scrap heap. The Boston, the Concord, the Winslow and the Detroit have all to go, as they are no longer fit to cope with modern armament on the high seas. A storm of protest has gone up in Washington, but it is not going to help matters a single bit. The United States government canont afford to hang on to the old battleships, even if they are dear in memory. It will be remembered that the Boston, a protected cruiser, and the Concord, a gunboat, were in Admiral Dewey's fleet at Manila. It was on the deck of the Winslow during the hottest cannon fire of the war, that Ensign Worth Bagley was killed by an exploding shell. One of the achievements of the Detroit was the capture of the Catalina to the westward of Havana, and she took active part in the bombardment of San Juan. Every man who joined in the movement for Cuba's freedom views with sadness the passing of these four battleships. Accompanying the condemnation of the four Spanish War vessels is the passing of the old sloop-of-war Portsmouth, forming the last chapter in the history of what is believed to be one of the most interesting ships in the old navy.

Launched before the beginning of the Mexican war, the Portsmouth took an active part in that struggle.

I DON'T KEER FER MONEY ANYWAY

SEVEN million dollars on a joy ride through the streets of Washington is a sight to be seen every week day at the national capital. And this stands less chance of getting hurt through the carelessness of the driver of the wagon it rides in or from outside forces than any joy rider, animate or inanimate, in the country. For the treasury has a new money wagon.

And not only is the new wagon nearly bombproof in itself, but just to make sure that some foolish person, with visions of a Jesse James hold-up scheme, will never succeed in accomplishing anything of the sort, eight heavily armed guards ride to and fro with the seven millions.

And this extra precaution is due to the change in the system of making money. Until recently the money was printed at the bureau of engraving and printing, but sent to the treasury minus the seal and the number, so that it was not real money until handled in the treasury.

Now one machine does all the work, including the stamping of the seal and number. These figures—the round seal to the right and the number to the left of the face of a paper bill, stamped in blue—are what make bills legal tender. Hence when the money passes through the wonderful cutting and stamping machine, which counts bills out in lots of 100 after it is through with them, it is ready to spend and anyone who got hold of it would have the real thing.

"It seems queer to some people that we should take such precautions to guard the money wagon," says Director Ralph of the bureau of engraving and printing, "but we think it necessary. A stitch in time saves nine, as we have been told from childhood."

ALIMONY AND DIVORCE.

Now comes a New York woman who is sure to be charged with "woman's inhumanity for woman," professing to be shocked at the multiplicity of divorces and proposing a remedy in the total abolition of alimony, says Omaha Bee. She conceives the prospect of alimony to be the chief cause of divorces granted to women and denounces the system as nothing but a simple graft. Undoubtedly many designing women can consistently take no exceptions to these charges, and it is not to be questioned that some unscrupulous lawyers will co-operate with women for the purpose of obtaining financial emolument through the operation of the divorce courts, but that alimony, or the desire to obtain alimony, constitutes the prevailing cause and purpose of women seeking legal separations from their husbands, it is hard to believe, any more than it would be wise, safe or just to do away with the law providing for alimony. Society has come to recognize that there is such a thing as a justifiable divorce, and there is certainly such a thing as a woman needing and deserving support from the man from whom she seeks and obtains a divorce, and to abolish alimony would work hardship on many women and children, alike blameless for the causes as well as the fact of the separation.

Has everybody forgotten Halley's comet? There was a reaction after the trepidation and intense curiosity aroused by its approach, and now, instead of piling out of bed at unearthly hours of the early morning in the hope of getting a glimpse of it, there are many who would not, for the promise of a good square look at the wanderer, take the trouble of walking across the street. They have seen it once, and so far as they are concerned, it is an old story. Halley's comet is not beyond viewing distance from the earth; yet it cannot be seen. The reason of its invisibility is its nearness to the sun. It sets in the early evening, while the twilight is strong enough to hide it with a veil of light. At the end of the month it will set before sunset. It is further south in the sky than the sun.

The Canadian authorities have been so much disturbed over the report that 15,000 American farmers have left the Caandian northwest that they have undertaken an inquiry of their own. The result of that is the admission that 261 farmers and their families have returned to the United States. During the same time they claim that over 50,000 settlers have entered Canada from this country. Perhaps it is up to the United States to investigate these last figures.

A Louisiana man has patented a combined pickle fork and pair of tongs. With the aid of this useful instrument you may, after a pickle slips from your fork, reach into the jar and pick it out with the tongs. For our part, we are unable to understand why anyone should wish to take so much trouble for the purpose of securing a pickle.

COLONEL GEORGE HARVEY SAYS COUNTRY ALL RIGHT.

THE WRITER SEES NO CLOUD

The attention of business and professional men in all portions of the country has been attracted to a strikingly strong article by Col. George Harvey in the September issue of the North American Review in which the writer takes a view of the greatest hopefulness for the future of America and Americans. The article is entitled "A Plea for the Conservation of Common Sense," and it is meeting with the cordial approval of business men of all shades of political opinion throughout the entire country. In part, Colonel Harvey says:

"Unquestionably a spirit of unrest dominates the land. But, if it be true that fundamentally the condition of the country is sound, must we necessarily succumb to despondency, abandon effort looking to retrieval and cringe like cravens before clouds that only threaten? Rather ought we not to analyze conditions, search for causes, find the root of the distress, which even now exists only in men's minds, and then, after the American fashion, apply such remedies as seems most likely to produce beneficent results?

Capital and Labor Not Antagonistic.

"The Link that connects labor with capital is not broken but we may not deny that it is less cohesive than it should be or than conditions warrant. Financially, the country is stronger than ever before in its history. Recovery from a panic so severe as that of three years ago was never before so prompt and comparatively complete. The masses are practically free from debt. Money is held by the banks in abundance and rates are low.

"Why, then, does capital pause upon the threshold of investment? The answer, we believe, to be plain. It awaits adjustment of the relations of government to business. * * * The sole problem consists of determining how government can maintain an even balance between aggregations of interests, on the one hand, and the whole people, on the other, protecting the latter against extortion and saving the former from mad assaults.

"The solution is not easy to find for the simple reason that the situation is without precedent. But is not progress being made along sane and cautious lines? * * *

Conserve Common Sense.

"Is not the present, as we have seen, exceptionally secure? What, then, of preparations for the future? Patriotism is the basis of our institutions. And patriotism in the minds of our youth is no longer linked solely with fireworks and deeds of daring. It is taught in our schools. A new course has been added—a course in loyalty. Methodically, our children learn how to vote, how to conduct primaries, conventions and elections, how to discriminate between qualifications of candidates and, finally, how to govern as well as serve. They are taught to despise bribery and all forms of corruption and fraud as treason. Their creed, which they are made to know by heart, is not complex. It is simple, but comprehensive, no less beautiful in diction than lofty in aspiration. These are the pledges which are graven upon their memories:

"As it is cowardly for a soldier to run away from battle, so it is cowardly for any citizen not to contribute his share to the well-being of his country. America is my own dear land; she nourishes me, and I will love her and do my duty to her, whose child, servant and civil soldier I am.

"As the health and happiness of my body depend upon each muscle and nerve and drop of blood doing its work in its place, so the health and happiness of my country depend upon each citizen doing his work in his place.

"These young citizens are our hostages to fortune. Can we not safely assume that the principles animating their lives augur well for the permanency of the Republic? When before have the foundation stones of continuance been laid with such care and promise of durability?

"The future, then, is bright. And the present? But one thing is needful. No present movement is more laudable than that which looks to conservation of natural resources. But let us never forget that the greatest inherent resource of the American people is Common Sense. Let that be conserved and applied without cessation, and soon it will be found that all the ills of which we complain but know not of are only such as attend upon the growing pains of a great and blessed country.

He Knows the Game.

According to the Metropolitan Magazine, Fire Chief John Conway of Jersey City, has solved the baseball excuse question by the posting of the following printed notice on his desk at fire headquarters:

"All requests for leave of absence owing to grandmothers' funerals, lame back, house cleaning, moving, sore throat, headache, brainstorm, cousins' wedding, general indisposition, etc., must be handed to the chief not later than ten o'clock on the morning of the game."

BROWNE IS WINNER

LEGISLATOR FREED FROM BRIBERY CHARGE RENOMINATED IN ILLINOIS PRIMARY.

CONGRESSMAN BOUTELL LOST

Foss Has Close Call—Cannon Has Overwhelming Vote—Most of Republicans Who Voted for Lorimer Are Renominated.

Chicago.—In the Illinois primaries Thursday Frederick H. Gansberger defeated Congressman Henry Sherman Boutell for the Republican nomination for congress in the Ninth district.

George E. Foss, another of the veterans from Chicago, had a narrow call in the Tenth district. Late returns indicated that G. P. Englehardt was leading by 100 votes, with nearly fifty precincts to hear from.

As most of the missing precincts are from the farming district in Lake county, Foss' friends declared that his nomination was certain, although by a much smaller vote than was expected.

With the exception of the Ninth and Tenth districts, the Republican congressmen from Cook county were renominated without a break.

In the districts outside of Chicago the chief items of Republican interest were the nominations of George W. Conn, Jr., of Woodstock in the Eleventh district, over Ira J. Copley and John C. McKenzie of Elizabeth in the Thirteenth district.

McKenzie will run for the place now filled in congress by Congressman Frank O. Lowden.

In the Eighteenth district, Speaker Joseph G. Cannon won in a walk, his opponent, Henry B. Downs, hardly getting into the race. The other Republican incumbents throughout the state were renominated with little trouble.

The hardest fight for the Democrats came in the Fourth district, where State Senator Rainey and Congressman McDermott ran a neck and neck race. McDermott, however, won by a comfortable plurality.

Incomplete returns indicate that the men who voted for William Lorimer for senator in the general assembly, both Republican and Democratic, gained a sweeping victory.

Even the men who were drawn into the "jackpot" investigation have been renominated by overwhelming majorities except in perhaps two instances.

Representative Lee O'Neil Browne outdistanced all his competitors in La Salle county.

State Senator John Broderick, under indictment in Sangamon county, won by a vote of almost 2 to 1.

Speaker Shurtleff was renominated by a plurality of more than 3,000 votes.

Later returns indicate that the Legislative Voters' league was badly beaten throughout nearly all the precincts in Chicago. It was in this field that the league made its hardest fight.

CALEB POWERS FOR CONGRESS

IS NOMINATED BY REPUBLICANS IN 11TH KENTUCKY DISTRICT.

Served Eight Years in Prison for Complicity in Murder of Governor Gobel.

Lexington, Ky. — In the primary of the Republicans of the Eleventh congressional district Caleb Powers, who for eight years was a state's prisoner on the charge of complicity in the murder of Gov. William Gobel on the streets of Frankfort January 29, 1900, defeated Don C. Edwards, the present incumbent.

Since Powers was freed by a pardon from Governor Willson, the mountaineers have stood by him, believing him to be a political martyr and despite all influences that could be brought to bear on him by the followers of Edwards they returned Powers the Republican nominee by a large majority. Money was spent freely on both sides, it is said.

The indications are that when all returns are received Powers will be nominated by 5,000. Much trouble was had at the polls among the adherents of the two principals and at Grape Vine, Squire Colwell shot and killed John Holmes. Trouble arose over the election and the killing resulted.

Mountaineers, who have considered Powers as a political martyr stood by him in the election, giving him a large majority.

The fight for the nomination has been the most bitter in the history of Kentucky and it was feared that the followers of Powers and Edwards would come to open conflict, but aside from the trouble at Grape Vine, no shooting occurred.

TRAPPED BY IMMUNITY STORY

Chicago.—The federal grand jury has again indicted George W. Fitzgerald, who was formerly assorting teller at the United States sub-treasury in this city, on the charge of embezzling $173,000 from the government.

Fitzgerald was arrested in his office Wednesday by the federal authorities.

Fitzgerald is said to have been trapped by a story given out some time ago that the statute of limitations intervened and that whoever committed the theft was immune from prosecution. This story is declared to have been circulated for the express purpose of misleading Fitzgerald.

William Boldenweck, under whom Fitzgerald served, sent his resignation as subtreasurer to President Taft September 8. He is to leave office September 17 and to be succeeded by Len Small of Kankakee. He denied that his resignation had anything to do with the disappearance of the $173,000.

POISON KILLED HER

WOMEN CROWD THE COURT

Many Remove Their Hats So Those in Rear May Not Miss a Move of Trembling Girl Prisoner—Dentist Retains Jaunty Air.

London.—On the resumption of the trial of Dr. Hawley H. Crippen and his typist, Ethel Leneve, charged with the slaying of the former's wife, Belle Elmore, the actress, Dr. William Henry Wilcox, scientific analyst to the home office, who discovered poison in the body found in Crippen's residence, went on the witness stand and swore that death was caused by the deadly drug.

The physician described the nature of the medium used and said that from a quarter to half a grain would prove fatal. He had found two-sevenths of a grain after a lapse of four to eight months, and judged that more than half a grain had been administered. He found no other cause of death and expressed the opinion that the victim survived the dose an hour or more.

Before Doctor Wilcox was called the crown introduced medical testimony to corroborate that given on Wednesday by Prof. Augustus J. Pepper, pathologist of the University of London, who swore that the body had been disfigured by one familiar with the science of anatomy.

The grewsome exhibits and the unpleasant charcter of the testimony at the last session did not deter the curious from struggling to get into the Bow street police court, and the section apportioned to the public was crowded. The spectators included the usual array of fashionably dressed women, and these thoughtfully removed their hats, that those seated behind them might not miss a move of the trembling girl in the dock or of her companion in duress, whose jaunty air only adds to the morbid interest in the case.

CHANLER GIVES ALL TO DIVA

Lawyers File Cavalieri Ante-Nuptial Agreement Between Opera Singer and New Yorker.

New York.—The pre-nuptial agreement between Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the opera singer, and Robert Winthrop Chanler, the terms of which have been the subject of many divergent reports of disagreements between scion of the old Astor family and the Italian diva, was filed Friday in the register's office by counsel for the singer.

The agreement recites that in consideration of the intended marriage and of the sum of $1, that Mr. Chanler gives to Mme. Cavalieri "all those three farms, known respectively as Cole farm, Chowell and Benna farm in Red Hook, N. Y., approximating 350 acres and subject to a mortgage of $600,000.

The agreement further provides that Mr. Chanler turns over to Mme. Cavalieri the land and buildings in New York city situated in several parts of the city, comprising in all thirty pieces of property, and concludes, "and all other realty forming part of the share of the above named Robert Winthrop Chanler of and in the estate of the late Mrs. Laura Delano, subject to a mortgage of $140,000."

The agreement further provides that Mr. Chanler agrees to pay the yearly sum of $20,000 to Mme. Cavalieri during her life, by four quarterly installments of $5,000 a quarter, the first of which shall be paid within thirty days from the marriage.

It was agreed that the property of each of them, both personal and future, should remain the separate property and under the sole control of each of them.

ZEPPELIN DIRIGIBLE NO. 7 EXPLODES IN AERODROME.

Three of Crew Are Hurt When Motor Cylinder Blows Up at Baden-Baden.

Baden-Baden.—The German dirigible balloon Zeppelin VI., while entering its shed, was blown up Wednesday by an explosion of the motor cylinder in the rear gondola. Three of the airship's crew were injured seriously.

The accident happened as the dirigible was being slowly worked into its shed here. The defective motor had been operating as usual, when suddenly the crew were whirled from their posts in the rear gondola as the craft trembled and lurched. There was a sharp report, a flash of flame and in a moment the immense fabric of silk canvas was afire.

The fire spread so rapidly that the shed was soon destroyed.

ENDS WAR ON INSURGENTS

President Taft Declares That Patronage Door Will Hereafter Be Open to All Sides.

Beverly, Mass.—No difference between so-called "Progressives" and "Regulars" will be recognized by President Taft hereafter, but all party leaders will be treated alike as Republicans in the matter of federal support.

The president's views to this effect are given in a letter from Secretary Norton to a Republican leader of Iowa, whose name is not disclosed.

In the letter Secretary Norton stated that while important Republican legislation pending in congress was opposed by certain Republican leaders, the president felt that his duty required him to withhold federal patronage from senators and representatives who seemed to occupy a position hostile to efforts to fulfill the pledges of the party platform.

That attitude on the part of the president ended, however, with the more recent primary elections and nominating conventions to which the people have declared themselves, and the president now looks upon "Progressives" and "Regulars" alike as Republicans and as such entitled to his support and the support of the party, and the fall elections, Secretary Norton's letter says, must settle the question whether the differences of the last session of congress shall be perpetuated or forgotten.

Among those from whom, it is said, the president temporarily withheld federal patronage were Senators La Follette, Bristow, Dolliver and Cummins and Representative Hubbard of Iowa.

HEADS MINNESOTA DEMOCRATIC STATE TICKET.

JAMES GRAY.

JAMES GRAY IN PLACE OF LIND

NEWSPAPER MAN TO RUN FOR GOVERNOR.

Says He Will Accept the Nomination and Make a Hard Fight.

St. Paul. — Hon. James Gray, editorial writer of the Minneapolis Journal, was selected by the Democratic State Central Committee as the Democratic candidate for governor. The selection was approved by John Lind. The former mayor also is said to have been the choice of Chairman Frank A. Day.

"I expect to accept," said James Gray when notified of his nomination. "I do not believe I care to say anything more than that I expect to make a vigorous campaign for the office. The whole thing has come on me so suddenly that I have not had time to make any plans. The first intimation I had of this action was last Monday. I expect to make a more extensive statement to the state central committee as soon as I receive official information of my nomination."

Rumors that the committee would endeavor to pass a resolution in favor of county option started a buzz of conversation on the floor of the hotel lobby, but the report was denied. It is understood that Mr. Gray will appeal to the country as a county option candidate, but no effort will be made to change the Democratic platform.

Previous to that Chairman Day had read John Lind's letter declining the nomination, and his resignation was accepted upon a motion read by Daniel Daily of Minneapolis.

"I confess I am somewhat disappointed over Mr. Gray's selection," said Ralph W. Wheelock, governor's secretary. "Having been vindicated in my opinion expressed several months ago that Mr. Lind would not be the Democratic candidate, I was in hopes that my further opinion that Mr. Day himself was the logical leader of his party in this campaign, would also be justified.

"Mr. Gray's selection, however, ought to insure a campaign free from personalities and like tactics, for in frequent co-operation with him in municipal matters in Minneapolis, I have always found him to be a gentleman and a scholar."

John Lind voiced the note of county option in the committee meeting. Called upon for a speech, Mr. Lind briefly enumerated why he couldn't accept the nomination. He said a victory by Democracy must be won by some candidate of whom it could not be said was elected for a personal reason.

AGENT DAVIS ARRESTED AGAIN.

Cass Lake.—James Davis, government agent engaged to keep intoxicants from the Indians, was arrested at Bemidji, charged with having threatened Charles Argale of state counsel in the case of A. A. Oliver, who accused Davis of assault in the seizure of Oliver's grip. Davis pleaded guilty and was ordered to furnish a $300 peace bond, which he has not yet furnished.

State Tests For Cattle.

Minneapolis. — The Minnesota state sanitary board will begin a regular inspection of cattle in Minneapolis dairies. J. H. Lyle, city milk inspector, has received word that arrangements are being made to send inspectors into the city at once. The inspection will be monthly. Under the rules to be adopted by the board, every herd will be given a thorough test. The dairymen will not be allowed to add cattle to the inspected herd without having them examined first by the state officers.

INDIAN AGENTS FINED.

Sero and Davis Convicted at Cass Lake for Assault on Editor Oliver.

Cass Lake.—The trial of Indian Agents Sero and Davis was held here. Oliver was defended by Argall, while Assistant United States District Attorney E. S. Oakley appeared for the defendants.

Half a dozen witnesses were examined. The evidence showed that the agents struck Oliver and knocked him down after getting off a train at Bena while attending to his duties as state land appraiser.

The court imposed a fine of $100 and costs, or in default of payment, sixty days in jail. The fine was not paid and the men put in the lockup here. It is not known now what, if any, proceedings will be taken by Oakley in the agents' behalf.

Davis pleaded guilty to using threatening language against Attorney Argall in a local saloon Saturday evening, and was required to furnish a bond for $300 to keep the peace for six months. Being unable to furnish bail, commitment papers were made out tonight by Justice Ives sentencing Davis to the county jail at Walker, where he will be taken tomorrow morning.

SPITE HALTS WORK.

Angry Workman Disables Engine, Stopping Track Laying.

Bemidji.—The work of laying rails on the Soo grade into Bemidji from the east was temporarily stopped, because of the spite work of one man, who so disabled the track-laying engine that the machine could not again be operated until repairs were made. The rails are less than a mile from thr Mississippi river bridge in the center of the city.

The work of laying the steel has progressed rapidly. When the rails had been laid to a short distance from the M. & I. crossing in East Bemidji the crew was sent back a short distance to lay sidetrack rails. This action is supposed to have caused ire on the part of a workman, who disabled the engine.

The placing of the span over the Mississippi river at this place will be rushed, and the laying of the steel will proceed towards Plummer.

A crew stringing telegraph wires has reached the camp of the tracklayers.

WALKER POSTOFFICE ROBBED.

Walker. — A gang of burglars dynamited the Walker postoffice and made away with about $2,000 in money and over $800 in stamps. Entrance to the building was gained through the basement and the job has all the appearance of being the work of professionals. The safe was not only cleaned of cash and stamps but the money drawer robbed and all registered letters taken as well. Two suspicious characters were in town last evening which is the only clue the police have at present.

Postmaster McBride had just received several thousand dollars worth of stamps, a portion of which were in the vault at the First National Bank of Walker.

Finds Skeletons in Cave.

Duluth. — Charles W. Turner, of St. Paul, of the Booth Fisheries Co., arrived from Isle Royal and reports the discovery of the bones of two men in a cave on Siskiwit bay. The skull of one man was fractured. The discovery was made by two Duluth girls, one of whom is a trained nurse. says the fractured skull evidently points to murder. Two fishermen mysteriously disappeared between Washington and Siskiwit Harbor nine years ago. The local officials have begun an investigation.

STORY OF "TOPSY" HARTSEL

Veteran Outfielder of Philadelphia Athletics Was Handicaped at Start Because of Size.

By "Topsy" Hartsel.

It took me a long time to get started right in baseball, but only a minute to start. The greatest handicap I had when I was trying to get started was my size. You see down at Polk, O., they thought I was a great player and we had an old player there who taught me to play the game. I began playing before I was ten years old, and was on the high school and town teams when I was fifteen. I was five feet four inches tall and weighed then about 125 pounds. I played around with the teams in our section of the country and was determined to become a professional player. We had few chances to learn much, and when I finally got a job with the Burlington, Ia., club in 1897, I must have been as green a "busher" as there was. I was fast, but in that league they seemed to think I was too small to play, and I went to Montgomery, then to Salem, Ohio, and finally reached Grand Rapids, Mich. It was there I really started. The Grand Rapids team then was a sort of farm for big league clubs and a bunch of experienced and really good players were there. I learned rapidly then, and began to see where I was shy. I found I had been making mistakes and misplaying the game in many ways and still thinking I was doing it right because no one ever had told me how I should do. Louisville took me from Grand Rapids, then Indianapolis got me, and finally I landed with the Chicago National league team. I think I played better ball there than I ever did. Besides I had learned a whole lot about batting and had a good opportunity to study pitchers ("Topsy") Hartsel.

It was at Chicago that I had my best hitting year, and my best base running seasons, and I attribute all my success there to the study of the opposing pitchers. A base runner especially ought to be familiar with every trick and move of every opposing pitcher. I found that out when I went into the American league in 1902 with the Athletics. Many of the pitchers were new to me and I made many breaks in base running before I learned their styles and their tricks. I had to begin all over again to study them, and it did me more good than before, because of the experience in the National league.

Experience and close study of the game and the men who play it are necessary to success, and if there is any lesson in my experience in getting started that may be of value to new men it is that any man no matter how good, must think and study all the time. The starting is easy, for players are in demand—but the finish is quick unless the player is willing to work and learn.

Rise of "Lefty" Russell.

Russell, the much-talked-about Baltimore (Eastern league) pitcher, who has been captured by Connie Mack for fall delivery at a reputed purchase price of $12,000, first attracted the attention of the Baltimore owners when pitching for a Sunday school nine. Last year Russell was with the Hagerstown team, an independent organization. In the western Maryland town he cleaned up everything that appeared before him and it was not long before Manager Dunn got him. Since the start of the current season Russell has shown phenomenal form, and with perfect support would have lost but one game during the entire season.

Star Base Stealer.

Jake Altizer, the shortstop with the Millers, is the leading base stealer of the American association. The ex-White Sox star has pilfered 47 sacks, almost an even dozen more than his nearest rival.

Crystallized Apples.

Put one-half cup of sugar and one-half cup of water in a stewpan and let boil five minutes. Then put in the pan four large or more small apples, pared and cored. Cook gently until tender but not broken. Lift them out carefully and put in shallow baking pan, sprinkle with granulated sugar, and brown in oven. Remove to a glass dish, boil down the sirup one-half, and pour around them. Decorate tops with candied cherries or cranberries preserved and dried in slow oven and rolled in sugar.

The skirt is trimmed with a deep lace band edged at the foot with mauve silk about 3½ inches deep, scalloped at the top, which also is edged with silk; the material is gathered here and at the waist.

The bodice has an eeffctive lace trimming edged with silk; the opening at front is filled with delaine, and the sleeves are set to silk bands.

BLACK SATIN ALL THE RAGE

Shade and Material Has Entirely Captured the Fancy of Devotees of Fashion.

Black satin has certainly captivated Fashion! First, with the tailored suit with long, graceful lines; then with the Paquin scarf or mantle, and now with the chic little chapeau, says the Philadelphia Press.

While this latest millinery creation is a forerunner of autumn modes, women like it so much that they have not delayed a minute to wear it.

When a woman called it "simply ideal" the other day she certainly hit the mark, as it is ideal for almost any occasion.

It is a creation between a mushroom with high dome crown and tiny brim—and a poke bonnet. Fashioned in a severe style, with soft folds of satin around the crown and small bow or rosettes at the side. And a dainty frill of white or ecru valenciennes must edge the brim inside to give the necessary softness to the face. Truly a picturesque hat, yet practical, so much so that a woman can take one "as the only hat" for a week-end trip—quite appropriate to wear with a tailored suit, ideal combination with a lingerie dress, and will be charming for evening.

Parisiennes are very enthusiastic about black satin—and is it any wonder when such modes have been designed for their pleasure and to enhance their beauty?

Newest lace veil is a charming combination of black and white. This not only signifies the vogue of this delightful color combination, but provides a most charming veil for blonde or brunette. The net or mesh part is of white, while the chantilly designs are black.

To Make Stockings Last.

In order to make her new stockings last beyond their time, one clever woman rubs paraffine on the heels and toes before putting the stockings on. They wear wonderfully under this treatment.

Another woman, who considers this method uncomfortable (though, really, it is not so), runs a stocking darner into her new hosiery and darns it round and round at heel and toe with fine darning cotton. Done once, it never seems to be needed again, and the stockings last practically forever.

To Restore a Faded Color.

To restore the faded color of the child's fine blue silk stockings, dip them after washing into hot water in which is dissolved a little (not too much) common bluing and several small lamps of alum. Those which have faded to nearly white can be simply colored in this way to do service as long as they will wear.

FOR THE HOME DRESSMAKER

Some Ideas That It Will Be Well to Keep Always in the Memory.

Dark red linen makes a girlish dress that can be worn with a coat or lingerie waist. The material launders nicely.

When altering a blouse for any reason it is a great mistake to move the shoulder seam to the front. A far better plan is that of dropping it backward instead of forward.

Vanity bags for dancing parties are most attractively made of dainty ribbon, in the form of a tiny bag, which holds powder and puff ball, while the botton on the outside has a mirror, held in place by a shirred piece of ribbon, after first being glued to the rib-covered cardboard, which forms the inside of the bag.

OF VIOLET BATISTE.

Satin and Foulard.

The latest combination of material is figured foulard and plain satin in the predominating shade of the silk. The satin is used for the gown itself and the foulard in a deep hem effect or as underskirt, for a tunic. The foulard also forms the undersleeves and boleros of the new semi-empire costumes.

Confusing.

Craig Biddle, at a dinner in Newport, was describing the changing odds on the Jeffries-Johnson fight at Reno.

"Eight to four and a half on Jeffries—nine to six the other way about —three to one and a quarter—it's rather confusing, isn't it?" he said. "In fact, it's almost as confusing as the two girls' talk about a secret.

"'Mary,' said the first girl, 'told me that you had told her that secret I told you not to tell her.'

"'The nasty thing,' said the other girl. 'I told her not to tell you I told her.'

"'Well,' said the first girl, 'I told her I wouldn't tell you she told me—so don't tell her I did.'"

TRICKY ART DEALERS.

For the booming of a new artist an astute dealer is necessary. He catches his artist as young as possible, preferably as an exhibitor of crazy canvases at the autumn salon of the independents' exhibition, and commissions him to paint 100 pictures a year.

One by one, occasionally in twos and threes, at judicious intervals, the dealer sends the pictures to the Hotel Drouot for sale by public auction. There he has confederates, who raise the price at each sale, and he buys them in himself.

After a few months the young artist's canvases have a certain market value, and the next step is taken to turn their painter into a modern master. The critics are attacked. One of them is asked to look at some daub, and when he cries out with horror the dealer says:

"What? You don't like it? Take it home with you as a favor to me, live with it six months and then"—

"What a masterpiece! The most modern thing in art I have seen for a long time!" he exclaims.

Doubt begins to invade the critic's mind, and when one or two more enthusiastic amateurs have visited him he is worked up to writing a column of panegyric on the new master. The amateurs are, of course, sent by the dealer.

One or two articles and the boom is in full swing. Wealthy and simple minded collectors, remembering how other painters have been decried in their early days and how their works later have commanded fancy prices, rush in.

The new master makes about 10 per cent of the profit and the dealer the other 90 per cent. The new master is at the mercy of the dealer. If he grumbles the dealer floods the auction rooms with a hundred or so of his masterpieces and orders his agents not to bid, the result being that the canvases sell at rubbish prices, and the boom is burst.—Gil Blas.

LONDON THEATERS.

At the London theaters when the young woman shows you to a seat she asks if you wish a program. If you do you pay sixpence in the orchestra or dress circle for a program handsomely printed on fine paper. The price ranges down through "thripence" and "tuppence" as the galleries ascend to a penny in the cockloft. The quality of paper and the general artistic merit of the program decline with the price, but exactly the same information is conveyed for a penny as for sixpence. The fastidious theater goer might prefer to pay a dime for a neat and simple program rather than to have a bulky bunch of advertisements gratis, as in New York, but these London programs, although not so thick as those of New York, are not devoid of advertisements. This gives the purchaser the feeling that he is being worked at both ends. A lady reminds me, however, that a program in a New York theater costs her 10 cents, as the smeary printing rubs off on her white gloves, the cleaning of which costs a dime.

The quality of the performance at the better London theaters certainly averages no higher than that at similar theaters in New York. The music halls are the resort of the great middle class. These are great auditoriums with tier on tier of galleries, the seating capacity ranging perhaps from 3,000 to 5,000.—London Letter in New York Sun.

Queer Collateral.

"Here is a fact as strange as it is true," said an Egyptologist. "Mummies in ancient Egypt were used chiefly as collateral.

"When an Egyptian wanted to borrow he gave his father's or grandfather's mummy as security. Sometimes, if he required a large sum, he gave his father and both grandfathers and he would even throw in the mummy of his mother-in-law if she fortunately happened to be in a mummified state.

"Joking aside," the Egyptologist continued, "what I tell you is the truth. An Egyptian was not permitted to borrow without pledging the mummy of some near relative. It was deemed in Egypt both impious and infamous not to redeem so sacred a pledge as that, and he who died with a family mummy still in pawn was himself buried in unconsecrated ground."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Badly Expressed.

"For heaven's sake, be careful with that rifle, man!" exclaimed a musketry instructor. "You just missed me that time."

"Did I, sergeant? I'm awfully sorry!" responded the indifferent marksman.—London [illegible]

HE LOST THE RACE

Mark Twain's Futile Chase After a Tallyho Coach.

MISSED A BIG CELEBRATION.

The Way the Famous Humorist In Company With W. D. Howells Did Not Attend the Centennial of the Battle of the Minutemen at Concord.

In his reminiscences of Mark Twain in Harper's Magazine W. D. Howells tells amusingly of the time when he and Mr. Clemens missed the anniversary of the battle of Concord:

"Mark Twain came on to Cambridge in April, 1875, to go with me to the centennial ceremonies at Concord in celebration of the battle of the minute men with the British troops a hundred years before. We both had special invitations, including passage from Boston, but I said why bother to go to Boston when we could just as well take the train for Concord at the Cambridge station. He equally decided that it would be absurd, so we breakfasted deliberately and then walked to the station, reasoning of many things, as usual.

"When the train stopped we found it packed inside and out. People stood dense on the platforms of the cars. To our startled eyes they seemed to project from the windows, and unless memory betrays me they lay strewn upon the roofs like brakemen slain at the post of duty. We remounted the fame worn steps of Porter's station and began exploring North Cambridge for some means of transportation overland to Concord, for we were that far on the road by which the British went and came on the day of the battle. The liverymen whom we appealed to received us, some with compassion, some with derision, but in either mood convinced us that we could not have hired a cat to attempt our conveyance, much less a horse or vehicle of any description.

"It was a raw, windy day, very unlike the exceptionally hot April day when the routed redcoats, pursued by the Colonials, fled panting back to Boston, with 'their tongues hanging out like dogs,' but we could not take due comfort in the vision of their discomfiture. We could almost envy them, for they had at least got to Concord. A swift procession of coaches, carriages and buggies, all going to Concord, passed us, inert and helpless, on the sidewalk in the peculiarly cold mud of North Cambridge. We began to wonder if we might not stop one of them and bribe it to take us.

"I felt keenly the shame of defeat and the guilt of responsibility for our failure and when a gay party of students came toward us on the top of a tallyho, luxuriantly empty inside, we felt that our chance had come and our last chance. He said that if I would stop them and tell them who I was they would gladly, perhaps proudly give us passage. I contended that if with his far vaster renown he would approach them our success would be assured.

"While we stood, lost in this contest of civilities, the coach passed us, with gay notes blown from the horns of the students, and then Clemens started in pursuit, encouraged with shouts from the merry party, who could not imagine who was trying to run them down, to a rivalry of speed. The unequal match could end only in one way, and I am glad I cannot recall what he said when he came back to me. Since then I have often wondered at the grief which would have wrung those blithe young hearts if they could have known that they might have had the company of Mark Twain to Concord that day and did not.

"We hung about unavailingly in the bitter wind awhile longer and then slowly, very slowly, made our way home. We wished to pass as much time as possible in order to give probability to the deceit we intended to practice, for we could not bear to own ourselves baffled in our boasted wisdom of taking the train at Porter's station and had agreed to say that we had been to Concord and got back. Even after coming home to my house we felt that our statement would be wanting in verisimilitude without further delay, but we crept quietly into my library and made up a roaring fire on the hearth and thawed ourselves out in the heat of it before we regained our courage for the undertaking. With all these precautions we failed, for when our statement was imparted to the proposed victim she instantly pronounced it unreliable, and we were left with it on our hands intact. I think the humor of this situation was finally a greater pleasure to Clemens than an actual visit to Concord would have been. Only a few weeks before his death he laughed our defeat over with one of my family in Bermuda and exulted in our prompt detection."

The Postage Stamp.

Consider the postage stamp. It says nothing regarding the difficulty of the task assigned to it, but by dint of close application it usually gets there; also it delivers the goods.

Again, if one isn't enough to carry the thing through, two or more by working harmoniously together see the thing to a finish.

No matter if the (mail) matter be weighty, it puts a good face (of Washington) on it and goes directly to the point. It gets licked and stamped upon, and men besmirch its fair features and ofttimes give it more to carry than the (postal) union allows. But, in spite of all this, it sticks unflinchingly to the matter in hand by virtue of the fact that it knows that it has good backing.

Its stick-to-it-ivity is worthy of emulation by you.—Judge's Library.

POLITICAL DOINGS.

We wish to thank our Gully friends for so loyaly standing by Senator Stephens. You are o.k. boys, for you deliverd the goods. Hill River and Lessor also did remarkably well; considering what they had to go "up against." But the towns of Bransvold, King and Knute had ought to move over into this district and join the "gang", that would exchange the vital interests of northern Minnesota for a manority vote, in the next legislature for county option.

At last Tuesdays election the following ticket was nominated: Congressman, Halvor Steenerson Senataor, A. L. Hanson Representative, D. P. O'Neil. Co. Auditor, A. A. Latendress. Treasurer, Gustaf G. Kindseth. Sheriff. Charles J. Fellman. Judge of Probate Ira Richardson.

There was no opposition for nomination on the Republican Primar election ballot for the other candidates for County office.

Yes, Senator Hanson won out, by the "skin of his teeth." He knew he was in a race, at every turn of the road; and you bet he had to tap that Ada bank till pretty heavy, for we know a lot of them newspaper ducks that do not live on county option. He did not carry his home town of Ada, which looks bad.

O'Neil got 600 votes in Thief River Falls, to Krohns 105. Dan lives in Thief River Falls. That is the kind of an indorsement for a man to get from home. If Hanson had to depend on his home city of Ada, Berg would have been nominated.

The mayor of a small town had come to Leipzig to see the fair. A stranger who had lost his way asked him, "Pray, good honest man, what is the name of this street?"

The Ham Fair at Paris.

A feature of Parisian life is the ham fair which is held on the Boulevard Richard Le Noir. The name of this fair is wholly misleading, for as far as I have ever seen hams are the very last thing any one ever buys there. Old brass and copper curios, quaint jewelry, rare china, lace, tapestries and books are what most people go out to seek, and a sight not to be easily forgotten is the long, wide boulevard lined with ramshackle stalls, laden with every possible kind of lumber and presided over by the most rapacious of brocanteurs. Out of piles of valueless lumber Americans and English diligently seek for their pet kind of curios, and there is not an artist in Paris who cannot point to some bit of furniture in his or her studio and say with pride, "I got that for 5 francs at the ham fair." No one ever pays more than 5 francs, I notice, but, alas, every year these five franc bargains are becoming more rare, and even as housekeeping in Paris grows more and more costly so does the furnishing of one's house to keep.—London Queen.

Only a Question of Possibility.

Among the customers of a tea store opened in the northwest part of the city the other night was a man who, after buying a pound of coffee, handed a counterfeit half dollar to the shopkeeper.

"This money is counterfeit; I'm sorry, sir," said the shopkeeper.

"Yes; I know it," replied the customer, grinning. "Got it here one day last week, and I've been saving it for you." Then, noting the smile upon the shopkeeper's face, the customer said, evidently offended, "Perhaps you doubt my word?"

"Oh, not at all, sir, not at all. I couldn't doubt the word of so truthful a man. I was simply smiling because I wondered how it was possible for you to have got the money here. This place was opened only night before last."

Thereupon the customer departed hastily after producing a good coin and slipping the counterfeit into his own pocket.—Philadelphia Times.

JAPANESE HEROISM.

Subjoined is the translation of a message written by Lieutenant Tsutoma Sakuma, who was in command of the Japanese submarine No. 6, which foundered while maneuvering in Hiroshima bay. The message was found in the conning tower of the submarine after she had been brought to the surface:

"It is with the deepest regret that I write this message to describe the loss of this boat with my fellow officers and men, due to my own fault. I would here specially mention that all steps have been taken to raise her, my comrades and men working earnestly and calmly till the end. I ordered the ship to dive with the engine running, but as I found she went down too far I tried to shut the valves which admit the sea water to the ballast tank, but unexpectedly the chain working these valves broke, and I was left helpless, unable to control the boat. Meanwhile the tanks filled with water, and the boat went down at an incline of about twenty-five degrees. After striking the bottom the water began rushing in, the switchboard was immersed in water, all electric lights went out, the fuses burnt away, and the boat was filled with poisonous gases, so that we experienced the greatest difficulty in breathing.

"Under these conditions we worked our very utmost with the hand pumps to empty the main ballast tank, which, I believe, we succeeded in doing, although we could not read the gauges owing to darkness. No electric current was available, as I mentioned before, and our last hope of rising to the surface lay in working the hand pumps only.

"I write this in the dim light coming from the conning tower—11:45 a. m.

"I earnestly beseech his majesty to grant me forgiveness and to succor the families of my comrades and men who have lost their lives in this perishing boat. This is my only wish. 12:30 p. m.

"It is with the utmost difficulty that I can breathe, though I am sure we must have blown out the gasoline entirely from the tanks. I cannot continue any more.—12:40 p. m."—London [illegible]

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

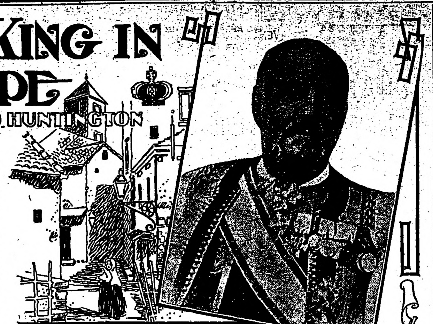
A NEW KING IN EUROPE

BY W. GODDARD HUNTINGTON



NICHOLAS I. PETROVIC NJEGOS

MONTENEGRO — whose reigning prince, Nicholas I., by way of celebrating the jubilee of his accession has proclaimed himself king and his principality a kingdom—is one of the storm centers of the near east. Its influence on Balkan politics is not to be measured by its size, for this Land of the Black Mountains, as the Venetians named it long ago, is actually the smallest monarchy in all Europe. When, a few weeks ago, Nicholas assumed the title of king, his wife became Queen Milena. Nicholas also declared that Montenegro shall be known henceforth as Zeta, that being the ancient name of the country.

The territory subject to the rule of King Nicholas is just one-fourteenth of the area of Roumania, a tenth of Bulgaria, a seventh of Greece, and a fifth of Servia. Yet Greece has long been an independent state, Roumania a monarchy since 1881, Servia a kingdom since 1882, while Bulgaria exchanged the rank of a suzerain principality for that of an independent kingdom only two years ago. Ever since that dramatically precipitate action on the part of Bulgaria and the assimilation by Austria of the neighboring provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina the Montenegrin prince and people have been ambitious to assert their sovereign dignity.

And if there be any satisfaction in this elevation of their national status the Montenegrins are assuredly as entitled to it as their neighbors of Servia and Bulgaria, for Montenegro can boast a record unrivaled by any other state in the whole Balkan peninsula. Alone of all the Balkan peoples these hardy mountaineers have never known the harsh hand of a conqueror. Secure in their wild mountain fastnesses, almost impregnable in their inaccessibility, the Montenegrins have retained their national life and political independence through centuries of strife and Slavonic dismemberment. Dynasties have fallen and kingdoms crumbled on either hand, but this one tiny state has preserved its freedom from alien control. Even when the Turkish hordes threatened to overrun Europe and in their triumphant march swept away the medieval Servian empire this warlike mountain race kept its passes by ceaseless watching night and day, and submission to Turkish authority was of a nominal nature. And when their ancient capital was threatened they abandoned it as ruthlessly as those other Slavs of the northland burned and abandoned Moscow in the face of the advancing foe, and betaking themselves high up into the mountains founded a secure seat of government within the rocky walls of Cettinje.

STREET SCENE

MONTENEGRINS AT CETTINGE

A wonderful people these Montenegrins, with a wonderful history. If ever a Servian empire be re-established, if ever the Balkan states become united in a powerful confederation that would wholly change the political complexion of the near east and its problems, it will be largely due to the patriotism and pluck of this little patriarchal state. To this day the men wear an edging of black in their scarlet caps—this in mourning for a lost Slav empire—and with all the passion of a primitive people they hold to that national idea which would accomplish the union of all the Serb states.

Early in the sixteenth century the ruler of the Montenegrins, being a pious prince, who much loved the church, handed executive authority to the metropolitan bishop, who henceforth bore the title of "vladika," or prince bishop. For three and a half centuries spiritual and temporal power lay in one man's hands, the vladika being a little Balkan pope. In 1696 the Petrovic Njegos family entered into possession of this princely power, and this dynasty rules in Montenegro still.

In 1851 Danilo I. renounced the title of vladika in favor of that of hospodar, at the same time severing the temporal authority from the spiritual oversight of the people. In 1853 Danilo II. ordered the enrollment in arms of all Montenegrin males capable of service. The tribal system still obtained, chieftains of clans being directly responsible to their prince. On August 13, 1860, the present ruler acceded to power, and during the fifty years of a notable reign Prince Nicholas has done much to civilize and modernize this primitive mountain land while at the same time he has been careful to keep national habits in all their simplicity and to foster a lofty nationalism of spirit and sentiment among his people.

Of all the states in Europe Montenegro is perhaps the least known to, the least visited by, the average traveled man, while to the untraveled the very name is a blank. The proclamation of a new king in Europe is a reminder, however, of the value which the Montenegrins set upon their own importance, an importance which is by no means to be underestimated when Balkan questions arise to disturb the currents of high diplomacy. Packed within an area which is at most a hundred miles long and eighty miles wide is a population of about a quarter of a million people, the sturdiest, bravest and most warlike people anywhere to be found. The Montenegrins are a fighting race, among whom personal bravery is accounted the highest virtue in man. By a national decree the men all carry loaded pistols at their belts, and these they are prone to use on small provocation. They have no regard for the value of human life, and family animosities are pursued through generations after the fashion of the Corsican vendetta. Nicholas I. has for years steadfastly discouraged these blood feuds, which are a bane of Montenegrin life; but racial instincts die hard, and these men of the Black Mountains are not easily soothed into civilization's ways.

In the early years of Nicholas' reign Montenegro suffered much by pestilence and famine as well as by successive conflicts with Turkey, which has ever been envious of the Montenegrins' stubborn independence. In the struggles of the seventies Prince Nicholas and his people were successful to the extent of recovering valuable seaboard territory, in the possession of which the principality was confirmed by the twenty-eighth article of the Berlin treaty. In the same famous agreement of the powers the independence of Montenegro, really existent for centuries, was at last formally recognized even by Turkey. With so much conceded to their heroism and patriotism the Montenegrins were free to develop their national resources, which are wholly agricultural. Among the humanizing influences essential to the progress of his people Prince Nicholas promptly recognized the value of education, and almost before the ink was dry on treaty signatures an extensive scheme of elementary education was organized throughout the principality. There are now some 200 primary schools maintained by the state and attendance is compulsory on all children.

Whatever Nicholas I. has done and may do, however, by way of fostering the arts of peace and of advancing the material prosperity of his people avails little when the Montenegrin genius is essentially military. In all eastern Europe there is no finer soldier than the hardy man of the mountains. The Montenegrin ruler knows his strength in this respect, and he has fashioned at least a fifth of the population into a well-disciplined and well-equipped little army comprising 56 battalions of infantry and 12 batteries of artillery, but no cavalry.

Of even greater account than their martial order is the intense nationalism of the Montenegrins, a sentiment which their ruler stimulates by royal decree as well as by personal example. It is, for instance, incumbent on all to wear the national costume; prosaic European clothing is tabooed. Picturesque as it is, the costume emphasizes the extravagant theatricality of the Montenegrin pose. But if garments enhance an ideal Prince Nicholas is shrewd indeed in his ordinance. Much that may seem extravagant and absurdly archaic to western ideas has a hidden purpose in the Balkins. Austrian, Russian and German policy alike has aimed at such a severance of Serb associations as shall effectually repress Serb aspirations to a reunited empire.

On the other hand it has been the settled policy of Nicholas I. to keep the flame of Serb patriotism alight. Hence it is that the fervent nationalism of this Montenegrin people finds expression in the very jackets of the men and the skirts of the women, in the minstrelsy of the single-stringed fiddles and the ever-present readiness for war.

Montenegro has a constitutiton, first granted in 1868. The skupstchina or national assembly is elected by universal suffrage for a term of four years. A ministry of six portfolios represents executive authority, but to all intents and purposes Nicholas I. is an absolute autocrat. The father of his people, he gives public audience to all and sundry and administers justice beneath a famous plane tree hard by the palace gates at Cettinje. Such is the patriarchal ruler of a patriarchal state who in the pursuit of a national ambition is exchanging the primitive simplicity of ancient Czernagora—as Montenegro once was styled—for the trappings and majesty of a miniature monarchy.

Hard Work, Sometimes, to Raise Children.

Children's taste is ofttimes more accurate, in selecting the right kind of food to fit the body, than that of adults. Nature works more accurately through the children.

A Brooklyn lady says: "Our little boy had long been troubled with weak digestion. We could never persuade him to take more than one taste of any kind of cereal food. He was a weak little chap and we were puzzled to know what to feed him on.

"One lucky day we tried Grape-Nuts. Well, you never saw a child eat with such a relish, and it did me good to see him. From that day on it seemed as though we could almost see him grow. He would eat Grape-Nuts for breakfast and supper, and I think he would have liked the food for dinner.

"The difference in his appearance is something wonderful.

"My husband had never fancied cereal foods of any kind, but he became very fond of Grape-Nuts and has been much improved in health since using it.

"We are now a healthy family, and naturally believe in Grape-Nuts.

"A friend has two children who were formerly afflicted with rickets. I was satisfied that the disease was caused by lack of proper nourishment. They showed it. So I urged her to use Grape-Nuts as an experiment and the result was almost magical.

"They continued the food and today both children are well and strong as any children in this city, and, of course, my friend is a firm believer in Grape-Nuts for she has the evidence before her eyes every day."

"No Exceptions"

By LAWRENCE ALFRED CLAY

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

Mr. Guy Flemming, civil engineer, was passing a couple of weeks at the village of Colville. That meant that he was fishing. That didn't mean that he was catching any fish, because the month was August, and a fish that will bite in August is not worth the carrying home.

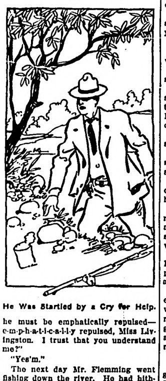
A mile outside the village was the Prim school for young ladies—Miss Janet Prim principal, proprietor and all that.

As the school buildings were situated on the banks of the same river in which Mr. Flemming was vainly fishing for fish, a suspicious person like Miss Prim must see through his duplicity sooner or later. He was gradually approaching the school grounds as he fished, and the day would come when he would venture to climb the wall and address one of the dozen damsels remaining there through the summer vacation. Miss Prim did see, and she called up Miss Fanny Livingston, one of her assistants, and solemnly said:

"Miss Livingston, there's a man around. That is, there is a strange man gradually approaching this place along the river bank. He has come a little nearer every day for the past week."

"Is the constable to be notified, ma'am?" was asked.

"Only as a last resort. Under your care the young ladies are to visit Maple grove tomorrow. The grove is on the river. Should that man be fishing in the vicinity and dare to approach you and the young ladies he must be emphatically repulsed—e-m-p-h-a-t-i-c-a-l-l-y repulsed, Miss Livingston. I trust that you understand me?"



He Was Startled by a Cry for Help.

"Yes'm."

The next day Mr. Flemming went fishing down the river. He had hitherto fished up the stream. He knew nothing whatever of the jaunt to the grove on the part of the young ladies, but the voice of Fate called to him. He had been in the grove for a couple of hours, and he had almost had two bites on his hook, when the grove was invaded. He heard song and laughter, and he soon reasoned out who his callers were.

It was very proper of Mr. Flemming to sit there and fish and fish and not go spying. By skulking through the brush a hundred feet or so he could have come upon the happy band in a dell, but he didn't skulk. He sat there and bobbed his line up and down and watched the bubbles and the froth.

More than an hour had gone by when Mr. Flemming heard the rumble of thunder, and looked up to see the sky darkening. There was going to be a thunderstorm. He heard exclamations and ejaculations from the young ladies and knew they were preparing to take shelter in a farmhouse a quarter of a mile away. He didn't propose to get wet, but he had noted a great sycamore tree with a hollow trunk that would give him shelter.

The voices of a dozen running, harum-scarum girls had died away in the distance, and Mr. Flemming had laid down his fishpole, when he was startled by a cry for help. It was near at hand. It was the voice of a woman. The fisherman made a rush of fifty feet to confront a young woman whose foot had been caught in a root as she started to flee with the others. She was hanging to the limb of a tree and twisting her foot, but the heel was jammed fast.

It was Miss Livingston. There she was, held prisoner by her foot, a soaking old thunderstorm coming along, and the man she had been commanded to repulse—emphatically repulse—standing before her, and the only person on earth she could ask for assistance. If she emphatically repulsed him—

"I see the trouble and I beg pardon," said Mr. Flemming after an instant; and he dropped on his knee, seized the foot and wrenched it clear.

Then the lightning came, and Miss Livingston screamed.

Then the first big drops of rain were heard on the leaves overhead, and the poor young woman looked at the fisherman with tears in her eyes and moaned:

"What shall I do—what shall I do?"

The hollow tree was forty feet away. The coming downfall was fifty. Mr. Flemming picked up his burden and beat the downfall by three feet. The hollow tree accommodated them both. The floodgates opened, but the retreat was as dry as a brick house. The thunder rumbled and growled and made things tremble, but Mr. Flemming soothingly declared that it didn't come within fifty rods of comparing with an earthquake. The lightning was vivid and came often, and like a good fellow he slipped an arm around the young woman's waist and let her hide her head on his shoulder.

It was an hour before the storm passed over, and another half hour before the leaves ceased dripping. The two in that hollow tree did not remain dumb all this time.

Mr. Flemming told about fishing, and Miss Livingston told about the cause of education. Mr. Flemming bemoaned his poor luck, and Miss Livingston shed tears as she confided to him that she would receive the most gigantic reprimand from Miss Prim, and perhaps lose her place. She had been ordered not to let a girl stray. They had scattered like frightened chickens. She had been ordered to repulse, and—and—she hadn't done it!

"But the girls had to run from the storm," protested the fisherman.

"Yes, but Miss Prim makes no exceptions in favor of thunderstorms."

"But you were caught by the foot, and but for me you would be held yet."

"No exceptions."

"And after I had released you there was no time to follow the girls."

"She would expect me to, just the same."

They found the girls who had taken shelter at the farmhouse had gone on to the school. They would report Miss Livingston missing and perhaps dead. A tear stole down her cheek.

"But you couldn't get out a minute sooner," said Mr. Flemming.

"Miss Prim will ask why I didn't see the coming storm half an hour in advance."

"Suppose you had been left there caught in the root until some one had come from the school?"

"In that case," she replied, with a rueful smile, "Miss Prim would have asked if I had seen a man, and when satisfied I hadn't I might have got off with a light reprimand."

"Hang Miss Prim!" exclaimed Mr. Flemming with great vigor. "I propose to go on to the school with you and explain matters.

"But my orders were to repulse you emphatically. She even spelled the word out at length. I—I intended to repulse you emphatically, but when a girl is caught by the foot—in thunder and lightning—and it's going to rain—"

"Why, she'd be an idiot to repulse!"

"And you must stop here and let me go on alone. Perhaps if I tell Miss Prim that I repulsed you at the last moment—"

"Oh, but you haven,t you know!"

"Well?" queried Miss Prim as the delinquent reached home.

"I started to leave the grove with the girls, but was caught by the foot."

"I make no exception on that account. You should have been watching your feet."

"The storm was awful."

"You should have found shelter in advance."

"And then, when a man came and released my foot—".

"A man! And you repulsed him emphatically? You bade him begone—vanish? However, whether you did or not I can make no exceptions."

"That's what I thought, Miss Prim, and so—and so—"

"Miss Livingston, I shall be pleased to accept your resignation without further inquiry. Indeed, I fear to draw out further details. I fear I should learn that you had fallen in love."

Miss Livingston went home to her mother, and Mr. Flemming hadn't visited her over half a dozen times when he asked her to make an exception in his case, and after making him wait six weeks longer as a punishment for his conduct in the hollow tree she consented.

GOOD HOUSE FOR DAIRY COW

Provision of Airy, Sanitary Buildings Must be Matter of First Consideration for Success.

(By W. R. GILBERT.)

In dairying the first consideration is a race of healthy cattle, but in as much as sanitary accommodation is inseparably linked with robust constitution and proper feeding in maintaining the health of the animals the provision of airy, sanitary buildings must be a matter of the first importance.

It is a positive certainty that a healthy race of cattle cannot be maintained indefinitely in circumstances favorable to the propagation and development of disease germs, and consequently, the condition of the sheds in which the dairy cattle are accommodated is a very proper subject for thorough inquiry and systematic inspection.

The subject is an important one from the point of view of the general public, but it is of even greater moment to farmers.

The first essentials in the proper housing of cows are sufficient ventilation and sanitary arrangements that will facilitate the thorough cleansing of the buildings.

In the housing of cows, as indeed, of all classes of stock, it is essential to discriminate between air space and ventilation. The two terms are not synonymous as every practical farmer knows. Fresh air is essential to the maintenance of health but large cubic area is as little a guarantee as it is an essential of good ventilation.

Now, it is a fact that those who should know better, make their demand, in respect to fresh air in cow sheds, for air space, rather than for frequent air renewal, and by way of showing the mistaken value of this idea, it may be pointed out that it is quite conceivable that the air of a cow barn containing 600 cubic feet of air space, and imperfectly ventilated, may receive less fresh air than that of another of half the capacity that is well ventilated, and at the same time be colder and less comfortable for the cows.

The ventilation in many of the existing farm buildings is admittedly defective, but instead of constructing spacious new buildings at heavy cost it would be o muhmore reasonable and equally effective to devote attention to the subject of ventilation.

In the present knowledge of such matters the imperfections of the existing buildings could be rectified at comparatively tlitle expense, and the sanitary conditions made to comply with the regulations necessary to maintain health and to prevent the pollution of the milk.

MILK STOOL FOR HOUSEWIFE

Seat Arranged to Overcome Difficulty of Holding Pail Securely as Men Can Do.

I have found a way to overcome the difficulty in holding the pail as men do. My milk stool is oblong and the front end is made concave, writes Mrs. L. Bond in Farm and Home. An iron hoop completes the circle for the pail to sit in the opening. A hoop from a cack has about the right bevel to fit the flare on the pail. The accompanying drawing shows how the stool is made.

Cost of Keeping Cow.

It will cost about 150 pounds of butter to keep a cow in good production a year, and a cow that gives no more could not pay her way. She will not get in the profit class, all expenses considered, until she yields 200 to 240 pounds of butter fat a year. After such an amount is reached every additional pound will be practically all net profit. These extra pounds are what should be striven for.

Marketing Feed.

A farmer living any great distance from market can better afford to make hic feed into butter than to haul it to market. He should study why the successful men are successful and find whether it is the better stock, better care or feeding that makes this success. If we keep the best cows they will not eat up all of the profits.

Clover Hay.

No hay used for dairy stock, which 's free from clover, is as valuable as hat which contains a good proportion of clover. Clover is one of the best lairy feeds we have. On old fields t can often be brought in by sowing ho seed onto the turf in early spring nd by the application of lime or eached ashes.

VENTILATING A COW STABLE

Window Arranged So That Air Is Kept Reasonably Fresh and Prevents Draft on Animals.

By using a full sash, hinging the window at the bottom and allowing the top to open inward, air can be admitted without making a draft on the cows. When these windows are open an inch or two, the air can be kept reasonably fresh.

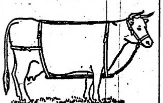
HARNESS FOR SUCKING COWS

Device Shown Has Been Found Satisfactory in Preventing Animal From Milking Herself.

The harness illustrated in the accompanying cut has been found satisfactory in preventing cows from milking themselves, says Orange Judd Farmer. A smooth pole extends between the fore legs to near the udder, and is suspended by two straps over the back, one around the flank and by a light chain to the halter. The cow wearing such a device will find it impossible to reach back far enough to cheat her master.



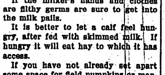
Harness Prevents Sucking.

Clothes for Milking.

Clothes which have been worn in the fields during the day are not suitable for milking purposes. Every milker should be provided with a clean white milking suit. Such clothes can be bought ready made for less than a dollar and if frequently washed will add in securing clean milk. Milkers should also wash and dry their hands before milking and above all, should keep them dry during milking. To wet the hands with the milk is a filthy practice.

The Right Temperature.

A creamery should be kept to secure best results at 40 or 48 degrees. In 12 or 14 hours we will get, practically, all the cream from ordinary herds or cows. Be sure to hold the temperature at the lowest point at least six hours.



There is no wisdom in keeping poor cows.

The reliable milker is not likely to be without a job any time soon.

Never cover milk while warm in the cans as it will produce a musty odor.

Milk or skimmed milk should be fed sweet, especially when the calf is very young.

If the milker's hands and clothes are filthy germs are sure to get into the milk pails.

It is better to let a calf feel hungry, after fed with skimmed milk. If hungry it will eat hay to which it has access.

If you have not already set apart some space for field pumpkins or mangel wurzels, you have made a serious mistake.

The flavor and texture of cottage cheese may be improved by adding cream or soft butter to the curd on the strainer.

While it is some trouble to strain the cream before churning but when that is done there will be no white specks in the butter.

It is easier to keep the cows from getting out by fixing the fences beforehand, than it is to break them of the fence habit after they once get it.

The first year of the calf's life is the period upon which depends the question of whether he is to be a source of profit to his breeder and owner or not.

Perhaps one reason why milk and cream are so often not cooled enough is because of the work required to pump the necessary amount of water.

Cleanse the stable daily, ventilate perfectly, screen doors and windows, remove manure piles from the vicinity of the stable, feed fresh food each meal.

Attention Sick Women

If you had positive proof that a certain remedy for female ills had made many remarkable cures, would you not feel like trying it?

If during the last thirty years we have not succeeded in convincing every fair-minded woman that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured thousands and thousands of women of the ills peculiar to their sex, then we long for an opportunity to do so by direct correspondence. Meanwhile read the following letters which we guarantee to be genuine and truthful.

Hudson, Ohio.—"I suffered for a long time from a weakness, inflammation, dreadful pains each month and suppression. I had been doctoring and receiving only temporary relief, when a friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so, and wrote to you for advice. I have faithfully followed your directions and now, after taking only five bottles of the Vegetable Compound, I have every reason to believe I am a well woman. I give you full permission to use my testimonial." —Mrs. Lena Carmocino, Hudson, Ohio. R. F. D. No. 7.

St. Regis Falls, N. Y.—"Two years ago I was so bad that I had to take to my bed every month, and it would last from two to three weeks. I wrote to you for advice and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in dry form. I am happy to say that I am cured, thanks to your medicine and good advice. You may use my letter for the good of others."—Mrs. J. H. Breyere, St. Regis Falls, N. Y.

There is absolutely no doubt about the ability of this grand old remedy, made from the roots and herbs of our fields, to cure female diseases. We possess volumes of proof of this fact, enough to convince the most skeptical.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

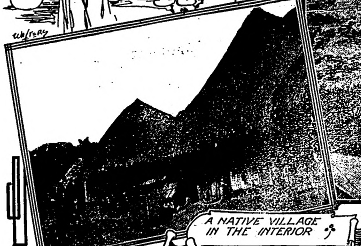
THE NEGRO PROBLEM IN LIBERIA

BY OVERTON PRICE

PRESIDENT ARTHUR BARCLAY



A NATIVE VILLAGE IN THE INTERIOR

VIEW OF CAPE PALMAS

A NATIVE CHRISTIAN FAMILY

CELEBRATING THE LIBERIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

THE first idea of a "Liberia"— settlement of free negroes—arose with the foundation of the British colony of Sierra Leone. After the close of the American War of Independence in 1783 it became necessary to provide for the negro troops who had served Great Britain faithfully in that unhappy struggle. They were at first deported to Nova Scotia, but had no place there in the body politic of white men; they were no longer slaves, but the idea of granting the suffrage to negroes was then displeasing to the dominant race. There was also the problem of the free Maroon negroes of Jamaica, who were irksome to the authorities in a land of slavery. So the idea of founding a free negro state or community in West Africa for the reception of enfranchised American negroes came into being about 1784, and in 1787 the colony of Sierra Leone was founded under a chartered company and taken over by the crown in 1808.

Early in the nineteenth century the same difficulty arose in the United States, namely, the presence of thousands of free negroes whose case had not been sufficiently provided for by the American Constitution. Somehow or other these free negroes and mulattoes—growing impatient of being taxed without representation—must be provided for. So several philanthropists, remembering Sierra Leone, thought to promote by private enterprise and philanthropy a similar colony across the sea which might provide for the return to West Africa (whence most of them had come) of the freed slaves of the United States. Indeed, there was a strong disposition to adopt Sierra Leone for this purpose, with the assent of the British government; but the local authorities of Sierra Leon showed themselves very averse from receiving American negroes, who might owe a divided allegiance.

Accordingly the American founders of "Liberia" (this name was not given to the infant state until 1824)—who were mostly white men with a few mulattoes and negroes—selected the Grain Coast, immediately to the south and east of Sierra Leone, for their experiment.

It was some weeks before the hostility of the natives, who were wedded to the slave trade, could be overcome, but in 1822 active operations were begun. A thirty-acre tract was allotted to each man with the means of cultivating it. The National Colonization society's agents became discouraged at the difficulties that were met and returned to America with a few faint-hearted ones; but the others rallied about a determined negro, Elijah Johnson, and remained. The colony was enlarged by the addition of new tracts. New settlements were afterward formed at Cape Monte and in the newly acquired Bassa Land, in which, in 1834, a town was founded and called Edina, in acknowledgment of pecuniary aid sent from Edinburgh. Many of the neighboring chiefs were received into the colony, and others were subdued. Trials of many kinds, deprivations and dissensions were the lot of the colony, managed by a society which did not fully know whether its aims were sentimental or practical. In 1847 Liberia was left to its own resources and declared an independent republic. The colony immediately began to show more prosperity, numerous churches and schools were founded, newspapers were established, and slavery in the neighboring states was abolished. The first president of independent Liberia was Roberts, an octoroon. He was a most able and courageous man, and the country made rapid strides in civilization and other material lines of progress under his administration.

The constitution of the republic is framed after that of the United States. There are a president, vice-president, a council of six ministers and a house of representatives. Voters must be of negro blood and own real estate. The natives gnerally do not avail themselves of the suffrage. No foreigner can own land without the consent of the government. The coast territory is formed into the counties of Bassa, Cape Palmas and Sinoe, with one superintendent each, and Montserrado, with four superintendents. The capital is Monrovia, named after President Monroe. English money is used, but American money figures usually in the keeping of accounts. There is a Liberian coinage and a rather large paper currency. The official language of the country is English. The civilized inhabitants are orthodox Protestants, mostly Episcopalians.

During the fifties and sixties of the last century the Americo-Liberians did much to explore the interior and enter into treaty relationships with the native chiefs. But thirty years ago their administration began to get into financial difficulties. It is not an easy thing to create a well-ordered, well-governed state in tropical Africa without a considerable capital to draw on. Consider for a moment what Great Britain has spent on Sierra Leone since 1787, and on the Gold Coast wars, the opening up of Nigeria; or the outlay of France on Senegambia or Dahomey; and then imagine how the government of Liberia could without any reserve of capital bring law, order and civilization into a densely forested territory nearly the size of England, with a probable population of over a million warlike savages and semi-savages.

So long as Britain and France—the controlling powers—contented themselves with the mere occupation of a few coast towns on the seaboard of their West African dominions or protectorates, the Monrovia government could afford to do the same. But when these great European powers were compelled by force of circumstances to occupy and administer the regions behind their coasts the Liberians found themselves in a position of great difficulty. They had been allotted theoretically by France and England a considerable hinterland—more than 50,000 square miles—and were held responsible for the doings of the native tribes in that extensive interior. Now these tribes had never been subdued by the government of the republic. They were many of them in treaty relationships with the Monrovia administration, and such of them as had heard of the civilized negro government on the coast (and it must be remembered that much of the interior is dense forest, inhabited by tribes who for ages have been isolated in that forest, and were—and are—quite ignorant of the world outside their tribal land) were quite willing to regard the Liberians as the ruling power on the seashore. But they were very disinclined to obey orders from Monrovia if contrary to their own desires.

The tribes farthest inland looked upon the British and French—the "white men"—as aggressors who were putting down by force a most lucrative slave trade, who were forcibly disclosing the secrets of sacred streams like the Niger near its sources, who, in short, were not only to be opposed, but whose organized territories offered a most profitable field for raids and robberies. More than this: the import of guns, gunpowder, rifles (above all) and alcohol was being restricted or forbidden by the Europeans. The Liberian coast, especially where it was slenderly guarded by the Liberian administration, offered the one loophole through which these forbidden goods might be smuggled. Accordingly a great trade sprang up between these uncontrolled hinterland tribes and the Kru people on the coast, who affected a sort of detachment from the government by the American-Negro republic. In these ways the Liberian hinterland became a positive source of danger and expense to the British protectorate of Sierra Leone and the French possessions of the Sudan and Ivory Coast.

Consequently the Liberian government has been forced of late years to live somewhat beyond its means in organizing a police and a marine, in occupying the Kru coast and in attempting to construct roads to places of importance in the interior. It has from time to time engaged European officers for its services; but whereas some of these engagements have been of noteworthy success, others have been the reverse, and it is difficult to locate the blame. European capital is somewhat shy of Liberia, partly owing to the turbulence of the interior natives (though this has been exaggerated, for white men very seldom really incur danger from the indigenes), but more on account of the irresponsible fickleness of the legislature, which is given too much to the hasty making and unmaking of laws and to conflicts of opinion with the executive.

Yet the country is extremely rich. Its rocks and river valleys produce both gold and diamonds, some of the coast districts (especially in the east) even give indications of the existence of bitumen, or oil-bearing strata, while the forests of the interior are remarkable for their wealth of rubber-bearing trees and lianas, their ebony, African teak and "mahogany," and the piassava fiber (derived from the raphia palm), which is used for so many purposes connected with the making of brooms and brushes. Then there is the oil-palm, with its two kinds of oil, both valuable to commerce—the oil of the husk and that of the kernel. The extraction of this last and its great value for special industries are said to have been discovered some seventy-five years ago by an American negro, one of the early colonists of Liberia. A great deal was done by these freed slave settlers, for which they have never received sufficient credit.

Unfortunately the attempted colonization of Liberia has been hindered by the American negro colonists proving almost as much liable to malarial fever and other African diseases as Europeans. They seem to have lost the relative immunity from these blood-germ maladies which their African ancestors enjoyed. The modern America-Liberian does not stand the climate of Liberia much better than the white man from Europe or America. The country is not unhealthy in the interior; it is the coast belt which, with its eternal heat and moisture, its very short dry seasons, and torrential rains (conditions which suit admirably the cultivation of rubber, coffee and cacao) saps the vitality of residents not of African birth. And the hinterland, with its superior conditions of climate, has already a somewhat large indigenous population, who are not eager for foreign additions to their numbers.

Hiring Help In East Africa

The "servant problem" is bad enough in America, and the experiences mistresses have to relate are many and varied; but an infinitely wider range of possibilities is opened up when mere man—and a bachelor at that—tackles the servant and other household problems in an East African bungalow. Anything can happen—and does happen!

Native house servants of a sort are plentiful enough around the chief towns of British East Africa, Nairobi and Mombasa, and the slightest rumor that the Muzungu (white man) requires a "boy" or m'pezi (cook) fills one's compound with cooks, "generals" and raw niggers, representing every tribe under Africa's sun, a writer in the Wide World says.

The average bachelor contents himself with four servants—a head "boy," a cook, a "toto" (youth) to assist them, and a m'shenzi (raw, untrained native) for odd jobs, gardening, etc.

It is no easy task to make a selection from the host of eager, voluble applicants. Dirty, carefully stuck-together "baruas" (testimonials) are examined and the owners questioned, but it is unwise to put much faith in these documents, for it is no unusual occurrence for a "boy"—on the principle of "the more the merrier"—to proudly present you with three testimonials, every one bearing a different name from the one under which he introduces himself!

These gentry are always greatly offended when you kick them off the veranda and tell them they have bought or stolen the documents from other natives! Upon one occasion a would- be cook brought me a "barua" signed by a well-known settler and worded:

"To whom it may concern: The bearer of this 'barua' is an infernal rogue and thief. Please kick him out."

By the time I had stopped laughing the nigger had arrived at the conclusion that something was wrong and was doing record time down the path, so I was unable to avail myself of the kind invitation.

HORSE TRADE IN MISSOURI.

In St. Charles last week Lester Ingraham traded A. S. Osborn a horse for a motor boat. A few hours later Osborn discovered that the horse was worthless, so he went to the boat and removed the engine and the horse died as he was hauling it away. A jury in a justice's court awarded Ingraham the engine and $1 damages.—Detroit Free Press.

THE OUTCAST GYPSY

Now the Modern Ishmael Among Civilized Nations.

England and the United States Now Turned Against Them—Efforts to Induce Them to Settle Down Unavailing.

Washington.—Everywhere throughout the civilized world the hand of mankind seems to be raised against the gypsies. The last two refuges to which they betook themselves—the United States and England—have set their faces against them. Hereafter in England they are to be treated like common vagrants, without visible means of support, while in the United States the immigration laws serve to debar them as idle and dangerous nomads.

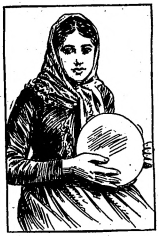
France decided some years ago that the gypsy was a public menace and, in the summary fashion of the republic when it makes up its mind to a thing, expelled him as relentlessly as it has expelled the monks.

Germany, which is a grim manufacturing establishment, after all, simply ordered its thousands of sentinels along its bayoneted border to turn back every gypsy who showed his nose at the line.

Wrathful and perplexed, the Romany moved on to Belgium; but hostile bayonets met them there. Desperate, for they hate water like so many wildcats, they took to the canals of placid Holland. But the phlegmatic Dutchmen, every tradition of their plodding industry outraged at sight of the gay wanderers, drove them out again.

Meanwhile, the Balkans, where the gypsy has ever roamed as free as any other bird of prey, have begun to feel the call of settled prosperity—if Balkan politics will ever give agriculture its chance—that attends the lowing kine and the importation of American reapers and binders. Sheep stealers and horse swindlers are impressing the fiery-souled mountaineers less than they used to, and the bars are being steadily raised against the gypsy, on the ground that he is a common tramp, who contributes nothing to the country and deserves nothing from it.

Transylvania, time out of mind, has been the gypsy's native heath. The hills and caves let him live the life of the early troglodyte, and the industrious among the population afforded him sustenance. But all Romany can't subsist on the loot of Transylvania, and Hungary and Austria received the first overflow.



American Type of Gypsy Woman.

Maria Theresa a hundred and fifty years ago had a brilliant idea for squelching the dangerous nomads. She provided doweries for all gypsy maidens who would marry her Austrian subjects. It was the most popular move any empress ever made, especially with the gypsy maidens. They applied for the dowries in beautiful, bridal droves; got them; and ran off with their gypsy husbands and lovers day after day, until Maria Theresa concluded that gypsy maidens were likely to prove unprofitable investments.

Emperor Joseph II. thought he had them fixed forever when he gave them houses and lands, seed, grain and farming implements. The seeds were promptly eaten; the houses became horse stables; the implements were sold, and the owners moved on.

There are believed to be 300,000 of them in Austria and Hungary still; 100,000 in Turkey; 150,000 in Russia; 200,000 in Spain and Portugal; 50,000 in Italy; 10,000 in the United States, and several thousand in South America, to whose broad pampas and rich plantations their nomad fancy has been turning for some years past. In all, the whole race of gypsies, as known to the white nations, numbers fewer than a million; and the whole mass of them is forever moving on.

The great traveler and ethnologist, Sir Richard Burton, whose translation of the Arabian Nights has immortalized him, is one of the few genuinely scientific men who have studied the origins of the gypsies in a genuinely scientific manner. He does not condemn them utterly, and is at pains to note that the race has, at times, produced men of real distinction. He quotes the families of the Hungarian Hunyadis, the Russian Tolstoys, the Scotch Melvilles, the Cassilis and the Contis in France under Louis XIV, and the famous gypsy chief, Thomas Pulgar, who, in 1496, gave Bishop Sigismund the help he needed to beat back the Turkish invader from Europe.

VOL. X. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1910. NO. 27.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

We Have Over Half of the New World

SOME SIZE TO ME
U.S.
LATIN AMERICA

WASHINGTON—The indications being that the census will show the population of the United States to be over 90,000,000, it seems assured that the republic contains more than half of the inhabitants of the New World. It is quite probable that all of the remaining countries of this hemisphere have fewer than 80,000,000 inhabitants.

That point can never be settled definitely until conditions change radically in many extensive regions of Latin America. Now most of the states south of Mexico and north of the Argentine either make a farce of their census taking or else do not attempt it at any time.

Recent estimates, partly based upon census records, which have been made in South America and Central America, indicate that there are about 70,000,000 people living between the Rio Grande and Cape Horn, including the West Indies. Canada has perhaps 7,000,000, allowing for rapid growth since the census of 1901, and Newfoundland adds less than 250,000.

Unless the estimates, which seem most intelligently made, are very wide of the mark in several countries where there are no authentic and exact statistics of population, the total for the New World, outside of the United States, cannot exceed 80,000,000.

Brazil, much the largest country of South America, is the most populous in the Western Hemisphere, except the United States. It is probable that a full and careful enumeration of the Brazilians would show about 20,000,000 of them.

Mexico, only about 25 per cent of the size of Brazil in square miles, is safely established in third place among all the nations of the New World, as far as numbers go. In other respects the Argentine surpasses Mexico, and so does Canada. Their industrial output is greater and their foreign commerce is larger in every way.

Argentina and Canada are alike also, in growing so fast and with such assurance of continued swift expansion that they may overtake and pass Mexico. Their chief cities already surpass the largest civic centers in the country which Diaz makes his footstool. But now neither is within 6,000,000 of the Mexican total.

From these rivals, so unlike in many things, but so similar in their high hopes and their rapid development, down through countries like Peru, Columbia, Venezuela and Bolivia, the experts guess their way to the many small states which maintain a separate existence in Latin America. Costa Rica is probably the least of them all in numbers, counting but 350,000 residents. Cuba is fairly well filled up, ranking in density of population with several of the Southern states.

As a rule, with comparatively few exceptions, Latin America is rich in unsettled country. A very large part of the vast expanse of land south of the Mexican frontier, all the way to the southern end of South America lies open to settlement.

Some day such wealth in unused natural resources must cause great growth, but that is a matter of the indefinite future. For the present it is certain that the United States will hold its lead over the other countries of the New World, counting all of them together.

Gives No Money for Road Building

MAY WE HAVE SOME ROADS BUILT—PLEASE?
THE IDEA NO!
CONGRESS

AS regularly as the sessions roll around, congress sidesteps, smothers or overrides all propositions which would embark the government in the business of road building. The logic and importance in the outcry for "goodroads" is universally admitted; but everybody's business comes perilously near having nobody's attention.

Some communities, townships, counties and a few states have made more or less real progress towards improving the highways locally. Where the states take a hand a beginning is made towards obtaining "through routes." But, despite all that has been said for a revival of road building, notwithstanding editorial support from publications of all partisan shades, the movement as yet has no central organization which presses the work along broad lines.

The federal government thus far cooperates only by giving advice. It maintains a small bureau in the department of agriculture devoted first to the propaganda of the good roads idea and secondly to the maintenance of a limited corps of experts, who, when their assistance is solicited, will make suggestions as to the best methods for road building under given circumstances, and to a certain extent, experiments in the use of materials are conducted by the specialists of this bureau. Here the government stops, for the reason that dominant view in congress has been that this properly delimits the government's function.

Representative Anthony of Kansas introduced a bill in the house last winter for the construction of a military highway between Fort Leavenworth and Fort Riley, 100 miles, by convicts in the two federal penitentiaries at Fort Leavenworth. The bill was lost after a debate that developed into a general discussion of the good roads movement.

The measure had the indorsement of President Taft, the chief of staff of the army and the quartermaster general. General J. Franklin Bell, then chief of staff, stated in a letter to Representative Anthony that the proposed road would unquestionably be of great military value and convenience." Farmers of many townships through which the proposed road would run offered to supply all the rock and other material to be used in its construction.

Like others of its kind, this measure was wrecked upon constitutional rocks. The opponents of the bill contended that General Bell did not claim the road to be a military necessity, and that, if not done for this purpose, the government could not build it, because the constitution authorizes the construction of only such roads as are required to meet military necessities and post roads.

Capital Boys Are to Be Suppressed

I'LL SUPPRESS 'EM!
I'LL BE GOOD

REGULATIONS to protect children from danger of injury and to have them looked after for violations of the regulations are to be enforced by the Washington police.

"The danger to children who make playgrounds of the streets," says Maj. Sylvester, "has been long since established. Now that there are public playgrounds in different sections of the city the children should use them rather than risk their lives."

In past years Maj. Sylvester has favored the enactment of a limited curfew law. He still thinks something should be done for the better protection of children's morals.

"Death and accident have been caused by street cars and other vehicles," the superintendent of police says. "On the other hand, children playing on the streets have caused destruction to property.

"Ball playing on the streets," he continued, "has resulted in complaints on account of noises and broken windows. The same hue and cry is raised when vacant lots are used for baseball and other games. At times, in certain localities, large and noisy gatherings are attracted."

Maj. Sylvester wants the members of his command to deal gently with boys who cause trouble. While he wants the youngsters to get what enjoyment they can, he does not, however, want them to violate the law.

Street corner gatherings are to be broken up, the superintendent says. Indulgence in profanity and other bad language is to mean punishment. All offenders who are caught will be prosecuted. The police think that keeping boys off the streets at night would accomplish much good.

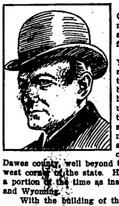
COWBOY MAYOR LOOKS HIGHER



James C. Dahlman, the cowboy mayor of Omaha, flushed by his success in securing the nomination for governor, has widened his field of ambition and it is said may become a candidate for United States senator.

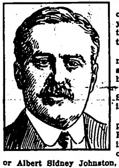
Dahlman was born in 1856 in the village of Yorktown, a place that was then right in the range country. As a boy he received an education such as the town where he lived afforded, but when hardly out of short pants he straddled a horse and became a cowboy. All over the state, until 1890, he rode the range. In 1890 and when the settlers commenced to encroach upon the big stockmen of Texas, the drive to the north commenced. Dahlman was among those who moved, and during that year followed a big bunch of cattle across the country to Nebraska, driving to Dawes county, well beyond the outposts of civilization in the extreme northwest corner of the state. Here he rode the range for several years, serving a portion of the time as inspector of brands for the cattlemen of Nebraska and Wyoming.

With the building of the northwestern railroad toward the Black Hills there was a rush of settlers and the town of Chadron was established. It was a typical frontier city, a large portion of its inhabitants being gamblers, sure thing men and thugs, who terrorized the reputable inhabitants. One day when Dahlman was in town a committee of citizens called upon him and offered him the position of mayor. He laughed at the idea.

Dahlman rode back to camp, where he lay awake all night and thought. When morning broke he arose and ate breakfast as usual, but he did not go out with the boys. Instead, he bade them good-by, remarking that he had quit the range.

Saddling his cow pony, Dahlman rode into Chadron, where he called upon the city council and told them he was ready to accept the position of mayor. He was immediately elected and that day took charge of public affairs. He organized a police force and soon Chadron was as quiet and orderly a town as there was in the state.

M'CLUNG FOR THE TREASURY



No longer young himself, Franklin MacVeagh of the United States treasury is the patron of youth. He brought the north wind with him to the flat banks of the yellow Potomac, a Washington correspondent asserts.

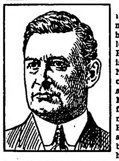
So short coats, fancy vests and stick pins to match shirts and cravats—the visible symbols of a new class—have displaced boots and rusty plug hats in the somber offices of the nation's treasury. Lee McClung, the new treasurer of the United States, is a bachelor of forty, but a boy when he is compared with his antediluvian forerunners.

McClung's blood, Confederate, though whiggish, points to his politics with a pretty certain guess However, he makes no flourish of his views, and in his speech, now accented by the east, he declined to mention John Marshall, the chief justice, or Albert Sidney Johnston, killed at Shiloh, or John Morgan, the cavalry leader and raider—all of whom were of his family in the past—unless in answer to a question.

At Yale McClung—still square, muscular and heavy breasted, slim at the waist, and thewed in the legs like a racer—was captain of the football team and famous as a plunger and runner. Socially he was a leader. In all respects he was conspicuous and popular. He went into traffic as a profession—obtaining freight for a railroad—and then he became treasurer of his university watching $10,500,000 of endowments and receiving $1,250,000 annually in rents, interest and tuition.

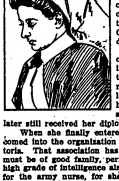
Some of the McClungs—Scotch Presbyterians, back in the Highlands, fierce men in love, in war, and as musicians—brought their temperamental eccentricities to America and handed them down to their generations. A notable heir, notorious heir, indeed, to such an inheritance, was Alexander Keith McClung, the Mississippi duelist, who should have maintained a graveyard of his own and employed an undertaker in his retinue.

THINK CHANLER WAS DUPED



Mr. and Mrs. Robert Winthrop Chanler have recently been the topic for gossip in two continents, it being alleged that Mrs. Chanler tricked her husband into turning over to her his property, leaving him penniless. They were married in Paris June 18 last. Mr. Chanler, whose portrait is here shown, is connected with the Astors of New York and is well known in society in that city. He inherited a large fortune and became an artist early in life. His first wife, who was Miss Julia R. Chamberlain, obtained a divorce from him in France in 1908. Mr. Chanler formerly was sheriff of Dutchess county, New York. He is a brother of Stuyvesant Chanler, ex-lieutenant governor of the Empire state. Mrs. Chanler, better known as Lina Cavalieri, is celebrated for her great beauty as well as for her fine voice. She is the daughter of an Italian workingman, and in early life sold flowers on the street. Then she became a cafe singer, and through the aid of a Russian count studied for the operatic stage. Mme. Cavalieri's debut in Madrid was a failure, but she persevered, and finally won great success in Europe as well as in the United States.

BRITISH NURSE IN AMERICA



The experience of a competent nurse in the first steps of her humane though arduous mission is a little history of itself. This is exemplified in the career of Miss Elizabeth Murray, who recently came to the United States to study up the methods of our great hospitals. Her tour of inspection is later to take in the Philippine islands and China, and she will return to England to go on duty at the military hospital in Devonshire.

The life of an active English army nurse is one of great self-sacrifice and toil. There have been instances in the career of such where short rations meant an onion a day for food. Miss Murray was brought up to an ideal country life, excelling in athletics, and first attending the Stevens hospital in Dublin. After her graduation she took a six months' course in fever cases in London, and later still received her diploma from Bolinda hospital, Dublin.

When she finally entered the British army reserve corps she was welcomed into the organization by Princess Christian, a daughter of Queen Victoria. That association has very rigid rules. The applicant for admission must be of good family, perfect health and careful professional training. A high grade of intelligence also is required. There is a certain social life, too, for the army nurse, for she must necessarily associate with the wives of officers at military posts.

As "Sister Murray" this noble woman, who has devoted her life to the welfare of others, is a true type of the modern nurse whose skilled ministrations are a vital element in army life

Odd News From Big Cities

Stories of Strange Happenings in the Metropolitan Towns

Soldier Victim of Rare Affliction

PORTLAND, Ore.—Sojourning here the last several weeks has been a man who has attracted widespread attention in medical circles. He is Thomas P. Dunn, a native of Montana, who, as a member of the First Montana volunteers in the Spanish-American war, was shot through the head at Caloocan in the Philippines more than twelve years ago and is alive to tell of it today.

When Dunn fell wounded on the battlefield of Caloocan he was carried to the ward where the fatally injured were placed and no one paid any attention to him for two days, as there were too many other wounded whom the physicians and surgeons in charge believed had better chances for recovery. At the end of two days, during which the Montana boy lay practically without attention, the surgeon in charge remarked upon his vitality and decided to try to save his life.

His remarkable recovery and the fact that he retains his reason are the most remarkable features of this case. While he is alive, in good health and able to walk around the streets and converse with his friends and acquaintances, Dunn is handicapped by the loss of all sense of smell or taste and has lost the sight of his right eye. Despite these afflictions he bears his lot with fortitude. He cannot enjoy a meal, for no matter what choice viands he may order, he cannot relish them any more than he would hardtack and salt pork. The loss of the sense of taste he looks upon as his worst affliction.

Tommy Dunn, as he is known among his friends, is a ward of the government, though not of his own choosing, for he has relatives and influential friends who take care of him and look after his comfort at all times. His impaired eyesight has proved an obstacle toward his securing employment, and idleness is something he dreads because of his afflictions. His only amusement is to join several congenial companions and tell stories of past experiences, or to take street car rides or journeys through the country in automobiles. He cannot go to the theater, being handicapped by partial blindness and fearful lest the glare of the lights shall impair the sight of his remaining eye.

As a ward of the government Dunn must report at Washington or some other military headquarters at certain periods and to undergo the periodical examination required by the surgeon general's office.

Woman Laughs Her Jaw Out of Joint

NEW YORK.—Tee-hee-hee! Haw-haw! Cra-a-a-ack!!!

Mrs. Cecilia Goldberg's birthday party was an enjoyable occasion up to this point, or, to be exact, until she dislocated her jaw laughing at her mistake in kissing the wrong man.

The occasion was the eighteenth anniversary of Mrs. Goldberg's arrival in Harlem, where she has since become duly popular in her set. She is a pretty young woman, and her parents invited all their friends and relatives to come around and celebrate.

They came by the dozens, and it was one of those "a-gorgeous-time-was-had-by-all" affairs. The tables groaned with good things to eat, and there was a decorous but all sufficient dampness out in the vicinity of the ice box. Along about midnight, when the young folks began thinking of going home, some one suggested that "blind man's buff" was a good game to taper off with. The music was stopped and Mrs. Goldberg was chosen as the first to be the blind one.

She was blindfolded and led into the parlor. She was entitled to kiss any man she could catch, and she supposed that Jim, her husband, would be on the job and see that he was caught. But a young man named Harry was caught by Mrs. Goldberg and was kissed. Jim was just a second too late. Then they pulled the blindfold off and Mrs. Goldberg saw whom she had kissed.

The crowd combined in a roar of glee and Mrs. Goldberg graciously joined in the laughter. But she overexerted herself. In the midst of an unusually loud "Ha-ha!" she grabbed her jaws and began to dance about the room. She gasped and groaned, and Policeman Mott, rushing upstairs, found the company in confusion and hysteria. Mrs. Goldberg seemed unable to close her mouth, and nobody could hold her long enough to close it for her. A policeman gave all the first aid he could muster without result, so he called a doctor from the Harlem hospital. The doctor made a hasty examination and diagnosed the trouble as a dislocated jaw. He finally succeeded in getting it back in place, and advised the patient not to laugh again for a day or so. She won't for a week at least.

The Normans.

The Normans were Northmen, or to be precise, the descendants of Northmen, who had been expelled from their native Norway in consequence of an effort on their part to subvert its institutions and to make its lands hereditary, instead of being divisible among all the sons of the former owner. A band of expatriated outlaws and robbers, they won and held the fair province of northern France, which they named Normandy. When they invaded England they were Frenchmen only in the sense that they had lived for some generations on French soil. In blood they belonged to the great Germanic breed, along with the Anglo-Saxons, Danes and other Scandinavian and German peoples.

Dazed by the Light.

Under the influence of a searchlight the hunters of the northern woods can approach within a few feet of a bull moose at night. Some even make bold enough to rub the animal's nose.

No Missionary Cash for the Indians

I SPOSE YOU'LL SEND IT TO THE HEATHEN INSTEAD
NO MORE CASH FOR YOU—SEE

MUSKOGEE, Okla.—The Methodist church in Oklahoma has decided upon a new policy relative to religious work among the Indians. At a meeting here of the executive board of the church it was decided to combine all of the five civilized tribes, Creeks, Cherokees, Chickasaws, Choctaws and Seminoles, in one district, under the supervision of one presiding elder, and to require the Indians to support their own pastors without the aid of foreign missionary money.

It was also decided to request the bishop to transfer every English-speaking congregation of Indians to some white charge. This is for the purpose of getting the Indians under a white pastor in order that educational as well as religious work may be carried on. The old idea of teaching a white missionary to speak the Indian tongue and sending him among the Indians to preach in their own language is to be abandoned.

It was pointed out that, under the state government, the Indian and the white man are the same socially and politically, that the state schools are being extended into every Indian settlement, and that the Indian children everywhere are being taught English.

Methodists, Baptists and Catholics have been carrying on religious and educational work among the Indians, through mission churches and schools, in Oklahoma, for more than half a century. The missionaries arrived immediately after the Indians came in 1888. Until now their efforts have been to meet the Indians on their own grounds.

It is expected that other religious organizations will take the same step, it being practically forced upon them by the new conditions arising from the adoption of state government and state schools.

DO INCHES MAKE THE MAN?

Until the time of the war between Russia and Japan the short man was obliged to defend the prowess of his kind by citing Napoleon as an example of what short persons could do. Balzac, the great French novelist, whose height was a trifle more than five feet, often half whimsically, often seriously, endeavored to show a connection between short stature and excellence. It was also a source of consolation to him and to other men who were not in the tall class, to read in history that the Roman conquerers were short. But after the Russo-Japanese war it became evident to all that stature had nothing to do with the case, unless, perhaps, the victory of the little Jap proved that the short man was the superior of the tall. But now come the municipal authorities in our cities, who say that a tall policeman is better than a short and that a tall fireman is the superior of a short fireman, says Boston Globe. Five feet 7½ inches is the limit of shortness to be tolerated say some, while others lower the standard a quarter of an inch. Others would lower it half an inch more. Superstitions die hard. We are still children, and, although far from the age of giants, we cling to the notion that inches make the man.

Great Britain has just launched one of the biggest of the dreadnought battleships which the government is steadily adding to the navy. And that American ideas are good for something in this connection is shown by the information which has leaked out, notwithstanding the careful way in which naval secrets are guarded, that the guns on the new vessel will be arranged much like those on United States battleships of the latest design, so that they can be fired one above another and concentrate tremendous striking power at a given point. Builders of our warships are giving valuable points to all the world.

It will be a good day in this city when every boy who goes to the high school can multiply and divide with unfailing accuracy, when he knows the rule of three and is up on fractions, says Philadelphia Inquirer. If in addition to that he can write legibly, read distinctly and spell correctly he will have a better equipment than has been common of late. In trying to teach children too much we have not trained them to definite ways of thinking. Yet to think clearly about anything is the great prerequisite of life and ought to be the chief aim of education.

Reports of accidents to women wearing hobble skirts begin to come in. Of course such accidents are inevitable. A woman who deliberately binds her limbs before submiting herself to the dangers of the highway is doubly handicapped, for even unhampered physically, she likely would lack the intelligence to dodge a street car.

A man in New York was sent to prison for four years for stealing a five-cent looking-glass. It served him right. A man who makes so little of his opportunities in the face of such shining examples ought to be shut off from the rest of society.

A bank in Spokane is issuing antiseptic money. Still, while sanitary banknotes may fit in better than the others with the progressive ideas of the age, as far as the others are concerned, with all their germs, we love them still.

PROGRESSIVES DEFEAT TAWNEY

HOUSE LEADER GOES DOWN UNDER LOCAL PROGRESSIVE AVALANCHE.

OTHER MEMBERS RENOMINATED

Nye, of Minneapolis, Will be Opposed by Thomas P. Dwyer.—Haynes Renominated For Mayor of Minneapolis.

St. Paul, Minn. — James A. Tawney, house leader and friend of Speaker Cannon was defeated, by Sydney A. Anderson, of Lanesboro. All other members of the Minnesota Congressional delegation were re-nominated.

With a majority of something over the 1,000 mark, Frank M. Nye, defeated Albert H. Hall in the bitterly fought contest for the Republican nomination for congressman from the Fifth district. Although Nye carried only six of the 13 wards, his majorities in most instances were heavier than those secured by Mr. Hall in the seven wards he carried.

Sydney A. Anderson.

Thomas P. Dwyer secured the Democratic nomination for the same position by a majority of 978 over Einar Holdale and John H. Long. Indications from the few county returns now in are that the Dwyer majority will be increased in the rural districts.

The Nye-Hall contest was one of the most bitterly fought during the primaries. Hall repeatedly attacked Nye on his record in congress, terming him a supporter of Cannon. Hall, at the head of the progressive Republicans, brought much to light concerning Nye's opposition to the Norris resolution curtailing Cannon's power. Mr. Nye based his campaign on the old principles of Republicanism, claiming that it alone stood for progressiveness.

Congressman Stevens Pleased.

"The result is very satisfactory from the estimate of our committee," said Congressman Stevens. "The result shows the desire of the people to sustain the real, progressive legislation and to work for it when it has been shown to them. It is an encouragement to a public man to know that they inquire and keep informed I desire to express my sincere gatitude to my friends for their support."

Results in the State.

Returns on the legislative tickets throughout the state are meager so much so that no determination could be reached as to the relative strength of county option and anti-county option.

The option candidates won in some places while they lost in others. In Minneapolis the county optionists appear to have won out for the most part, although the other side of the question has its representation.

In Minneapolis probably the most sensational victories were won by Carl Wallace in the Forty-third district over E. P. Allen, and W. S Dwinnell in the Fortieth, over C. A Nimocks and Guy V. Howard.

Mr. Dwinnell has about as many votes as did Howard and Nimocks together, Nimocks waged a spectacular campaign, had secured innumerable pledges, but failed to land the plum.

Throughout the state, the results were indeterminable. In St. Paul Senator W. W. Dunn defeated his opponent Gregory while Durment was defeated by Denegre.

In the Fergus Falls District, Senator C. J. Wright was nominated for senator, while J. W. Mason appears to have won out over his opponents in the race for district judge.

One of the surprising results was the victory of J. D. Sullivan in St Cloud over his Democratic opponent J. E. C. Robinson, who was a candidate for re-nomination.

F. F. Ellsworth.

In Minneapolis.

W. E. Satterlee is the Republican nominee for mayor of Minneapolis. His plurality is 7,625, and he polled about two votes to C. J. Minor's one. Only in the large plurality is this a surprise.

James C. Haynes, present Demorcatic mayor, defeated George B. Esterman by more than four votes to one. His plurality is 2,996. The race is on between Mr. Haynes and Mr. Satterlee for the mayorality.

C. A. Bloomquist, Republican city treasurer, easily defeated J. O. Davis for the city treasurership. These three winners—Haynes, Satterlee and Bloomquist carried every ward in the city.

Woman Named for Schools.

Minneapolis women nominated Miss Mae Snow as candidate of the board of school directors, to fill the unexpired term, by a majority of three times that of any of her seven competitors. Miss Snow received a total of 9,675 votes, while her nearest competitor for the office got but 3,269 votes.

Miss Snow carried every ward in the city, and her majority was the best of any of the candidates on the entire ticket.

A. J. Rockne, of Red Wing, speaker of the last house was nominated for state senator over W. E. Putnam by 500, after a sensational contest. Aldred Johnson was named for judge over F. M. Wilson by 350.

Lillis Sells Bank Stock.

Kansas City, Mo. — Jere S. Lillis, victim of a knife attack at the hands of John P. Cudahy, disposed of all but two of his shares in the Western Exchange bank here. Lillis was formerly president of the institution. He will remain the nominal head of the bank until Jan. 1, when new officers will be elected.

Trenton, Sept. 22.—Vivian M. Lewis was nominated for governor on the first ballot at the Republican state convention.

Masons at Detroit Meeting Elect.

Detroit, Mich. — The supreme council of thirty-third degree, northern jurisdiction of the United States, Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masons, in conclave here, elected Charles C. Mumford, of Providence, R. I., to active membership to succeed the late George H. Kenyon, of Providence; Thomas Kite, of Cincinnati; Charles M. Girdenier, of Bridgeport, Conn., and Leroy A. Goddard, of Chicago, also were elected active members to fill vacancies in their respective states.

GILMAN MADE CHIEF

5,323 VETERANS DIE IN 1909

Atlantic City, N. J.—The national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic Thursday elected John E. Gilman of Boston commander-in-chief for the ensuing year, John McElroy, the only other aspirant for the office, withdrawing his name prior to the election.

In opening the business session of the national encampment the retiring commander-in-chief, Samuel R. Van Sant, of Minnesota, gave a comprehensive review of the work of the organization for the past year and outlined what might be accomplished for the good of the order in the future.

The commander spoke earnestly as he expressed his gratification at the increasing fraternization of the "blue" and the "gray."

When he said that no braver troops were ever marshaled for conflict than the southern soldiers and that the Union veterans now realize that no men ever made greater sacrifices for what they believed to be right than their former foes, the commander was applauded.

While the roll of the Grand Army is steadily shortening, the commander in-chief urged that every effort be made to keep the organization up to its fullest possible strength. He quoted the figures showing that G. A. R. at the beginning of the present year had still 213,901 members in good standing, as against 220,600 at the begining of 1909. The loss during the year was 6,781, of which 5,323 was by death.

Commander-in-Chief Van Sant had commendation for the work of all the auxiliaries, praising the excellent work being done by the Woman's Relief corps, Ladies of the G. A. R., Sons of Veterans and Daughters of Veterans.

GRAFTERS SEVERELY SCORED

Both Illinois State Political Conventions in Resolutions Denounce Legislative Corruption.

Springfield, Ill. — The administrations of President Taft and Governor Deneen were heartily indorsed and a platform was adopted containing a tariff plank along the lines laid down by the president's campaign letter to Congressman McKinley by the Republican state convention which met here Friday.

The platform commends President Taft and congress, who, as "agents of the people, have carried forward another step the principles and policies which have dominated and controlled the government of the United States for the most progressive half century of civilized life."

East St. Louis, Ill.—Boodlers, grafters and legislative corruption are denounced in strong terms in the platform adopted by the Democratic state convention. The initiative and referendum, an anticorrupt practises act, and an honest extension of civil service are given as the remedies for crookedness in public office and administration.

General Brayton Is Dead.

THUGS ROB MEN OF $10,000

TWO PITTSBURG BROTHERS ARE HELD UP AT CHICAGO.

Merchants Were on Way to Wisconsin to Buy Tobacco When Robbed—$500 Diamond Gone.

Chicago. — Harry W. and Max C. Chotiner of the Pittsburg tobacco distributing firm of H. W. Chotiner & Brother, incorporated, were held up and robbed of $10,000 in money and a two-carat diamond shirt stud valued at $500 at Quincy and Jefferson street last night. The hold-up men are still at large.

The brothers were on their way from Twelfth and Halsted streets to the Brevoort hotel, where they are stopping. Being strangers in the city, they lost their way. While walking in Quincy street 100 feet east of Jefferson they were seized from behind by two men. Max, who carried the money in his inside coat pocket, was hurled into a vacant lot and pinned down by his assailant, while his brother engaged in a struggle with the other highwayman on the sidewalk.

In the struggle Harry was robbed of his diamond. Gaining his freedom by wriggling out of his coat, he declares he ran down the street shouting "Murder," "Police," "Help," continuing to the Union depot, several blocks away, where he met a policeman. When the policeman reached the scene of the robbery he found Max lying in the lot in a semi-conscious condition.

When Max revived he said that after he had been knocked down by one robber another attacked him, knocking the breath out of him. The money was then wrested from his pocket, and the highwayman ran.

The Chotiner brothers tried to deposit the money in the First National bank, but decided to carry it, as it would be impossible to get the money out of the bank until today. They had intended to leave Chicago last night for Janesville, Wis., to complete a deal for $10,000 worth of tobacco.

Alienists Make Report on Wife Slayer—Declare He Should Be Confined in Asylum.

New York.—"It is our opinion that Porter Charlton is of unsound mind and liable to attacks of impulsive violence and that his moral sense is pathologically defective. He should be taken to a hospital for the insane and there kept indefinitely, for he is likely at any time to be a menace to society."

This is the conclusion reached by the alienists who examined the slayer of Mrs. Scott Castle, the actress, who was Charlton's wife, at Lake Como Italy, last June.

MANY DIE IN WRECK

ROCK ISLAND TRAIN GOES THROUGH OPEN BRIDGE INTO RAGING WATERS.

SIXTEEN KNOWN TO BE DEAD

Feared Others Been Washed Away—Heavy Rainfall Causes Small Creek to Become Seething Torrent—Disaster Near Clayton, Kan.

Clayton, Kan.—A terrible disaster took place on the Rock Island railroad two miles east of here Friday, when a fast train plunged through an open bridge and into 20 feet of water. Sixteen persons were killed and 11 injured. Most of the victims were occupants of the smoking car, which was telescoped by the car following it.

The stream which wrought the destruction is at ordinary times simply a dry arroyo, with no water, but with its banks 30 feet below the level of the railroad bridge. A tremendous rain had fallen during the night and the ordinarily dry bed was soon filled to the brim with a wild torrent. The bridge itself was quickly broken up and carried away.

Shortly after one o'clock in the morning, while the storm yet raged, the fast Rock Island passenger train from Kansas City to Denver, traveling at a forty mile per hour speed, rushed headlong into the gap and the forward end of the train took the plunge into the water filled ravine.

The locomotive, tender and baggage car disappeared entirely under the water, and the engineer, fireman, baggageman and conductor were all instantly killed.

The smoker, which stopped on the brink of the stream, was telescoped by a chair car and many of the passengers killed outright. Others were thrown into the stream and drowned.

With the exception of the last Pullman the entire train left the track and the cars and coaches were piled in one big heap or rolled into the ditch alongside the rails.

The uninjured passengers made their way to the brink of the stream and rendered what assistance they could, working by the light of the few lanterns which could be found.

Other passengers as well as trainmen walked to Clayton in the search for help. From this place the news was telegraphed to headquarters and relief trains were started from Belleville and Phillipsburg. Citizens of Clayton in wagons drove hastily to the scene of the wreck and, aided by bonfires which they lighted, worked in the storm amid the debris in the search for the dead and injured.

The little stream lost its water as rapidly as it had found it, and soon the ravine was practically dry. Down stream for half a mile the dead and injured were found and removed to the improvised hospitals. Nine of these dead were identified by letters and otherwise. Seven are without identification marks.

Certain Death Awaits Plotters Under Arrest Who Attempt to Assassinate Japan's Emperor.

Tokyo, Japan.—A sensation was caused by the publication of the alleged details of a plot among his own subjects to assassinate Emperor Mutsuhito. The startling story appeared in the Hochi Shimbun, which says that the plotters, who are under arrest, certainly will be sentenced to death after trials before a special secret court.

Emperor of Japan.

This is the first time in the history of the country that the life of the sovereign has been plotted against by his own people and the fact has become known. It is understood that a rigorous censorship prevented the publication of as much as a hint of the conspiracy until this evening, when the Hochi Shimbun assumed responsibility for the alarming announcement.

WHO VOTED REPUBLICAN TICKET

Under the Present Primary Law This Could Not be Prevented.—Democratic Candidate Buck Issues Denial.

Winona. — After declaring that his defeat is directly attributed to the voting by the Democrats in the Republican primaries, Congressman Tawney, defeated on Tuesday, issued the following: "My defeat for nomination cannot be charged to the bolt of the Republicans. In seven of the 10 counties in this district, there was no contest for any Democratic nomination. One vote, therefore, in these counties would nominate the Democratic candidate.

"The Democratic vote in these counties two years ago was over 7,000. At the primary election in these counties there were less than 150 Democratic votes cast. In a single precinct in one county there were 70 more Republican ballots voted than were cast for President Taft in the same precinct two years ago.

"It will be seen, therefore, that the Democrats of the district have made the Republican nomination, as it was intended they should do when my opponent was selected only a short time before the time for filing expired and after the insurgents had spent more than three months in a fruitless endeavor to obtain a Republican to file as candidate against me.

"The Democrats knew this was their only opportunity to accomplish my defeat, and they naturally took advantage of it. Under the former system of making nominations this would have been impossible."

Buck Denies the Charges.

Mr. Buck, the Democratic candidate, made the following statement refuting the charges: "It is probably true that some Democrats throughout the district called for Republican ballots. It is also true that some Republicans called for Democratic ballots. It is true also that many of the Democrats voting in the Republican primaries cast their ballots for Mr. Tawney and others for Mr. Anderson.

"None of these Democratic votes, however, were cast for Republican candidates at the solicitation of any Democrat, but at the insistent importuning of the Republican candidates for local offices who desired their help in securing the nominations.

"Early in August I issued a statement which was widely published throughout the district in which I expressed the hope that the Democrats would resist the solicitation of this Republican friends and abstain from taking part in the Republican primaries.

"The claim by Mr. Tawney that his defeat for the nomination was brought about by these Democratic votes is not borne out by the returns and it is self-apparent that the republican voters of this district are the ones who are responsible for his defeat."

METHODISTS IN FERGUS FALLS.

Conference Opens With Delegates From 60 Cities Present.

Fergus Falls.—Every railway train brought ministerial delegates to the annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mayor D. M. Brown welcomed the delegates to the city and Colonel McBride spoke for the church. Rev. A. H. McKee, district superintendent, is presiding. Rev. J. B. Hingeley, D. D., of Chicago, secretary of the board of conference claimants, addressed the conference. He said that last year the Methodist church paid $131,000 to suffering preachers besides accumulating funds in conferences and connections which had not been tabulated. The first dividend to old preachers last year was $19,000.

The program was to secure funds for a yearly dividend for old preachers of $100,000 in 1911. This was additional to money raised by annual conferences for their own old preachers. The plan was to raise $1,000,000 from all sources for all the various funds. Fall conferences reported a large gain in money and promises for superannuates. Dr. Hingeley was pastor here 26 years ago and was also presiding elder. Rev. Mathew J. Trenery, of Milwaukee, spoke of rapid growth of Sunday schools and of special missionaries. Bishop Hamilton will open the business session this morning. A special car with Minneapolis clergymen arrived and pastors are here from Duluth and 60 other cities. Many clergymen's wives are here.

State Tests For Cattle.

Minneapolis. — The Minnesota state sanitary board will begin a regular inspection of cattle in Minneapolis dairies. J. H. Lyle, city milk inspector, has received word that arrangements are being made to send inspectors into the city at once. The inspection will be monthly. Under the rules to be adopted by the board, every herd will be given a thorough test. The dairymen will not be allowed to add cattle to the inspected herd without having them examined first by the state officers.

TO EXAMINE STUDENTS.

Step Will Be Proposed at the State Sanitary Convention.

Minneapolis. — The Minnesota state board of health is preparing to advocate medical inspection for all students at the University of Minnesota.

The first public step will be taken at the meeting of the Minnesota State Sanitary conference, when Dr. J. G. Cross, a member of the faculty of the school of surgery of the university, will read a paper advocating such inspection. Dr. Cross will be supported by the state board of health and the members of the faculty of the school of surgery.

Dean Westbrook of the college said that while he was not ready to announce plans, it undoubtedly was a necessary reform.

Dean Westbrook Sees Need.

"I cannot say anything yet until we have determined on a course of action," said Dean Westbrook. "If medical inspection is necessary in public schools where a few hundreds are attending school, it is certainly necessary among 4,000 students."

If the plans are adopted and medical inspection becomes a law in the university the school will be among the very first in the country to adopt the system.

The meeting of the sanitary conference will be held Oct. 5, in the Unitarian church.

It is thought that the mild epidemic of measles and typhoid fever at the agricultural college last year had something to do with the movement.

Dr. Cross Formulates Plan.

Dr. Cross said he has not outlined any definite plan, but is working on a general line that would, he thought, be beneficial. The inspection will be somewhat different from that used in the public schools owing to the different conditions.

DULUTH MILL LOSS $100,000.

Lumber Is Consumed by Flames But Mill Is Spared.

Duluth. — An early Sunday morning fire destroyed $100,000 worth of lumber, lath and singles at the West Duluth sawmill of Alger, Smith & Co. The wind blew away from the company's big sawmill, so that it was not endangered, but it was with great difficulty that 30 head of horses were gotten out of the company's barn in time to save them before the structure was consumed. The origin of the fire is unknown at the present time, but there are people who believe that the New Duluth firebug, who has destroyed $100,000 worth of property in four weeks, with six fires, has extended his operations to Duluth proper.

It may be a matter of some significance that only a few hours before the big fire at Alger, Smith & Co.'s mill yard the fire department was summoned to the plant of the Scott-Graff Lumber company at the west end. This fire was easily extinguished before the flames spread far enough to do much damage. The lumber consumed at the Alger, Smith & Co. fire consisted of nearly 4,000,000 feet, the bulk of which was low grade stock. This loss amounted to about $50,000 and the loss on shingles and lath amounting to $50,000 and may exceed that amount, all covered by insurance. The figures are given out by the company and doubtless are conservative.

ALLEGED ROBBER ARRAIGNED.

Lamberton.—Charles Adams, charged with robbing the Security State Bank of Seaforth last April, was given his preliminary hearing before Justice Zindel. Adams was located at Fond du Lac, Wis., and brought to this city by Sheriff Schueller, from whom he escaped shortly after the robbery. He was bound over to the grand jury which meets in November.

WESTERN RAIL MEN TESTIFY

PRESENT EVIDENCE IN SUPPORT OF HIGHER FREIGHT RATES.

Chicago. — Western railroads continued the presentation of evidence before the interstate commerce commission in support of their contention that a general advance in freight rates is necessary to maintain the standard of service demanded by the government and the people.

Commissioners Clements, Clark and Lane conducted the hearing which hitherto has been in the hands of examiners. Commissioner Clements outlined the work of the week along lines of court procedure, asking railroads, as affirmants, to show cause why the advances proposed should not be permanently suspended, and the shippers, as respondents, to show the contrary.

C. M. Kittle, vice-president of the Illinois Central, the first witness heard, presented statistics showing the cost of operating the road since 1891. Commissioner Lane called the attention of Attorney Norton, representing the Illinois Central, to Mr. Kittle's figures, showing in 1892 a higher cost of operation per mile than in 1910. Attorney Norton replied that this was only a chance comparison; he was about to show, he said, a higher cost in every department of maintenance not on any one feature.

Mr. Kittle testified that in damaged freight indemnities alone this year the road paid out $4,845,470 as against only $60,000 in 1892.

As an instance of increased cost of material Mr. Kittle said that lumber which could be bought in 1900 for nine dollars now costs $13. Increased wages also were a drain on the revenue of the company, he declared.

DAY OF PORK BARREL OVER

President Taft at Cincinnati Declares for New Policy in River Improvements.

Cincinnati.—Doom for the "pork barrel" and a new policy of waterway improvement, under which congress would authorize prompt completion of a project when once undertaken, to the end that river transportation may prove a strong factor in reducing rail rates, were advocated here at the Ohio Valley exposition by President Taft.

The president said that the country is roused against corrupt control of legislative agencies, but that selfish combinations of the representatives of the majority are equally dangerous.

We have reached a new epoch in the matter of improvement of our waterways. The public is greatly aroused by the confident and just belief that by a more symmetrical, reasonable and prompt expenditure of money upon approved projects, rates for transportation may be lowered, and the business of the country entirely benefited.

As a country, we are all in favor of the most effective and economical expenditure for the development of our waterways, but as members of a district, and as representatives of districts, we are selfishly insistent upon our shares of public appropriations each year, however much that division of the spoil impedes the adoption of the effective and economical improvement of our water transportation.

The evil in the corrupt control of a congress or a legislature by private interests is manifest and always called for condemnation. But there is another kind of legislative abuse as dangerous to public weal in certain of its aspects as corruption, and that is the selfish combination of the constituences to expend the money of the government for the temporary benefit of a part or with little benefit to the whole.

It is the duty of the majority and the minority to legislate always for the benefit of the whole people, and any enactments that look to the selfish exploitations of less than the whole at the expense of the whole, and without benefit to the whole, is a species of legislative abuse that comes very near corruption in its effects, and is perhaps more dangerous than corruption, because those who support such a combination are generally bold in its defense.

CONNIE MACK IS GREAT LEADER

Manager Connie Mack of Athletics.

Connie Mack and Frank Chance will each be given a much higher rating as a manager by the baseball public than was accorded to either in 1909, but neither has shown qualities as an organizer, disciplinarian or general that he did not exhibit during the preceding pennant race in landing his team in second place. Chance has won a pennant with every major league team of which he has been in charge except in 1905 and in 1909. The Cubs of 1905 lost the services of the lamented Selee, in mid-season and Chance, his successor, established his reputation as a leader by securing third place. New York won, with Pittsburg as the runner-up.

The Athletics have made a creditable record during Philadelphia's membership in the American league, but Mack has never been able to win two successive flags. In 1901, the initial season of the American league, the Athletics finished fourth. The White Sox carried off the honors of the year. In 1902 the team that McGraw dubbed the "White Elephants," finished first. Boston beat them out in 1903 and in 1904 Philadelphia tumbled to fifth place. In the next race, the Mackmen qualified as the American league's representative in the first world's series conducted under the auspices of the National Commission, but were decisively defeated by the New York Giants, and were shut out in four of the five games. Bender blanked the Giants in his team's lone victory.

The gameness of the 1910 Athletics has been proved and those who earlier in the race taunted them as quitters and predicted that they would not stand the strain, have been silenced by their sustained steadiness at all stages of the campaign. Most of the veterans are still in line.

Coombs, Bender, Plank and Morgan are considered the big four of the Athletic artillerists, but none but Mack knows who will be his slabmen in the world's championship series. It is possible that Krause may be specially prepared for these engagements.

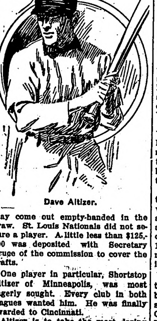
CINCINNATI SECURES A STAR

Dave Altizer, Who Has Contributed Much to Success of Minneapolis, Is Drafted.

One hundred and fifteen minor league players were drafted by the 16 clubs of the two major leagues when the national baseball commission met at Cincinnati recently. Of these the National league secured 67, while the American league got only 48.

The Brooklyn club of the National league secured 15 players; the New York Nationals were the next fortunate in the draw, as they secured 13 players; Philadelphia Nationals came next with 12 players secured; Chicago Nationals were fourth in point of number with 11 players, while the Chicago Americans secured ten.

The others ranged downward to a single player by Detroit, and this one is under investigation, so that Detroit may come out empty-handed in the draw. St. Louis Nationals did not secure a player. A little less than $125,000 was deposited with Secretary Bruce of the commission to cover the drafts.



Dave Altizer.

One player in particular, Shortstop Altizer of Minneapolis, was most eagerly sought. Every club in both leagues wanted him. He was finally awarded to Cincinnati.

Altizer is to take the most daring leap of all this fall, it is reported. He will march to the altar with one of the fair young ladies of Chicago and allow himself to be doubled up.

BALL AND BAT NOTES

Harry Lord has been counted as the classiest of third basemen for the last two seasons. He has been picked on the All-American teams of several of the dopesters.

Fred Luderus has already made himself solid with the Philadelphia fans. He looks even better than Bransfield and it is likely that he will soon supplant the veteran.

President Herrman of the national commission announces the national commission will investigate the plan for two ball clubs to tour the country and will bar league players from the tour if Tex Rickard is backing it.

The National commission will not allow the promoters of the All-National and All-American teams to get away with it. The commission is right, for the game should be allowed to rest in peace during the off season.

Snodgrass, the leading slugger of the National league, is only a youngster, and if he keeps up the record he has set for himself this year he should have a record as good as that of Pop Anson, Ed Delehanty or Honus Wagner, as a great hitter.

Cobb of Detroit, Snodgrass of New York Nationals and Lajoie of Cleveland are batting .362, .360 and .359, as named. There is only one automobile to be given to the player having the highest batting average at the end of the official season in both leagues.

Pitcher Klettinger of the Clinton team should get a chance to show what he can do in the big leagues after that exhibition against the Cubs a few days ago. Any bush pitcher that can make the coming champions go 11 innings to win a 2 to 1 contest must have something worth trying out in his whip.

President Kinsella of the Springfield team, who sold Meloan to Chicago, is becoming a successful scout. He has sold four more players of his team: Outfielder Shaller to Detroit, Pitcher Willis to the St. Louis Browns, Catcher Hartley to Toledo and Pitcher Laudermilk to the St. Louis Cardinals. Kinsella is said to have 300 players under contract.

"My little son, a boy of five, broke out with an itching rash. Three doctors prescribed for him, but he kept getting worse until we could not dress him any more. They finally advised me to try a certain medical college, but its treatment did no good. At the time I was induced to try Cuticura he was so bad that I had to cut his hair off and put the Cuticura Ointment on him on bandages, as it was impossible to touch him with the bare hand. There was not one square inch of skin on his whole body that was not affected. He was one mass of sores. The bandages used to stick to his skin and in removing them it used to take the skin off with them, and the screams from the poor child were heartbreaking. I began to think that he would never get well, but after the second application of Cuticura Ointment I began to see signs of improvement, and with the third and fourth applications the sores commenced to dry up. His skin peeled off twenty times, but it finally yielded to the treatment. Now I can say that he is entirely cured, and a stronger and healthier boy you never saw than he is to-day, twelve years or more since the cure was effected. Robert Wattam, 1148 Forty-eighth St., Chicago, Ill., Oct. 9, 1909."

In a Hurry.

It was Anna's first visit at the seaside. She was only a little girl, and very enthusiastic over the long-looked-for opportunity to go into the water.

They came too late the previous day for a dip in the surf, so Anna was up early, and as she put on her bathing suit while the rest were at breakfast some one questioned her as to her haste.

"Well, you see," replied the thoughtful child, "I want to hurry and go in before so many people get in and get the water cold."

The Effects.

"I have come to you, my friend, for comfort. My best girl has treated me very badly. I was trying to explain something to her, but she gave me such sharp looks they cut me to the heart; she withered me with her scorn, crushed me with her coldness and stabbed me with her keen edged tongue."

"See here, man, you oughtn't to come to me for comfort; what you need is to go to a hospital for treatment."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

The action of the Department of the Interior in starting contests on this land after final proof has been made looks a goodeal like looking the barn after the horse is stolen. The trouble is that, that the Department seem to be from 10 to 75 years behind time. They used to allow saloons to run and sell all the whiskey they wanted to when a great part of northern Minnesota was the home of the Red man. But in the last two years they have discoverd that there was an old Indian treaty way back in 1855, which prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors on these lands, and as the Indians are all dead, or moved away, they send old "pussyfoot" Johnson and a gang of hirelings to enforce that old treaty against American citizins who bought this land from the government, without being informed that they were to become the wards of this government under the protection of Johnson and his cheap hirelings.

Congressman Steenerson received a very flattering indorsment from the voters of this district at the primary election, although we consider his opponent this year an abler man, and a better vote puller than Sogang. But in this years race between the hare and tortoise, the hare did not stop to take a nap by the road side, but was in the race from start to finish. Red Lake county, outside of Thief River Falls, gave him handsome majorities, and all the trouble with them was that u.s.l.o. bee was buzzing in their ear. But when they tried to slip by the sleeping hare, named Crookston, with their tortoise he woke up and got into the race, and there was something "doing" down the line, which would overcome any opposition from them. The eleven towns gave him practically all their votes, which helped some, to swell the majority.

Jonah Overboard.

"So they took Jonah, and cast him forth into the sea; and the sea ceased from her rageing"

The farmers of the first Commissioner district in this county are opposed to county division and they, after reading the Thief River Falls News, came to the conclusion that Lindquist was the Jonah, that was causing the bad storm, and as they wanted it to cease they picked him up and threw him overboard September 20th. But the division wind is still blowing.

Since the 8-hour law became effective, and since the wireless companies are establishing stations throughout the country there is a great shortage of telegraphers. QUIST'S HONOR?

It is more honor for a man to be honorably defeated than to be elected by unscrupulous methods of campaigning and political trickery.—Thief River Falls Press.

Yes that is what Albert Berg said, who carried his home town of Spooner and Beaudett, with 318 votes to Hanson 32, and Hansons own town of Ada, a strong county opition town, by 4 votes. Honor and honorably elected comes with poor grace from a man of the caliber of E. L. Quist, at this stage of the game. A man who put up the dirtiest lieing mud throwing and political trickery campaign that was ever heard of in northern Minnesota. A man that is a disgrace to any city that would harbor him, talks of unscrupulous methods. Honor! Such language comeing from the filth throwing head, of E. L. Quist, in Thief River Falls is enought to make the devil blush: sneak out of hell and hide behind a pitch barrel.

SALT SEA YARNS.

Signs and Omens to Which the Sailor Grimly Clings.

A JOKE THAT PROVED FATAL.

Superstition and a Guilty Conscience Proved Too Much For the Norseman—A Bucket of Water That Stopped a Mysterious Wailing.

It is a well known fact that in the past the sailor was among the most superstitious of mortals, and even in these enlightened days there are a goodly number of old salts who cling tenaciously to their belief in certain signs and portents. Some, no doubt, of these superstitions have vanished altogether into the limbo of forgotten things, but there will always be a credulous few who will shake their heads solemnly and prophesy dismally if a knife is stuck in the mast or an albatross or a stormy petrel is captured and brought on board. The origin of some of these superstitions cannot be traced. Many of them have been handed down from father to son for a great number of years, with a touch probably added here and there, turning a comparatively ordinary story into a weird and mysterious legend.

The Finn is the most superstitious of all sailors. There are many of this race who still believe in the ominous portent of the phantom ship, the folly of starting a voyage on a Friday (a notion by no means confined to seafaring men), the low burning blue lights which are ghost spirits hovering near to give warning of approaching disaster and many other things, all of which

Fill the sailor's mind with murmurings
And speak to him of wrecks.

A story is told of a brigantine which numbered several extremely superstitious men among her crew. One night when there was no moon and a slight ground swell was running the watch who happened to be the most superstitious of them all heard an unearthly wailing coming apparently from the very surface of the sea. The mate and the helmsman also heard it, but the former lacked imagination, and, although he was certainly interested, he nearly blew the watch's head off when he ventured to suggest mermaids. The helmsman did not feel quite happy, but he had to stick to the wheel. The watch was pale with terror, but he kept silence owing to the mate's complimentary references to his courage and abilities. Slowly the sound began to move along the ship's side, becoming more and more agonized as it approached. This annoyed the mate, and going to the side of the vessel, he waited until he had located the sound and then emptied a bucket of water over the rail. There was a gasp, then dead silence, and nothing more was heard that night.

When the watch went off duty he of course gave a detailed and lurid account of the incident to his shipmates, who listened, as he thought, in awed silence and then called on one of the audience for his version of the matter. This man, a Tyne-sider, who dearly loved a joke and had no respect at all for hoary superstitions, had conspired with his fellows to play a trick on the watch. On the night in question he had crept over the bows without a sound, carrying with him the ship's cat secured in a bag. Crouching under the stays, the joker let the cat's head out of the bag, which he tied round the animal's neck so that it could not escape. He then applied his teeth to the unfortunate animal's tail. Everybody knows the fearsome sounds an angry cat is capable of producing, and those to which a cat whose tail is being bitten gives vent are among the most hair raising. The sound was more or less regulated by squeezing the luckless beast's body. The mate's bucket of water was as unwelcome as unexpected and caused the Tyne-sider to beat a hurried retreat.

Not only is the origin of many sea superstitious "wrapt in mystery," but also any logical explanation of cause and effect. It would puzzle any one to say why it should be unlucky for the ship's boy to whistle on the weather bow, except that it is generally unpleasant from a music lover's point of view for a boy to whistle on any bow at all.

On one occasion superstition and a guilty conscience caused a practical joke to have fatal consequences. The incident arose through one of the sailors, a Norwegian, boxing the ears of the ship's boy for the aforementioned crime of whistling on the weather bow. Not unnaturally the boy was annoyed and determined to pay the Norwegian out. Aided by two other sailors, a white shirt and some string, a very presentable "ghost" was arranged in the foc'sle on the night the Norseman was on watch. He was to be allowed only a glimpse of the "spirit" on entering the foc'sle, and it was then to vanish from view, being jerked by means of a string underneath the bunk of one of the jokers. Everything was ready, and the three conspirators lay in their bunks awaiting their victim. Unfortunately they all fell asleep, to be suddenly awakened by a loud cry from the Norwegian. He stood gazing at the "ghost," the dim light shed by the lamp falling on his ghastly face. The three were about to call out to him when he spoke. "No, no," he cried, "I did not mean to kill you, Morgan! Oh, mercy, mercy!" And he rushed madly from the foc'sle. Terrified, his shipmates followed him, but as they reached the deck they saw the Norwegian throw himself into the sea.—London Globe.

The Harm of Damp Houses.

It is dangerous to health and even to life in a damp, moldy house or one built over a moldy cellar. Many years ago the London Lancet in an article on diphtheria traced the disease in certain cases to the presence of certain molds and fungoid growths which seemed to be breathed into the throat. Remember, one of the best disinfectants is lime. Moldy cloths, such as shoes and other articles that are unfit for use, should be destroyed at once.

POLITICAL DOINGS.

There is some talk of an independent candidate for state senator from this district, and if it comes there will be a little [illegible] the wing done that will be a little nastier than the E, L Quist brand.

The county division fight is warming up, and this time it is D-F-Y for the Jonah. We wonder if they mean John A. Duffy, of Red Lake Falls, the banker, who reduced the interest on farm loans in the eleven townships from 8 ½ to 7 per cent. If they do we think the people up this way won't kick much at being milked by that kind of a dairyman.

Albert Berg carried Ada, the home of senator Hanson by a majority of 4 votes. Ada is the strongest county option city in the district but they did not want Hanson. Albert Berg caried Spooner and Beaudett, with 318 votes to Hanson 32, and D. P. O'Neil carried his home city of Thief River Falls for representative with 600 votes to Krohs 105, and that is a saloon licensed city and he was runing on a county option platform. These figures are from the official count, and had ought to prove who was the right men to elect to the legislature. We like to publish these figures to let people see, so they will not so readily swallow the campaign boughten stories of men like E.L. Quist in the future.

Down on the bank of Red Lake River in our hog pasture there a mud hole that has the accumulation of a hundred years of loon vomit in which our hogs have been wallowing all summer, and we have decided that it would be just the stuff for political amunition in a campign, with Quist. Can we throw mud? Wait and see.

Whistler Let Them Wait.

Whistler's laxity in the matter of engagements was notorious. No one ever knew if he were coming or not to affairs. But his point of view is explained in his answer to a friend of his who knew that he had an engagement to dine with some swells in a distant part of London and who felt that it was most impolitic for Whistler to offend them. It was growing late, and yet Whistler was painting away madly, intently.

"My dear fellow," he said to him at last, "it is frightfully late, and you have to dine with Lady Such-a-one Don't you think you'd better stop?"

"Stop?" fairly shrieked Whistler. "Stop, when everything is going beautifully? Go and stuff myself with disgusting food when I can paint like this? Never! Never! Besides, they can't do anything until I get there! They never do!"

If Jupiter Were Inhabited.

Calculations as to the size required for human beings on the other planets vary widely, according to the basis of reckoning. According to those based upon the attraction of gravity, Jupiter should be peopled by pygmies of twenty-eight inches. Wolfius, on the other hand, argues that Goliath himself would be accounted decidedly undersized upon that planet. He worked from the feebleness of the sun's light there, which would demand that the pupil of the eye should be much more dilatable. Since the pupil stands in a constant proportion to the ball of the eye and that to the entire body, said Wolfius, a little calculation shows that an average Jovian must be nearly thirteen feet seven inches tall—not quite four inches shorter than Og, king of Bashan, according to the measure of his bedstead given in Deuteronomy.

She Tried to Fascinate Hubby and Was Rudely Shocked

She had been reading that a titled Englishwoman advises married women to flirt with their husbands. As she finished the article her husband came home to dinner.

She ran to meet him.

"A little late tonight, duckydoozelum," she said, with a dimpling smile.

"What's that?" he growled.

She looked at him archly.

"Don't you dare to kiss me!" she tittered.

"Gee," he cried, "I don't intend to. What put that in your head?"

She half closed her eyes and coyly surveyed him through the drooping lashes.

"Don't you want to sit here by me on the sofa?" she cooed.

"No, I don't. Why, you told me only yesterday that the springs were getting weak. Aren't you feeling well?"

She laughed softly and shot him a side glance and drew in her cheeks and flashed her white teeth and perceptibly winked.

He drew back suddenly.

"What's the matter with you?" he demanded. "Who are you imitating? Can't you make your face behave?"

She picked up the paper she had been reading and flung it into the decorated wastebasket.

"There's nothing the matter with me," she coldly replied.

"Just mugging for fun, eh? Glad of that. Stimson was telling me today about a lot of trouble his wife is having with her facial nerves, and I was afraid you'd caught it. Ain't that confounded dinner ready?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Publisher's Claims Sustained

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

Paul Conover's Angel

By GERALD PRIME

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

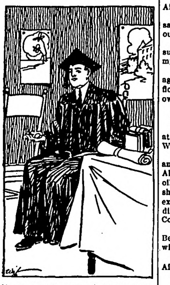
Commencement was over. Still in academic cap and gown, Paul Conover sat, pensive and alone, in the little dormitory quarters which had sheltered him for the past four years. The roll of parchment which empowered him to write the coveted A. B. after his name rested on the table beside him.

There were few evidences of comfortable living about the place. The plain furniture supplied by the college authorities could be made attractive only by effective draperies, and they were wanting. An unrestful looking couch, a table strewn with textbooks and lesson papers, two chairs—there was little else.

But it had been home to Paul Conover and he had no other. When he had matriculated, four years before, he had in his possession a sum of money that would not have been sufficient to carry many a one of his classmates through a single semester. It had been his sole inheritance from his father's estate and it had been the dead man's last counsel that it should be used as it had been.

The newly made A. B. put his hand in his pocket and drew forth his remaining capital. He knew what it was without further reckoning, for he had watched it dwindle day after day with an interest that took largely from the anticipated joy of commencement week. He had in cash precisely 27 cents—a bright quarter and two dingy pennies. Besides his diploma, his scant wardrobe and fewer personal belongings than are the property of most college men, this remainder of 27 cents represented his entire available assets.

All? No, there was something more. He had been appointed to the Simeon Goodboy fellowship, and the annual stipend amounted to $650.50. This, however, would not be available for four months. Then it recurred to him with sudden disgust that old Simeon Goodboy had shackled his foundation with an absurd condition—the appointee to its benefits must engage in no other occupation on pain of instant forfeiture! Paul burst into a loud guffaw at thought of it, but it was a guffaw without merriment.



He Had In Cash Precisely 27 Cents.

So it seemed to old Aileen, the dormitory scrubwoman, who was making her final round of the halls in the building for the college year. She didn't like the ring of it, and she halted at Paul's door to tell him so.

"'Twas the laugh of a ghost, Mr. Conover, and little better," she declared. "'Twas not a bit like the laugh of a man that has finished his job."

"You've finished yours, Aileen, for the year, and I don't hear you laughing," said Paul, jocosely. "You ought to be feeling especially jolly."

"Then I'm not, Mr. Conover," the old woman returned promptly. "Neither would you if you hadn't been able to lay by a cent and your work was over for the summer?"

"Can't you get other work?"

"I could, Mr. Conover, but I agreed to take no other jobs while I held this one."

At this Paul broke into a laugh so genuine that old Aileen could find no fault with it. It was so like the ridiculous condition imposed by the fellowship that, moved by a sudden whimsical inspiration, he told her the whole story, and did not fail to call attention to their similar plights. The old woman appreciated the humor of the situation and quite agreed with him in his estimate of the absurdness of those who impose impracticable conditions.

"What are you going to do?" she asked when he had begun to look serious again.

"Look for something to do," he replied cheerfully.

"No," she said, shaking her head decidedly and looking almost fierce in her disapproval. "Don't you do it, Mr. Conover. Them honors don't come along every day. When you get one, you ought to hang on to it. Don't you do a lick to spoil that fellowship."

"All right, then, I'll settle down and live on my principal—27 cents," he laughed.

"Can't you borrow a little?" she suggested.

"I haven't a friend in the world but you," he declared truly enough.

"I'd let you have it myself, only I hain't got it," she said feelingly.

"Thank you, Aileen; I'm sure you would," he said.

"If wishes was fishes how full the sea'd be," she observed pertinently. "No, I han't got the money, but I'm full of advice. Now don't you let them fellowship fellows hear of your getting any outside job."

"I'll try to keep close," he promised, with a wise look.

"See that you do," she warned, with an answering look which was quite as sagacious. "And now, Mr. Conover, good-by and good luck to you."

"Take this, Aileen," he said, handing her the shining quarter.

"Thank you, sir," she returned, pocketing the pieces. "Don't forget my advice."

Aileen was a woman who possessed a very elastic conscience so far as exactness of speech was concerned. Her statement that she was prohibited from working outside of the college precincts was purely imaginative. Instead of returning home after her conversation with Paul Conover she went to a little apartment in the neighborhood belonging to a couple of business girls and proceeded to tidy up the place, as was her midweek custom, at an honorarium of 20 cents an hour. Before she had finished, one of the young women, Miss Betty Sanderson, who was a first reader of manuscript in a leading publishing house, came in, weary and flushed, and threw herself down on a couch with a big sigh over the general perverseness of things.

"I wonder if it's really worth while, Aileen!" she groaned despondently.

At this Miss Betty laughed. "I suppose I ought to be ashamed of myself," she admitted.

"You certainly ought," Aileen agreed, giving her dust rag an extra flourish. "If you was in Mr. Conover's fix, you might complain."

"Mr. Paul Conover!"

"Do you know him?"

"Well, yes—a little. I've met him at one or two of the college teams. What has happened to him, Aileen?"

It was the old woman's opportunity and she embraced it, enthusiastically. Although on her knees in the act of oiling the floor of the little parlor, she did not let it interfere with her exceedingly complete version of the difficulty which confronted Paul Conover.

"How very interesting!" said Miss Betty. "Can't you really do anything without losing the fellowship?"

"Not a blamed thing!" confirmed Aileen excitedly.

"How peculiar!"

After the old gossip had gone, and possibly before, Betty had evolved a scheme in her sympathetic mind that was as generous as it was quixotic. She had been impressed favorably by Paul Conover and now that he was in such a trying position she was seized with a burning desire to help him out of it.

She was a thrifty little woman and at that very moment had $100 in her trunk. Without pausing too long for reflection, she put the money in a big yelow envelope, inclosed with it a slip bearing the typewritten legend "From a friend of education," sealed it, directed it to Paul Conover, called a messenger—and the deed was done.

After Paul had recovered from his first surprise and mystification he arrived at the conclusion that the trustees had foreseen his difficulty and had hit on this delicate method of providing a way out of it. The idea was so plausible that he accepted it and did nothing to imperil his possession of the fellowship. When the time came for the first payment of the stipend he was too much interested in his post-graduate course—and in Betty Sanderson—to worry over the identity of his unknown good angel.

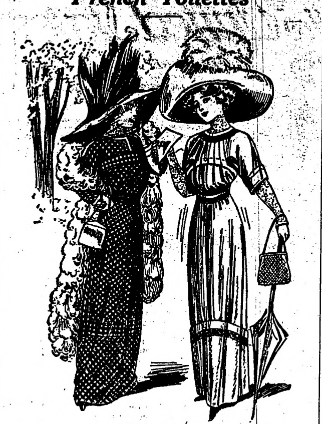
It was not until five years later, when they had been married a week that Betty confessed.

Cherry Pie and Poetry.

Grace Duffie Boylan, the author of "The Steps to Nowhere," was born in Michigan and has traveled extensively. But now she is settled down in a quaint colonial house in an apple orchard on a Connecticut hilltop where she expects to live and write the rest of her days. She gardens with her husband, Louis Napoleon Geldart (who is an enthusiastic amateur farmer and also a writer on historical subjects), and goes shooting with her boy, but all the while, in the background of her mind, the characters and scenes of new books were forming like figures on a tapestry. She does not pretend to have any particular method in writing her books.

"I write anywhere that I happen to be," she says, "and at any time when I am not wanted by someone for something else. I often smile when I read of writers shutting themselves away from their families for the sacred season of composition. I am likely to leave a chapter any time to go and make a cherry pie. And neither the chapter nor the pie is the worse for it."

French Toilettes



THE toilet at the left is of black and white checked wool. The skirt is composed of two breadths cut on the bias and trimmed with straightway bands of the material.

The blouse has a yoke of the material which is cut in one piece with the sleeves and trimmed with the straightaway bands, also with folds of yellow satin and buttons. The girdle is of black liberty and the little guimpe, hardly more than a collar, is of embroidered batiste or lace. The blouse fastens in the back.

The other toilet is of dark blue cloth. The upper part of the skirt is slightly gathered and is finished with a deep plain flounce which is set on with a beading and trimmed with braid.

The blouse is made with radiating box plaits which open out and is encircled about midway with a tuck, above which, at the sides, are straps of the braid with insertions of red velvet. The girdle is made like the straps and the blouse is finished around the neck with the braid and a fold of the red velvet.

The sleeves are cut in one piece with the body of the waist and are finished with turnover cuffs of the material. The long, close-fitting undersleeves and the guimpe are of lace.

SIMPLE FROCKS FOR GIRLS

Trimmings and Decorations, by No Means Elaborate, Will Accomplish Wonders.

Many of the simple frocks for girls are made smart by the addition of flat, stiff bows, small or large, but usually the latter, placed at all sorts of unexpected places—upon a flounce, at a single pocket, or low on the skirt, near the hem, says a writer. Such bows may form the sole trimming of a hat. One may be pressed against an upturned brim, which it appears in turn to press against the crown, or it may be set on or against the crown itself. There is a fancy which later in the year will be more generally seen for trimming the front of the seamless blouse with a large loose velvet or velvet-finished silk bow. Slits are made in the waist a few inches below the neck on each side of the center line, which slits are finished with a regular binding; or they are buttonholed or soutached. From the under side wide ribbon is drawn through these slits, and the bow is tied so as to hang exactly in the center of the waist. It very pleasantly varies the scant effect of many of these waists. These bows are seen with equal frequency upon stiff linen and upon transparent muslin frocks.

STILL THE STRAIGHT LINE

French Style Specialists Will Continue to Insist Upon Perpendicular.

There is no uncertainty as to the edict of the French style specialists regarding fall fashions. They have drawn the line, and it is perpendicular. Straight, straighter, straightest are the new lines for coats, skirts and sleeves.

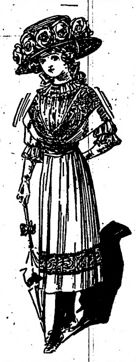
This, according to Grace Margaret Gould, writing in the fall fashion number of the Woman's Home Companion, means a lot to American women, but will be accepted only according to its practicability.

No woman in the world cares more to be in style than the American woman. She appreciates that the French have inherited taste, that they fairly breathe charm, and that the ideas that come from Paris are, generally speaking, good ones. But she looks upon these ideas as suggestions, not edicts. What is possible in style she will follow, but she will think long and seriously of herself, her advantages and her limitations before she will adopt a style which will make her appear ridiculous.

Here's a New Fall Hat.

Among the new display of fall hats for the little ones I noticed a fine French felt, white, and in the new droopy mushroom shape. The trimming was a soft ribbon passed around the crown and held down with trim little rosettes of the ribbon, one over each ear. The left rosette was encircled by a dainty wreath of holly of the variegated kind, the soft creamy white and pale green leaves, with tiny crimson berries. The ties were of soft white ribbon and altogether it was a most attractive bit of millinery.—Exchange.

LITTLE GIRL'S DRESS.



This pretty dress is of blue silk voile, trimmed with printed bands in cashmere colors and design. The skirt is slightly gathered at the top and encircled at the bottom with a band of the trimming.

The waist forms a fichu over an underblouse of lace or batiste, which is finished at the neck and sleeves with ruffles of lace and bands and knots of narrow black velvet. The girdle is of black velvet or liberty.

Fall Millinery.

Nobody knows anything about it, of course.

But there are prognostications.

White beavers are already being prepared for the late August trade, warm idea though it may be.

Many of the latest shapes show the mushroom tendency again.

Tam O'Shanter crowns are apparently in favor.

Bell-shaped hats there are, further emphasizing the mushroom tendency, but little store may be placed in these facts, while millinery fashions are in so variable a state.

Chiffon Wrap.

The girl who wants a chiffon cloth wrap, but has not the price, can make one for herself.

At this season the chiffon cloth can be bought, reduced, in desirable shades. Silk fringe to match is also to be found at bargain prices.

The simplest wrap of this sort is made with a deep square at back, falling well below the hips, with shawl ends in front. All edges are finished with fringe.

A is the barrel with water. B is the pipe through which the air enters the barrel. C is the pipe through which the water flows into the trough D, which must set level, and E is the plug that closes the opening with which the barrel is filled, says Farm Press. The water will run out of C into the trough until it reaches B and soon as it does, it shuts off the air and the water ceases to flow from the barrel until it is drunk out below the mouth of B. When filling the barrel take out plug E and insert into the end of pipe C and when the barrel is full replace. A funnel is usually put in the opening on the top to make filling quick and easy.

PREPARE DUCKS FOR MARKET

Number of Things to Be Carefully Observed in Order to Get Birds in Excellent Shape.

(By W. R. GILBERT.)

It should be the aim of those who require early ducklings for the market to have stock birds in full lay by the end of October or the first of November—that is, before the severe weather sets in.

In order to accomplish this the feeding during September and October must be carefully attended to and the nutritious rather than fattening food be provided for the birds.

By this time last year's ducks should have quite overcome the molt and should have their full complement of feathers.

As far as possible an abundance of exercise should be allowed the birds, and this can only satisfactorily be arranged when a free range is provided. The chief danger of confining them is that under such conditions they are liable to add on flesh too quickly, and on no account should stock ducks be fat.

The difficulty can, of course, be overcome by feeding sparingly upon somewhat bulky foods.

Two meals a day will be found quite sufficient, one the first thing in the morning and the other about 3:30 or 4 in the afternoon.

Soft food should be provided for the morning meal and a mixture during this and the succeeding month which we have employed with success is two parts of the middlings, one of the barley meal, one of bran and one of brewers' grains.

At first there may be a slight difficulty in persuading the birds to eat the last mentioned, but they speedily become accustomed to the flavor and eat it readily.

A mixture such as this will keep the ducks in good store condition and will assist egg production at the proper time. No hard or fast rule can be laid down as to the actual amount of food to be supplied, as this varies with the breed and the conditions under which the birds are being kept and with the season.

The only thing to do is to periodically examine them, and if too fat reduce the quantity of food; if too lean increase it.

The mash should be given to the birds not in a sloppy but a crumbly, moist condition. It the former state too much unnecessary water has to be taken into the system.

For the afternoon feeding either hard grain or mash may be supplied. Personally I prefer the latter, but many breeders are in favor of the former.

Should grain be provided oats are the best for the purpose, which should be scattered upon the drinking water.

Good sample oats much be used, as otherwise there is too much husk. If mash is employed—and the two may be fed on alternate days—the same mixture as that for the morning feed will answer well.

If the birds are becoming rather too fat, the proportion of bran should be increased and the barley meal decreased.

The soft food should always be fed from a trough, otherwise so much is trampled on and made unfit for consumption.

Fossilized Egg.

An egg has been found in the Gila river in Arizona four and one-half inches in diameter. It is entirely fossilized and scientists estimate that it was laid thousands of years ago.

Mineral Food for Chickens.

No one food contains all the necessary mineral elements to supply the demands of the growing chick or the laying hen. A variety is necessary.

Mrs. L. E. Wilcox, 27 W. Cherokee St., McAlester, Okla., says: "I was seized with an awful attack of kidney trouble which came on me in an instant. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me and I have been well ever since."

Which Do You Like Worst?

None but a strong minded woman can ever decide which of two or three hats she likes "the best," particularly if they are all comely.

Popular belles have been known to have similar troubles with their sweethearts. Which do I like best is often a momentous question.

Why not try the other way?

Decide which, of men, or hats, or attractive "dates" you like the worst, and then proceed to eliminate.

From there you can factor out in the grade of desirability, until you actually find yourself at a decision, because it, whatever it is, is the only one left.

The process is delightfully simple.

Different Sort of Hair.

"Deceiver!" she hissed. "I hate you!"

"Hate me!" he gasped. "Why, it was only yesterday you said you loved every hair on my head."

"Yes, but not every hair on your shoulder!" she retorted, as she held up a bit of golden evidence.—Stray Stories.

No Friend of His.

"Is Mrs. Gossip a friend of yours?"

"No; she's a friend of my wife's."

"Isn't that the same thing?"

"Not at all. She feels very sorry for my wife."

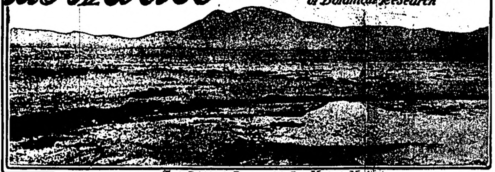
SAGUARO OR GIANT CACTUS



THE DESERT PLAIN OF LAS VEGAS, NEVADA

TUCSON has a climate of a thoroughly desert character, and a flora, including mountains and plain, rich in species and genera. In addition to its situation in the heart of the desert of Arizona, it is centrally located, both as to position and transportation, with reference to the deserts of Texas, Chihuahua, New Mexico, California and Sonora.

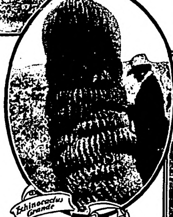
Not the least of the advantages of Tucson as a center for the activities of the government desert laboratory is the broad-minded comprehension of the importance of the purposes of the institution evinced by the citizens, accompanied by an earnest desire to co-operate in its establishment. This appreciation was expressed in the practical form of subsidies of land for the site of the building and to serve as a preserve for desert vegetation, the installation and construction of telephone, light and power connections, and of a road to the site of the laboratory, about two miles from Tucson. This spirit of hearty co-operation has animated every organization in the city, and has enabled the laboratory to gain control of a domain of 860 acres, of the greatest usefulness for general experimental work.



Echinocactus Grande

A Remarkable Vine The Guarequi

Extending northward for nearly 100 miles from El Paso is the noted Jornada del Muerta (Journey of Death), which has a width of 30 to 40 miles. It formed a portion of the route connecting the earliest settlements along the Rio Grande, and here the traveler was compelled to leave the stream far to the westward, in its deeply cut, inaccessible canyon, and toil for two or three days in the burning heat without water, except such as might be carried. It was for three centuries one of the most menacing and hazardous overland journeys to be encountered in the American desert. Recent investigations, however, have shown that the region traversed is in reality a basin, and that water is to be found, as in many other deserts, within a reasonable distance of the surface.

Beyond lies an equally remarkable desert, the Otero basin, which is the bed of an ancient lake, and is noted for a great salt and soda flat, a salt lake, and, most striking of all, the "White Sands," an area of about 300 square miles covered with dunes of gypsum sand rising to a maximum height of 60 feet.

The surface of the dunes is sparkling white, due to the dry condition of the gypsum powder, but a few inches beneath it is of a yellowish or buff color and is distinctly moist and cool to the touch, even when the air is extremely hot.

The most characteristic plant of the dunes is the three-leaf sumac (Rhus trilobata), which occurs in the form of single hemispherical bushes four to eight feet high, the lower branches hugging the sand. The plant grows vigorously, the trunk at or beneath the surface often reaching a diameter of three inches. The binding and protecting effect of this bush is often shown in a striking manner when in the cutting down of an older dune by the wind a column of sand may be left protected above from the sun by the close covering of the branches and leaves, and the sand in the column itself bound together by the long, penetrating roots. One of these columns was about 15 feet high from its base to the summit of the protecting bush and about 8 feet in diameter at the base.

A marked peculiarity of the White Sands is that a cottonwood is occasionally found in the lower dunes, reaching a foot in diameter, but seldom more than 15 feet in height; yet at the same time not a mesquite was seen. The mesquite is a tree requiring less moisture than the cottonwood. Apparently the presence of an excess of gypsum is prejudicial to the growth of the mesquite.

The bottoms among the dunes have a dense vegetation as compared with that of the dunes themselves. It is characterized especially by the presence of a grama grass (Bouteloua), forming almost a turf, and by frequent clumps of Ephedra of a grayish purple color at this season and with three scaled nodes. These bottoms usually show no sign of moisture, but in two places we found water holes, the water so alkaline that the horses would not drink it at the end of their first day's drive.

OASIS OF PALMS IN THE MOUTH OF A CANYON COLORADO DESERT

Probably the most extraordinary product of the Sonora desert, west of Torres, Mexico, is the guarequi (Ibervillea sonorae), a tendril-bearing plant whose inordinately thickened root and stem base lies gray and half exposed upon the ground beneath some trellising shrub. These tuberous formations may be seen during the dry season lying about wholly unanchored, as the slender roots dry up with the close of the vegetative season, which lasts but a few weeks.

In February, 1902, some of these tubers were taken to the New York Botanical garden, and a large specimen not treated in any way was placed in a museum case, where it has since remained. Annually, at a time fairly coincident with the natural vegetative season in its native habitat, the major vegetative points awaken and send up a few thin shoots, which reach a length of about two feet only, since they do not obtain sunlight. After a period of a few weeks they lie down again and the material in them retreats to the tuber to await another season. Seven periods of activity have thus been displayed by this specimen with no apparent change in its structure or size. It does not seem unreasonable to suppose, therefore, that the guarequi is a storage structure of such great efficiency that water and other material sufficient to meet the needs of the plant for a quarter of a century are held in reserve in its reservoirs.

The morning-glory (Iphomoea arborescens) is here a tree 20 to 30 feet high, with smooth, chalky gray trunk and branches. During February it is leafless throughout, while its large white flowers open one by one on the ends of the naked branches. From its white bark the tree is sometimes known as palo blanco, and from the gum or resin, which exudes from incisions made in it for the purpose and which is used as incense in religious ceremonies, it is also called palo santo.

One of the striking features of the Tehuacan desert of southern Mexico is the extreme localization or strictness of colonization exhibited by many species which are found to cover an area of a few square yards, the face of a slope, the crest of a cliff or the floor of a barranca, with no outliers and with the nearest colony perhaps many miles away.

The Cactaceae are more abundant here than in any other part of the world yet visited, several of the species being massive forms

Cephalocereus macrocephalus is a tall species of the massiveness of the saguaro, and like it having a central shaft bearing numbers of branches which are more closely appressed. It was seen only along the cliff near the Rancho San Diego, along the eastern edge of the valley. Pilocereus fulviceps, of more general distribution on slopes, has a series of branches, in many instances 40 or 50 in number, densely clustered and arising from a short trunk, which barely rises from the ground before it branches.

Echinocactus was represented by a half-dozen species, of which one, E. grande, is undoubtedly the most massive of all the genus, being as much as 8 or 9 feet in height and 30 or even 36 inches in thickness, which, with the many convolutions of its surface, makes it a very grotesque feature of the scenery.

E. flavescens forms small heads in clusters, while in E. robusta colonies 10 or 15 feet across, making mounds 2 or 3 feet high, include hundreds of heads.

No systematic account of any desert is to be found in which the storage function appears so highly developed and by so many species. Of course all of the cacti exhibit this feature in a very marked degree, and a single plant of Pilocereus fulviceps may retain several hundred gallons of water. The large stems of Yucca, which is a prominent member of the flora of the slopes, function to this purpose to some extent, while the fleshy leaves of Agave marmorata and other species and of Hectia, are essentially storage organs for reserve food and surplus water. Here is also a Euphorbia and a Pedilanthus, with thick upright cylindrical stems, in which the storage function is made more effective by the possession of a thick milk juice.

PAPAGO INDIAN DRINKING FROM A CACTUS

As one proceeds to the ancient ruins of Mitla, 36 miles to the southeastward of Oaxaca, the aridity increases until in the vicinity of the hacienda of that name extreme desert conditions are found. The ancient structures here are indicative of a type of civilization characteristic of the desert, in which co-operation or communism was carried to as great lengths as it must have been in the pueblos of the northern deserts in America.

One of the most difficult problems to solve is that of transportation in the desert, and there are extensive areas in American deserts that have not yet been systematically explored by reason of this condition.

A comprehension of the part that water plays in existence and travel in the desert is to be gained only by experience. Some of the native animals, such as mice and other small rodents, have been known to live on hard seeds without green food for periods of several months, or even as long as two or three years, and nothing in their behavior indicated that they ever took liquid in any form.

Deer and peccary are abundant in deserts in Sonora in which the only available supply of open water is to be found in the cacti.

Man and his most constant companion on the desert of America, the horse, are comparatively poorly equipped against the rigors of the desert. A horseman may go from the morning of one day until some hour of the next in midsummer and neither he nor his horse will incur serious danger; experiences of this kind are numerous. If the traveler is afoot, abstinence from water from sunrise to sunset is a serious inconvenience to him, and if he continues his journey, the following morning his sufferings may so disturb his mental balance that he may be unable to follow a trail, and by the evening of that day, if he has not come to something drinkable he may not recognize the friendly stream in his way. Instances are not unknown in which sufferers from thirst have forded streams waist deep to wander out on the dry plain to grisly death.

Scouting Indians have long used the bisnaga, and a drink may be obtained in this manner by a skilled operator in five to ten minites. Some travelers are inclined to look with much disfavor on the liquid so obtained, but it has been used without discomfort by members of expeditions from the desert laboratory. That it is often preferred by Indians to fair water is evidenced by the fact that the Whipple expedition found the Mohaves near the mouth of the Bill Williams river, in 1853, cooking ducks and other birds in the juice of these plants by means of heated stones dropped into the cavity containing the pulp.

The Tenderfoot Farmer

It was one of these experimental farmers, who put green spectacles on his cow and fed her shavings. His theory was that it didn't matter what the cow ate so long as she was fed. The questions of digestion and nourishment had not entered into his calculations.

It's only a "tenderfoot" farmer that would try such an experiment with a cow. But many a farmer feeds himself regardless of digestion and nutrition. He might almost as well eat shavings for all the good he gets out of his food. The result is that the stomach grows "weak" the action of the organs of digestion and nutrition are impaired and the man suffers the miseries of dyspepsia and the agonies of nervousness.

To strengthen the stomach, restore the activity of the organs of digestion and nutrition and brace up the nerves, use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is an unfailing remedy, and has the confidence of physicians as well as the praise of thousands healed by its use.

In the strictest sense "Golden Medical Discovery" is a temperance medicine. It contains neither intoxicants nor narcotics, and is as free from alcohol as from opium, cocaine and other dangerous drugs. All ingredients printed on its outside wrapper.

Don't let a dealer delude you for his own profit. There is no medicine for stomach, liver and blood "just as good" as "Golden Medical Discovery."

WONDERS of the SOUTHWEST

By N. H. DARTON, U.S. Geological Survey

NAVAJO CHURCH: A PRODUCT OF EROSION

THE southwestern section of the United States is a province that presents many special characteristics of physiography, climate, resources and capabilities which are not as well known as they deserve to be. The term "southwest" is usually applied to New Mexico, Arizona and southern California, an area of about the size of New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland and the Virginias. Much public attention has of late been attracted to Arizona and New Mexico in connection with their admission to statehood, and one gratifying result of this has been a greatly increased interest in their resources and conditions.

Excluding the populous and thrifty coast region of southern California, the southwest is the most thinly populated and least developed portion of the country south of Alaska. As this condition is due mainly to a climate so arid that but little can be raised without irrigation, its future development is to be measured by the utilization of the vast volume of flood waters now going to waste. This water can be applied to millions of acres of level lands with rich soil, which with the unending sunshine of its mild climate will respond with large and profitable crops.

Unfortunately, there is not enough water for all the land, but there is sufficient, if all were utilized, to support a population many times as large as the present one. The government is now spending $12,000,000 in reclamation projects in Arizona and New Mexico which supply water for nearly one-half million acres of fertile lands. This will give great impetus to development, and in time, when settlers take up the reclaimed land, there will be a large increase in its agricultural productions.

GRAND CANYON OF THE COLORADO NEAR THE HANCE TRAIL

In the great coast region of southern California, with a population of nearly 600,000, the principal product is the orange and other fruits, with a value of about $20,000,000 a year, while in the inland districts the mining industry is the largest source of revenue. Portions of the southwest are richly productive of various minerals, notably those of copper, and recently southern California has become a heavy producer of petroleum. The value of the copper, oil and other products of the ground aggregates about $75,000,000 a year.

It is probable that further exploration will disclose large additional supplies of ores of various kinds, especially those of low grade, which will prove profitable under improved methods of reduction.

The southwest presents a variety of topographic features, and many of its economic resources are closely related to them. There is great range in altitude, with corresponding variation in climatic conditions. One of the most salient features is the wide, high plateau of northern Arizona, which reaches an altitude of 8,000 feet. It is surmounted by various volcanic peaks, notably San Francisco peak, which is 12,611 feet above sea level.

To the east this district merges into an irregular series of high plateaus, constituting the western half of New Mexico.

To the west and south it drops by huge steps into the great region of desert valleys or bolsoms of Nevada, western Arizona, and southeastern California. These deserts are wide, long plains, lying between mountain ridges of varying lengths and heights, ridges which are all very rocky and mostly treeless and trend north and south.

Diagonally across southern California there extends the long curving ridge of the Sierra Madre and San Bernardino mountains, between which and the ocean lies the large oval area known as the valley of southern California. This valley is the great citrus fruit district, and Los Angeles.

There are two great rivers in the southwest, the Colorado and the Rio Grande. The Colorado river has been compared to the Nile and the similarity is notable. Both are streams of the first rank, rising in high mountains, and finally crossing a broad region of semi-tropical, nearly rainless deserts. Both empty into seas in nearly the same latitude, and their lower courses are through wide deltas of fertile soil. The annual overflows add new sediments fertile with plant food and at a time favorable for the crops.

The agricultural capabilities are closely similar, but while much of the lower Nile valley is utilized the Colorado valley is just beginning to be settled. The watershed area of the Colorado, with its two head branches, the Green and the Grand, is over 200,000 square miles, its course 2,000 miles in length, and its annual discharge is 11,000,000 acre-feet, or enough to cover that number of acres one foot deep.

The sediment which it carries each year into the gulf is estimated to be sufficient to cover 53 square miles one foot deep. For 200 miles of its course across the high plateau of northeastern Arizona it cuts the wonderful Grand canyon, which in places is nearly a mile deep. South of the canyon it flows mostly in broad valleys, but cuts through several desert ridges, finally passing out into the wide delta plain extending to its mouth.

CAPTAINS OF THE CANYON NORTHEASTERN ARIZONA

The Rio Grande is a large river rising in the mountains of Colorado, traversing New Mexico from north to south, and finally constituting the boundary line between Texas and Mexico.

The definition of a desert given by the dictionaries, "a dry, sandy region without vegetation or inhabitants," is defective, and the idea that it is necessarily flat is erroneous. Most portions of the average desert bear an extensive, though somewhat widely spaced, flora. Many desert regions contain numerous settlements, the Sahara desert for instance having a population of 2,500,000. Loose sand is a minor feature, and much more prevalent on the seacoasts and along the bottom lands of rivers. There are wide areas of bare rocks, and the larger deserts include mountains, ridges, mesas and deep canyons.

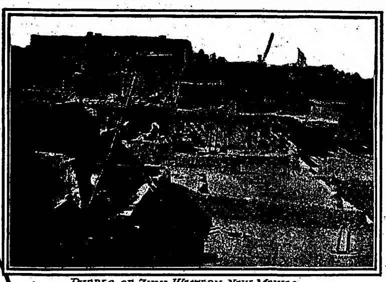
The deserts of the southwest are regions of very scanty rainfall, parts of them having only three inches a year and evaporation of eighty inches or more.

This canyon is the mile-deep gorge cut by the Colorado river across the high plateau of northern Arizona. The view from the rim reveals the most stupendous panorama imaginable, for one sees into an area of about 600 square miles filled with an endless variety of most rugged topographic forms of many beautiful colors. On the sky-line, ten to fifteen miles away, is the edge of a wide-reaching plateau, and in the middle ground of the picture flows the Colorado river, nearly a mile below one's feet.

The features are so gigantic and so plainly in view that all sense of scale is lost, and it is not until one has been down to the bottom of the canyon at the river level that any adequate sense of proportion can be gained.

The canyon was discovered by Cardenas, who went to its edge in 1540 on a branch trip from Coronado's expedition, on information obtained by Tovar from the Hopi Indians. The original name given to the river was Tison, Spanish for firebrand, and it is to be regretted that the name has not been retained to avoid the present confusion due to the river having the same name as the state.

Coon butte, another of the greatest wonders in our country, is also situated in the southwest, but owing to its distance from the railroad it is seldom visited. It is a great crater-like bowl in the plateau, about ten miles south of Canyon Diablo station. "The crater" is about 4,000 feet wide and 600 deep, with an irregular encircling rim of loose rock fragments from 120 to 160 feet high.



PUEBLO OF ZUNI, WESTERN NEW MEXICO

The petrified forests attract many visitors, especially the most accessible one south of Adamana, a station on the Santa Fe railroad a few miles east of Holbrook. There is a large quantity of the material in sight here, some of it in large logs. One of these logs spans a small draw as a natural bridge.

Arizona possesses a very picturesque natural bridge of limestone spanning Pine creek, in Gila county, 70 miles south of Flagstaff. It does not, however rival the great bridges recently discovered in Utah. Its span is 80 feet, its height about 125 feet, and its length up and down the creek is over 400 feet.

CROOKED CREEK LONG VALLEY, CALIFORNIA

Canyon de Chelly is one of the most notable scenic features in Arizona, but it is so far off the main line of travel that it is rarely visited. It is cut deeply into soft sandstones, which rise in vertical walls, with many outlying pinnacles and monuments. Some of these features appear also in the great wall of red sandstone on the north side of the wide depression through which the Santa Fe railroad crosses the continental divide east of Gallup. One of the most remarkable pinnacles of this wall is fancifully termed the Navajo Church.

Few persons who travel across the southwest realize that in Arizona and New Mexico there are enormous forests of valuable timber and that the lumbering is an important industry. In both territories there are several large forest reservations, and one of these in Arizona, the Coconino forest, with nearly 6,000 square miles, is the largest single reserve in the United States. The total forest area reserved in Arizona is 15,250,130 acres, or more than 24,000 square miles, and in New Mexico there are 10,971,711 acres, or more than 17,000 square miles. Southern California also has several large reserves.

The Coconino forest in Arizona occupies part of the great plateau in which the Grand Canyon is cut, and extends to the brink of the canyon.

The visitor to the southwest usually takes keen interest in the Indians, who are numerous not only along the main lines of travel, but in many remote villages. Some tribes, notably the Apaches, who continued to be troublesome until a relatively recent date, have become famous for the misdeeds that materially retarded the development of Arizona and western New Mexico. Now, however, all is peace and tranquillity. The newspapers, especially eastern ones, occasionally print accounts of uprisings, but these prove to be local quarrels with a few individuals.

The Indians of the southwest are of two kinds, differing greatly in most of their characteristics. One is the nomad type, represented by the Apaches, Navajos, the Yumas, Papagoes and Pimas, and smaller tribes; the other is the pueblo type, which is comprised of 26 pueblos, or villages, scattered through central and western New Mexico, and in the Hopi reserve, in northwestern Arizona.

Probably there is greater popular interest in the pueblo people, for their settlements are permanent and mostly very ancient, and their religious ceremonies are extremely elaborate and picturesque. They live in villages of several hundred inhabitants, in substantial stone or adobe houses, some of which are in groups, rising in tiers to a height of four or five stories, with streets and central plaza. They are peaceful and industrious, raising crops largely by irrigation. They have herds of cattle and sheep, and spinning, weaving and making their garments is one of their important occupations.

Work appears evenly divided between men and woman in the queblos. The men do the farming, tend to the cattle and sheep, do the hunting, build the houses, and have many smaller trades and occupations. The women do the housework, grind the corn, make pottery, blankets and clothes.

The visitor is generally impressed by the pueblo people and pleased with the agreeable home life and simple hospitality which they readily offer.

The interesting features of the southwest, notably the beauty of the coast region and the special climatic advantages, draw a large number of tourists and health-seekers, especially in winter, and every year sees a substantial increase in the influx of visitors.

Because of its dry air and mild climate the southwest has become famous as a health resort, especially for those having tuberculosis of the respiratory organs. The percentage of cures made in New Mexico, Arizona and California, great as it is, would be much greater if a larger proportion of those who are seeking health came in time. It is necessary to come before the vitality is too greatly diminished and then to live under favorable conditions, the most essential of which is to be out of doors as much as possible.

Many health-seekers spend most of their money in railroad fare to reach the desired resorts. Physicians do a great wrong to patients in sending them so far from home, friends and care without means to provide suitable quarters, nourishment and attention to sustain them while making their fight against death.

The climate of the southwest presents considerable variety, but in all the lower lands the winters are delightfully mild, and everywhere blue sky is in evidence for more than 300 days in the year. The summers are warm; in the southern desert area they are decidedly hot for several months, but the dry air even then is much more endurable than the sultry summer weather of the eastern and central states. Sunstroke is unknown, and laborers continue their work without distress.

The valley of southern California is protected from the cold northern winds of winter by high mountain ranges, while to the south it is open to the Pacific. Owing to the peculiar configuration of the coast the cold California current from the north is deflected west near Point Conception, and hence the southern California shores have waters warmer by about ten degrees than those to the north.

This beneficent climate is responsible for the giant industry of fruit growing which has made California famous over the globe. California furnishes the major part of the very large amount of oranges and other citrus fruits consumed in the United States, and this business has been the potent cause in the development of southern California.

The orange and other citrus fruits of southern California have an output of about 30,000 carloads a year, with a net value of more than $15,000,000.

East of the mountains in southern California is an extensive desert country, much of it without water, but large areas can be reached by ditches from the Colorado river. The most notable district of the sort of in the Salton desert, near the Mexican boundary. A few years ago this was a lonely and forbidding region, but now, by aid of irrigation from the Colorado river, it has several thriving settlements, with 100,000 people and 200,000 acres of cultivated land. That portion of it known as Imperial valley has the greatest development, and with rich soil and semi-tropical climate phenomenal results have been obtained when water is applied.

One of the best known products of this region is the canteloupe, of which the annual shipments are over 1,800 cars, bringing nearly a million dollars. This valley contains over 400,000 acres of land, and just across the Mexican line are 200,000 more.

The great oil fields of California are in the southern part of the state, and with rapidly increasing production they promise to be the largest producers in the country.

RULER A PATRIARCH

One of the World's Most Interesting Monarchs.

Vienna.—One of the most interesting monarchs in Europe, perhaps anywhere, is Prince, now King, Nicholas of Montenegro, who has recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his reign. During this half century he has been to the people a father and a friend, and it is asserted that he knows every one of his subjects by name, which probably is an exaggeration. He spends his summers in Cetinje and his winters in Antivari, down on the Adriatic coast, but has residences in the principal towns of the kingdom and occupies each for a few weeks every year in order to keep in touch with local affairs. He is very democratic in his manners, and although he dresses in the national costume of his country, which looks fantastic for a man of his age, his tastes are simple, and his habits and manners are those of a country gentleman.

Nicholas was born at the little village of Njegos, a nest in the mountains, in 1841. His uncle, Danilo, the late Vladika of Montenegro, designated him for his successor. He was educated in Vienna, Trieste and Paris, and was not quite twenty years old when he was elevated to the throne.

In 1860, a few months after he was crowned, Nicholas married a Montenegrin girl, Milena Vukotich, daughter of Peter Vukotich, president of the council of state, who was also a farmer and one of the largest land owners in the country, and she has been a congenial companion and valuable help meet.

The Princess Mellena is as popular as her husband, and presides over the palace with simple but graceful dignity. She wears the native costume when she is in Montenegro, but has a Paris outfit when she visits foreign countries. She insists upon her daughters-in-law wearing the same dress as her subjects when they are at home, and encourages the people to continue the ancient customs and practise the old-fashioned arts and accomplishments of past generations.

Nicholas of Montenegro.

Nicholas usually rides around in a little pony chaise, drawn by a diminutive animal like that Queen Victoria used to use in her garden at Osborne and in the park at Balmoral. The pony is led by a page and the prince sits back in the cushions and talks to everybody he meets on the street in a most condescending and fatherly manner. The women come out from their houses and kiss the hem of his cloak and the little children worship him as if he were a demi-god. In the eyes of these simple people he is the author of all the good that they enjoy; the protector of their lives and homes; their guardian and benefactor in every sense.

From 1460 to 1851 the executive authority in Montenegro was exercised by Vladikas, or prince bishops as they were called, the same man being the head of the church and the head of the state. He performed the ecclesiastical functions of a patriarch of the Orthodox Greek church as well as the civil duties of a king. At first the Vladikas were elected by ballot, but about 1696 a powerful and progressive leader named Babylas founded the present dynasty, and, as the Vladika was not permitted to marry, the crown has descended from uncle to nephew in the same family ever since. King Nicholas, the present ruler of Montenegro, is the second who has not been ordained as a priest. He simply refused to assume ecclesiastical authority and the people, who idolized him as a young man, unanimously sustained him in his violation of precedent. Ecclesiastical authority is therefore exercised by a regular bishop, elected by the clergy.

The daughters of King Nicholas are uncommonly beautiful and accomplished and those of them who have married have done well. Princess Helena married the king of Italy; Anna became the wife of Prince Francis Joseph of Battenberg; Militza married Grand Duke Peter, brother of the czar, and Stena wed Grand Duke Nicholas Nicolarevitch, cousin of the czar. Of the sons, Crown Prince Danilo married Militza, daughter of the grand duke of Mecklenberg, and Mirko took for wife Natalie Constantinovitch, daughter of a Russian grand duke. There are two daughters left, and a son, Prince Peter.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Uncle Sam Is Loser in Cash Account

HOLY SMOKE, I AM SHORT

WASHINGTON.—One of the mighty few instances on record of the United States having been "done" in its cash accounts came to light at the treasury department the other day in a decision handed down by the controller of the treasury. In this particular instance the government is short more than $4,000 and has no way of helping itself. It became a victim through the carelessness of its own officers, and the victimization, too, was not criminal in its nature.

Prior to 1879 the late Samuel J. Little of Georgetown owned four certificates of 6 per cent. stock of the old corporation of Georgetown. Upon his death he left a life interest in the stock to his sister, Mrs. Eliza A. Ricketts, and the residue to his minor children, J. C. Little and Julia A. Little. In the settlement of the case before the probate court the actual possession of the four certificates of stock was passed to Mrs. Ricketts, so that she might collect from the treasurer, from time to time, the interest due her.

Shortly after this United States Treasurer Gilfillan issued a circular calling upon all holders of Georgetown corporation stock, which was one of the old forms of obligation by the District of Columbia, to present the certificates for redemption. Mr. Ricketts took the four certificates to the treasurer's office, indorsed "I hereby assign the within certificates to the treasurer of the United States for redemption, on account of Eliza A. Ricketts."

The treasurer refused redemption upon this indorsement. Mrs. Ricketts then asked the first auditor of the treasury, as he was known in those days, to approve the indorsement, but he refused. She appealed to the office of the then first controller of the treasury and obtained the desired approval.

Accordingly the treasurer paid Mrs. Ricketts $4,012 principal and $9.23 interest.

In 1894 Julia A. Burnell, formerly Julia A. Little, the daughter of Samuel J. Little, made claim for the $4,021.23, alleging that it had been erroneously paid to Mrs. Ricketts, who had a life interest only. The claim was disallowed by the treasury. Mrs. Burnell and her husband then entered suit for the amount before the court of claims. A year ago they obtained judgment for the amount, and in the deficiency act of June 25, 1910, appropriation was made to pay this claim, along with others.

Mrs. Burnell has been fighting for sixteen years to secure the money she thought was hers and is just now coming into her own, while the government is out over $4,000.

Hall of Fame Statuary Not Artistic

THERE is a determined effort being made in Washington to have old Representative hall in the capitol cleaned out. This is the room now known as the Hall of Horrors to those who have seen the statuary in it, but which is aristocratically titled the Hall of Fame.

This hall is almost circular. It has a tiled floor, many pillars and a low gallery all across one end. It is also known as the "whispering hall," for the reason that standing on certain blocks of the tiling your voice comes to you from the floor on other blocks, over your shoulder into your ear on other blocks, from the winged-victory clock that faces you, and there are many other blocks which give forth strange echoes when you stand upon them. No one has ever been able to tell why these echoes are or why other tiles give forth nothing at all. They just do it; that is all there is of it.

There are a lot of statues that are freaks from way back. There is only one piece of really good sculpture in the whole bunch of some 35 or 40, and that is Father Marquette, which was presented by Wisconsin. It is an exquisite piece of work. The rest of the statues are practical caricatures. There is one of Fulton, who is seated in a chair with a piece of machinery in his hand. He lops all over the chair, his legs are sprawled in all sorts of ways, and it is about as woebegone a piece of marble as can well be imagined. There is a marble of Webster, whom everybody knows was not a large man, but the statue makes him a regular giant. There is a statue of John J. Ingalls, the only one as yet sent by Kansas, and excepting that it is like a line, has neither breadth nor thickness, which was a good description of Ingalls. It is the limit for ugliness. There is a statue of Frances Willard in a basque and ill-hanging dress, which bears not the slightest resemblance to that dainty, sweet-faced woman. There is a statue of Phil Kearny in bronze, which is very pretty to look at, but has very little artistic merit, and there is one of Shoup, of Idaho, which looks as though it might have been sandpapered out of a piece of marble. And then there is Washington, a dapper little darling with sloping brow, as fashioned by Houdon.

The Washington newspapers some time ago began a crusade to have the law placing statutes in Statuary hall by the states repealed. It is to be repealed on the ground that the hall is already jammed to overflowing, and if any more statuary is presented it will be necessary to make a second and inner row.

Point in His Favor.

"Griggs has been a failure at nearly everything."

"So he has; but you will have to give him credit for one thing."

"And what is that?"

"He has never said he could make a fortune raising poultry."

Carrying It to an Extreme.

"That practical politician is out for the stuff, isn't he?" "I should say he was. Why, if he has a lawn made he wants a rakeoff for the dead leaves."—Baltimore American.

When a man says he is "looking around" and has not yet quite decided what he will engage in, we know what is on his mind: An automobile agency.

It has been said that those who live in glass houses should not throw stones, neither should they carry them in their pockets.

Much-Read Social Science Bulletins

I'LL SEND FOR SOME "SOCIAL SCIENCE," DINGIT!

WHETHER the high price of food is causing the public to take an uncommonly keen interest in domestic problems now, or whether the cause is something else, the officials of the Department of Agriculture do not undertake to say. The fact remains that there has been a greater run up to date on the so-called "social science" series of bulletins than on any other pamphlets the department has even produced.

Up to the present there has been a total of 16,672,000 bulletins distributed. Some now out of print have been applied for so often that it is probable the estimates for next year will include provision for reprinting.

This government is the only one in the world that has gone into the business of printing cook books. It was stated, when the Department of Agriculture recently issued the book on the use of cheap cuts of meat, that it was the first government cook book ever printed.

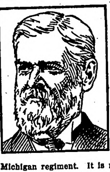
The social science series has been running for more than a decade, and has, incidentally, taken in various domestic problems in the food line under the head of "Nutrition Investigations." The earliest of these was one on the composition and cooking of meats, issued nearly 14 years ago. Of this there has been something over half a million copies distributed.

But the most popular of all the bulletins was the recent one on "The Economical Use of Meat in the Home." This has been out only a few months, and there have already been distributed 1,200,000. Calls are still coming in rapidly.

The series comprises books on all sorts of subjects—the preserving of fruits and vegetables, fish as food, the care of milk in the home, the value of peas, beans and legumes in general as food, the cooking of vegetables, and more than a dozen other subjects.

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

ONE OF THE "OLD GUARD"



One of the surprises of the recent primary election in Michigan was the defeat of Julius Caesar Burrows for renomination to the United States senate. Senator Burrows has been a long time in politics and was one of the "old guard," being associated with Aldrich, Hale and the Senator Allison in running the upper branch of congress. He entered congress in 1873 and has been a member of the senate since 1895.

Senator Burrows was born in Erie county, Pa., in 1837. He went west at an early age and read law while living in the western reserve of Ohio. In his early twenties he removed to Kalamazoo and has since been a resident of Michigan. He has practised little at the bar, having been in politics ever since he returned home from two years of service in the civil war, with the First Michigan regiment. It is recalled by the old inhabitants of Kalamazoo that Mr. Burrows made a successful prosecuting attorney in the two years he held the office immediately after the war.

As his reputation as a debater and speechmaker grew, Mr. Burrows gained political power, and at the close of his term as prosecuting attorney was appointed supervisor of internal revenue for Michigan and Wisconsin, but declined the office. In 1873 the opportunity came that he wanted in the form of his first nomination to congress.

In the house of representatives Mr. Burrows rose slowly. He was not a leader and he was not given membership in the most important committees until late in his career, but he early attained a reputation for being an excellent parliamentarian and good presiding officer.

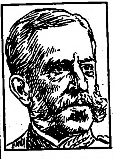
'BUTCHER' WRITES A BOOK



With an unpardonable lack of tact or a sinister sense of humor Gen. Valeriano Weyler has allowed the publisher to print the title of his sensational book "Mi Mando in Cuba" ("My Command in Cuba") in letters of gory scarlet on a paper cover of livid gray.

Whatever the motive may have been that prompted such a choice, that bloody "eye catcher" of a line fitly symbolizes the man and his work. Weyler has been on trial before public opinion for butchering his enemies instead of fighting them; and he flaunts in our faces the ugly stains that show where he wiped off his knife.

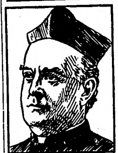
Captain general of the most fertile province of Spain (and a province which more than once manifested her intention to throw off the Bourbon yoke), he makes such a case against the country that buys his services as no citizen of the United States could have ever made to justify America's attitude in the Cuban mix-up.

Weyler was the best hated man in Cuba when the government of this nation finally recalled him. This book will cause him to be cursed the length and breadth of the peninsula.

I wrote it, he says, "to give all the facts about my conduct as general-in-chief, a conduct admired not only by army officers, high and low, who wrote me innumerable letters, but by privates, who, on their return to the peninsula, spoke of me with a enthusiastic fervor for which I can never thank them enough."

A perusal of the book fails to prove that Weyler kept his promise to treat the subject with perfect moderation.

A POPULAR ENGLISH PRIEST

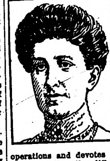


One of the best known priests in attendance at the Eucharistic congress at Montreal was Rev. Father Bernard Vaughan of London, England, whose denunciation of the smart set has deeply stirred the world's metropolis. Everybody in London loves and honors Father Vaughan, yet he is the pulpit scourge of the town. He preaches truths that terrify, yet an hour before he speaks the seats in the church are jammed and crowds line the walls.

He is as well known on the continent as in Great Britain, and although he has become ultra-famous because of his lecturing and speaking, still be finds time to devote many hours a day to ministrations among the poor.

At the Montreal conference Father Vaughan created a sensation by his denunciation of race suicide. "We are living in a day," he said, "of headlines, snapshots, taxicabs and music halls; in a day when the scramble for the prizes of life has become a mad passion. It is a day of fever, fret and fume. Competition for earthen toys is so keen and the margin of profit in commerce has become so fine that the one cry beating through the air is 'hurry up.' We are living in a day when the high ideals of old are fast yielding to the pressure of creature comforts, when principle is being exchanged for expediency; in a day when the Christian sense of sin is being regarded as a bygone superstition; in a day when it matters not what you believe, but only what you do, and when you may do what you like, provided you are not found out; in a day when the relations between the sexes take one back to pagan times; in a day when there is no empty place but in a cradle, not room in which to move but in the churches."

DEVOTES LIFE TO THE POOR



The Grand Duchess Elizabeth, widow of the Grand Duke Sergius of Russia, is regarded as an angel of mercy by the poor of Moscow, among whom she labors unceasingly. The grand duchess is a German princess by birth, a sister of the reigning grand duke of Hesse and also of the Czarina. Her husband was assassinated upon the streets of Moscow on February 17, 1905, being shattered by a bomb thrown at him. He was killed within a stone's throw of the palace and his wife, hearing the report, rushed to the spot and fell fainting upon Sergius' mutilated corpse.

After that terrible experience the grand duchess withdrew from all the gayeties of life and set to work to ameliorate the sufferings of the poor in her adopted country. She has founded hospitals and nursing homes. She herself directs operations and devotes eight to ten hours a day to the laborious work of superintending the different branches of her charitable activity. She devotes virtually the whole of her vast income, amounting to about $625,000, to the cause of charity, and the suffering of the poor in and around Moscow and in the vicinity of several of her estates in other parts of Russia have learned to regard her as a living saint. Not content with directing operations, she also participates in the active work of her various institutions.

Sometimes she works as a nurse, sometimes as a visitor to the poor, sometimes she attends as a domestic servant the destitute harbored in her refuges for aged paupers. On such occasions she dons the dress of a nurse or servant and performs the necessary duties without revealing her identity to the inmates of the different homes.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Kansas Chickens Meet Motor Trains

TOPEKA, KAN.—In any one of 20 Kansas towns today one may see hundreds of chickens running and flying, with many squawks and cackles and calls, to meet incoming motor trains. At every station along the lines where motor cars are operated the chickens have learned to hike with all their might to the depot whenever they hear the sharp blast of the siren whistle of the motor cars.

Chickens usually run away from steam trains, but they run for the motor cars. The chickens are as regular about meeting these cars as the bus driver and the postmaster. Every old hen, pullet, rooster and cockerel not penned up answers the call of the motor car siren. This whistle sounds more like a fog-horn than a railway whistle, and can be heard long distances. When the siren sounds the chickens take the shortest cut to the station.

What's the reason? Grasshoppers, just, plain, old, ordinary, tobacco-chewing, green, red, yellow, streaked, striped and spotted grasshoppers. Bunches of 'em, fat and juicy from feeding in Kansas corn and wheat fields.

All the motor cars have pilots, fenders or cowcatchers of a big scoop-like pattern. They are made of heavy steel bars and covered with a wire screening. As the cars go hiking through the country these fenders gather up thousands of grasshoppers. Going the six or seven miles between stations a motor car will often gather a bushel of grasshoppers on the fender.

The grasshoppers are not any more plentiful this year than in former years, but the chickens never had a way of catching them as they have this year, this being the first season of the motor cars on most of the lines. The chickens of the small town, when the whistle sounds, make a quick dive for the depot, ready to pounce on the hundreds of stunned hoppers lying on the fender.

Dancing Craze Has Grip on New York

NEW YORK.—It has become a sort of madness in New York, the desire to see dancing. Some 15 years ago a Spanish dancer like Carmencita might create something of a seven-days' wonder, besides having her name written down as an artist in the books which posterity is supposed to read. But nowadays dancing of all sorts is fairly worshiped.

Isadora Duncan brought the Greek dance, which later was kept alive by Maud Allen and other imitators of Miss Duncan. Ruth St. Denis introduced the Hindoo dance; Mistinguett and Max Dearly at the Moulin Rouge in Paris created the Apache dance, which has since been given in every possible form in America, ending with Polaire's vivid performance, and the Salome dance was a craze of itself for a summer.

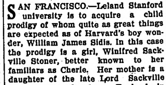
For three seasons no vaudeville bill has been deemed complete unless some dancer appeared in the list of performers. More than generally that dancer's name, like that of Abou Ben Adam, has led all the rest. The masked dancers at the rival vaudeville theaters, are the latest examples of the music hall craze for dancing sensations. We had "story" dances, toe dances, clog dances, cake walks, cancans, everything, it seemed, that the mind of man has been able to invent or resuscitate.

It remained, however, for some enterprising manager to take advantage of the idea and give the public an entire evening of contrasted and almost unbroken dancing.

Now a glimpse at the popular supper places or the tea rooms at the big hotels would give a stranger from Oshkosh the idea that the hobble skirt was quite as much of a craze in its way just now as, well, let us say, the dance.

No play, therefore, which attempted to call itself apotheosis of the dance could be considered complete without an attempt to show how a woman would look dancing in a hobble skirt. The hobble skirt dance, to say the least, is amusing.

'Frisco Has Child Linguist Prodigy



SAN FRANCISCO.—Leland Stanford university is to acquire a child prodigy of whom quite as great things are expected as of Harvard's boy wonder, William James Sidis. In this case the prodigy is a girl, Winifred Sackville Stoner, better known to her familiars as Cherie. Her mother is a daughter of the late Lord Sackville West, ambassador from England in one of the Cleveland administrations, and her father is Col. J. B. Stoner of the Marine hospital service.

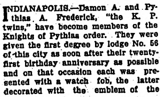
She is now aged eight years, and as a linguist is in a class by herself. Her knack for poetry enabled her to print a book of 52 pages called "Jingles" when she was five. At the age of four she was proficient enough in Esperanto to receive from the founder of that composite language a medal for proficiency. She had heard this tongue from infancy, as her mother is a recognized authority in it.

In addition she speaks and thinks in English, French, Spanish and Latin, and she can speak well enough for conversational purposes Japanese, Russian, German, Polish and Italian.

"Her advancement is simply due to the way she was educated," her mother said.

"At three she could operate a typewriter. By its use she learned to spell and also to memorize what she was writing. It was by copying poems and articles on the machine that she learned much that she knows. When she was at this age Puck accepted and printed a little poem of hers. Afterward she became a regular contributor to St. Nicholas. She did not learn to write with the pen until she was four. We have always made play of her work. Games similar to authors were devised for history and mythology."

Pythian's Twins Now Join the Order



INDIANAPOLIS.—Damon A. and Pythias A. Frederick, "the K. P. twins," have become members of the Knights of Pythias order. They were given the first degree by lodge No. 56 of this city as soon after their twenty-first birthday anniversary as possible and on that occasion each was presented with a watch fob, the latter decorated with the emblem of the order.

The Frederick boys are sons of Louis A. Frederick, who has been prominent in K. of P. affairs in this state for many years. Frederick was an enthusiastic member of Dioscuri lodge. No. 47, at Vincennes, before his marriage and even after his wedding was able to continue his boast that he "had never missed a meeting." It is said that the high rank of that lodge in the state was largely due to his work. He was chancellor commander of the lodge and was officiating at an important meeting when a courier called him from the meeting and announced that he was wanted at home—that the stork had left two sons at his house. Then, for the first time, Frederick asked to be excused from a lodge meeting.

Two hours later—the meeting held late—the chancellor commander returned to the hall and reported that the mother and boys were sleeping. A resolution prevailed that the lodge adopt the twins as honorary members and that the parents be requested to name them Damon A. and Pythias A. Frederick. Mrs. Frederick consented and the boys became known as the K. P. twins.

When the Frederick family removed to Indianapolis, Frederick retained his membership in the Vincennes lodge, but became a frequent visitor at Indianapolis lodges, and is one of the widest known lodgemen in the city. When his sons became of age they sought membership in No. 56 and they were welcome. Several Vin-

SHOPPING IN MIDOCEAN.

The wireless message pulsing over the sea has put the voyaging financier in daily communication with the bourses of New York, London and Paris. Even in midocean the capitalist may buy or sell, with a view to the protection or the profit of his purse. But it were vain for mere man to imagine that he could reserve this instrumentality to his exclusive use. If the wireless can be utilized to make or to conserve money, it follows as the night the day that it is available for spending money. The enterprising merchant could not fail to be alert to this opportunity to increase the debit side of a fair client's account, says Washington Post. Fathers, husbands, brothers have cherished the thought that when their dear ones were safely at sea in swift and luxurious palaces, the item of shopping was in a state of at least temporary desuetude. But not so; the ribbon counter and the showcases have been extended, figurately speaking, across the sea. The lady fair may now indulge her penchant for shopping even in midocean. Every department store in great cities near the Atlantic coast will be topped with its tall electric mast and maintain an operator at its foot. Bulletins of bargains may be published on shipboard. Moreover, if the lady is on her way home with a depleted purse, she can make an aerial draft to meet every tip of every steward on board and make sure that some of her men-folk meet her with more supplies promptly on arrival at the pier.

London's bad season, with dull gray skies and chill winds, is partly compensated for by the promise of good grouse shooting. Parliament has risen in time for the sport, and that part of society which is not already "on the continent" is bound northward for the moors. Summerless England is exchanged for Scotland, which, when the grouse are plentiful and in good condition, is a good place to be, even if the weather is wet. Bright skies over the moors transform the sportsman's part of Scotland into a semblance of paradise. To be sure, the serpent is there. The guns crack and the birds are slaughtered by the thousands. But they have fulfilled their destiny. Who can do more? And mighty good eating is a well cooked grouse from the Grampian hills.

In East Haddam, about sixteen miles north from the mouth of the Connecticut river, hanging in the belfry of St. Stephen's church and in use today, is a bell that was cast in Spain over 1,000 years ago. The Spanish inscription stating that the bell was cast in Spain in 815 and the name of the priest who blessed it are all very distinct. Those who have interested themselves in this valuable old relic claim the church in Spain where it originally hung was destroyed by Napoleon, this bell and many others being sent to America, where there was a good market. It is 28 inches high and 34 inches in diameter at the base.

Nearly one million new farms have been created in the United States during the last ten years. In the last ten years the total number of farms has increased 18 per cent., says American Agriculturist. In the older states, from Ohio eastward, there has been going on for twenty years a tendency toward the amalgamation of farms distant from market into larger holdings. On the other hand, this section has witnessed the cutting up into smaller sizes of many farms nearer to market. There are now almost three times as many farms as in 1870, and an unprecedented increase in the value of farm lands and live stock.

There is one boat on the Hudson river that refuses to be Oslerized. Although the word fast is not usually relished when applied to the feminine gender, the Mary Powell glories in the epithet and has made friends by it. This boat will complete this season fifty years of service, and the semi-centennial anniversary will be appropriately celebrated. Captain Anderson has served on the boat forty years in various capacities. The Mary Powell is still in daily use by the Hudson River Day Line, and cuts the water between New York and Kingston not only like a thing of life but like a thing of very lively life.

A passenger has been carried on a monoplane across the English channel. A majority of the people who have to cross the channel will continue for a while, however, to risk the danger of being shaken up in the old-fashioned way.

GREAT TWO-CITY FLIGHT AND BROOKINS, THE FLYER

BREAKS AIR RECORD

WALTER BROOKINS FLIES 186 MILES IN FIVE HOURS 49 MINUTES.

WINS $10,000 CASH PRIZE

Springfield, Ill.—What is looked upon as one of the most remarkable feats in aerial navigation was accomplished by Walter B. Brookins, in a Wright biplane, Thursday, when he successfully flew from Chicago to this city, and in doing so he broke all cross-country aeronautic records.

With only two stops, neither of which was actually necessary, he made the trip from Chicago to Springfield, a distance of 186 miles, in five hours and forty-nine minutes, maintaining an average speed of 32.7 miles an hour, and won the $10,000 prize offered by a Chicago newspaper.

Along the entire route, from Chicago to the state fair grounds here, hundreds of thousands of people cheered the daring young aviator as he passed.

As the great mechanical bird came to the ground here in the presence of 40,000 people he was cheered vociferously for fully half an hour.

Brookins left Chicago at 9:15 a. m. He dropped out of the clouds over the fair grounds in Springfield at 4:45.

One of the first persons to grasp the airman by the hand as he stepped from his seat after the long and spectacular flight was Gov. Charles S. Deneen, who was followed by Mayor John S. Schnepp of Springfield.

Forty-seven minutes after Brookins rose from the ground in Washington park, Chicago, the "Daylight Special" left the Park Row station over the Illinois Central. A special car had been attached in which traveled Wilbur Wright, the airship inventor; Roy Knabenshue, special representative of the Wright brothers; members of the Aero club of Illinois, and about forty newspaper men.

After a flight of two hours and twenty-eight minutes Brookins came to Gilman, where he arrived at 11:43. Brookins was far ahead of the train and he decided to alight and await the arrival of the train.

The train arrived at Gilman at 12:15 and orders were given by the division superintendent of the railroad to hold the train until the biplane should resume its flight. The gasoline and water tanks were replenished, and after the engines had been gone over carefully by Wright and Knabenshue, Brookins resumed his flight.

From Gilman to Springfield the special train and the aeroplane ran neck and neck, first one forging ahead, then the other, but never at any time more than a quarter of a mile apart.

Brookins was forced at 3:20 to descend at Mt. Pulaski for fuel, only twenty-four miles from the state fair grounds. The landing was one of the most remarkable that has ever been seen in the history of aviation. Trees and fences surrounded him on all sides and with perfect control he picked out a spot, after soaring about in a short circle, scarcely more than half a block square, and landed square in the center. The special train was held up, the aeroplane's supplies again were renewed, and at 3:45 he ascended again. From Pulaski to the fair grounds a speed of thirty-five miles an hour was maintained.

PRAISE FOR LA FOLLETTE

CONVENTION CALLS SENATOR PIONEER PROGRESSIVE.

Wisconsin Republicans Declare Payne Tariff Law Fails to Carry Out Party Pledge.

Madison, Wis.—Sharp criticism of the Payne tariff law, a demand for the physical valuations of railroads and unstinted praise of Senator La Follette as the pioneer "progressive" are the principal planks of the platform adopted by the Republican state convention Wednesday.

Indorsement of the state's strongly "Insurgent" delegation in congress and a slap at President Taft are expressed in the following resolution:

"Wisconsin is to be congratulated upon having representatives in the senate and house who remained true to the people and to the national platform of the party, notwithstanding the efforts to punish them, for so doing by withdrawal of federal patronage."

On the tariff the platform says:

"The Payne-Aldrich tariff is not a compliance with the pledge of the Republican party in its national platform. The true basis of protective tariff is the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, and we hold any increased cost of production of living of American labor should be accompanied by compensating tariff duties.

"The present tariff board has no power of investigation, and is not required to report to congress. We favor the creation of a nonpartisan tariff committee empowered to ascertain the cost of production in this and other countries, and required to make frequent reports of the information gained in congress.

"Upon the information so obtained congress should proceed to revise the different schedules independently of each other, according to true protective tariff principles."

PAROLE SYSTEM IS FAVORED

Humane Prison Laws Take Place of Former Harsh Regulations, Says Report of Committee.

Washington. — Such time-honored methods of punishment as the dungeon, starvation, silence, the solitary cell, darkness and corporal punishment have been largely discredited in American reformatories, according to the report of the committee on reformatory work and parole made to the American Prison association.

"Almost every American reformatory is operating under some modified indeterminate sentence law," said the report. "All, we believe, have a system of parole, more or less effective, while some reformatories administer a probation law in addition."

HOLD UP CAR IN DAYLIGHT

Six Armed Bandits Take $130 From Passengers on St. Paul Interurban Train.

St. Paul, Minn. — Six armed bandits secured $180 on a crowded interurban street car, flourished knives and revolvers in the faces of passengers, fought their way to the rear of the car and made their escape in broad daylight.

The car was a Minneapolis-bound interurban and the crowd in the aisle made no effort to stop the men. At Eleventh avenue one of the men signaled to the motorman to stop the car, and with knives still in their hands the bandits backed down the platform.

BLAST KILLS MANY

LOS ANGELES TIMES BUILDING IS BLOWN UP AND ENTIRELY DESTROYED.

TWENTY ARE REPORTED DEAD

Number of Employes Leap From Windows, but Are Injured—Cause of Explosion Not Known—Police Report Series of Intonations.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Early Saturday an explosion that shook the city for many blocks and which caused the death of fifteen to twenty persons, completely destroyed the Times Publishing building at First and Broadway, in which is published the Los Angeles Morning Times.

Flames Break Out.

The explosion was immediately followed by a fierce rush of flames that made it impossible to attempt the rescue of many of the employes who were trapped without a chance of escape from the double horror.

Almost within sound of the explosion the entire half block, which was occupied by a four-story structure, became a seething furnace. A fortunate few jumped from the windows only to meet with injury from the fall.

The cause of the explosion has not been ascertained, but according to the police, several of whom were entering the police station 300 feet away when the blast occurred, there was a series of heavy intonations.

The building was entirely destroyed.

SAYS OFFERED JOB FOR VOTE

Bank Cashier in Senatorial Bribery Hearing Gives Damaging Evidence Against Senator Lorimer.

Chicago.—Testimony directly connecting Senator Lorimer with an offer of patronage for a vote for him was brought out Friday at the senate committee hearing in the investigation looking into the validity of his seat in the senate.

Henry A. Sheppard, a bank cashier of Jerseyville, was the witness. His testimony brought out by the interrogations of Attorney Austrian, for the prosecution, caused a sensation in the committee room.

Mr. Sheppard said:

"Mr. Lorimer told me that if I would vote for him he would get a friend of mine in Jerseyville the office of postmaster. It was the day before he was elected. Lee O'Neill Browne took me to Mr. Lorimer and we had a talk. I told him I wouldn't vote for him unless he did as I requested. Lorimer considered a minute and then he said:

"'Well, if I am elected I will have a share in the Illinois patronage and I will do it.' That was all there was to it."

Representative Michael S. Link of Mitchell told the story of another vote cast for Senator Lorimer for which money was paid when he was called to testify. Link declared he was asked personally by Lorimer for his vote, and later was paid $1,000 in the Southern hotel at St. Louis by Lee O'Neil Browne.

"I don't know what it was for. I didn't ask. I thought it was for campaign money," was the statement of Link.

DIX HEADS TICKET

EMPIRE STATE DEMOCRATS NOMINATE WASHINGTON COUNTY MAN FOR GOVERNOR.

PLATFORM PLEDGES REFORM

Payne Tariff Law Declared "Breach of Faith"—State-Wide Primaries Favored—All Attacks on U. S. Supreme Court Condemned.

Governor—John A. Dix of Washington county.

Lieutenant Governor—Thomas F. Conway of Clinton.

Secretary of State—Edward Lazansky of Kings.

Comptroller—William Schner of New York.

Attorney General—Thomas Carmody of Yates.

State Treasurer—John J. Kennedy of Erie.

State Engineer—John A. Bensel of New York.

Justices of the Court of Appeals—Irving C. Vann, Republican, of Onondaga, and Frederick Collins, Democrat, of Chemung.

Mr. Dix was nominated by a vote of 434 to 16 for Congressman Sulzer. All the other nominations were made by acclamation.

The platform adopted pledges the party first to the preservation of the "old nationalism." It condemns "all attacks upon the Supreme court of the United States.

It declares for sovereign state rights and "for the largest possible measure of home rule for all cities of the state."

It denounces the Republican party for its government of the state. The declaration of principles declares that the Payne-Aldrich tariff law was a "breach of faith" by the Republican party and responsible for the high cost of living. Only by a downward revision of the tariff, it is held, could the cost of living be reduced.

It charges the Republican party with extravagance, especially in the creation of many needless public offices, and pledges the Democratic party to retrenchment.

"Even this gross extravagance," it says, "is overshadowed by the revelations of corruption forced from a Republican legislature. This almost made the legislature a hissing byword throughout the nation."

The platform commits the party to a thorough investigation of all official wrongdoing, "that the guilty may be punished and business relieved of blackmail."

"We declare in favor of state-wide primaries to insure to the people the right to elect candidates and make nominations for public offices," the platform continues. "We favor the enactment of such measures as will compel the personal registration of voters throughout the entire state."

Popular election of United States senators, an income tax, a parcels post and the preservation of water power for all the people are other things urged by the set of principles.

For Governor—Henry L. Stimson of New York.

Lieutenant Governor — Edward Schoeneck of Onondaga.

Comptroller—James Thompson of Valley Falls.

Treasurer—Thomas F. Fennell of Elmira.

Attorney General—Edward R. O'Malley of Buffalo.

State Engineer and Surveyor—Frank M. Williams of Madison.

The platform as adopted indorses the administrations of President Taft and Governor Hughes; declares that the Payne tariff law has been a success, and refers with approval to the work of the last congress. It pledges the continuance of the state graft inquiry "until all wrongdoing capable of exposure shall be brought to light." The plank relating to direct primaries is brief, but admits of no misconstruction. "We promise legislation which will enact these principles into law," is the pledge.

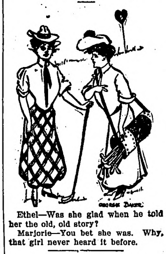
HER FIRST PROPOSAL.



Ethel—Was she glad when he told her the old, old story?

Marjorie—You bet she was. Why, that girl never heard it before.

Love's Crime.

George was a manly fellow, yet, surprising as it may seem, he was guilty of a grave charge, a criminal offense—theft, for had he not many times, stolen kisses from his fair sweetheart?

Maude, one of the most lovable of girls, was equally guilty as an accessory; she received the stolen property. Each seemed to have perfect confidence in the other, however, and when sentence was pronounced by a properly qualified official, they decided to serve their time together.

They remained loyal to the end, neither making any effort to have their sentence abrogated or shortened, but during the course of their long term together several small offenses were directly chargeable to them.—J. W. B. in Puck.

A Question.

Vera (eight years old)—What does transatlantic mean, mother?

Mother—Across the Atlantic, of course; but you musn't bother me.

Vera—Does "trans" always mean across?

Mother—I suppose it does. Now, if you don't stop bothering me with your questions I shall send you right to bed.

Vera (after a few minutes' silence)—Then does transparent mean a cross parent?—Ideas.

The Weeds Return.

"Confound these election bets, anyway!" grumbled Harker.

"Lose heavily?" inquired his friend.

"No, I won ten boxes of cigars and they were so rank I sold the whole lot to the corner tobacconist for a dollar."

"Well, you made a dollar, anyway."

"Yes, but that is not the worst of it. My wife saw the boxes in the window marked 'A Bargain, $2,' and bought the whole lot to give me as a birthday present."

No Help Needed.

A little miss of five years who had been allowed to stay up for an evening party, was told about 8:30 to go to bed. Very, very slowly she moved toward the stair. An aunt, seeing her reluctant, asked:

"Helen, can I do anything to help you?"

"No," replied Helen, "I will get there altogether too soon as it is."

A FOOD DRINK.
Which Brings Daily Enjoyment.

A lady doctor writes:

"Though busy hourly with my own affairs, I will not deny myself the pleasure of taking a few minutes to tell of my enjoyment daily obtained from my morning cup of Postum. It is a food beverage, not a poison like coffee.

"I began to use Postum eight years ago, not because I wanted to, but because coffee, which I dearly loved, made my nights long weary periods to be dreaded and unfitting me for business during the day.

"On the advice of a friend, I first tried Postum, making it carefully as directed on the package. As I had always used 'cream and no sugar,' I mixed my Postum so. It looked good, was clear and fragrant, and it was a pleasure to see the cream color it as my Kentucky friend always wanted her coffee to look—'like a new saddle.'

"Then I tasted it critically, for I had tried many 'substitutes' for coffee. I was pleased, yes, satisfied, with my Postum in taste and effect, and am yet, being a constant user of it all these years.

"I continually assure my friends and acquaintances that they will like it in place of coffee, and receive benefit from its use. I have gained weight, can sleep sound and am not nervous."

"There's a Reason."

HONOR MAJ. BROWN

DEDICATION OF MONUMENT TO FOUNDER OF "MINNESOTA" ACCOMPANIED BY FESTIVITIES.

3,000 PEOPLE AT HENDERSON

Henderson.—Henderson is filled with 3,000 guests from surrounding territory who came to attend the dedication of the Joseph R. Brown monument. Governor Eberhart presided at the dedication and delivered the principal address of the day.

The city was in holiday attire. A carnival company filled the streets and citizens and guests made merry in one of the biggest celebrations ever held in this city.

Major Brown's life story furnishes one of the most picturesque chapters in Minnesota's history. Born in Hartford, Conn., 1805, he ran away from the printing office to which he was apprenticed and joined the regular army before he was fourteen. Leaving Fort McHenry he was a member of the first detachment of troops sent here, under Lieutenant Colonel Henry Leavenworth, and helped build Fort St. Anthony, the present Fort Snelling.

After several years he left the army and became a trader with the Indians. He lived at Grey Cloud Island and other places. He was the first white man to raise wheat on Minnesota soil, and was also the first white man to visit Lake Minnetonka. The city of Stillwater was laid out by him, and he was the pioneer lumberman on the St. Croix river. Major Brown drove the first wagon over Minnesota's first real road, the highway between Fort Snelling and Prairie du Chien.

Major Brown took a prominent part in the political affairs of his day. While a member of the legislature of Wisconsin, which then embraced Minnesota, he advocated the creation of the territory of Minnesota and he gave the state its name with the present spelling. Later he was a member and also chief of both houses of the territorial legislature of Minnesota.

Brown was editor and owner of the Minnesota Pioneer from 1852 to 1854, the newspaper which later became the Pioneer Press. He was a member of the Democratic wing of the constitutional convention in 1859. Two years before he founded what is now the city of Henderson, and it was through his efforts that the government established trading posts and mills there.

During the Indian outbreak in 1862 he went back into military service and commanded the troops at the battle of Birch Coolie. He also took part in the battle of Wood Lake and was wounded there. He died in 1879 in New York, while on a trip to that state.

The last legislature appropriated $2,000 for a monument to Major Brown. The granite shaft at the base has this inscription: "Joseph R. Brown, Pioneer, Soldier, Statesman, 1805-1879. Founder of Henderson."

Herman Sumilan, St. Peter, is the new vice president. J. Q. Juenemann, St. Paul, was re-elected secretary over Frank Erling of St. Paul.

There was a lively contest for places on the grand council which serves as the executive committee. The selections were George Thill, St. Paul; Rev. Paulin Wiesner, Stillwater; W. Eilbner, New Ulm; Paul Kemp, Winona, and Senator Julius Coller, Shakopee.

NEW MANKATO FACTORY.

Hugo Shirt Co. Decides to Remove from St. Peter.

Mankato.—The management of the Hugo Shirt company of St. Peter will move its factory to this city October 1. The entire lower floor of the Masonic hall has been leased for that purpose. ORE DEMAND SMALL.

of navigation on the Great Lakes will be tame this year, unless it is enlivened by a spurt in the package freight business. Iron ore and grain have been depended on to give excitement to the closing weeks of the season, but the ore this season will not be a factor, and from present prospects grain will not. There is a possibility the export demand for grain will improve and if it does there may be a rush of tonnage for grain cargoes. It has been a heavy season up to the present in the ore carrying trade, but the ore carriers as a rule are going to quit early. The steel corporation's fleet, the Pittsburg Steamship Company, has announced it will be through with the independent boats in two weeks, and its own fleet will go into winter quarters about November 15, from two to three weeks earlier than usual.

The reason for the steel corporation putting its fleet in winter quarters early lies in the fact that the outlook for the iron and steel trade does not warrant unusual stocks of iron ore at the lower lake ports for consumption between the close of navigation and the opening next spring. From present prospects there will be a large amount of lake tonnage laid up between November 1 and 15. The coal receipts are heavy, and the Duluth railroads, having no car shortage to contend with are giving good dispatch to a large demand for the commodity in the territory which Duluth serves.

CLYDE J. PRIOR ENDS LIFE.

Former Bemidji Newspaper Man Worried Over Poor Health.

Bemidji. — Clyde J. Prior, former newspaper man, at one time clerk of the court at Glencoe, and who was nominated at last Tuesday's primaries as Republican candidate for court commissioner of Beltrami county, took his life here.

Poor health and tangled finances are believed to have worried Pryor, who was 41 years old and one of the best known men of northern Minnesota. He was secretary of the Beltrami Commercial club two years and at the time of his death was Ninth district member of the Minnesota Federation of Commercial Clubs. Pryor came here six years ago from Crookston, and until a year ago he was engaged in work on the Daily Pioneer. Since Jan. 1st last he had been engaged in the real estate and insurance business.

FIND GOLD ON RANGE.

Mining Company Strikes a Ledge Yielding $22 to $82.60 a Ton.

Duluth.—A gold strike of importance has been made on the famous Vermillion iron range of Minnesota, by the North American Mining company while exploring for iron ore. At a depth of 100 feet the shaft is bottomed in a ledge which yields gold at $22 to $82.60 per ton. The shaft was being sunk in what was supposed to be barren formation between two iron formations. The discovery of the gold was in a similar manner to the discovery of the rich silver deposits of the Cobalt.

HIGHWAYMAN IS HONEST.

Man Who Three Years Ago Held Up Bartender Returns Money.

St. Paul.—St. Paul has an honest highwayman. Nearly three years ago he held up a saloon here, masked in approved style and alone, nearly killed the bartender, and departed with a pocket full of cash. He escaped the dragnet of the police department, and Chris Batroot, the proprietor chalked up $51.05 to loss and forgot about it. On Tuesday he received a money order for the full amount, signed George Smith.

SHOCK FATAL TO PASTOR.

Fergus Falls. —. Fifty additional suits for the annulment of deeds given by Indians to lands on the White Earth reservation were filed by the government in the United States court here. This makes a total of 159 suits that have thus far been filed for the annulment of these deeds, and the government attorneys state the work has only begun.

SENSATION IN SIGHT.

Bemidji.—Dr. Ira B. Derby, state chemist, is here from St. Paul as the most important witness in the suit brought by Matilda Akerberg against F. A. Mayo for five thousand dollars damages for the death of her son, which she alleges resulted from the error on the part of a drug clerk employed by Mayo in filling a physician's prescription. Senator Peterson of Moorhead has charge of the case for Mrs. Akerberg, and E. E. McDonald, the former St. Paul attorney, defends Mr. Mayo.

The plastron and undersleeves are of dotted tulle, the girdle is of liberty. The skirt, one of the new hobble skirts, is trimmed to correspond with the waist, with the edge of liberty or velvet and with the embroidery, as may be preferred.

MEMENTOS OF ONE'S "HERO"

Much Enjoyment May Be Had in Making a Collection of Matter Concerning Admired One.

Nearly every girl has some special "hero" who embodies in himself the qualities she most admires, and if she be given to "collecting" she will find much enjoyment in gathering together all the mementos of him she can. If it be Napoleon, for instance, she will gradually add every work that has been written on his life to the particular shelf in her bookcase devoted to his honor; while just above it she will hang engravings of him at different periods and of the various battles that made him famous. If her hero be an author she will have one edition at least of all his books and as many different photographs of him as she can muster. Pictures of his birthplace, his early home, etc., will add to the interest of her collection, and if she can obtain his autograph she will feel rich indeed. There is no reason why it should not be a "heroine" instead of a "hero," for women who have shone like stars in the firmament are sufficiently numerous to suit any conception of "greatness."

Women to Have Pockets.

The latest news from the select world where fashions are made indicates that women will no longer have to do without pockets. The latest dresses in tunic form show two pockets attached to the skirt in front, a little above each knee, so that they can be comfortably reached with the hand. The tunic of light material falls over them.

The men dressmakers who have devised the pockets have also stpulated what shall be put in them. It appears that one is for the handkerchief and the other for the powder puff. As no arrangement is made for the purse it may be assumed that the little bag will still be indispensable.

Paints and Dyeing.

If your dress accessories do not quite match your gown, or you wish that gown itself a slightly different shade, try painting with oil colors and gasoline. The effect is marvelous and the slight odor soon goes off. Kid slippers can thus be made to match exactly any costume.

A spot on linen can be painted with water-colors to match the clean material, as the paint sinks into the linen without changing its texture. It rubs off, however, and must be renewed every five or six months.

Hat Trimmings.

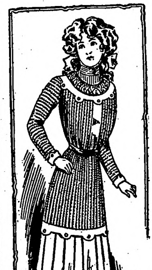
Flowers are no more to be seen on the best Paris hats; feathers have entirely taken their place. Black and white ostrich plumes are first in favor, especially in the willow curl.

Paradise aigrettes in the same shades are also popular with the Parisienne, though fortunately most of our really well-dressed women refuse to wear feathers that are obtained at the cost of so much slaughter.

FOR SOFT SHADE OF BLUE

Dress Especially Adapted for Young Girl Should Be Made Up in Some Thin Material.

Some quite thin material must be used for this dress. Our model is in eolienne in a pretty soft shade of blue; the bodice and upper part of skirt are finely tucked, the lower part of skirt is then set in flat plaits turning from front, and is joined to upper under a scalloped band of silk with a button in each scallop. The yoke is tucked net in upper part, and this is encircled by a shaped band of thick lace. The joining of bodice to yoke is covered by a scalloped band of silk. The box-plait in center and the cuffs are also silk.



Materials required for dress: Seven yards 42 inches wide, one yard silk 22 inches wide, three-eighths yard tucked net, half yard piece lace 18 inches wide.

Collar Stitches.

If you get sick of eyelet work and lace insertion in linen collars and jabots, here are a few hints of what can be done in that line:

French laid, padded dots, wallachian, venetian ladder, Italian cut work, soutache braiding, cable stitch, ismit. Every one of these is seen on modish collars, Jabots and belts, and can be used by the clever needleworker who is tired of "the same old thing."

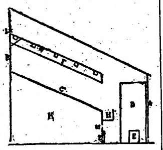
EXCELLENT HEN HOUSE PLAN

Building That Will Accommodate Seventy-five Chickens—For Comfort Hard to Beat.

Considering comfort, convenience, cleanliness and cost I believe my chicken house hard to beat, writes J. F. Jacobs in Missouri Valley Farmer. The high side of the house faces south. K, which is partitioned off from main coop, can be used as a feed and scratching pen. It also makes a convenient place for driving in the fowls inclined to roost out of doors. The nest box, L, is 12 inches square, with back 17 inches high. Door, J, is hinged with leather and lies on top when not in use. When in use it fastens with button at N. The sloping top of nests prevents their being used as roosts. The floor of house should be made of concrete and in cold weather covered with straw. My building is 12 by 16 feet, and will house 75 chickens.



Interior of Hen House.

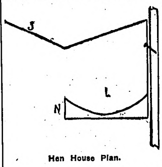
A, 6-foot post. B, post enough higher than A to give pitch to roof. M, partition 3 feet high. C, tight floor. H, trough 10 by 12, to catch droppings. D, door to admit person. E, E, small doors for fowls. I, glass windows protected on inside with netting and made to slide open for ventilation. F, 1 by 6 board with notches 18 inches apart for perch poles.



Hen House Plan.

WAY OF FATTENING TURKEYS

Good Method Is to Allow Birds to Roam at Will Over Small Grain, Clover and Corn Fields.

I have had a good deal of experience in rearing turkeys. By giving the flock good attention I seldom lose any. The birds have free range at all times, as they are of a roaming disposition and won't do well in close confinement. I feed twice daily; in the morning, wheat, sunflower seed, buckwheat and some kind of cooked vegetable; in the evening whole corn, writes Anna S. Lembke of Cass county, Iowa, in Orange Judd Farmer. During the day the birds wander at will over the small grain, clover and cornfields. In the former two they get a large quantity of insects and in the latter more or less vegetable food. In the wheat fields they also get considerable grain left after the crop is harvested. When they are in the barnyard I give them all the skim milk and buttermilk they will drink and supply them plenty of coarse grit where they have access to it at all times. A pail of slaked lime is also within reach. Plenty of fresh water is essential at all times.

Some people pen their turkeys for a few weeks before marketing, but I find the birds do better if allowed to run at large. There is no danger of overfeeding by this method. It is necessary, though, to see that they get all they will eat up clean. At this time I feed boiled potatoes and scalded corn meal, but never much oats, on account of the hulls. A few weeks before marketing, when the birds begin to take on fat rapidly and many times don't care to come home, then I give them such appetizers as boiled rice, clabber and cheese. I never house the turkeys, but let them roost in the trees. The birds are so tame they will eat out of my hands. They do much better when treated in this kind of way.

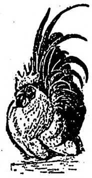
I examine them occasionally to see how they are plumping up. All that have well filled breasts and are fat are selected for the Thanksgiving market. The others are fed for the Christmas batch. In order to have good-sized birds for these two markets, I hatch as early in the spring as possible, so as to get the fowls well matured and capable of filling out well. I have found the plan above to be common sense in fattening, much better than the feeding of highly concentrated food, which too often deranges the digestive organs. It is better to feed somewhat too little than to overdo the thing.

GOOD QUALITIES OF BANTAM

Though Kept for Pets They Do Lay Eggs and They Are Most Delicious for the Table.

A bantam biddy has apparently large ideas about her relative importance, but the bantam male that doesn't strut around as though he felt as big as an elephant is sick. In good health he never fails to appear as important looking as a village policeman, says a writer in Fancier's Monthly. And are not his little, dainty, demure wives just the most cunning bits of feathered life in all the poultry world? Of course, they are. One cannot look at a high-stepping bantam cock escorting a trim, tiny hen without smiling in admiration. They are so very small, seem so very wise and old and at the same time so pert and sancy, that nothing will so quickly and entirely captivate a boy or a lady that has any inclination for pets as will the bright little bantam.

Many a poultry fancier now grown gray-haired and aged, can look back to the day long ago when he first owned a flock of bantams and wished for nothing more on earth to fill the measure of his youthful delight. There is a pretention that bantams are profitable and it pays to keep them for their eggs, etc., etc. But this is but a miserable truckling to the almighty dollar. It may be, and doubtless is, a fact that bantams are valuable fowls to keep solely for profit, considering the small amount of food they consume, but it is as pets that they are generally bred, and miserly indeed must be he who would grudge the little beauties their daily bird-like repast.



Black Tail Jap.

Nevertheless, bantams, though kept for pets, do lay eggs—just as good if not as big as those of the larger breed, and their flesh, though it seems wicked to kill them for the table, is delicious. So they can justly claim a practical value aside from mere appearances which are so much in their favor that one does not stop to inquire "do they pay?"

The very prettiest sight, without exception, that we have ever seen in the line of thoroughbred poultry was a large collection of bantams, numbering one hundred and fifty, all in one flock, of a half dozen varieties, and puzzling us to tell which was the most cute and beautiful birdling in the lot.

POULTRY NOTES

Be sure the coops are all free from lice and filth.

Corn is not good for an exclusive diet in hot weather.

The greatest loss in the poultry yard comes from disease and vermin.

Hens are a nuisance on the farm only when they are not well cared for.

If you expect your hens to lay during winter you must look after their wants.

A pasture that has some low, swampy land is an excellent place to pasture ducks and geese.

In selecting a site for the poultry buildings it pays to study carefully the matter from all sides.

When a hen does not respond properly to good care and feeding it is a fair sign that she is not "cut out" for profit in the poultry yard.

Get rid of some of the roosters that are now worrying the hens to no good purpose. They are deadlocks and eat up the profits of the flocks.

In getting ready for the winter season we must see that all nests are cleaned out, and all buildings repaired, and the pigeon loft generally cleaned and overhauled.

Hunt up private customers and agree to sell them strictly fresh eggs—then do it. A good price should be secured and payment will be made in cash instead of groceries.

It is advantageous to have extra males kept alone and thus change the males in the pens. This gives a chance for rest and results in a large percentage of fertile eggs.

White fowls intended for show purposes can be much improved in color of plumage by keeping them in the shade as much as possible while they are just finishing their molt.

It seldom pays to doctor a sick chicken, for even if cured it seldom amounts to anything, besides entailing a risk of communicating the disease to the whole flock. Use the ax.

The molting hens should be given special housing away from wet and wind and fed a little oil meal and sunflower seeds. These furnish oil which is very beneficial to the molting fowls.

John Lind will make twenty speeches in the state for James Gray for governor. That had ought to help some.

It is now very evident that the Red Lake River can not be depended on to furnish any water power this winter, unless the outlet of Red Lake into the river is dredged out. With the present stage of water the river will be frozen to the bottom by the first day of January. There is plenty of water in Red Lake, but it will stay there if the outlet is not opened.

County Attorney Wilhiem Michelet is making a strong campaign for reelection, notwithstanding he is a resident of Thief River Falls and is U. S. Commissioner for that district. If he was as sure of county division as some of the divisionists there would be no use for him to run for county attorney of Red Lake county. Straws tells which way the wind blows.

The Pennington county official slate is about made up so as to be ready to hang on the wall next month. From them that are on the "inside" we got the following list. Auditor, 6 applicants from Thief River Falls. Treasurer, Andrew Trovaton. Regist of deeds Wm. Swanson, of Deer Park. Probate Judge, E.L. Quist, which would be enough to make the dead turn over in the grave. Sheriff, L. A. Nelson. Clerk of Court, Alfred Hammersteen. Superintendent of schools Prof. Hay. Now we promised not to tell who told us this, and not to "tell" anabody, so do not ask for any further information.

According to the returns from the primaries throughout the state, the county option candidates were defeated in a great many cases and the chances are the next legislature will be stronger against county option than the last one. The trouble with the county option in many cases is that they have but one idea. and the voters are to broad gauged to support those kind of candidates.—Thief River News.

They are not to broad guaged to support the one idea candidate in the 61st, district, If he has a good big bank rool behind him. Shame on you John to publish such an editorial as that, after supporting A L. Hanson for senator.

A GOOD POSITION

Can be had by ambitious young men and ladies in the field of "wireless" or railway telegraphy. Since the 8- hour law became effective, and since the wireless companies are establishing stations throughout the country there is a great shortage of telegraphers. Positions pay beginners from $70 to $90 per month, with good chance of advancement. The National Telegraph Institute operates six official institutes in America, under supervision of R.R. and Wireless officials and places all graduates into positions. It will pay you to write them for full details at Devenport, Iowa, Cincinnati, O., Portland Ore., or Memphis Tenn.

Death Of Ray Arndt.

The sad news was received here on Friday last that the lifeless body of Ray Arndt had been found on the side of the railroad track near Iron Mound a mining town north of Hibbing. Mr. Henry Arndt received a telagram last Wednesday morning that Ray was sick and he left for there at once but was to late to be of any service to Ray, Who had been found dead the morning before. Ray Arndt had been working with the same company for three years, as an expert mechanic, and about a week before his death had been feeling sick althou not considering his illness searions, until Tuesday morning Sept. 27th, when he decided to come home and visit his parents. He was at Iron Moundon Tuesday afternoon, and it is supposed that he went to visit some friends near there as that was the last seen of him until Wednesday morning, when his body was found, having the appearance that he had been killed by the cars the evening before. The remains were prepared for shipment to Thief River by the company that he had been employed by and they sent a man with Mr. Arndt to Thief River Falls, to assist him with the care of the remains.

Funeral services were held at Thief River Falls on Saturday morning at 10 o'clock A.M. under the auspice of the I.O.O.F. Lodge.

Ray came up here at the opening of the eleven towns and took a claim on section 20 in this township, ajoining his father Henry Arndts, and made his home here for nearly three years He was a young man that was highly respected by all who knew him and his sudden and unexpected death casts a gloom over the entire neighborhood, who will all join in extending to the bereaved family their sincere and heartfelt sympathy.

The magnate looked up impatiently from his work.

"Well, my good man," he snapped at the diffident rural person who stood twirling his rusty hat, "what can I do for you?"

"I guess yo' don't remember me, Hank," faltered the caller. "But you an' me use ter go swimmin' together in th' ol' town. Then you got a job in th' bank, an' I got a job in th' grocery store."

He Had Reformed.

A young man who was an enthusiastic lover of nature went to the seaside for a holiday and, approaching a typical fisherman, said:

"Ah, my friend, how well you must know the face of nature and know it in its many moods! Have you ever seen the sun sinking in such a glare of glory that it swallows up the horizon with fire? Have you not seen the mist gliding down the shrinking hillside like a specter?"

And, very excited and throwing out his arms, he continued:

"Have you never seen, my man, the moon struggling to shake off the ragged, rugged storm cloud?"

The fisherman replied, "No, sir; I have not since I signed the pledge."—Pearson's Weekly.

A Little Ambiguous.

The Ingrahams were entertaining two friends at dinner. After Mr. Ingraham had helped them to roast beef he happened to glance at the other end of the table, where his wife sat, and observed, to his horror, that the sugar bowl was the old one, with both handles broken off, that usually graced the dining table on wash days.

In vain he endeavored by mysterious nods and winks to direct Mrs. Ingraham's attention to it. She either did not see or would not see the mutilated piece of queensware, and his patience gave way at last.

"Cornelia," he said, with some sharpness, "do you think we ought to use a sugar bowl when we have company without ears on?"—Youth's Companion.

Lancashire Humor.

There was a Lancashire collier who went out on Sunday with his wheelbarrow because, as he said, "I've lost mi dog, an' a felly looks sich a foo' gooln' a-walkin' bi hisself."

Then there was the workingmen's club committee which wanted to indorse the accounts "audited and found correct and tuppence over" and the customer who, on being told that the price of candles had gone up owing to the war, asked whether they were "feightin' bi candle leet."

Also one recalls the laggard Lancashire lover who, when asked for a kiss, said he was "gooin' to do it in a bit," and the old ladies who praised a certain Darwin clergyman as "a gran burier," and of the orator who translated "Dieu et mon droit" into "Evil to him what evil thinks!"—"Lancashire Life and Character," by Frank Ormerod.

The Postage Stamp.

Consider the postage stamp. It says nothing regarding the difficulty of the task assigned to it, but by dint of close application it usually gets there; also it delivers the goods.

Again, if one isn't enough to carry the thing through, two or more by working harmoniously together see the thing to a finish.

No matter if the (mail) matter be weighty, it puts a good face (of Washington) on it and goes directly to the point. It gets licked and stamped upon, and men besmirch its fair features and ofttimes give it more to carry than the (postal) union allows. But, in spite of all this, it sticks unflinchingly to the matter in hand by virtue of the fact that it knows that it has good backing.

Its stick-to-it-ivity is worthy of emulation by you.—Judge's Library.

A Victim of Leprosy.

"On my travels in Venezuela," said a New York man, "I stayed in a hotel with a young man in whose family there was the taint of leprosy, though he apparently did not have it. One night sitting at dinner he became angry at a waiter and brought his hand down on the table with full force. He instantly realized that he did not feel the blow and sat looking at his hand, his face whitening with horror. 'Give me your knife, Bob,' he said to his chum. He grabbed the pocketknife in a frenzy and stabbed the side of his hand with vicious cuts from finger tip to wrist. You may not know that leprosy appears in the side of the hand, numbness being a sign. The man did not feel the cuts. He arose from the table, knocking over his chair, rushed out into the courtyard of the hotel, and we heard the quick tang of a revolver shot, telling us how he had conquered the leper's curse by ending his life."—New York Times.

Mythical Horses.

Pegasus ("born near the source of the ocean") was the winged horse of Apollo and the Muses. Bellerophon rode this animal when he charged the Chimera.

Sleipnir ("the black horse of Odin had eight legs and could carry his master on sea as well as land. This animal is believed to typify the wind which blows from eight different points.

Al Borak ("the lightning") was the horse commissioned by Gabriel to carry Mohammed to the seventh heaven He had a human face and the wings of an eagle. Every step he took was equal to the farthest range of human vision.

A Japanese Anthem.

The majority of national anthems are not conspicuous for beauty, either of words or music. The only one composed by a musician of the very first rank is the Austrian anthem, for which Haydn is responsible. And in no country has the composition of a really great poet been adopted except in Norway, where Bjornson's stirring lines beginning "Yes, we love this country," serve as the national anthem. The Japanese have a daintily worded anthem which Captain Brinkley translates as follows:

Until this grain of sand,
Tossed by each wavelet's freak,
Grows to a cloud girt peak,
Towering above the land;
Until the dewy flake
Beading this blossom's gold
Swell to a mighty lake—
Age upon age untold,
Joy to joy manifold,

The Red Lake River is so low that they are fording it with teams and it will soon be so low that you can jump across it, but lots of the people still persist in voting the county option ticket.

Miss Milded Hooper, who is teaching school in this district, received a message from Madison Wis. on Saturday last. that her brother was dangerously ill, for her to come at once. She left for there on Saturday, and expects to be absent two weeks.

Judgeing by the awful wail that went up from the Eleven Towns last week some of the politicians must have beat poor John out of his hire. You want to watch some of them ducks, John, that you are doing business with and make them produce the nickle before you deliver the codfish. Of course Eastman and Quist takes the hide and let you have the oxtail soup. They get the dollars, and you get the "sound." That's what we call a sound dollar.

Andrew Nelson and two of his hired men were seairiously injured by the explosion of babit metal at Highlanding last Friday morning. They poured hot metal into a wet clay box and anyone that ever haudeld hot babit knows the result. One man was taken to the Thief River Falls hospital. and will loose the sight of one eye and Mr. Nelson and one, althou badly burned were not so badly injured.

To Dredge The River.

Grand Forks, Crookston and Thief River Falls are going to unite in opening the outlet to to Red Lake. There is big sand bar at the sourse of Red Lake river that is holding back the water, and if it is not dredged out there will not be any water runing in the river this winter. If the river can be raised 16 or 18 inches the river would flow all winter, and it is up to the cities to either open up the outlet, or have the river go dry.

POLITICAL DOINGS.

It has been stated that G L Hanson filed for state senator, for the purpose of making political capitol for A. L. Hanson, in fact it looks like a Quist scheme.

Some farmers that go to Thief River Falls now days meet all kinds of office seekers, who are loaded to the muzzle with red hot county division air, but the farmer should stop and consider that they are talking for office, while he must pay the expenses.

Jessie Labree was up through Highlanding yesterday advising the farmers how to vote on county division. He would not make a bad looking county official, and was undoubtly chosen to "work" Highlanding, owing to his success in working that road grader deal.

A Deer Park farmer made the remark to us the other day, that if that old city hall, in Thief River Falls was given to Pennington county, that it would accidently catch fire and burn down in less than a year—and the next thing would be a new court house a little better than the one in Red Lake Falls.

It looks as if Latimore had been doing political work on credit, and has got beat out of his pay. Now take our advice John, and be sure to present, and colect your bills for publishing that county division "dope" before November 8th, as that is the date that Eastman and Quist will loot the treasurey. You have worked hard for your money and should have it,

The next state senate will be overwhelmingly opposed to any county option law, which leaves this district with the same as no representation at all, and it may defeat reapportionment of the state, as the other fellows will naturaly conclude that, if that is the kind of men you are going to send to the state senate, the fewer of them we have the better for the welfare of the state. Albert Berg was entitled to that nomination, but was lied out of it, and after old Hanson comes home with his empty pork barrel next spring we hope to live to have the satisfaction of saying: "we told you so."

The maps that have been sent out of the proposed Pennington county has caused the farmers of Deer Park and Mayfield to sit up and take notice One noticed that his fathers farm would be in one county and his in an other. Another one has noticed that his children will be going to school in one county, while he was paying taxes and living in an other county. It is a bad mix up, but mabe it could be staightend out as we know a man down in the southern part of Deer Park, who has that yearning, all gone feeling of his bowels for county office, and they can send Quist out to tell him that he could have the county auditors office in Pennington county. The man would live in old Red Lake county, but that would not make any differerce to Quist, as it proved in the primary campaign, that he would tell or publish any thing, and in addition sware to all the lies told by others to gain votes. Send Quist out.

The most popular joke which has been published in any language in the history of the world is stated to be that which appeared in an obscure corner of the Punch almanac for 1845. Another, founded on a similar subject, was the "Advice to persons who have 'fallen in love'—Fall out!" Trees That Explode.

All lightning blasted trees explode as overcharged boilers do. The flame of the lightning does not burn them up, nor does the electric flash split them like an ax. They simply explode, overcharged, as may be a boiler with steam. The lightning is conducted into the damp interstices of the trunk and into the hollows under the bark. Its tremendous heat at once turns all the moisture in those cramped spaces into steam. This steam in its immediate explosion blows the tree asunder.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The Persistency of Colds.

Why is it that we are so heavily subject to colds? Other epidemic diseases—measles, typhoid, scarlet fever, diphtheria—may get hold on us once and there is an end; it is not usual to have any of them twice. We brew in our blood immunity. The poison of the disease evokes in us its proper antidote. Our blood cells make a sort of natural antitoxin and keep it in stock, so that we are henceforth protected against the disease. A well vaccinated nurse, for example, works with safety in a smallpox hospital, where the very air is infective, but her blood is so changed by vaccination that the smallpox cannot affect her. By scarlet fever, again, we are, as it were, vaccinated against scarlet fever. The reaction of our blood against the disease immunizes us. No such result follows influenza or a common cold. We brew nothing that is permanent. We are just as susceptible to a later invasion as we were to the invasion that is just over.—London Spectator.

The Festive Codfish.

A correspondent of the New York Post says that the codfish frequents "the tablelands of the sea." The codfish no doubt does this to secure as nearly as possible a dry, bracing atmosphere. This pure air of the submarine tablelands gives to the codfish that breadth of chest and depth of lungs that we have so often noticed. The glad, free smile of the codfish is largely attributed to the exhilaration of this oceanic altitoodleum. The correspondent further says that the "codfish subsists largely on the sea cherry." Those who have not had the pleasure of seeing the codfish climb the cherry tree in search of food or clubbing the fruit from the heavily laden branches with chunks of coral have missed a very fine sight. The codfish when at home rambling through the submarine forests does not wear his vest unbuttoned as he does while loafing around the grocery stores of the United States. —Bill Nye.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

BABY'S SKIN TORTURE

"When our baby was seven weeks old he broke out with what we thought was heat, but which gradually grew worse. We called in a doctor. He said it was eczema and from that time we doctored six months with three of the best doctors in Atchison but he only got worse. His face, head and hands were a solid sore. There was no end to the suffering for him. We had to tie his little hands to keep him from scratching. He never knew what it was to sleep well from the time he took the disease until he was cured. He kept us awake all hours of the night and his health wasn't what you would call good. We tried everything but the right thing.

"Finally I got a set of the Cuticura Remedies and I am pleased to say we did not use all of them until he was cured. We have waited a year and a half to see if it would return but it never has and to-day his skin is clear and fair as it possibly could be. I hope Cuticura may save some one else's little ones suffering and also their pocket-books. John Leason, 1403 Atchison St., Atchison, Kan., Oct. 19, 1909."

His First Lesson in Economy.

"When I was a very small boy and a dime looked pretty big to me, I met John H. Farley—who had always been my good friend—on the street one June day," says Frank Harris.

"'Frank,' he said, 'the Fourth of July is coming soon. You'll want some change then. Let me be your banker until then and you'll have some money for firecrackers, torpedoes, lemonade and peanuts.'

"I emptied my pockets into his hand and every day thereafter until the Fourth I turned over to him my small earnings. When the day of days came around I had a fund that enabled me to celebrate in proper style, while many of my playmates were flat broke. It was my first lesson in thrift, and it was a good one. Hundreds of Cleveland people would be glad today to testify to the fact that when John H. Farley was a friend of a man or a boy he was a friend indeed."—Cleveland Leader.

Good Advice, but——

A traveler entered a railway carriage at a wayside station. The sole occupants of the compartment consisted of an old lady and her son, about twelve years old. The traveler intervened and suggested putting him under the seat.

"Man," said the excited woman, "it's as shair as daith; but there's twa under the sait a'ready!"

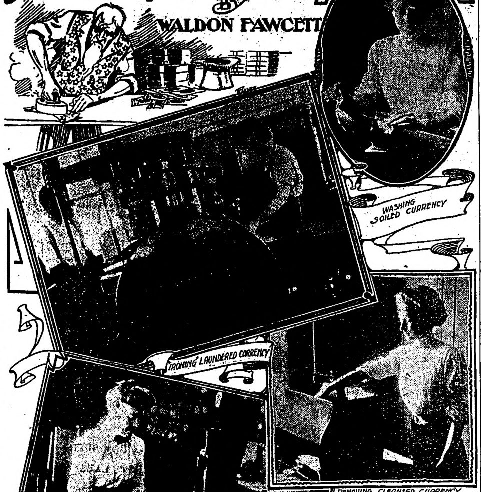
Laundering Our Paper Money

By WALDON FAWCETT



WASHING SOILED CURRENCY

IRONING LAUNDERED CURRENCY

REMOVING CLEANSED CURRENCY FROM THE WASHER

STARCHING LAUNDERED CURRENCY

PACKING LAUNDERED CURRENCY

THE treasury department at Washington has just completed a series of novel experiments and as a result of the outcome thereof is about to enter on a new activity which is to prove one of the most interesting as well as one of the most effective economies introduced during the present era of retrenchment in Uncle Sam's administrative affairs. The innovation is nothing short of a scheme for laundering our currency. All the processes of washing, starching and ironing will be carried out just as though the articles to be cleansed were linen garments instead of linen paper. The effect of this scheme for freshening the currency, when once the government's plant is in full operation, will be to more than double the normal life of our paper circulating medium and to save the government considerably more than $1,000,000 per year.

That paper money can be washed successfully is not, of course, an entirely new discovery. From time to time in years gone by individuals on their own initiative have sought to cleanse dirty bank notes with soap and water. The importance of the experiments lately carried on by the government, however, lies in the fact that proof has been gained that paper money can be washed, not as an occasional bank note, receiving individual attention, but on a wholesale scale. Equally important is the finding that this rejuvenation can be accomplished cheaply, and finally there is a third triumph for present-day experiment in demonstration that laundered currency can be given the "body" and "surface" that is responsible for the crisp, crackly qualifications that endear "new money" to many people.

The treasury officials hope soon to have in full operation a laundry plant—located at the United States bureau of engraving and printing at Washington—which will be capable of giving a new lease of life to soiled and wrinkled currency at the rate of 100,000 bills per day. Present estimates are that this premier money laundry of the world can be operated at an expense not exceeding $20 per day—that is with an outlay of one-fiftieth of a cent for each bill laundered. Even in the preliminary experiments the cost has not exceeded one-tenth of a cent per note laundered, and inasmuch as it costs 1 1-3 cents to print each new note produced at the bureau it can readily be appreciated that the saving will be tremendous. At the outset only the bills of small denomination—that is, the $1, $2 and $5 notes and certificates, will be cleansed. These, being the bills that are subjected to the greatest wear and tear in circulation, are the shortest-lived.

The question will naturally present itself to the reader as to what proportion of the whole volume of our circulating medium can be laundered. The officials answer that about four-fifths of all the money sent back to the treasury for redemption is fit to go out for further circulation if properly cleaned. Supposedly worn-out money pours into the treasury to be exchanged for new currency at a rate of more than 220,000,000 bills per year. The investigations which have been made by a special committee appointed by the secretary of the treasury disclose that fully 80 per cent. of this is not torn or tattered, or in reality shows any sign of wear, but has been turned back by the banks simply because it is wrinkled or limp and dirty. All of this 80 per cent. of the currency could be laundered and the experiments seem to indicate that there is no reason why each bill should not be laundered repeatedly. The present normal life of a one-dollar bill is one year and three months and this will be doubled if it is not tripled, resulting, of course, in a proportionate saving in the expenditure for labor and material in printing new money.

The experiments which the treasury experts have been carrying on has been to determine the best and most economical method of laundering money rather than to try out different chemical formulas for the cleansing. As a matter of fact this latter part of the undertaking has followed the simplest lines. Plain soap and water, the former a good grade of potash soap, are the standbys of the government laundrymen who have undertaken the currency washing task. It may be that ultimately the cleansing compound will be combined with a preparation designed to sterilise the money while it is being washed, thus setting at rest the fears of those persons who are nervous about the germs on paper money, but the officials have not yet definitely decided that they will purify the currency as well as restore its pristine freshness. After the money has been washed it is rinsed and is then dried by artificial heat.

From this point—that is, all the finishing processes—are identical with those followed in the case of newly printed currency, but special machinery has had to be provided because the unit to be handled in every instance is a single bill instead of a sheet of four bills, as in the case of the new money. From the drying room the washed bills go to the "sizing" room, where what might be termed the "starching" process takes place. This consists in passing each bill, by machinery, through a bath of alum and glue which restores the "body" which has been lost during the washing. Next the bills are packed between sheets of cardboard and are then subjected to the "ironing." This consists of pressure between the rollers of a powerful press just as the flat pieces in the ordinary steam laundry are run through a mangle. The operation not only renders the laundered money perfectly flat but imparts to it the distinctive surface or finish of new money.

Already the treasury officials have planned that if the laundry at the headquarters at Washington proves as successful and economical as it promises to do, similar laundries will be installed at all the subtreasuries throughout the country. Moreover, Uncle Sam is going to encourage banks, or associations of bankers in the more remote cities of the country to establish their own laundries for washing currency instead of sending it to Washington for redemption, as is the present plan. It is calculated that a money laundry of modest capacity can be installed at a cost as low as $500 to $700, and it is figured that banks in many cities would save this in a few months. Of course the government redeems without charge all the worn-out currency sent in by the banks, but the banks must pay the express charges both ways on the currency, and it is figured that the express charges for many such institutions far exceed the outlay that would be required for the operation of a money laundry. One Chicago bank that sends a cart load of currency to the treasury every few days pays thousands of dollars a year in transportation charges. With a view to further aiding the banks that decide to launder their own currency the treasury department is planning to make public all its laundry receipes and formulas when it has been determined by the present tests just what are the best ingredients for cleansing, bleaching and sterilizing the money. The bleaching, it may be added is one process that requires the exercise of care lest the money in the wash be injured.

ALLIGATOR SHOOTS CHUTES.

The very last creature that the average man would select as a trick animal is the huge, sluggish alligator, yet even that deliberate brute can sometimes hit a swift pace. It has even been trained to shoot the chutes with easy grace.

The feat is performed regularly at on alligator farm in California, the big saurian waddling up the incline at the other side and sliding down

At this novel farm there are 500 or more specimens, ranging in size from the huge bull to the newly hatched, lizard-like youngsters. They are raised for their hides, although the sale of the little fellows for "pets" and the admission to the grounds help swell the profits of this unusual business.—Scientific American.

KENTUCKY CHIVALRY

For once in his life a Kentucky colonel found himself in a queer predicament because of his courtly politeness extended previously to a young woman at the reception tendered by the Knights Templar of his state. Past Commander Shackelford of Kentucky was the man who suffered the unhappy quarter hour.

Answering a telephone call at the Congress hotel he heard a sweet voice saying:

"Oh, Colonel Shackelford, I am going away this afternoon. You are going to say good-by to me, aren't you?"

"I certainly am," replied Colonel Shackelford, "though I am most sorry to hear that you are going away. (Who in thunder can she be?)"

"You remember me, don't you?"

"Indeed, it would be quite impossible to forget you. (Ye gods! Who is she? Help, help!)"

"You know you said that I was the most charming girl you had met in Chicago."

"And I never retract anything I say. I was sure of it when I said it. I am surer of it now. (Say, this is awful.)"

"Well, I expect to meet some friends in the parlor in half an hour, and I shall hope to see you. Now don't forget. Good-by."

"Good-by. I shall be there. Good-by."

First he importuned some other Kentuckians, after pledging them to secrecy, but they could not help him and one said:

"Why, Shackelford, you said the same thing to about a dozen women at the reception."

So at the appointed time Colonel Shackelford went forth to the parlor, and when he returned his face was wreathed in smiles.

"How about it?" was the anxious query.

"Gentlemen, as a member of the Masonic fraternity and as a southern gentleman—let us talk about the weather." Then he smiled some more.

WHITE RAINBOW A RARITY.

What is known as a white rainbow is an extremely rare phenomenon. It was observed at the Montouris observatory at Paris by M. Louis Besson. It was an almost colorless bow and was seen at 2:10 p. m., dying out and then reappearing at 3:15, reaching a maximum brightness at 3:25, then disappearing five minutes later. The bow had about three degrees width and was not a pure white, but somewhat tinged with rose color at the outer edge and violet at the inner. The angular height of the summit was 40 degrees 8 minutes on the average. There have been often observed in the mountains of the polar regions white bows upon fogs or clouds composed of liquid drops.

The explanation of this phenomenon, known as the "Ulloa circle," was given by Mascart. It is only a special case of the general theory of the rainbow as given by Airy, which allows of supposing a mixture of the colors so as to approach white, at the same time as a widening of the arc and a diminution of the radius, when the diameter of the drops becomes smaller and comes near to 41 u.—Scientific American.

BALKS EFFORTS OF INVENTORS.

Machinery plays little part in the glass trade. Visitors to glassworks have time and again remarked upon the apparent awkwardness and antiquity of the processes employed. Inventors have for a long time exercised their wits to devise machinery calculated to supersede the glassblower's lungs, but to no avail.

DOCTOR ADVISED OPERATION

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Galena, Kans.—"A year ago last March I fell, and a few days after there was soreness in my right side. In a short time a bunch came and it bothered me so much at night I could not sleep. It kept growing larger and by fall it was as large as a hen's egg. I could not go to bed without a hot water bottle applied to that side. I had one of the best doctors in Kansas and he told my husband that I would have to be operated on as it was something like a tumor caused by a rupture. I wrote to you for advice and you told me not to get discouraged but to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did take it and soon the lump in my side broke and passed away."—Mrs. R. R. Huey, 718 Mineral Ave., Galena, Kans.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has proved to be the most successful remedy for curing the worst forms of female ills, including displacements, inflammation, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result has been worth millions to many suffering women.

Not Even an Earthquake

By M. J. PHILLIPS

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

"Tell you what," said Tergott, "let's fire twenty shots apiece. Low score digs out and leaves a clear field to the other fellow. What you say?"

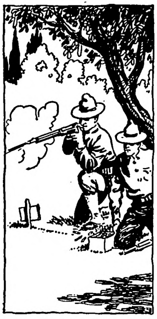
Disbrow said nothing for a time. He was considering his friend's proposition. They were both in love with Belle McNee. Though they had worked side by side for a year, that fact had never been referred to before.

Tergott was fair-haired and blue-eyed. One looked at him and supposed Tergott to be frank and straightforward, whereas he was crafty and unreliable. Thin, dark, Disbrow was also belied by his looks. At first glance strangers thought him sly, whereas he was only shy. He had no genius of inventiveness or brilliancy—but he had a way of carrying through what he began.

The young men were mechanical draftsmen in a big western plant. The superintendent thought they were great. Tergott gave off bright ideas as a fire gives off sparks, but he could not snare them with practicality. Working on a Tergott idea, Disbrow pegged away until the thing was done, to the glory of the superintendent among his superiors. They were a handy pair to have around.

They were enthusiastic national guardsmen, and every Saturday half-holiday found them on the rifle range at practise. Just now they were lying on the thousand-yard point. Three-fifths of a mile away the thirty-six inch bull's eye wavered in the heat mirage, a minute black speck that often seemed to wink out for a moment.

The rivals were both clever riflemen; but Drisbrow was off form today. As he strained his eyes and froze his muscles at the moment of firing, a disquieting vision would float into his mind—a vision of last night, when Tergott and pretty Belle McNee strolled down the street together as he came to call. A man cannot shoot well when a girl's eyes stare the bull's-eye out of countenance, and tendrils of soft brown hair twist themselves about his trigger finger. Cupid knows all about arrows, but he is a stranger to bullets.



Tergott Was Heartily Sick of the Contest.

Tergott, the quick, had noted his friend's abstraction and poor marksmanship, guessed the reason, and so made his espochal proposition. He wanted Disbrow out of the way. He knew better than Disbrow himself how deep an impression that youth had made on Belle McNee.

He rolled over on his back and looked nonchalantly up at the sky, while Disbrow was coming to a decision. A fierce anxiety was surging in the brain behind his comely face. He was afraid Disbrow would not accept his challenge; and he did not relish future months of rivalry. True to his nature, he wanted to hurry through the stress.

Disbrow pondered silently. He did not attribute unworthiness to Tergott. He believed his friend and rival had challenegd impulsively, never dreaming that Tergott was taking an unfair advantage of his temporary lapse from form. He thought deeply.

Finally, as Tergott was almost ready to yell from sheer nervous suspense, he said: "I'll take you, Bob."

So the momentous match began. They fired alternately Tergott started brilliantly; his first four shots were bull's-eyes. Disbrow, unsteady, gradually pulled himself together. He crept toward the "bull." The fifth shot was in the black.

When half the twenty shots had been fired, Tergott was heartily sick of the contest. He was still shooting well. But Disbrow was better. The gravity of the occasion sent abstraction flying and cleared his troubled brain.

On the twelfth shot Tergott began to slip. It was not in him to go through to the end. On the fourteenth, he lost the lead. His twentieth effort left him a margin of three points only against the last shot of Disbrow. A four would beat him, and Disbrow had been getting fives steadily. Unless a miracle intervened, he was beaten.

A miracle did intervene. Disbrow choked down his breathing and the beating of his heart. His aim was perfect. But just as his finger squeezed the trigger, the sun-browned hills began to blur. The ground crept and trembled sickeningly. A baby earthquake was upon them.

Disbrow tried instinctively to release his pressure on the trigger; but his brain could not get the message to his fingers quickly enough. Just previously it had signaled the muscles to contract. As the 'quake joggled the muzzle of his rifle off the target, they did contract. The shot went wild.

The trembling was over in a few seconds. The frightened markers returned to the pit from which they had fled. In due time they signaled to the pair lying pale and thoughtful on the firing line. Disbrow had lost by three points.

He knew, and Tergott knew, that he had not lost fairly. The firing regulations do not intend that the riflemen shall buck earthquakes. But Tergott, the adroit, said quickly:

"Too bad about that miss. The wind veered just before you fired But you beat the earthquake."

Disbrow looked at him curiously, with a lonesome ache at his heart. A man is likely to feel bereft when he has lost faith in a friend.

Tergott took it for granted that everything was settled. He began to talk regretfully of Disbrow's early departure from New Vista. Next day he wrote to Spokane and got his rival a place with better pay. By subtle suggestion he set Disbrow's departure a scant two weeks ahead.

Disbrow had lost a friend and a sweetheart, and the one hurt almost as much as the other. He tried to ease the latter wound by telling him self philosophically that Belle McNee had never really been his sweetheart. They had been friends, and he had taken her to the beach and the theater. But she was friendly with Tergott, and went to places with him, too. Disbrow had intended telling her, when he had $400 saved up, that he loved her.

But that was all off now. He had made a bargain with Tergott, and was going through with it. That Tergott was not playing fairly did not release him from responsibility.

The night before his going-away day he went up to the little Mission street house where Belle McNee lived with her invalid mother. The girl was wholesomely, daintily sweet, and she managed to make the tiny, spotless home reflect her own characteristics, despite the fact that she worked all day as bookkeeper in a department store.

They sat on the porch and watched the stars. Belle did not talk much, and when she did it was with a queer flippancy that made Disbrow uncomfortable. It wasn't an occasion for flippancy.

It was 11 o'clock before he got up to go. They shook hands, the girl with a few jesting words that grieved Disbrow. There was a hard little smile on her face, as he could see by the rays of the electric light on the corner. His throat choked up; he could hardly get out the word "Good-by." But he did, somehow.

At the gate he jumped as if someone had stuck a pin in him. For a voice was speaking to him, a strange, broken, yearning little voice, half-tears—a voice that sent a million mad prickles along his skin.

"Tommy," it said, "I know. I—I made him tell me. Tommy, you silly boy, you aren't going to let a little old earthquake beat you?"

Tommy went back in three bounds and gathered her to him hungrily, while her arms went round his neck. He kissed her hair and her wet cheeks and her lips as he said, over and over: "Sweetheart, sweetheart, sweetheart! Not even an earthquake—not even an earthquake!"

Asking Too Much.

"Minister Maura has given Spain the worst government she ever knew!" exclaimed Pablo Iglesais, the fiery socialist leader, in the Cortes some months ago. This recalls an expression of an under secretary of the state of the time of Canovas:

"Spain asked of God a fertile soil. He has given her a soil in which to ripen all the best fruits of the earth. Spain asked God for beautiful women. He has given her the beautiful daughters of Granada and Seville. Spain asked God to give her rich and inexhaustible mineral treasures. He has given a profusion of mines. But when Spain asked God to give her good government he responded: 'What! Have I not given everything—a fertile soil, beautiful women, magnificent mineral treasures? And now you ask a good government! This is too much!'"—From le Cride Faris.

Mean of the Paper.

"I never was so provoked in my life."

"What is the matter, my love?"

"The paper this morning has an article concerning my new necklace, and gives the value of it at the figure I named to the customs inspector when we reached New York. I feel like dying of mortification."

EVERS' CAREER WAS CHANCE

Got Started When Regular Shortstop of Troy Team Failed to Report for Duty in Spring.

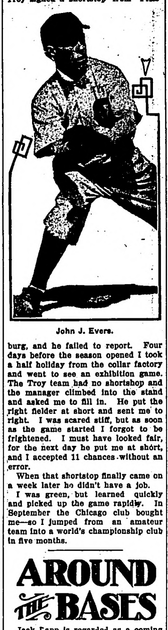
BY JOHN J. EVERS.

(Copyright, 1910, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

If the short stop of the Troy (N. Y.) team had reported for duty at the opening of one season the chances are I never would have been a professional ball player. I might have made a fair collar finisher, or sign painter. As a boy in vacations I worked in a collar factory and also learned to letter signs. They say I was good at it, but possibly I would have been better if I had not liked to play ball so well. I played noons and evenings from the time I was ten years old, and never lost a chance. The first success I had was when I was made captain and pitcher of the Sheer Ups.

I never had any idea of playing ball professionally, because I did not like the idea of leaving home, and my family did not like it a bit better. Still, I had quite a local reputation in Troy, in spite of which I never thought I was good enough to play on a real professional team. In summer I watched the state league teams play and used to say to myself: "I could do better than that myself," but of course I did not dare to say that out loud.

The spring I was eighteen years old Troy signed a shortstop from Pittsburg, and he failed to report. Four days before the season opened I took a half holiday from the collar factory and went to see an exhibition game. The Troy team had no shortshop and the manager climbed into the stand and asked me to fill in. He put the right fielder at short and sent me to right. I was scared stiff, but as soon as the game started I forgot to be frightened. I must have looked fair, for the next day he put me at short, and I accepted 11 chances without an error.



John J. Evers.

When that shortstop finally came on a week later he didn't have a job.

I was green, but learned quickly and picked up the game rapidly. In September the Chicago club bought me—so I jumped from an amateur team into a world's championship club in five months.

AROUND THE BASES

Jack Lapp is regarded as a coming catcher, and he will undoubtedly get a chance to work some of the games in the world's series.

Leo McGraw, the Memphis catcher that was secured by the Chicago American league club in the draft recently is a distant relative of Muggsy of the Giants. He lives in Cleveland and played in Salem and Youngstown, O., before going to the Southern league.

Manager McAleer of the Senators says he will have about forty players with him on next spring's training trip. Manager Jim is determined to land Washington higher up in the race next year than he has this year, judging from the campaign he is mapping out.

President Stanley Robison of the Cardinals was a bitter opponent of the proposed all-star post-season tour killed the other day by the national commission. When Catcher Bliss, one of the valuable members of last year's St. Louis team, got his leg broken in that California tour last fall Robison lost his enthusiasm for post-season sessions.

John Heydler, secretary of the National league, will have several new tables of averages this fall. He will show the number of times each player has struck out, the number of times each man walked and the number of times each man was hit by a pitched ball. He will have two sets of averages for the pitchers also, to show how many games each pitcher has won and lost.

President Herrmann of the Reds says he does not know yet whether he will let the contract for building the new grand stand this fall or next, but when he gets thinking over the possibility of the Reds winning the pennant next year, and needing the room for the world's series, he will decide to put up the new plant this fall. The seating capacity of the new Red home will be 28,000.

Ethel—Weren't you surprised when you heard about my horse running away with me?

Ernest—Not very. I'd do the same thing myself if I got the chance.

Now They Sleep Indoors.

George H. Beattie, jeweler in the old Arcade, and L. E. Ralston, auditor of the News, have jointly and severally decided that sleeping out in the open isn't all that it has been declared to be, says the Cleveland Leader. They were both in a deep snooze out at the Beattie farm, near Chagrin Falls, the other night, when a runaway team from the county fair city turned into the lane leading up to the Beattie estate and came along at full speed.

Sound asleep, but dreaming of impending danger, Ralston rolled out of his cot toward the north, and Beattie from his cot toward the south. The runaway horses dashed between the sleepers, oversetting everything in the way, but missing Beattie and Ralston by margins too narrow to be measured. Since that night Ralston has slept in his town house and Beattie has found shelter under the ample roof of his house on his big plantation.

Points to Good Future.

Seven poor children, four girls and three boys, all about ten years old, went to a nearby seashore resort, in charge of two women, for a day's outing. The funds for the picnic were provided by two boys who sell papers and who live in one of the two houses from which the excursion party was recruited. One of the women in charge of the children said that the boys had arranged the outing "of their own accord, and the remarkable thing is this: They are not good boys by any means and one of them is probably the naughtiest boy in the neighborhood. But we think that when boys do little things like this they will come out all right."—New York Tribune.

Why He Wouldn't Hurry.

They were riding to church and were late. Several of the party were worried and one remarked: "The audience will be waiting." "Well," observed the old pastor (who was to preach that forenoon), "don't let's fret over it if we are a little late. It reminds me of the man who was being taken to execution. His guards were greatly exercised over the fact that they could not possibly get there on time. 'Never mind,' said the poor fellow, philosophically. 'Don't fuss over it. The people can wait. There'll be nothing doing till I get there.'"—Christian Herald.

Flirting With Fashion.

That innate tendency on the part of the fair consumer to flirt with fashion, playing fast and loose with various commodities, is responsible for the uncertainties that have prevailed during the month. There was such a lack of confidence as to the ultimate acceptance of the various lines prepared by distributers and consumers that buying was somewhat minimized. Prosperity or adversity has nothing to do with the millinery business. Fashion alone makes or breaks.—Millinery Trade Review.

Woman's Power Over Man

Woman's most glorious endowment is the power to awaken and hold the pure and honest love of a worthy man. When she loses it and still loves on, no one in the wide world can know the heart agony she endures. The woman who suffers from weakness and derangement of her special womanly organism soon loses the power to sway the heart of a man. Her general health suffers and she loses her good looks, her attractiveness, her amiability and her power and prestige as a woman. Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N.Y., with the assistance of his staff of able physicians, has prescribed for and cured many thousands of women. He has devised a successful remedy for woman's ailments. It is known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is a positive specific for the weaknesses and disorders peculiar to women. It purifies, regulates, strengthens and heals. THE TOAD OUR BEST FRIEND

by EDWARD B. CLARK

COPYRIGHT BY W.A. PATTERSON

UNCLE SAM'S scientists have had more than one good word to say for the toad. Several government publications have been issued, I am told, telling about the toad and its good work. There is no department in nature which is overlooked by the scientists of Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson's department. If it is believed by the experts that any benefit may come to the people of the United States by the study of the habits of a particular animal, that animal is studied forthwith and studied carefully.

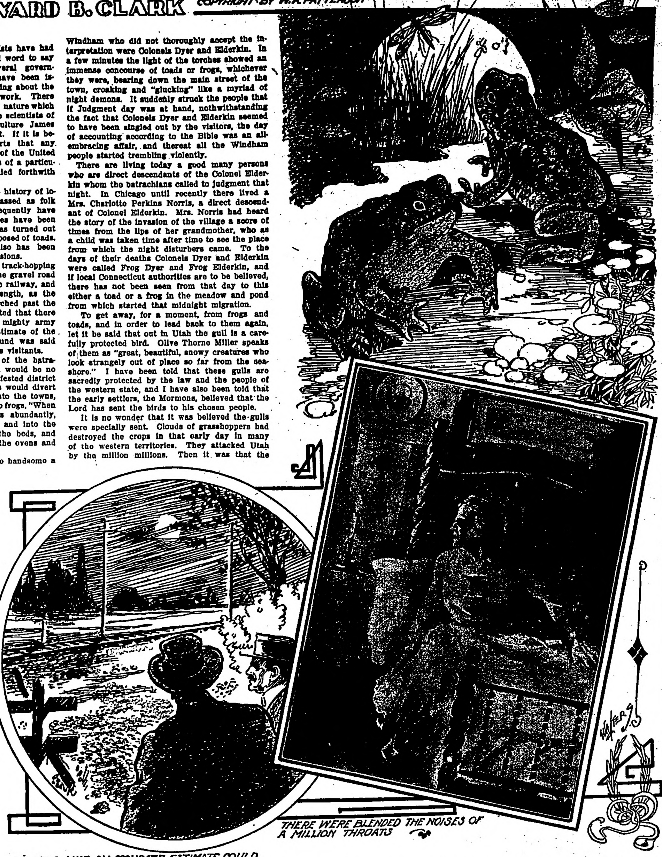
In folk lore history and in the history of localities which hardly can be classed as folk lore, the frog and the toad frequently have been confused; sometimes stories have been told of frog visitations and it has turned out that the invading army was composed of toads. The reverse of the statement also has been found to be true on several occasions.

Some years ago an army of track-hopping tramp toads took possession of the gravel road bed of the Sioux City and Pacific railway, and in unbroken column miles in length, as the local story had it, the toads marched past the town of Blencoe, Iowa. It is stated that there were so many millions in this mighty army that nothing like an accurate estimate of the toads could be made. The ground was said to be brown with the color of its visitants.

If there was such an army of the batrachians as it is said there was it would be no wonder if the residents of the infested district might have feared that the toads would divert their course from the railroad into the towns, to repeat Pharaoh's plague of the frogs, "When the rivers brought forth frogs abundantly, which went up into the houses, and into the bed chambers, and even upon the beds, and upon the people, and even into the ovens and into the kneading troughs."

Now the toad is not nearly so handsome a being as is his frog cousin. He never could "a-wooing go" like his green-coated brother, despite the fact that Shakespeare proclaims that his toadship has a jewel in his head. Ugly and venomous, the bard of Avon writes the toad down, and ugly and venomous to the people's mind in many places he is to this day, although in reality he ranks with the birds as one of humanity's best friends. As a matter of fact, it is likely that the brown-skinned army which moved without banners in military array some years ago was on the march to meet the great army of Rocky Mountain locusts which was moving steadily forward in an opposite direction and in General Sherman's words, "Foraging liberally upon the country."

Even though the toads are so harmless and helpful, they perhaps will never get anyone to love them. It must be admitted that appearances are against them. The Iowa people who some years ago were visited by the toads had no reason to arrogate to themselves any particular distinction on account of the visitation, for in scores of instances the animals have appeared in immense bodies, and in some cases, without any intention so to do, they have inaugurated veritable reigns of terror.



NOTHING LIKE AN ACCURATE ESTIMATE COULD BE MADE

THERE WERE BLENDED THE NOISES OF A MILLION THROATS

Years ago, in the little Puritan settlement of Windham, Conn., out of which sprang as many notable American families, perhaps, as have come from any other colonial hamlet, a migration of toads led the people to believe that the tocsin of the last day had been sounded, and they were all summoned, sinners and sinless, to answer at the bar of judgment. Tradition says that the migration which brought this fear upon the people was one of the frogs. Scientists of today lean rather to the toad theory, but it made little difference to the frightened populace which species of batrachian brother it was that brought horror into their midst.

Now it happened that there lived in Windham two colonial colonels, big men and dignified, by names Dyer and Elderkin. It may do no harm at this late day to say that both these military titled gentlemen were more fond of good living, so the story goes, than was perhaps exactly consistent with the strictest Puritan thoughts. Some of the elders of the place, it is said, looked a bit askance at some of the views of Colonels Dyer and Elderkin. There were slaves in that day in Connecticut and Windham held its share.

One peaceful night in May the Windham families retired at their usual hour, not long after "candle light." At midnight they were wrapped in the profoundest slumber, but no sleep however sound could withstand the roar that broke upon that peaceful hamlet in the watches of the night. There were blended the noises of a million throats. It was guttural, harsh and horrible, and it came out of the jetty blackness of midnight. The people of Windham jumped from their beds panic stricken, threw on what clothes they could, and rushed outdoors, many bearing pine torches, which ate little light holes in the inky blackness.

The slaves were prostrated with fear and clung to the knees of their masters. The noise ceased not for an instant, but on the contrary increased with every moment, and then, to the added horror of all, the noise found shape in words which one quick-eared, imaginative woman interpreted into this, all but two of the people accepting the interpretation readily: "Judgment day; Judgment day; Colonel Dyer and Elderkin too, and catch a nigger too."

It is perhaps needless to say that the only two people among the white inhabitants of Windham who did not thoroughly accept the interpretation were Colonels Dyer and Elderkin. In a few minutes the light of the torches showed an immense concourse of toads or frogs, whichever they were, bearing down the main street of the town, croaking and "glucking" like a myriad of night demons. It suddenly struck the people that if Judgment day was at hand, nothwithstanding the fact that Colonels Dyer and Elderkin seemed to have been singled out by the visitors, the day of accounting according to the Bible was an all-embracing affair, and thereat all the Windham people started trembling violently.

There are living today a good many persons who are direct descendants of the Colonel Elderkin whom the batrachians called to judgment that night. In Chicago until recently there lived a Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Norris, a direct descendant of Colonel Elderkin. Mrs. Norris had heard the story of the invasion of the village a score of times from the lips of her grandmother, who as a child was taken time after time to see the place from which the night disturbers came. To the days of their deaths Colonels Dyer and Elderkin were called Frog Dyer and Frog Elderkin, and if local Connecticut authorities are to be believed, there has not been seen from that day to this either a toad or a frog in the meadow and pond from which started that midnight migration.

To get away, for a moment, from frogs and toads, and in order to lead back to them again, let it be said that out in Utah the gull is a carefully protected bird. Olive Thorne Miller speaks of them as "great, beautiful, snowy creatures who look strangely out of place so far from the seashore." I have been told that these gulls are sacredly protected by the law and the people of the western state, and I have also been told that the early settlers, the Mormons, believed that the Lord has sent the birds to his chosen people.

It is no wonder that it was believed the gulls were specially sent. Clouds of grasshoppers had destroyed the crops in that early day in many of the western territories. They attacked Utah by the million millions. Then it was that the gulls appeared—birds never before seen in that locality within the memory of man. They came in tremendous flocks and devoured without stopping the hosts of the enemy, and they completely saved the crops from destruction. Now the gulls follow the plains like chickens, and in Utah at least, it is said that no one has any desire to raise his hand against them.

What the gull was to Salt Lake region the toad was to one section of a northwest Texas county, some time ago. There was but a comparatively small area of the county under cultivation, but the growing things were threatened with destruction by a horde of Rocky Mountain locusts; then there appeared to the astonished gaze of the resident Texans an army of toads, before which in numbers the great army of Xerxes was but as a score. These dismal-looking, warty-backed Hop-o'-my-thumbs came along as on business bent. They said nothing and they ate grasshoppers. They cleaned up utterly one entire flight of the creatures. And they quietly sat under the cabbage leaves and beet tops to wait for more. They didn't come. The toads had saved the crops, and it may be judged that if one wants to be certain to get in a quarrel he can get it if he will go that section of Texas and malign a toad.

Should anyone be inclined to doubt the insect-eating capabilities of a common every-day American toad, let him listen to the evidence of an experimenter, who is at once a scientist and a clergyman, the one fact establishing his accuracy and the other his veracity. This theologue-naturalist, as the record shows, found a toad in his garden and proceeded to make a pet of it. He went to call on master toad one morning about ten o'clock and without knowing how many insects already had fallen before the toad's darting tongue, proceeded to feed him on plant pests. The toad ate readily and greedily twenty-three large squash bugs which were offered him, and then looked up inquiringly for more.

The squash bug larder was depleted, so the clergyman turned his attention to caterpillars. Of these hairy, repulsive creatures the toad ate ninety-four, so the story record goes, and then he shut down to hop heavily off to a shady corner to take that rest which it is said aids animal digestion.

Now this same experimenter tells tales of toads which might appear a bit overdrawn, were not the gentleman's cloth what it is. He took in his experiments with one toad some large "tangle-legged" grasshoppers. Master toad took kindly to this species of food, but owing to to the nature of the insect's legs and their extreme length he found difficulty in swallowing. In order to aid in the process, as soon as he would get a firm grip on the grasshopper he would look for a stick or a stone by means of pushing against which he could force his prey down his throat. Now in order to see what the toad would do if no stone or stick were at hand, all of those articles were removed from his vicinity, and then he was fed another big grasshopper with great knotted legs.

Now it must be remembered that the present writer is not vouching for this toad story; he is simply setting it down as it has been told by an observer, and if it is a "nature fake" the blame must go elsewhere. The toad, finding he could not swallow the big grasshopper, looked about as usual for a stone and, finding none, he attempted to use the ground as a pusher. He was unable to get the right angle to secure sufficient force, and so as a last and perfectly effective means, he stood on his head and without the least difficulty forced his food down his throat.

This toad unquestionably was a wonder. One day, we are told, he happened to find an angleworm of great length. He took hold of one end and succeeded in swallowing about an inch and a half of the worm, which then realizing its danger apparently, wound the rest of its body boa-like around the neck of the toad. This gave the worm leverage enough to enable it to tug away at that part which the toad already had swallowed. The result was that although by a mighty effort the toad could swallow about half an inch, the worm, when the relaxation came, succeeded in withdrawing three-quarters of an inch. The toad saw his breakfast slipping away from him, but his infinite wit came to his rescue. It is said that he sat up like a squirrel took one mighty swallow, and then before the worm could get in its withdrawing work, he pressed his forefeet against his throat and held the swallowed part of the breakfast in place; then, so the story goes, by a series of quick successive swallowing and throat squeezing, the toad soon had the worm in the dark interior where he was needed for breakfast.

Toad migrations are not extraordinarily uncommon events. They have taken place in many parts of the country, and once the toads in traveling succeeded in stalling a railroad train on the Canadian Pacific line. The story of this runs to the effect that the wheels crushed the creatures and so greased the rails that progress was impossible for some time. The passengers said that they could have stood the situation more philosophically if the blockaders had been frogs, for then the question of the food supply would have been settled for a lot of hungry people. Frogs' legs make good eating.

It is not generally known, perhaps, to the layman that toads, like frogs, lay their eggs in the water. Countless millions of eggs will be deposited in some morass. They hatch out, the young get big enough, and migrate in a body to the dry land, sometimes going long distances as an entity. These, it is said, are the marching armies of toads which astonish people and accounts of which are spread broadcast over the earth.

Straw Hats and Autos

"You might scarcely think," said Mr. MacBlink, "that there was anything in common between straw hats and automobiles, but by that way of thinking you'd be surely forgetting their cost of upkeep, in which respect they are strikingly alike.

"They say it costs more to keep an automobile than it does to buy one; precisely the same is true of the straw hat. You take my own experience for an illustration.

"Early in the season I bought a straw hat for which I paid $2. I know a place where you can get a very good straw hat for that money, and if it hadn't rained all summer I should have been on the straw hat account under no additional expense.

"But it always does rain more or less, just as it has done this summer, and as is very well known if a drop of rain gets on a straw hat it is all up. Raindrops on a straw hat will accumulate dust, and then you have to have the hat cleaned, and that costs money; in some places 25 cents; in some 15.

"I find by reference to my books that I have paid out this summer in straw hat account for upkeep only $2.30, which is a good deal. While the automobile man has been spending his money for gasoline and things I have been blowing mine for hat cleaning, and it has cost me more to keep that hat going than it cost me originally.

"But in this I find some slight satisfaction. In this respect at least I find myself on the same footing with the man who at the beginning of the season bought instead of a straw hat an automobile."

FILED FIRST CLAIM

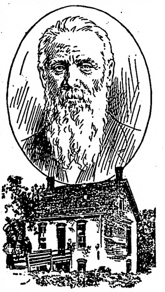
Daniel Freeman Got Homestead Number One.

As a Soldier in Nebraska in 1862 He Took Advantage of the Law Immediately After It Went Into Effect.

Lincoln, Neb.—When Daniel Freeman filed on the first free home provided for free men, at one minute past twelve o'clock on the morning of January 1, 1863, he inaugurated the history of homestead entries, which have since developed the western prairies into the heart of American agriculture. The Freeman home is at Brownville, Neb., on the quarter-section of land for which the first patent was issued. He always regarded this old patent as one of the most interesting and valuable relics of American history. Its face indicates that Freeman made entry No. 1, his proof of residence was No. 1, his patent is No. 1, recorded on page No. 1 of book No. 1, in the United States land office.

Freeman's name is linked with that of Galusha A. Grow of Pennsylvania, once speaker of the lower house of congress, and whose maiden speech in the house was on the subject of "Man's Right to the Soil." That speech was made in 1852, but it was not until ten years later that he was able to see his measure, the homestead law, recorded in the statute books.

Freeman at that time was a young soldier, detailed to perform a secret mission at Brownville, Neb., where the first United States land office was opened. The presence of many prospective settlers awaiting the opening January 1, 1863, of the land office, to take advantage of the homestead law, attracted Freeman to the idea of securing a free home. On December 30, however, he was ordered to report in St. Louis for a new assignment. To add to his troubles, January 1 was a legal holiday. The young soldier, nothing daunted, sought out James Bedford, who had charge of the government land office, and told him his troubles. Bedford agreed to sign the filing papers following the stroke of midnight the following night if Freeman could secure the consent of other prospective settlers to waive their right to make entries until the following day. All day December 31 Freeman sought out the settlers and secured their consent to the scheme, in order that he might get away New Year's morning. There was a dance at the town hall in the evening and at midnight all the young Beau Brummels repaired to the land office to see Uncle Sam's soldier become the first homesteader. The papers already had been made up and were signed just after twelve o'clock. Freeman started at once for St. Louis and was able to visit the land but twice during the next three years, the law making special provision for soldiers.



Freeman and His Home.

In 1865 Freeman laid down his arms and took up the peaceful pursuit of agriculture on his claim. He built a log cabin as the first structure on the farm. On an adjoining claim lived a young woman with whom Freeman had become acquainted during his previous visits, and when the cabin was completed they were married and moved into the new home. Freeman was energetic, and from an open prairie homestead the quarter section was developed into the finest farm in Gage county. Additional land was purchased and Freeman became wealthy. Three fine orchards surround a comfortable brick dwelling and a forty-acre timber claim has developed into a young forest.

Daniel Freeman was a pioneer Indian fighter and carried two scars as the result of bullets from the Indians' rifles. One of his peculiarities was his free thinking doctrine. He always maintained that the Bible was made for the people who believed in it and that they had no right to force it upon persons who did not want it. Taking this stand, he brought the famous law suit to force the Bible out of Nebraska schools. The suit was brought against the school board of his home district and he won out. His contention was that no religion could be legally taught in the public schools and that teachers could not lawfully read the Bible in school. The supreme court sustained his contention and the Holy Writ disappeared from the Brownville school.

Big Harvest From Unredeemed Money

A NICE TIDY SUM ALRIGHT

WASHINGTON.—The United States government in fifty years has accumulated $13,000,000 from unredeemed money. A long-standing question, namely: How much does a government make through the failure of its citizens to present its paper for redemption? is answered fairly accurately for our country in these figures. Expert mathematicians in the United States have figured on the problem, and the results they have obtained by different methods are so nearly identical as to lead the layman to feel confident that they have hit somewhere near the mark.

Obviously the difficulties surrounding the statistician wishing to tabulate the gains of the government from this source are almost insurmountable, if accurate figures are what he is looking for. The destruction of paper money of all sorts goes on rapidly throughout the country, yet this loss is never reported to the treasury. So the mathematicians have had to take the complete figures of the government redemption division, and by comparing the average life of notes, the average percentage of actual redemption, and other items of that sort, have been able to work out a fairly accurate percentage of paper money that is either destroyed or is in such hands that it will never reach the treasury for redemption in gold.

All sorts of causes contribute to increase the amount of paper money that will never be presented for redemption. Fire is perhaps the most important cause, though improved safes and the more general use of safes for holding the cash supply are annually reducing the loss from this cause. Then there is a sort of inertia that money seems to have which keeps it out in the country once it is started in circulation, even though it be of an issue supposed to mature at a given time. Shipwrecks, too, are responsible for some of the loss. Lastly, there are the collectors, and it is probable that every fairly good collection of United States paper money accounts for at least one piece of every denomination that has failed to come back to the treasury.

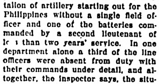
Army Wanting in Marching Ability

THE United States army has lately undergone a series of stern and severe criticisms. Authorities have studied the existing conditions from every point of view, and in their reports have delivered their opinions in a fearless manner. In a report recently made public one inspector points out the case of a whole battalion of artillery starting out for the Philippines without a single field officer and one of the batteries commanded by a second lieutenant of less than two years' service. In one department alone a third of the line officers were absent from duty with their commands under detail, and altogether, the inspector says, the situation warrants the prediction that results of a disastrous kind must sooner or later be realized.

People who think the United States army stands at the top of the profession would be rudely jarred to learn from Inspector General Ball that the field army is wholly unprepared for field service. He says the new regulations are almost entirely theoretical or dependent upon the experience of European armies. Our transportation is the same as at the beginning of the civil war, for our army has so far failed to make use of automobiles, traction engines and other modern appliances in the field. The weaknesses could be quickly developed if the present annual maneuvers could be replaced at least once by the march of a complete army corps. Very few of our officers have ever marched with more than a regiment.

To remedy those conditions, Maj. Gen. Wood, chief of staff, has issued orders which will change materially the training of the army. The inspectors general will be required to submit the troops to an annual inspection in the field, in addition to the present inspection, which is described in some quarters as being little less than an inquiry into the accounts and garrison work of the troops. The new inspection will be designed to show the efficiency of the troops in the theoretical work taught army officers in the various schools and provided for in the various drill regulations.

Gifts of Potentates Vex Uncle Sam

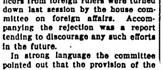


HALF a dozen resolutions authorizing acceptance of gifts by American military men and diplomatic officers from foreign rulers were turned down last session by the house committee on foreign affairs. Accompanying the rejection was a report tending to discourage any such efforts in the future.

In strong language the committee pointed out that the provision of the constitution prohibiting the acceptance of such gifts by Americans in official life was drawn wisely by the fathers of the country in the interest of the integrity and perpetuity of the republic. Underlying the prohibition is the thought that those accepting such gifts would be under more or less obligation to the giver, and to that degree, at least, weaken his allegiance to this country.

The most noted exception to this rule by congress was the authorization of acceptance by former President Roosevelt of the Nobel peace prize, amounting to about $39,000. Colonel Roosevelt turned this money over to the department of commerce and labor to form the basis of a fund for expenses attending arbitration and the peaceful settlement of disputes between capital and labor. Before granting the authorization in this instance, congress had full knowledge of what was to be done with the money. The prize was awarded to Colonel Roosevelt for his efforts in terminating the war between Russia and Japan.

First Report on Infantile Paralysis



THERE were 560 deaths from acute anterior poliomyelitis, or infantile paralysis, 116 from pellagra, 55 from rabies, or hydrophobia, and 9 deaths from leprosy in 1909, in the death registration area of continental United States, which comprises over 55 per cent of the total population, according to the census bureau's forthcoming bulletin on mortality statistics for 1909, submitted to Census Director Durand by Dr. Cressy L. Wilbur, chief statistician for vital statistics.

It is reported that of the 569 deaths from infantile paralysis 552 were of white and only 17 of colored persons.

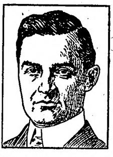
The bulletin states that no statistical segregation of infantile paralysis as a cause of death has been made heretofore, but the increasing importance of the disease and its wide prevalence throughout the country in the form of local epidemics render a statement of the mortality important.

The 569 deaths compiled for the registration area for 1909 were widely distributed, and indicate endemic or epidemic prevalence in many parts of the country. It should be remembered, the bulletin points out, that the census data relate only to registration sources, and that for the nonregistration states the deaths are only those returned from the registration cities contained therein.

Pellagra is a new disease in the mortality statistics, the bulletin states. Only 23 deaths were returned from this cause for 1908, and no deaths for any previous year except one for 1904. Such deaths undoubtedly occurred, but were not recognized and were consequently returned as due to other causes or as of unknown cause.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

CAREER OF ONE KENTUCKIAN



From the forests and the mountains of Kentucky to the position of secretary of state at Frankfort; from the state capitol to a grated cell; from the grated cell to the very shadow of the gallows; from the shadow of the gallows again to the grated cell; from the grated cell back to the forests and the mountains of Kentucky; from the forests and mountains to the halls of congress at Washington. This in brief is the history of Caleb Powers. He has been chosen as the Republican candidate for congress from his district, which is strongly Republican.

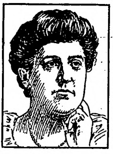
Seldom does a human life contain so much of struggle for advancement from humble beginnings, so much of tragedy and of pathos and so remarkable a rehabilitation in public honor. Caleb Powers will be a remarkable figure in Washington, because of the fact that for eight long years he was immured in a prison cell fighting to escape life imprisonment or execution for a crime of which half the people of Kentucky believe him guilty and the other half believe him absolutely innocent.

The minds of newspaper readers will instantly go back to that tragic day in January, 1900, when William Goebel was ruthlessly shot down from ambush as he was walking toward the state capitol at Frankfort. Goebel and W. S. Taylor, the former a Democrat and the latter a Republican, had been opposing candidates for governor and each claimed election. Taylor was given the certificate of election and in possession of the capitol and Caleb Powers was his secretary of state. As Goebel, whom the legislature on contest had declared to be elected, walked across the grounds leading to the capitol he was shot from the window of the office of the secretary of state. The murder created a national sensation and for many years the state of Kentucky was split into two bitter factions.

Caleb Powers was tried for murder and was sentenced to imprisonment for life. He appealed, and a second trial resulted in another conviction and a second sentence to life imprisonment. A third trial followed, and this time he was sentenced to be hanaged. On the fourth trial the jury disagreed, the majority being for acquittal.

Meantime eight years had rolled around and Powers was still in a prison cell at Georgetown. A petition containing the names of hundreds of thousands of persons both in Kentucky and elsewhere was presented to the governor and in 1908 Governor Willson granted Powers a full pardon.

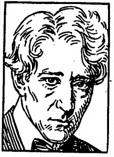
GOTHAM'S QUEEN OF SILENCE



Mrs. Isaac L. Rice, the New York society woman who fought single-handed to suppress unnecessary noise in the metropolis and who accomplished so much through her determination, is known as the "Queen of Silence." Mrs. Rice has long been a sworn enemy of noise. Her beautiful Venetian palace on Riverside drive is so located that, until she began her battle and won out her ears were continually ringing with the shrieks of the switch engines on the railroad tracks that line the river front and with the clamor of boat whistles. Along the East river are located two-thirds of the hospitals of the city and this thoughtful woman realized what extra suffering the sick must endure because of the nerve-racking clamor. She began to gather evidence to prove her point and with the aid of Columbia university students, who followed the boats and kept count, learned that there were about 5,000 unnecessary but deafening shrieks each night in the harbor. The harbor men were pleased to take umbrage at her interference and proceeded to make life miserable for her till she secured law on her side. During the night boats passing her home serenaded her with the most horrible whistles and focused their flashlights upon the house.

Nothing daunted, the plucky woman secured an order from the secretary of commerce and labor forbidding unnecessary whistling on the river. The harbor men persisting in their defiance, she had one man arrested, then another, until finally the racket was quieted.

STARTED 'BEEF TRUST' QUIZ



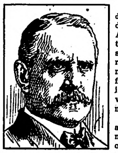
Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis of the United States district court in Chicago, who started the latest investigation of the "beef trust," is the same who imposed the $29,000,000 fine on the Standard Oil company a few years ago. His father served during the civil war in the regiment which was commanded by Judge Walter Q. Gresham, secretary of state under Cleveland, and was wounded in the battle of Kenesaw mountain. Hence the peculiar name of Judge Landis.

When Gresham was secretary of state Judge Landis, then a young Chicago lawyer, served as his private secretary. Afterward he returned to Chicago to practise his profession and was later elevated to the bench.

Of the ten indicted meat packers, charged by the federal grand jury with violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, seven have given bonds in the total sum of $210,000 for their appearance for trial when the cases against them are called.

The fight thus begun against the meat packers promises to be one of life or death for the huge corporation, which, it has been charged repeatedly, controls the meat industry in this country.

J. A. TAWNEY OF MINNESOTA



An insurgent victory that has attracted a good deal of attention throughout the country was the defeat in the primaries of Representative James A. Tawney, who was a canadidate for renomination in the first congressional district of Minnesota. Tawney is one of the most influential representatives in congress; is chairman of the committee on appropriations. A most determined fight was waged against his renomination and the insurgents had the support and advice of Roosevelt, Pinchot, James J. Heney and other exponents of progressive Republicanism.

In his early days Tawney was a blacksmith and machinist, learning the trades in Pennsylvania, where he was born in 1855, near the village of Gettysburg. Subsequently he removed to Winona, Minn., where he worked four years at his trade, at the same time studying law. In 1882 he was admitted to the bar, was later sent to the state senate, and in 1892 was elected to congress, in which he has since served.

Tawney is a dark, almost swarthy man, with a piercing black eye and a black mustache, now streaked with gray. When Cannon made him chairman of the committee on appropriations he did so because of the strength of character and firmness which Tawney had displayed. Often the speaker referred to him as the "man of iron," a not unfitting title. As chairman of the appropriations committee Tawney was regarded as the watchdog of the treasury, but he was one of the strongest stand-patters in the house, and hence the declaration of war upon him by the insurgents.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

'49ers Going Into History, Unwept

CHICAGO.—The '49ers of California gold fever fame are passing into history. The epoch of which they are survivors is closed and the last of them are becoming too feeble to come to the annual reunion which has ben held in Chicago on "admission day" each year for the last twenty years.

A notice reluctantly admitting these facts was issued recently by Secretary George W. Hotchkiss, the youngest of the California gold hunters, who at the age of seventy-nine is in too feeble health to take charge of a convention. The entire executive committee of the organization appointed last year is either dead or under a temporary disability preventing them from serving, and half of the fourteen pioneers who attended last year's meeting have since died.

A heroic effort to get trace of all surviving pioneers in the middle west resulted in the return "not found" of half of the hundred letters sent out by Mr. Hotchkiss, and, while he hopes to find a few '49ers for a meeting on "discovery day," January 18, the secretary said sadly that in ten years they would all be gone and nothing but printed pages could tell of a movement whose like the world can never see again.

"It was a picked lot of young men who reached California in those days," he declared. "Only those who had the grit to spend months at sea or across Indian-infested plains and mountains succeeded in getting there. The people of today do not know how much their country owes to the '49ers. They did more toward the development of the United States than the men who fought in the revolution or any other single group of men. Most of them were very young. The man among them who was over twenty-five was rare. And they did not get rich. The men who came afterward on the railways, with capital and improved mining methods, or who went into real estate were the ones who reaped fortunes.

Puzzle to Trace the Lost Pennies

YUH LITTLE IMP— ALWAYS WANTIN' MONEY
GIMME A PENNY POP

PHILADELPHIA.—What becomes of the vast volume of copper pennies that are turned out each year by the government? They are never called in and redeemed like some kinds of currency and coins, but they seem to disappear as fast as they are stamped and put in circulation.

It is unusual if the date on any of the pennies in a man's purse at the end of the day is over ten years back, yet the Philadelphia mint, which coins all the copper pennies, sends out in some years as many as $1,000,000 worth of them to the trade centers—100,000,000, one-cent pieces. If laid flat, edge to edge, in a row they would reach more than one thousand miles. And still there are some sections of the country where the penny is little known.

In many of the mountain districts of the south the "York shilling," 12½ cents, is still spoken of in trade, but no one ever hears the one-cent piece mentioned. In many towns in the south and west the tradesmen offer nothing for a penny, a five-cent purchase is the smallest that can be made. But of late there have been more demands for pennies from the west, and the government experts have declared that this is a sign of increased frugality.

In the east, the chief use of the penny, outside of filling the child's bank and buying the daily paper, is for the purchase of chewing gum and one-cent candies. The increase in the number of penny-in-the-slot phonographs and moving picture machines in the last few years shows another way to which the public has taken to get rid of its pennies.

Uncle Sam takes in many pennies for stamps and post cards, and many of them flow into the contribution box in the churches and religious societies. But all these ways in which the penny is put to use does not explain where they eventually go or what makes them disappear in such vast quantities every year. Even the government coinage experts do not give a satisfactory answer to the problem.

Circus Lemonade Tabooed in Kansas

LEMO
I WONDER IF IT'S REAL?

TOPEKA, Kan.—Dr. S. J. Crumbine, secretary of the Kansas board of health, has put his official foot into the mixture always present at circuses, fairs, Fourth of July celebrations, picnics and other gatherings of a like nature. This mixture is known as lemonade—according to the barker who spiels before the refreshment stands. Generally it is something that looks a little like lemonade because there is a lemon peel in the tub, but it hasn't the taste of the refreshing beverage mother makes.

No one knows who invented the glad refrain of the lemonade stand barker, who in stentorian tones, calls:

"Lemo, lemo, lemonade,
Made in the shade,
Stirred with a spade—
Five cents a big glass!"

These things have been among the sights and sounds of all picnics, celebrations and fairs and circuses since Kansas became a state. But no more will one hear these sounds or drink the "lemonade" about Kansas unless the dispenser has real lemonade to sell. The state board of health has put a damper on the noise of the barker because the board of health has ruled that a tub of water, in which is put some tartaric acid and saccharine and the peel of a lemon is not lemonade, but the imitation article, and cannot be sold as the real thing.

In Kansas all lemonade offered for sale must be made from the juice of lemons, water and sugar only. Imitation lemonade can only be made from citric acid and sugar and water. The use of the most common materials for making fake lemonade, tartaric acid and saccharine, is absolutely prohibited in this state.

The Lid Put on Tight in New York

GAMBLER
IT'S A COLD SELFISH WOILD

NEW YORK.—Spurred on by Acting Mayor John Purroy Mitchell, Police Commissioner William A. Baker has caused several raids to be made on the gambling joints of this city, and the lid has been jammed on so tightly that $1,000,000 of capital invested in such places is idle just now, while the owners are wondering "what next?" Impatient over the vexing delay, Acting Mayor Mitchel in a letter, following several raids, has put squarely up to Commissioner Baker all responsibility for the non-enforcement of laws against gambling and vice. He charges the police with being grossly derelict in their duties, and declares that the situation his secret service men report could not exist without police connivance. There is panic in the ranks of the gamblers as well as with the police.

Since the shooting of Mayor Gaynor placed him at the head of affairs Acting Mayor Mitchel has received many complaints. Some were appeals from mothers who declared that their sons were losing money in gambling places, and many were specific in their character.

Men from the office of the commissioners of accounts, the secret service department of the city government, found for Mr. Mitchel the violations of the law. The raids began and keys were soon in the doors of 40 gambling places along the Great White Way between Thirty-second and Sixty-ninth streets, and $1,000,000 of invested capital went out of business. The managers who were not crating their roulette wheels, their faro layouts and their Klondyke sets in preparation for the exodus, were mournfully parading the streets in the vicinity of their houses, warning away prospective customers. It was the saddest day the gamblers have known since the Agnew-Hart racing bills went into force.

GIRLS IN CITIES.

The young girl who tried dramatically to take her life in New York recently through disappointment and disillusion placed the blame upon the wrong shoulders. It in no degree rests upon either the business or public social side of American life, says Washington Post. The responsibility for such an outcome must be borne by those who are in duty bound to give their children right views of life. The sight of a young girl, however precocious, going to a city like New York without friends or advisers to whom she would listen, and very evidently head-strong and impulsive, there to spend two years writing a book and precious manuscripts which she romantically wishes to be buried with her, calls forth nothing but pity. But this sentiment does not obscure the fact that the girl was permitted to gain a false view of herself and her relations with the world. Acts such as hers in no degree justify the wholesale condemnation of the business life of our cities or warrant the sweeping statement of a young girl facing at once both womanhood and eternity in saying that "a girl cannot get along honorably in New York."

Still another use for automobiles. The town of Jamaica, L. I., had an unpleasant time when a main burst and the water supply was shut off completely. To say nothing of the annoyance, inconvenience and danger in private dwellings, the orphan asylum and other institutions were subjected to especially distressing experiences. To meet at least partially the demand an automobile service was organized, the machines going with tanks, barrels and other receptacles to points where water could be obtained and bringing it to those in need. This was at best but a poor substitute for the regular system, yet it proved that in time of stress the auto is a valuable auxiliary.

Still they come, those Chinese students who are to be trained at American educational institutions. A party of sixty-eight has arrived at Honolulu. These students are some of the number sent by the Chinese government, the expenses to be paid from the Boxer indemnity money returned by the United States, says Troy Times. That kindly act has brought a rich reward in the form of the esteem, gratitude and confidence of China and the influence that will be exerted through the absorption of American ideas by the bright young men who are the beneficiaries of the arrangement.

Engineers at work on the Panama canal propose to leave as little as possible to chance. They are now engaged in experiments to determine the effect of sea water on concrete, an enormous quantity of which is employed in the construction of the canal. Concrete in different stages of preparation and with various forms of protection will be subjected to the action of the salt water and the results will be carefully noted. Probably there never was a great undertaking of this kind in which so many precautions were taken to guard against future risk.

Germans usually do things thoroughly, and the announcement that there is no cholera in Berlin, although the disease has broken out in the vicinity, no doubt testifies to the effectiveness of the safeguards employed. Modern medical science is usually victorious over the ailments once regarded as scourges, against which it was almost useless to contend. Yellow fever, cholera and the like are no longer the terror they were formerly.

General information concerning infantile paralysis is meager, but since a woman of sixty-six has died of the malady, the fact is plain that the scientists who gave it a name were not overcrowded with information either.

PORTUGAL IS MADE NEW REPUBLIC, KING IN EXILE

Republicans Are in Complete Control---Public Order Is Restored After Severe Fighting---Fifty Killed and Hundreds Wounded---Royal Family Is Under British Protection on English Soil.

Lisbon.—The republic of Portugal has taken its place among the governments of the world. The revolution which broke out on Tuesday seems to be accomplished and the worst of the violence is believed to be past.

The number killed in the fighting exceeds fifty, while hundreds are wounded. Twenty persons were injured during clashes at Oporto, which is said to be in the hands of the republicans.

The fighting in this city lasted 40 hours, both sides showing great courage. Through it all the conduct of the populace and troops was exemplary, not a single case of personal vengeance being reported.

Premier Teixeira De Sousa and Manuel Fratel, the minister of justice, have relinquished the direction of affairs of state to Provisional President Theophile Braga and his associates in the new republican government.

Royal Family Is Safe.

King Manuel, the queen mother Amelie and other members of the royal family reached Gibraltar on board the Portuguese royal yacht Queen Amelie and placed themselves under the protection of the British government. Although their ultimate destination has not been made public, it is believed they will proceed to England.

Following the proclamation of a republic, the provisional government assembled for its first council. Civil Governor Leao issued an edict to the people of Lisbon, declaring that "work and order" shall be the device of the newly-liberated country, and commanding the people to preserve order and respect the persons and property of both Portuguese and foreigners, whatever their rank, position or political or religious opinions may be.

All the European powers have ordered warships to Portuguese waters to look after the interests of foreign citizens. Three armored cruisers were ordered from Toulon, attended by destroyers, to make all speed to Lisbon, and British ships were also sent, two from Gibraltar—the Minerva and the Newcastle—and one from Portsmouth.

Warships began bombarding the king's palace at two o'clock Tuesday afternoon, with small show of resistance, and soon the supporters of the monarchy were forced to capitulate.

It is believed that the killing of Professor Bombarda, the republican deputy and anticlerical, by an army lieutenant, was the direct cause of the rising, although since King Manuel ascended the throne there have been plots for the overthrow of the monarchy and against his life. The republican party has been planning for a complete change in the government, and King Manuel, according to the republican leaders, by his disregard for the rights of the people and his blind insistence on a dictatorial system, has added to the fires of the people's wrath.

Long Preparation for Outbreak.

The republican party has hoped that a change in the regime could be effected in an orderly way, but the obstinacy of the men in power and the blindness of the sovereign prevented this. The monarchy might have been expected to profit from the lesson of the death of Carlos, but the accumulation of abuses which aroused the people against the dictator Franco continued, the dictatorial system desired by the party of royalty remained, the laws against the press were applied rigorously and journalists were forced to flee to escape jail. The police invented secret societies, the discovery of which permitted the persecution of the republicans.

Peaceable citizens were arrested as suspects on mere denunciations. The ransacking of houses was a daily occurrence. The liberty and dignity of the population was violated in every way possible by a criminal court officer possessing the power of inquisitor.

These monstrous acts and this renewal of the worst epoch of tyranny happened at the moment when the advent of the young king led the credulous to believe that an improvement was about to take place. The republicans, however, were not deceived. They continued their propaganda throughout the country, convinced that the salvation of Portugal was possible only with a republic.

Ministers in Many Scandals.

The republican propaganda showing a succession of scandals, with the ministries compromised in shady affairs, forced the king to summon to power men calling themselves liberals. This final deception was the last straw.

Opinion was such that the biggest commercial association in Lisbon took the initiative in a formidable movement of protest, involving, if necessary, a general strike. The monarchist parties, forming the conservative "bloc," scoffed at the entry of republican deputies into parliament.

In the political chaos King Manuel was a tool of the clericals. He found it impossible to govern against the will of the people. The king needed the support of the army and navy, but the army and navy looked toward republicanism as the only form of government capable of uplifting the country.

Where King Manuel and his household were besieged by the Republican revolutionists until the young monarch took refuge on a Brazilian warship.

Premier Franco, the hated reactionary leader, forced to flee the country. A new ministry and a "reform" parliament come into power.

Bomb plots unearthed, and plotters arrested, from time to time, but sedition grows apace throughout the nation.

New parliament opened Sept. 23, 1910, king promising reforms, but again the progressives were outvoted and the "reform" program was delayed.

Assassination Monday of Prof. Bombarda, a Liberal deputy, charged to clerical plot, is spark that starts the latest revolution.

STANDARD CUTS OIL PRICES

Reductions Made in Europe and the Far East in Campaign to Increase Use of Kerosene.

New York.—J. I. C. Clarke, through whom the Standard Oil company makes its official announcements to the public, has issued a statement to the effect that the company has entered on a thoroughly mapped out campaign to increase the consumption of kerosene in European countries and the lands of the Orient. The first move in this campaign is the reduction of the prices of oil in those countries. Mr. Clarke's announcement says in part:

"The Standard Oil company has inaugurated a campaign to increase the world's consumption of refined oil. The level of prices for refined oil today in the United States is lower than at any time during recent years, and as a direct result of these prices the consumption of refined oil in this country is increasing. The same policy is now being actively pursued abroad."

As indicated by this statement, the Standard company began trying out the policy of lower prices in the United States, though without announcing that it had in view a campaign that would cover the world. In August the price of refined oil in tanks was reduced from 6½ to 5½ cents a gallon, and the price of refined oil in barrels at the refinery was cut 1 cent, from 9¾ to 8¾ cents a gallon.

FLAMES DESTROY THREE TOWNS

MINNESOTA DISASTER GREATEST SINCE HINCKLEY FIRE 15 YEARS AGO.

BEAUDETTE, SPOONER, RAINY RIV.

Property Loss in Rainy River, Beaudette and Spooner Is $1,500,000 —Hundreds are Dead.

Warroad, Oct. 10.—The greatest catastrophe that Minnesota has experienced since the Hinckley horror 15 years ago occurred Friday night and Saturday, when the whole Minnesota-Manitoba boundary country was swept by fire that is still raging, and as details become known, the disaster assumes appalling proportions.

The number of deaths is estimated at from 100 to 200 or more, almost entirely among settlers in the woods around the towns of Beaudette, Pitt, Roosevelt and Graceton.

Very few of the settlers are known to have escaped and this estimate will likely fall considerably short of the actual number.

Scene of Horror Enacted.

Scenes of horror are reported on every hand. People lost their heads completely and ran aimlessly about, bewailing their loss. Streets of towns were strewn with personal belongings which were thrown away in their flight.

Crowds of able-bodied men, mostly workmen with no person to care for, ran pell-mell to board the waiting train at Beaudette to the exclusion of women and children, and refused positively to assist in saving property.

The village of Pitt was burned at 7 o'clock Friday night and at 8 o'clock the towns of Spooner and Beaudette, six miles distant, were in flames.

A hurricane was blowing at the time and within 10 minutes after the appearance of the fire the inhabitants of the town were forced to flee for their lives, being unable to save any of their property.

Then were enacted scenes which will never be forgotten by those present. Sick people apparently by the score appeared and were carried or assisted to points of safety. There were five patients in Carrigan's hospital, which was burned. One woman, who had given birth to a child at 5 o'clock the same evening, had to be carried to the office of the Shevlin-Mathieu Lumber company, in whose building many people took refuse.

Property Loss $1,500,000

The property loss in Rainy River, Beaudette and Spooner alone, including the Rat Portage Lumber company's plant and yard at Rainy River and the yard of the Shevlin-Mathieu Lumber company at Spooner, will total about $1,500,000.

The people of Rainy River are doing everything possible to assist the homeless residents of the two American towns.

Steps were at once taken by Mr. Mathieu, the executive head of the Rainy River Lumber company and the Shevlin-Mathieu Lumber company, to have timber shipped over from Rainy River for the purpose of building temporary shelters for the people in Beaudette and Spooner and the boarding camp of the Shevlin-Mathieu Lumber company is feeding as many of the people as possible.

Situation at Rainy River.

Rainy River, Oct. 10.—This town was on fire from the international bridge to Sixth street, a distance of half a mile.

Included in the burned area are the Rat Portage Lumber company's mill and lumber yard, containing 10,000,000 feet of lumber; the Western Canada flour mills company and surrounding buildings. There are 50 houses burned and scores of people are homeless. Fire is raging in the woods as far as can be seen along the south bank of Rainy river.

Most of old Beaudette, situated at Minnesota and International bridge, has so far escaped the fire, as well as the buildings of the Shevlin-Mathieu Lumber company at Spooner, through the activity of the Canadian Northern Railroad company.

Most of the women and children of these towns have been taken on special trains to points east and many more are on steamers ready to leave should the wind change and the fire spread.

All available hose is in use, but the fire, driven by a furious northwest wind, is beyond control and must burn itself out.

Awful Scenes At International Falls.

International Falls, Minn., Oct. 10.—More than 250 dead, millions upon millions of dollars' worth of property destroyed, 3,000 refugees fleeing from the flames, is an epitome of the happenings of the hell session in the Beltrami county forest fires.

Thirty-five typhoid fever patients were carried on improvised litters from Spooner just before it was wiped off the map. Forty-five were carried from Beaudette and the mecca of all the refugees, carried or loitering from exhaustion was Rainy River, Can., across the water from the fire-ridden districts of Minnesota.

Then the flames hit Rainy River, destroyed the lumber mills, and 2,000 panic-stricken refugees piled into freight cars and all but mobbed the engineer of a switch engine, who, thinking there was no danger, started to pull them out of the town.

Later, the flames subsided and 500 refugees landed in International Falls —strong men, shaking like leaves in a gale, women and their children, fever patients on shutters, burned men and women swathed in bandages and a whole motley crowd in stock-cars like cattle.

International Falls met them at the station; opened the city hall and hotel for them and gave them beds, such as could be provided.

There was no escape to the west. The east was the only chance and it was a slim one.

Bridges and culverts had burned out, wires were down and trains were run at their full speed. All the way from Beaudette and Rainy River west to Warroad, a distance of 50 miles, was a solid mass of flames.

Beaudette is only a charred remnant of a town. Spooner is wiped off the map. Cedar Spur, Graceton Pitt, Swift and Roosevelt, mere hamlets, are burned to the ground.

Every settler in a district bounded by the Rainy River and the Lake of the Woods on the north to 25 miles south, and from Warroad west, who is not accounted for, is dead according to the most conservative information obtainable.

A special relief train arrived on the Minnesota and International railroad bearing provision destined for Rainy River and the Bemidji company of the Minnesota National Buard, which will take charge of the distributes of supplies and the preservation of order. The burned district will be placed under martial law.

Mayor John Berg of International Falls appointed a relief committee to arrange further to care for nearly 300 fire reguees now quartered here.

There are three typhoid fever cases among them, six men badly burned and it seems that every family of settlers has from two to ten children. They are absolutely destitute. The women have borne up under the terrible strain with wonderful fortitude and all stories from the fire district are that the women and not the men were the heroes.

When the refugees fled in panic for the freight train that bore them from Rainy River Saturday to this city, men crushed women and children and in spite of the fact that the cars were choked so that standing room was at a premium, they insisted on cramming themselves in.

Miss Myra Burt, a prominent young woman of Beaudette, stationed herself at the door of one car, kicked every man in the with her pointed shoe who attempted to board the car, and herself reached out and took babes from the arms of mothers.

When the train started, there were five babies aboard whose mothers were left behind. They are being care for in the hospital here.

Duluth Sends Relief Train.

Duluth, Oct. 10.—Six hours from the time an appeal to Mayor Cullum came from Beaudette, a special relief train was flying along the tracks of the Duluth, Missabea nd Northern and the Canadian Northern toward the fire stricken region. It carried Mayor Cullum, President W. A. McGonagle of the Duluth, Missabe and Northern; Superintendent J. F. Kritter of the same road; Col. F. E. Resche, Third Regiment M. N. G.; Ray Higgins of the Kelly How Thomson company and newspaper men.

A PROCLAMATION.

By virtue of my position as president of the State Red Cross society, in view of the dire needs of citizens of the northern part of this state who have suffered from recent forest fires, I hereby call upon the people of Minnesota to respond at once with contributions of money, provisions and clothing, to be distributed to the needy under the direction of this society.

Such contributions will be received by Kenneth Clark, St. Paul, treasurer of the State Red Cross society, and F. M. Prince, Minneapolis, acting as assistant state treasurer, and I hereby designate the mayors of the towns and cities of the state to act as collectors of this fund in their respective localities.

Prompt and generous response is imperative as the reports from the afflicted districts indicate that the need is great and will continue for months.

Given under my hand and seal this ninth day of October, 1910.

Illinois Primary Law Defied.

Bloomington, Ill., Oct. 10.—Believing that the new primary law is unconstitutional and will be so declared, the Democrats of the 26th senatorial district met in conference here complying with the old law and under the Australian ballot system, and placed D. A certificate of the nomination was filed immediately with the secretary of state.

SALOON LID LIFTED

MR. BALLINGER WIPES OUT GROGSHOP CLOSING ORDER IN UPPER MINNESOTA.

MEN TO AID LAW ENFORCEMENT

Cass Lake and Moorhead Mayors Told No More Restricted Belts in Indian Treaty Territory.

Washington, D. C. — Secretary Ballinger declared there shall be no specific "red light" or "wet" and "dry" districts in the Indian country in northern Minnesota.

In other words, the recent order of the Indian office creating such districts and proposing to close saloons therein is wiped out.

The delegation coming here to protest against the order on behalf of Moorhead and Cass Lake expressed to the secretary complete satisfaction with this order.

Mayors Dumas of Cass Lake and Dover of Moorhead promised cordial co-operation with the government in enforcing the law and prosecuting offenders who sell liquor in violation thereof.

Arguments Carry Weight.

It is plain that Secretary Ballinger was much impressed with the force of the contention of the visiting delegation that the proposed saloon closing order would discriminate against Moorhead and Cass Lake and in favor of other towns in the Indian country.

The secretary indorsed the policy of the department in the following order addressed to the commissioner of Indian affairs:

"From various petitions and communications addressed to me in connection with the enforcement of the acts of congress relating to the introduction of liquor into the Indian country in Minnesota I feel called upon to express to you what sems to be to be the correct policy of the department in dealing with these questions. I fully understand and approve of the diligence of the Indian office in its efforts to enforce these statutes.

Contention Over Laws.

"It is true there has been some contention respecting the right to enforce them. The law, however, appears to be settled in respect to the authority of the department and it, therefore, becomes purely a matter of administration. In the administration of these statutes the department cannot countenance discriminations or anything that savors of arbitrary, capricious or vextacious proceedings.

"The officers in the field are entrusted with a police duty to protect the Indians under their supervision from the introduction of liquor as contemplated by the statute. You will therefore instruct your officers to secure convictions for violations of these statutes where the evidence is available and proceed throughout the territory involved to enforce the law."

NAMES VICAR GENERAL.

Bishop Heffron Chooses Father Devlin of Austin for Important Position.

Winona.—Bishop Patrick Heffron of the diocese of Winona has appointed Rev. Edward H. Devlin of the church of St. Augustine, Austin, Minn., vicar general of the diocese. He has sent a communication to the priests of the diocese making that announcement and making the following appointments for confirmation and visitations: October 6, Clairmont and Mantorville; October 7, Somerset and Moravia; October 9, Owatonna; October 12, Minneiska, October 15, Waseva; October 16, Mankato and Madison Lake; October 20, Albert Lea and Twin Lakes; October 21, St. Mary; October 25; Madella; October 26, St. James; October 29, Pipestone; October 30, Heron Lake and Dundee; October 31, Worthington; November 22, Ellsworth.

MALT IS BARRED IN BEMIDJI.

Indian Agents Put Lid on Sales and Close Five Shops.

Bemidji.—Another severe blow was struck in Bemidji by the government in its crusade to stop the sale of liquor to Indians when Agents T. F. Brents and N. J. Sero clapped the lid on the selling of malt and put five places out of the business for selling it.

At the Blue Front "Soft Drink Emporium" on Minnesota Avenue, five cases of the so-called malt were confiscated, taken out in the street and dumped. Orders were issued in each instance to have all the remaining goods shipped out of the city and the restricted district within twelve hours. The alleged malt is said to have been beer, as it showed 4 per cent alcohol.

GAME WARDEN CATCHES FIVE.

Crookston Officer Arrests Illegal Hunters, Who Pay Fines.

Crookston.—Game Warden Munch arrested five men at Mentor and each pleaded guilty and paid the fines assessed by Judge Nels Paulsberg. The men were: Jake Burkhard of Illinois, $27; Charley Knutson, Raymond Buhn and Arthur Buhn, all of Mentor, $12 each; for hunting ducks from a launch; Emil Bunnessa, Maple Lake, $12, for shooting a partridge in September.

SETTLERS TO CONTEST.

General Land Office Says State Must Prove Land Not Swamps.

Cass Lake.—Another and probably the final chapter in the long-drawn-out swamp land litigation between the settlers and the State of Minnesota is about to be written. Notice was received at the local United States land office from the commissioner of the general land office that lands selected by the State of Minnesota as inuring to it under the swamp land act after the examination in the field made during the summer of 1909 are subject to contest by actual settlers who had established residence on such lands prior to March 14, 1910, the date when the list was filled here.

A radical department has been made in these cases from the practice prevailing in the cases which have heretofore arisen where settlers have been in conflict with selections made by the state of lands shown to be swamp by the field notes of survey. In the latter cases, the most of which arose in Koochiching county, the burden of proof was upon the settler to show the non-swampy character of the land.

In the new cases arising out of conflict where an examination was made in the field the burden of proof will be upon the state to show that the land is swamp, when contest arises with an actual settler. Many settlers have been waiting for four or five years for a chance to be heard in these cases before the department.

Notice will be served upon the Governor and sixty days will be allowed the state to make answer to the claim of the settler and ask for a hearing. Two cases have already been started and many more will follow. The order affects lands in the vicinity of Cass lake, Deer river and Leech lake. The lands which have been claimed by the state, even though patented, will not be disturbed. In other instances the settlers have already offered final proof.

FIRE CHIEF INDICTED.

Minneapolis Official Mixed in Real Estate Deal.

Minneapolis.—James R. Canterbury was indicted by the Hennepin county grand jury, arraigned before Judge John Day Smith, and released on $3,000 bail for wrongfully receiving money while acting as chief engineer of the Minneapolis fire department. Mr. Canterbury did not wait for a warrant to be served on him but came to the sheriff's office and gave himself up.

The transaction which led to the indictment was purchasing of a site at University and First avenues northeast for a repair shop for the fire department. It was declared that, by that transaction, Mr. Canterbury realized a profit of approximately $3,000 to which he was not legally entitled, and that the city was mulcted of that sum.

The offense charged is a felony and is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not more than five years and not less than three, or by a fine not exceeding five times the value of the amount of money involved, or by both.

A special committee of thirteen, especially appointed to investigate the case, accepted the resignation of Mr. Canterbury Friday night, after a spirited meeting in which many were in favor of discharging the chief.

Mr. Canterbury was a member of the Minneapolis fire department for 26 years. He was chief of the department for 12 years. Before that he was a cooper.

EXPRESS TAX IS UPHELD.

Judge Hallam Decides 4 Per Cent On Gross Earnings Is Constitutional.

St. Paul.—The law of 1896 compelling express companies of Minnesota to pay a 4 per cent gross earnings tax was upheld yesterday by Judge Oscar Hallam of the Ramsey country district court in his decision in the case of the state against the United State Express company to compel the company to pay $9,719.66 back taxes on its earnings for the last ten years.

The decision holds that all earnings made by an express company on goods shipped between two points in the state, although they may pass out of the state boundaries in the meantime, are subject to the tax. The case will be appealed, it is said.

DON'T FEAR CLOSING ORDER.

Three Bemidji Liquor Men Ask for Renewal of License.

Bemidji.—That the saloonkeepers of Bemidji have no fear of the government closing the town is shown by the fact that three of them requested the council to renew their licenses: Fred Silversack, Fred Brinkman and Peter Linderberg. The new tax levy was passed by the council, the budget for running expenses amounting to $27,000.

Senator Thorpe Withdraws.

Willmar. — The biggest sensation of the campaign in Kandiyohi county occurred when the Republican committee met to consider a letter from Senator L. O. Theorpe withdrawing from the race for state senator leaving the field clear to Victor E. Lawson, editor of the Willmar Tribune, a progressive, who had filed on the Prohibition ticket. The committee unanimously tendered the position to Chas. W. Odell, cashier of the First National bank of this city and he accepted.

WILL FIGHT TO LAST DITCH

Master of Cameron Dam Refuses to Surrender Except to Governor of Wisconsin and Defies Overtures of Attorney General.

Winter, Wis. — John Dietz has refused to surrender to anyone but the governor of the state of Wisconsin and has emphatically declared himself to this edict to J. M. Froelich, the St. Paul envoy, who went to intercede in his behalf to avoid bloodshed.

To the attorney general of Wisconsin and the secretary of the governor, who accompanied him on his trip to the Dietz cabin to obtain his surrender and the transfer of the case to another county, John Dietz made the same statements.

"Well, this is the end," said Sheriff Madden when he learned the result of Governor Davidson's effort to bring peace to Cameron Dam.

"There is nothing for us to do but to get Dietz and we'll do it."

The deputies completely surround the Dietz homestead. Deputy Fred Thorbahn, who is in command, said that he had two men stationed at intervals of 20 rods all around the clearing in which the little log cabin is located.

"We will not rush the house, but will wait until one of us gets the drop on him," said Thorbahn. "We will order him to throw up his hands and if he doesn't I have instructed my men to shoot."

The little log cabin in which the Dietz family lives is built on a little knoll, which commands a view of the forest on all sides. There is low ground on all sides of the knoll except one. About fifty yards from the house is the stable and just beyond the stable is a cornfield and several piles of lumber.

Nels Polson and Colonel Munson were signaled from the Dietz cabin by the wave of a handkerchief from Mr. Froelich, who preceded them. They walked out of the woods and across the clearing waving a newspaper.

As they neared the Thornapple river, Dietz, as though in honor of their visit, raised an American flag to the masthead above the cabin. At least 100 men, correspondents, deputies and citizens gathered in the woods and with field glasses watched the house.

When Dietz and his family and the three visitors came out of the cabin they stood and talked and then started to walk slowly down the hill towards the river. Dietz followed, gesticulating. At times his voice was raised in emphasis as he recited his wrongs.

Attorney Gilbert offered Dietz a fair trial, one of the best lawyers in the state, and said he would quash all warrants against members of his family if he would surrender to Sheriff Madden. Dietz spurned all offers and said he would resist to the last ditch.

MICHIGAN INDORSES TAFT

Republican State Convention Adopts Platform That Praises Tariff Law and Present Administration.

Detroit, Mich. — In spite of what was supposed to have been a sweeping "progressive" victory in the recent Republican primaries, the Republican state convention aligned the party in Michigan on the side of the regulars. It adopted a platform unqualifiedly indorsing President Taft and his administration and indorsing less enthusiastically but none the less certainly the new tariff law.

The work of the convention in nominating candidates for the state ticket was much less important than usual, the nominees for the most important offices having been selected by the district primary method in September.

Queer Questions.

Queer questions come over the telephone to the newspaper offices. Here was one that the man who chanced to answer the phone had put up to him the other day:

"Say," began the unknown seeker after the truth, "do you—do you remember who it was that killed Abel?"

"Why, Cain, of course," replied the newspaper man, who put in several years at Sunday school. "Who'd ju suppose?"

"Well," observed the man at the other end in an annoyed tone, "doggon if I ain't gone and made a fool o' myself. DAME NATURE HINTS

When the Food Is Not Suited.

When Nature gives her signal that something is wrong it is generally with the food. The old Dame is always faithful and one should act at once.

To put off the change is to risk that which may be irreparable. An Arizona man says:

"For years I could not safely eat any breakfast. I tried various kinds of breakfast food, but they were all soft, starchy messes which gave me distressing headaches. I drank strong coffee, too, which appeared to benefit me at the time, but added to the headaches afterwards. Toast and coffee were no better, for I found the toast very constipating.

"A friend persuaded me to quit the old coffee and the starchy breakfast foods, and use Postum and Grape-Nuts instead. I shall never regret taking his advice. I began using them three months ago.

"The change they have worked in me is wonderful. I now have no more of the distressing sensations in my stomach after eating, and I never have headaches. I have gained 12 pounds in weight and feel better in every way.

"Grape-Nuts make a delicious as well as a nutritious dish, and I find that Postum is easily digested and never produces dyspepsia symptoms."

James Gray has told us all about it, this early in the campign. Yes we know it James. Now have Quist back up his mugwamp mud cart and load on his proffi cional mud slingers, and you will land up salt creek.

Thief River Falls are making an organized and a determind fight for county division, and if they would onhook Quists old mud cart and cast it adrift they would otherwise be conducting a respectiable campaign. It is not necessary to advertise to the outside world that residents of this county are firebugs, and low down criminals to gain votes for any proposition.

The republican candidates for county office are making a very quiete and affective campaign, and it looks now as if the entire county ticket would be elected, with only a few scattering votes for candidates of other paties. The democrats and socialists all voted the republican primay election ballots and they are very likely to place their X in November opposit the same name that they voted for in September, and it would be very easy to foresee the result.

The First Annual Meeting of the Northern Minnesota Devolopment Association will be held in the city of Brainerd Thursday and Friday, December 1st, and 2nd, 1910. We don't think it will be much use to send delegates, as we "shot our wad" September 20th, when we nominated A. L. Hanson for senator. Had we nominated Berg we would have a seat on the band wagon, but we are rideing on Quists old mud cart, and we do enjoy telling the fellows that voted for Hanson of it.

How could the friends of county option expect James Gray to do any more for the passage of a county option law than governor Ebehart? If the law passes the legislature, which it must to become a law, governor Ebehart would sign the bill, and Mr. Gray could do no more. The state senate consists of sixty-three members, and every one of them is fairly well qualified to be governor of the state of Minnesota, and a big majority of them republicans. Now is it reasonable to suppose that a democratic governor could dictate to that body of men what laws they should or should not pass? It is ridiculous to suppose any such thing, and a republican should not be led to vote for a democratic governor by such talk, because he believes in county option.

A GOOD POSITION

Can be had by ambitious young men and ladies in the field of "wireless" or railway telegraphy. Since the 8-hour law became effective, and since the wireless companies are establishing stations thrououghout the country there is a great shortage of telegraphers. Positions pay beginners from $70 to $90 per month, with good chance of advancement. The National Telegraph Institute operates six official institutes in America, under supervision of R.R. and Wireless officials and places all graduates into positions. It will pay you to write them for full details at Devenport Iowa, Cincinnati, O., Portland Ore., or Memphis Tenn.

Played Them Both Ways.

The French comedian Perlet was extraordinarily thin. A physician recommended him to try some bath in the Pyrenees, so he betook himself to the mineral springs, where he bathed unremittingly, but all in vain; he did not increase in size. "Patience," urged the doctor. "There is nothing like our baths for making people fat." One day while Perlet was waiting philosophically in his bath for an embonpoint which never came he heard a conversation in the next room, from which his own was divided by only a thin partition and which was occupied by an enormous woman, fat as the Hottentot Venus. "Doctor," said she, "I am getting tired of this." "Why?" asked the Aesculapius. "I have been here two months." "Well?" "Well, I am as enormous as I was when I came." "A little patience, madame," urged the doctor. "There is nothing like our baths for making people thin." Perlet, hearing these words, sprang out of his bath, dressed, rushed home to his hotel, ordered his bill and left for Paris by the next train.—Argonaut.

A Simple Life.

"And what," inquired the visitor, who was "being nice" to little Bobbie, "are you going to do when you grow up?"

"Be a business man," responded Robert, "like father. He took me down to his office last week, and I'm going to work like him and have a good time."

"And what are you going to do in business?" pursued the visitor.

"Going to do just like dad," repeated the youngster—"catch the train every morning and when I get to the office light a big cigar and sit down at my desk and say there's so much work to do it's no use beginning till after lunch, and then go out with another big man and eat and eat till I can't eat any more, and then go back to business and ask everybody else why the work ain't done, and then get so mad because nobody does anything that I'll go home early and be so tired I can't do a thing except read the paper and smoke more big cigars and swear."—Pearson's.

Florists' Jargon.

The florists have a trade jargon of their own. When a man who grows flowers for a living rattles off something like "paper whites, valleys and Romans" the confused layman has to stop to think what the jumble of words means. It is only the trade way of saying paper white narcissus, lily of the valley and Roman hyacinth. Likewise "mum" is their word for chrysanthemum, and time and space are likewise saved by saying "cyp" instead of cypripedium. So Bridesmaid roses are "maids," American Beauties are "beauties," Perle du Jardin becomes "perle" and is pronounced pearl, while Souvenir du President Carnot is reduced to its last word; just as those other illustrious French rose names, General Jacqueminot and Marechal Niel, where shortened to "Jack" and "Niel" in the heyday of their glory.—New York Press.

A Locomotive's Breathing.

The "breathing" of a locomotive—that is to say, the number of puffs given during a journey—depends upon the circumstances of its driving wheels and their speed. No matter what the rate of speed may be, for every one round of the driving wheels a locomotive will give four puffs—two out of each cylinder, the cylinders being double. If the average circumference of the driving wheel is twenty feet and the speed per hour fifty miles, a locomotive will give, going at express speed, 880 puffs per minute, 52,800 puffs per hour and 1,056 puffs per mile.—London Standard.

The Real Breakers.

On the sandy beach, O sea!
I fain would live in a surf hotel,
But the rates they ask break me.

"The position is yours, sir, if you will deposit $1,000 as security."

"I accept your offer, sir, if you will deposit $1,00[illegible] security for my security."—Exchange.

If you wish to be a Methuselah you will have to quit doing all the things that make it worth while not to be one.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

USE FEET AS HANDS.

A Custom Somewhat Common Among the Yellow Races.

A French savant, M. Lannelongue, in a communication to the Paris Academy of Sciences maintains that among the yellow races, the Chinese, the Japanese and the Malays, the foot is used as an organ of prehension, like the hand, to a far greater extent than is generally supposed. He says that while in Tokyo he saw a young man sitting in a theater box grasping the rail with his feet just as though they were hands, ever and anon using his right foot to scratch his left thigh. The fact that the Japanese usually sit on their heels at meals and in the house develops extreme suppleness and mobility in the feet and toes, and the prehensive function is still further encouraged by the fact that the Japanese who adhere to the ancient customs wear forked stockings and dispense with the inflexible and constraining European shoe.

Chinese boatmen navigate their boats lying down, steering with their hands and rowing with their feet. The oar is held between the big toe and the others. The natives frequently use their feet to collect and to pick up small objects lying on the ground, and sometimes even catch mice with their toes. M. Lannelongue holds that the yellow races, who are able to use their feet somewhat as the elephant uses his trunk or the monkey his tail, enjoy a very considerable advantage in the everlasting struggle for existence over the less fortunate Caucasians, who are able to employ their feet only for locomotion purposes.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Rebuked.

Hoffman, the German physicist, arrived in Glasgow late one Saturday night and on Sunday morning went to call on Lord Kelvin. The doorbell was answered by a woman servant, whom Hoffman asked if Sir William was at home.

The servant answered, "Sir, he most certainly is not."

Hoffman then asked, "Could you tell me where I could find him?"

"Sir," she answered, "you will find him at church, where you ought to be!"

She Did Hate Smoking.

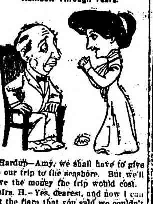
Henry M. Stanley once had an experience which shows how a hatred of tobacco is apt to swamp the finer feelings. In 1883, when staying at Brooklyn, N. Y., he notes in his diary: "Boarding with Judge X. Judge drunk. Tried to kill his wife with hatchet. Attempted three times. I held him down all night. Next morning exhausted, lighted cigar in parlor. Wife came down and insulted and raved at me for smoking in her house."

For a Rainy Day.

"In your pursuit of pleasure," said the serious citizen, "you should not neglect to lay something by for a rainy day."

"Of course," replied the light hearted man. "Nearly every member of our fishing club brings along a pack of cards."—Washington Star.

Rainbow Through Tears.



Hardup—Amy, we shall have to give up our trip to the seashore. But we'll save the money the trip would cost.

Mrs. H.—Yes, dearest, and now I can get the tiara that you said we couldn't afford if we went to the seashore.

Just Pleasantness.

Perhaps just pleasantness has not a very heroic sound, but the human heart that, knowing its own bitterness can yet carry itself cheerfully is not without heroism. Indeed, if that human heart does no more than hold its tongue about its own aches and pains it has a certain moral value that the world cannot afford to lose. "Pleasantness" does not sound as well as self sacrifice or wisdom or spirituality, but it may include all these great words. And certainly just to start one's husband out to his work cheerily, to make the hobbledehoy of a son feel a gentler and sweeter sentiment toward women because of his own mother's sound, sweet gayety, and strength, to help one's servants to put good humor and friendliness into their services—these things make for righteousness in the world.—Margaret Deland.

A Light Retort.

"How did the trouble in the family start?"

"The wife, it seems, got tired of her husband's heavy wit."

"Why didn't she simply make a light retort?"

"She did. She threw the lamp at him."—Exchange.

Mabe Anton Ellingson come up here from Erskine last summer and put up two stacks for that purpose, but it is a waste to turn them to stacks, they should have the hay fed to them.

A Judicial Favor.

A verdant local reporter whose propensities incline to daring rather than to judgment and whose ardency in the quest of news is one of his marked characteristics approached a judge of the United States district court and solicited a little advance information on a case in progress in the judge's court

"You see, judge," said the youngster to the astonished jurist, "we go to press in a few moments, and we all know your inclination to do a newspaper man a favor."

The venerable man eyed the youth sternly and said slowly and emphatically:

"Yes, young man, I'll do you a favor this time, and you will see that you don't ask me again."

"That's fine, your honor. Thanks, very much. Just a few lines will do."

"I will do you this favor. I shall not send you to jail this time, but if you ever approach me again with such a question your friends will not see you for some time."

The discomfited reporter retired ruminating on the mysteries of the law and the dignities pertaining to the judiciary.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Hair Monstrosities.

French theater managers in the eighteenth century had worse evils than picture hats to contend against, Marie Antoinette, who was short even according to French standards, set the fashion of high coiffures, and ultra-fashionable women prided themselves on measuring four feet from their chins to the tops of their heads These structures took about six hours to erect, the hairdresser mounting a ladder in the process. Some coiffures were almost as broad as they were long, with wings sticking out about eight inches on each side of the head. For the "frigate" coiffure the hair was rippled in a huge pile to represent the waves of an angry sea and surmounted by a fully rigged ship. As a consequence of these monstrosities disturbances in theaters occurred almost daily until an ordinance was issued against the admission of women with high coiffures to the floor of the house. —Chicago News.

Yet He Meant Well.

Just as the train was leaving the Fifty-eighth street elevated station a man who had got off there hurried along the platform and spoke to a passenger sitting by an open window in the smoking car.

"Quick!" he cried. "Please hand me that package. I left it on the seat when I got out just now."

"Sure," said the passenger, picking up the bundle and tossing it out of the window.

"Thanks!"

"Hey, there! What are you doing that for?" demanded the wrathful, red faced man sitting next to him.

"Why, he"—

"You double dyed idiot, that package belonged to me! It was $15 worth of laces and ribbons I was taking home to my wife!"

Over the scene that followed let us draw a veil.—Chicago Tribune.

Killing a Bull Without a Weapon.

Cayetano, a famous Spanish toreador, once was strolling across a meadow with a couple of friends when his attention was attracted by an old and infuriated bull which was galloping toward them with lowered head and erect tail. Cayetano had no weapon, not even a cane, but he seized a dust coat which one of his friends was carrying over his arm. As soon as the bull got close to them Cayetano bade his companions make their escape while he engaged the animal's attention. Using the coat as a capa, he drove the bull crazy with fury, stepping aside with the deftest agility at each of the animal's charges. In this manner he caused the bull to turn sharply in the midst of its onward rushes until finally an ominous crack was heard, and the bull fell in a heap, with its backbone broken by the sudden wrench given by the animal's abrupt swerve.

Mrs. Neurich—Did you notice how grandly our daughter swept into the room at Mrs. Fuppson's reception last night?

THE PEANUT.

It Starts Growing In the Open, but Finishes Under Ground.

Most people of the north suppose that peanuts grow, like potatoes, on the roots of the vine. Others with equal confidence state that they hang from the branches like pea pods. Both are right, and both are wrong. The peanut starts in the air and sunlight above ground in the shape of a flower growing at the end of a long tube. After the fall of blossoms this tube, or peduncle, elongates and bends downward, pushing itself inches into the ground. If for any reason it cannot do this it dies in a few hours. But if it succeeds in burying itself to its own satisfaction the ovary at the base of the peduncle slowly enlarges and forms the familiar pod, which is therefore dug out of the ground.

Scattered over the roots of the plant, however, are numerous warts or tubercles, in which, by the aid of a good microscope, can be seen myriads of minute organisms. These bacteria-like bodies, though they get their living from the plant, contribute materially to its supporting by collecting nitrogen from the air and holding it in storage, so to speak, supplying it to the plant as need requires. These wonderful little storehouses often contain, by analysis, a greater supply of this indespensable fertilizer than the surrounding soil

The native country of the peanut has long been a matter of dispute, but the department of agriculture states that the weight of evidence seems to be in favor of Brazil. Thus the peanut is added to the four other plants of great importance that America has given to the world namely, cotton, Indian corn, tobacco and the potato.

What Started Him.

"I see that old Comingo has sailed for Europe."

The Long Silence.

"Yes, we are pretty comfortably fixed here," admitted a veteran employee in the reading room of the Congressional library when a visitor envied him his soft berth and comfortable surroundings. "But there's one thing we long for—yes, thirst for with a burning thirst. That's noise—a real, nerve racking, ear splitting noise. The long hours of soft silence, the dead stillness of everything about, grows so oppressive that at times we could shriek out. We get into a sort of sickroom tiptoe and a low tone of voice that finally degenerates into a whisper even at the telephone. Give us an occasional battery of artillery or a roaring lion or a steam calliope. Even a squalling baby would help some."—Washington Star.

The Publisher's Claims Sustained
The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."
We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.
It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the Dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

WHY NEW ORLEANS

CITY IS LOGICAL POINT FOR WORLD'S PANAMA EXPOSITION.

Its Geographical Position and Many Other Considerations Mark It as Most Suitable Spot for Dedication of Great Work.

Public sentiment has decided that the completion of the Panama Canal in 1915 shall be celebrated with a great International Exposition in which all the nations of the world may participate; and the question of where this Exposition is to be held will be settled by Congress at its approaching session.

New Orleans and San Francisco are contesting for the honor of holding this Exposition, and both cities have guaranteed immense sums of money as an evidence of their ability to finance so great an enterprise.

An Exposition worthy of the term "World's Fair," such as New Orleans proposes to build, will be a great educational movement. Its success as such, however, will depend entirely upon the percentage of our population who can secure its educational advantages, this in turn, depends upon its location, as the time in traveling to and from the Exposition, and the cost in railroad and Pullman fares, are the most important factors.

Considering these matters, New Orleans' claims to being the "Logical Point" for this Panama Exposition, seem to be fully substantiated by the following facts:—

New Orleans is 500 miles from the center of population in the United States. San Francisco is 2,500 miles distant therefrom.

Within a radius of 500 miles from New Orleans there are 17,500,000 people. Within the same radius from San Francisco there are only 2,000,000.

Within a radius of 1,000 miles from New Orleans, there are 65,000,000. Within the same radius from San Francisco there are only 6,000,000.

At an average of 900 miles from New Orleans, there are 70 of our principal cities with a combined population of 20,000,000. Averaging 900 miles from San Francisco there are only 8 large cities, with a combined population of just 1,000,000. The average distance of all these cities to New Orleans is 792 miles,—to San Francisco 2,407 miles.

Over 75 per cent. of the people of the United States could go to an Exposition there at an average expense for railroad fare of $12.50, as against an average of $37.50 to the Pacific Coast; and for several millions of our people, the Pullman fare and Dining Car expenses alone, for a trip to San Francisco, would amount to more than all their transportation expenses for a trip to New Orleans.

Many of our readers will wish to visit this World's Panama Exposition, and if held in New Orleans a great many more could spare the time and money for the trip than could go to San Francisco. Therefore, we urge our readers to write to the two senators from this State and the congressman from this district, requesting them to support New Orleans in the contest.

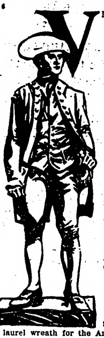
Paul Jones First American Naval Hero

by Edward B. Clark

COPYRIGHT by W. A. PATTERSON



VISITORS to the Naval academy frequently write letters to the authorities in Washington asking why it is that the body of Admiral John Paul Jones is allowed to remain in an obscure corner under a stairway in one of the Naval academy halls. It is proposed eventually to provide a fitting resting place in the academy chapel for the remains of the great sailor, but one delay after another has come and the delay has not only caused comment, but complaint.

When the remains of the admiral were brought to America there was a great commem-memorative service. Theodore Roosevelt, who was then president, members of his cabinet and officers of high rank in the navy spoke in praise of the deeds of the hero, but when the exercises were over forgetfulness seemed to come where all had been attention.

John Paul Jones not only had a stirring, warlike life, but his life was touched with romance of a gentler kind.

The British government thought enough of this man to cause to be posted at every seaport in the United Kingdom this placard:

For the Capture of
JOHN PAUL JONES,
Commanding an American Ship, the Government will pay the sum of 10,000 Guineas.

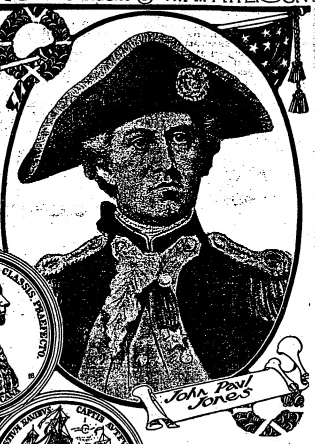
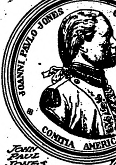
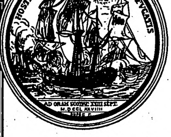
John Paul Jones was the first man to pluck a laurel wreath for the American navy. Taking into consideration the means at his command, his exploits were more daring and fully as successful as those which forty years later gave luster to the name of Bainbridge, Rogers, Porter and Decatur. Of the deeds of John Paul Jones, though they are written down in the histories of four nations, the world seems to know comparatively little today, while of the man, John Paul Jones, though volumes of speculation have been written, the world knows almost nothing. From his youth he seemed to prefer that everything touching his inner self should be shrouded, though he was nothing loath to demand proper recognition for the acts which he performed for his country's good.

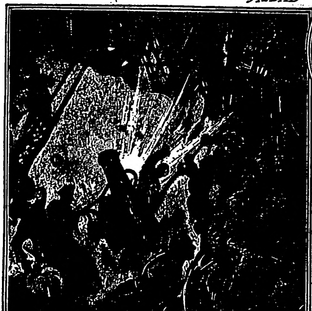




JOHN PAUL JONES MEDAL



HOSTIVM NAVIBVS CAPTIS AVT FVGATIS
AD ORAM SCOTIÆ XXIII SEPT. M.DCCLXXVIIII



FIGHT BETWEEN THE BON HOMME RICHARD AND THE SERAPIS

There have never been lacking insinuations that the real reason for the admiral's reticence arose from his desire to hide certain things which had been said touching his parentage. It was commonly reported at the time that John Paul Jones, though born to the family of John Paul, a thrifty Scotch gardener at Arbigland on the Solway Firth, was in reality the son of Lord Selkirk, upon whose estate Gardener Paul delved. Careful inquiry has disproved the scandal. Jeannie Macduff, the mother of the naval hero and the wife of Gardener Paul, was a woman of character, possessed in full measure of the homely domestic virtues.

It must be said here that the American admiral added the name Jones to his family name of Paul at the time when he first made application for a commission in the American navy. Why the name was added, though speculation has been rife for more than a century, no one to this day knows. The boy Paul, the youngest of five sons, was born in a little cottage standing in a glade near where the Nith comes flowing into the Solway. When only twelve years of age he was apprenticed to a ship merchant at White Haven, a village where years afterward the people frightened their children into obedience by the mention of "the demon, Paul Jones."

The future admiral's first voyage took him to the Rappahannock river of America. Twice or three times the trip was repeated, and finally, owing to the death of his master, the apprentice was released from his engagement at the age of sixteen. An elder brother had settled on the banks of the American river, and with him the boy lived and studied for some time. He again went to sea about the time that he attained his majority, sailing for Scotland as a for'mast hand in a brig. On the voyage the captain and mate died, and the crew placed Jones in command. On his arrival in Scotland the owners of the vessel gave him the berth of captain.

On a voyage outward bound from Scotland, Jones, as captain of the merchant brig, ordered that a mutinous carpenter be flogged. A year afterward the man died, Jones' enemies said as a result of the beating. Jones' friends said as the result of a long-fixed disease. The youthful captain succeeded in clearing his character in the eyes of all unprejudiced persons, but the treatment that he received while under suspicion, at the hands of his former Scotch friends, so aroused his indignation and anger that he quit Scotland never to return except as an implacable enemy.

Jones, or as he was then, John Paul, was next heard of living in penury, near Fredericksburg, this country. The Revolution came on. At the time of the battles at Lexington and Concord the colonies did not have a single vessel afloat. There was no material for a navy save some good sailors. The future American admiral walked to Philadelphia in the autumn of 1775 and appeared before the marine committee appointed by congress to make some provisions for a navy, and when asked his name he said "Jones," and by that name history has since known him. The committee would have paid little attention to his request for a commission had it not happened that one of its members, Richard Henry Lee, knew something of the career of the supplicant sailor. He was given a commission as first lieutenant of the Alfred, a merchantman, which had been made over into a man-of-war, and placed under the command of Commodore Hopkins. To the masthead of this vessel Jones, with his own hands, hoisted the first ensign ever shown on an American man-of-war. It was the famed rattlesnake flag, with the motto "Don't tread on me." By a remarkable coincidence, some time later on the Ranger Jones displayed at the peak the first bit of Stars and Stripes bunting ever flung to the breeze of an American man-of-war. A little later he had the honor of hearing fired in recognition of the same flag the first salute which it ever received from a foreign nation, the roar of the guns carrying with it the acknowledgement by France of the independence of the United Colonies.

John Paul Jones physically was not a heroic looking figure. He was only five feet tall and of light weight, but in his fighting qualities his ounces counted like other men's pounds. His face was grave and thoughtful, and his eyes were as sharp as his cutlass. The fleet in which Jones sailed under Commodore Hopkins was a miserable affair, and Hopkins was the weakest of commanders. Jones succeeded in inducing his superior to sail for Nassau, where under the direction of the junior officer a vast amount of British stores were seized. On the way back to the United States the British frigate Glasgow was sighted, but it escaped the American fleet owing to the poor seamanship of Hopkins. A court of inquiry was held, and it was determined that if Jones' suggestions had been carried out the Glasgow could have been captured or sunk. Hopkins felt disgraced and became a bitter enemy of his subordinate.

Shortly after this Jones was made captain of the Providence, carrying twelve guns. He cruised about, capturing many merchantmen, and finally when off Nova Scotia he fell in with the Milford, a huge British frigate, which was disguised as a trading ship. Jones bore down on it until he was within pistol shot of the vessel. He then discovered his error, and by magnificent seamanship succeeded in escaping without a scratch, although a single well-directed broadside would have sunk his ship. The Milford chased the Providence, but was quickly left astern. The British ship kept firing at the Yankee long after it was out of range. In contempt and derision of this act of the British captain, and knowing that his actions were being watched through a glass, Jones ordered a single sailor to stand at the stern and shoot a musket at the pursuer every time he fired his big bow chaser.

After serious trouble with the jealous Hopkins, Jones was finally given command of the Ranger, eighteen guns. He took a number of prizes on the way, and finally put into a French port. At Paris he met the American commissioners, Silas Dean, Benjamin Franklin and Arthur Lee, and they secured him an audience at the French court. By request he aided in planning the operations of D'Estaing's fleet, which was shortly to leave for America.

The heroic fighting career of Jones was just about to begin, though with the fame that he won in the next few months came the undying hatred of all the people of his native country, and there came also the loss of the only woman he ever loved, and whom he had hoped one day to make his wife. British privateers had ravaged the American coast, had seized American merchandise and had burned some American towns. Jones believed in making reprisals, and he spread terror and alarm along the Irish, Welsh and English coasts.

He chose, however, as the place of direct attack White Haven, where he had lived as a boy and a youth, and the masts of whose shipping were in sight of his birthplace. He contemplated burning all the vessels at the place and looting the town. David Freeman, deserter from Jones' ship, spread the alarm among the inhabitants of the town, and Wallingford, one of Jones' lieutenants, was slow in carrying out some of his instructions. As it was, however, the expatriated Scotsman succeeded in capturing one of the forts which guarded the place, leading the land attack in person. With his own hand he spiked every gun in the fortification, and then turned his attention to the firing of the shipping. As he was about to carry out this design a vast armed multitude appeared. They had been led to the scene by the deserter, David Freeman. Not to be balked in a part of his design, Jones succeeded in boarding one of the largest merchantmen in the Solway and applied the torch.

The Ranger had no sooner put out from the Solway than it ran across the British man-of-war Drake. The Drake was by far the heavier armed and manned, and a better equipped vessel than the Ranger. Jones, however, gave battle at once, and after a bloody fight he took the British vessel and hauled down its colors. He took his prize into a French port. The French people were not accustomed to naval victories over the English, let alone to victories won by an inferior force, and the name of Jones at once became the synonym for heroism.

After spreading terror once more along the coast of the British Isles, Jones returned to America to find the war ended.

Jones was essentially a sailor of fortune, and he went to St. Petersburg, where he was made an admiral in the Russian navy. On his way thither he stopped long enough in Denmark to flirt with the princess royal, who fell violently in love with him. Thirty English officers in the service of Russia threatened to resign if the "pirate" were commissioned. Catharine said: "You'll have to double your number to make the loss equal to the gain." They stayed in the service. After winning honors in naval battles for Russia Admiral Jones went to Paris There he was alternately grave and gay. He could have married into the houses of any of the nobility, but the memory of a Scotch girl was in his heart and there it stayed to the exclusion of all other loves until the day of his death.

Managing a Husband.

Men are like children; they want managing, although you must never let them dream that you think so. No child likes to be ordered about, no man will endure coercion. But managing! It is an art so subtle, so elusive, that few women understand even the rudiments of it. Sisters mine, let us reason together, says Woman's Life. In every human being there is a spark of the divine; it is yours to fan that spark into a flame—that is managing a man—it is to get the very best out of him there is to have, and not two women in ten can do it.

Do not think that there is anything unworthy in managing a man—to bring out the best is a high vocation. Only let us see to it that we are worthy of it. There are women who have made angels of men, but at the cost of their own divinity. There is room for more than one unselfish person in a family.

GOV. EBERHART GIVES KEYNOTE

ELUCIDATES PRINCIPLES OF REPUBLICAN PLATFORM AT MANKATO.

DISCUSSES HIS ADMINISTRATION

Mankato, Oct. 5.—Gov. Eberhart delivered his keynote address before a large audience here last night. The governor said:

"In accepting the nomination I stated at the proper time I would discuss the questions pending in this state, and make clear my position with reference thereto. That promise I am here to fulfill tonight. In making such statement I shall speak frankly and without evasion, believing firmly that right is might and that the people will choose the right.

Progressive Platform.

"First, I stand squarely upon the platform adopted by the Republican party of this state. This platform is clear, definite, comprehensive, and distinctly progressive. No Republican candidate need offer any apology either for its contents or for the manner of its adoption. In the language of Theodore Roosevelt it favors—among other things—

Tariff Commission.

"The policy of providing for a disexperts which will treat each schedule through a high class commission of experts which will treat each schedule purely on its own merits, with a view both to protecting the consumer from excessive prices and to securing the American producer and especially the American wage-earner what will represent the difference of cost of production here as compared with the cost of production in countries where labor is less liberally rewarded.

Political Bossism.

"Party bossism is not entirely extinct in Minnesota. When the Democratic party assembled in Minneapolis on July 28th last it nominated John Lind for Governor, after adopting a platform upon which he refused to stand. Mr. Lind declined the nomination and the chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee carried his letter of declination in his inside pocket for six weeks, meanwhile regaling the public with various stories and promises. During this period the Democratic boss evolved the Kitchen Cabinet candidate with a new platform—new to the boss, new to the candidate and new to the party, whose policy and action he seems to control in this instance.

County Option.

"The nominee of the Democratic State Central Committee says that he will do more than sign a county option bill if passed by the legislature. He will, if elected Governor, recommend it to the legislature. Without attempting to minimize the force and effect of executive recommendations, I say in all seriousness to the people of this state, that if you do not elect a legislature in favor of county option, a recommendation of the Governor will not secure the passage of the law. Promises like this may sound good during a campaign, but laws are based upon the will of the people as expressed by their chosen representatives.

The Policy of Conservation.

"That the Republican party in Minnesota is progressive is again indicated by its position and achievements on the vital question of conservation. Our platform specifically commits the party to the conservation of resources "along the lines suggested by Theodore Roosevelt and begun by him during his administration." Minnesota is recognized by all the states in the union as first and most progressive as well as most practical in the line of achievements. The continuation of this conservation work is the most important problem now confronting the people of the state, for it includes not only the conservation of natural but also of human resources.

Re-apportionment.

"The Republican party is pledged to a new apportionment of the legislative districts in accordance with the constitution. The plank is as follows:

"Believing that each and every section of the state should be fairly represented in the law-making bodies, as is provided in Section 2, Article 4, of the Constitution, we pledge the Republican party to the passage of an apportionment law by the next legislature based on population, as shown by the United States census for 1910, to take effect on or before January 1st, 1912, that will give to each county the representation it is justly entitled to in both branches of the state legislature."

Primary Law.

"Under the present primary law many abuses are permitted. I am strongly in favor of amending the primary system of nomination in accordance with the platform, and also heartily favor the election of United State senators by popular vote.

The Problem of Transportation.

"One of the most important problems before the people of the state is that of transportation. The Democratic platform is absolutely silent on that vital question. On the other hand the Republican party has pledged itself on record with reference to the regulation and control of railway, telegraph and telephone companies in the clearest and strongest terms. Upon that platform I stand without reservation and through the legal department of the state I shall exert every effort to guard the interests of the people in all the so-called Minnesota rate cases now pending before the courts.

Good Roads.

"One of the most important problems to which it has been my privilege to devote considerable time and attention is that of good roads. After securing the passage of the "Highway Commission Act" in 1905, I immediately set out to interest the people of the state in the appropriation of necessary funds. Through the efforts of the press generally, good roads associations, leading men, such as Hon. R. C. Dunn, and others, together with the Commission itself, there has arisen such an interest all over the state that I will recommend, in accordance with the Republican platform, that the next legislature authorize the submission to the people of a one mill State Road Tax. It should also raise the present levy to the authorized limit of one-fourth mill and amply increase the authority of the commission so that road construction through the state could be properly supervised and improved. The state can make no better investment than the extension of aid in the supervision and construction of good public highways, not merely from a purely economic standpoint, but because it is essential in the proper development of rural schools.

Labor.

"There is no question, where the Republican party has stood and where it stands today with reference to labor. All the advance labor legislation on our statute books has been enacted pursuant to its policy of aiding and protecting labor, and I shall use every effort to secure further legislation in the interest of child labor, the protection of health and life of all wage earners and the enactment of a workmen's compensation act in accordance with the recommendations of the commission provided for by an act of the last legislature.

Education.

"No state in the Union can boast of a better educational system than Minnesota. Yet I think we are all ready to admit that our state has paid too little attention to the teaching of agriculture, industrial training and home economics in all our schools.

Immigration.

"Immigration is another important phase of state development. The Immigration Commission should be given more funds and authority so that it may be able to render more assistance in securing desirable settlers and in overcoming obstacles necessarily incident to the development of new territory.

Administrative Record.

"The state administrative officers constitute one great business institution. In coming before the people as a candidate for Governor it is proper that an account should be rendered covering my stewardship already rendered.

Record of Attorney General.

"Among the brilliant achievements of Republican administration during the past few years is the record made by the Attorney General's office. In the so-called railroad rate cases and cases in state courts against the Western Union Telegraph Company and the railroad company for taxes, former Attorney General Young and Senator E. S. Durment have been employed as special counsel, but in the numerous important timber and tax cases that have been carried to the United States Supreme Court, Attorney General Simpson and his assistants have conducted the litigation and made the arguments. This is said to be the first instance in which a state has appeared in the United States Supreme Court without the aid of outside counsel.

"In 1895 a Republican legislature passed Chapter 163 of the laws of that year, placing in the hands of the Timber Board, composed of the Governor, the Auditor and the Treasurer, to which the Attorney General was added in 1905, the sale and management of the pine timber of the state. The law provided drastic penalties for its violation, and during the incumbency of Attorney General Young there was brought a large number of actions seeking to recover damages for the illegal taking of state timber. At once began a bitter contest in the courts, and the constitutionality of the law was attacked from every possible standpoint. When Attorney General Young left the office in 1909, he reported collections from suits commenced by him amounting to $39,207,06, and in addition thereto several large judgments. Many of these suits were transmitted to his sucessor, Attorney General Simpson, and from the so-called "Timber Cases" there was collected and paid into the state treasury during the past two years $65,141.54, making a total of $109,890.84 as a direct result of the efficient services of these two officials. In the suits of the state against the Western Union Telegraph Company for taxes Attorney General Young received $56,071.80. Many suits were commenced by him and turned over to Attorney General Simpson for further prosecution. In these cases the present Attorney General has been equally successful, and secured a verdict against the Western Union Telegraph Company of $49,047.63.

"In 1905 a Republican legislature passed what is known as the inheritance tax law, which provides in effect that a tax must be paid for the right to inherit under the laws of Minnesota above exemptions. Thereunder has been collected and paid into the state treasury up to July 1, 1910, the immense sum of $1,054,722.82.

"The total collections made by the Attorney General's office from 1905 to July 1st, 1910, inclusive, amount to a grand total of $2,330,735.29.

Secretary of State.

"In the office of the Secretary of State many important reforms have been instituted by the present incumbent, Julius A. Schmal. In the payment of filing fees, the laws have been strictly enforced, and the record of the two years ending July 31, 1910, shows that the state has received nearly $25,000 more in filing fees than during the two years preceding. Another enactment for which this department should be given credit is that permitting the proposed amendments to the constitution to be published in at least three newspapers in each county, thereby giving every voter a better opportunity to become familiar with the provisions of the proposed amendments. Another measure enacted by the legislature is the one directing the Secretary of State to secure an annual license for every dining and buffet car where liquor is sold while the car is in the state. Through this legislation the Secretary has collected several thousand dollars annually. The enforcement of the ticket agent license law has been diligently made, and today the state is realizing large sums from this source.

State Auditor.

"Undoubtedly one of the most important offices in the state is that of Auditor, and the record of that office during the past few years is not surpassed in the history of the state. Through the persistent efforts of Auditor Iverson and the Attorney General, a large amount of swamp lands have been recovered by the state and while the value of the timber upon these lands exceeds a million dollars, it is believed that they also contain a valuable amount of iron ore. In securing these swamp land grants the state has conducted one of the most important contests before the Interior Department.

Summing Up.

"This is a summary of the important issues in this campaign, my position with reference thereto and a brief accounting of my short stewardship. As the executive of a great business institution I have reported to the board of directors and stockholders. It is for the people of the state to judge whether or not I have discharged my duty faithfully and conscientiously, so that I may be deserving of their renewed confidence. Like all others who have occupied important public positions I have made mistakes. No man ever received better treatment at the hands of the public, and while some criticism may have been unjust, I have always consoled myself with the thought that unjust criticism could not injure and just criticism was an invaluable guide to follow in the path of duty. The press of the state has been especially friendly and I wish to express my appreciation of its loyal and unselfish support. Whatever may have been the shortcomings of this administration, I can go before the people of the state with the assurance that I have endeavored to give them the very best service of which I was capable; that I have labored diligently to learn the needs of the state and its great opportunities for development, and that by reason of such experience I have become better fitted to serve in the future than in the past. To merit the confidence and good will of the people has been my sole ambition and I leave my cause in their hands, feeling that their verdict will be just. The true greatness of our state cannot be measured in terms of wealth, territory, commerce or industry, but rather in the prosperity and happiness of the people, the purity of the homes, the efficiency of the schools, the sanctity of the churches, the enforcement of equal rights to all and special privileges to none, and the honesty and integrity of our citizenship. Our work at the polls should therefore be an endorsement of what is highest, cleanest and most intelligent in American citizenship. True, we cannot expect to eradicate selfishness and approach perfection, but we have a right to expect that the public conscience shall continue to quicken and civic virtue continue to spread, and that character, honesty, integrity and ability shall be the standard by which personal worth is determined; that the record of every public official shall resemble a torch, that is, the more it is shaken the more it will burn. We have a right to expect that justice shall be meted out to all alike, and that every law of the land shall be enforced against the strong and the weak, the rich and the poor equally and without fear or favor, and to that end I pledge my earnest and hearty co-operation.

HIGHWAYMAN IS HONEST.

Man Who Three Years Ago Held Up Bartender Returns Money.

St. Paul.—St. Paul has an honest highwayman. Nearly three years ago he held up a saloon here, masked in approved style and alone, nearly killed the bartender, and departed with a pocket full of cash. He escaped the dragnet of the police department, and Chris Batroot, the proprietor chalked up $51.05 to loss and forgot about it. On Tuesday he received a money order for the full amount, signed George Smith.

INFLUENCE OF THE MOTHER

Well to Remember That She Is Ever a Model of Behavior to the Children.

"It is hard for a young mother, who has not yet overcome the wayward tendencies of her own youthful nature, to realize the influence she exerts over her little one. She is constantly surrounded by critical imitators who copy her morals and manners.

As the mother is, so are her sons and daughters. If a family of children are blessed with an intelligent mother, who is dainty and refined in her manner, and does not consider it necessary to be one woman in the drawing room and an entirely different person in her everyday life, but who is a true mother and always a tender, charming woman, she will invariably see her habits of speech and perfect manners repeated in her children.

Great, rough men and noisy, busy boys will always tone down their voices and step quietly and try to be more mannerly when she stops to give them a kind word and a pleasant smile. For a true woman will never fail to say and do all the kind, pleasant things she can that will in any way help to lift up and cheer those whose lives are shaded with care and toil. The mother of today rules the world of tomorrow.

WASTED A FORTUNE ON SKIN TROUBLE

"I began to have an itching over my whole body about seven years ago and this settled in my limbs, from the knee to the toes. I went to see a great many physicians, a matter which cost me a fortune, and after I noticed that I did not get any relief that way, I went for three years to the hospital. But they were unable to help me there, I used all the medicines that I could see but became worse and worse. I had an inflammation which made me almost crazy with pain. When I showed my foot to my friends they would get really frightened. I did not know what to do. I was so sick and had become so nervous that I positively lost all hope.

"I had seen the advertisement of the Cuticura Remedies a great many times, but could not make up my mind to buy them, for I had already used so many medicines. Finally I did decide to use the Cuticura Remedies and I tell you that I was never so pleased as when I noticed that, after having used two sets of Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills, the entire inflammation had gone. I was completely cured. I should be only too glad, if people with similar disease would come to me and find out the truth. I would only recommend them to use Cuticura. Mrs. Bertha Sachs, 1621 Second Ave., New York, N. Y., Aug. 20, 1909."

"Mrs. Bertha Sachs is my sister-in-law and I know well how she suffered and was cured by Cuticura Remedies after many other treatments failed. Morris Sachs, 321 E. 89th St., New York, N. Y., Secretary of Deutsch-Ostrowoer Unt.-Verein, Kempner Hebrew Benevolent Society, etc."

Trouble in the Troupe.

Temporary Heat Quickly

Did you ever stop to think of the many ways in which a perfect oil heater is of value? If you want to sleep with your window open in winter, you can get sufficient heat from an oil heater while you undress at night, and then turn it off. Apply a match in the morning, when you get out of bed, and you have heat while you dress.

Those who have to eat an early breakfast before the stove is radiating heat can get immediate warmth from an oil heater, and then turn it off.

The girl who practices on the piano in a cold room in the morning can have warmth from an oil heater while she plays, and then turn it off.

The member of the family who has to walk the floor on a cold winter's night with a restless baby can get temporary heat with an oil heater, and then turn it off. The

PERFECTION SMOKELESS OIL HEATER

Absolutely smokeless and odorless is invaluable in its capacity of quickly giving heat. Apply a match and it is immediately at work. It will burn for nine hours without refilling. It is safe, smokeless and odorless. It has a damper top and a cool handle. An indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font.

It has an automatic-locking flame spreader which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back so that the wick can be cleaned in an instant.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, and can be quickly unscrewed for rewicking. Finished in japan or nickel, strong, durable, well-made, built for service, and yet light and ornamental.

HOW BENTON WON LIFE'S BATTLE

by JOSEPH W. FOLK

FORMER GOVERNOR OF MISSOURI

COPYRIGHT BY JOSEPH B. BOWLES

OUTSIDE of Missouri the home of Thomas H. Benton, United States senator from 1821 to 1851, is known only to the student of history. Webster, Clay and Calhoun are familiar words everywhere, yet Benton served in the United States senate longer than any of these, and was responsible for more sound legislation than all of them together. His name was never prominently connected with the presidency, yet he accomplished more for his country than have the majority of the presidents.

This remarkable man came into the world in 1782, six years after the signing of the Declaration of Independence, and departed in 1858, three years before the Civil war. Thus his life covered the formative epoch of a government by the people in the making, and ended just before the outbreak that shook the foundations of the republic and bathed the nation in blood. For many years he ignored the mutterings in the political sky and preferred to believe the talk of war between the states over the question of slavery mere idle chatter. When he realized that the sentiment of disunion was real he took an uncompromising stand in favor of the union and refused to alter his position or trim his sails to meet the breezes from Missouri that were blowing the other way. Though entering public life as an advocate of the admission of Missouri into the union unrestricted as to slavery, he left the public service in the evening of life because he would not consent to vote for the extension of slavery into territory that had before been free. He was a firm believer in the doctrine of state rights, which was, as he understood it, the right of the states to govern themselves as to all matters except those delegated to the federal government. His theory of the republic was an "indissoluble union of self-governing states"—a federated repupblic.

His education, that is the school part of it, was limited to the grammar schools and a short time in the University of North Carolina. In a larger sense he continued his studies until the day of his death, and was one of the best informed men of his time. While other statesmen were indulging in the dissipations common to that period among public men, he devoted his spare moments to investigation and study, and his knowledge of the details of public matters was vastly superior to that of any of his compeers.

Benton's high moral character was blemished by his pugnacious disposition. In his early days he was involved in many "affairs of honor" as duels were termed then. He had not been in St. Louis long when the most unfortunate event in his career occurred. In the trial of a law suit some trivial dispute arose between him and a young attorney named Charles Lucas, a highly esteemed and most estimable young man. Lucas won the case and Benton challenged him. Lucas declined the challenge at first, but Benton persisted and offered deliberate insults. Lucas then accepted. They fought a first duel and no one being injured a second meeting was insisted upon by both parties. In the second duel Lucas fell, mortally wounded. Before dying he took Benton's hand and forgave him, but Benton never forgave himself, and the shadow of this tragedy went with him through the years to his grave. The code-duello was resorted to in those days often for insignificant things, and every public man of consequence had figured in such an affair either as principal or second. This duel was fought the year after Benton arrived in St. Louis. Four years later the father of the lamented victim of the duelling custom was one of the unsuccessful candidates for senator against Benton.

His Fight With "Old Hickory."

Benton, like Andrew Jackson, was of North Carolina birth, and, like Old Hickory, moved to Tennessee when a youth just entering upon manhood's estate. He became Jackson's friend while they both lived in Nashville and co-operated with Jackson in raising the brigade of militia which became the nucleus of the army that was to annihilate the British at New Orleans and make January 8, 1815, a red-letter day in American annals. It was on Benton's advice that the brigade was formed and offered to the government by Jackson, and for a time he was on Jackson's staff. Their friendly relations were, however, interrupted by a disgraceful brawl. Jesse Benton, a brother of Thomas Benton, had fought a duel and Jackson had seconded the antagonist. An angry dispute arose, Benton espousing his brother's cause. Jackson struck Benton with a horsewhip, and in return was shot in the shoulder by Benton. Jackson carried Benton's bullet in his shoulder until the close of his presidential term, and the wound gave him some physical distress to the end of his days. The feeling between them ran high after this episode, not to subside until the hand of fate was to bring them together again, one a senator from another state, and the other as a candidate for the presidency of the United States. A year or so after the fight Benton moved to St. Louis, where he opened a law office in connection with a newspaper of which he became editor. He became prominent at once in the discussion of public questions, and took a leading part in securing the admission of Missouri into the union. After a five years' residence in Missouri he was elected by the legislature one of the state's first two United States senators.

Declined Money Profit from Public Service.

Immediately upon his election, with scrupulous regard for his official integrity, Benton called all of his clients to his office and told them that he could not further serve them, as there might be a conflict between their interest and the public welfare. For some of his clients he had litigation over land grants, and as senator he was in a position, through the enactment of laws, to make them and himself wealthy in the settlement of disputed titles. He refused even to recommend an attorney to them, lest this might embarrass him in his public duty. His idea of public office was that an official had no more right to use his public functions to aid personal friends or to advance his own fortune than he would have to put his hand into the public treasury and take money therefrom to pay a private debt. Through all his official career Benton was true to this ideal and was incorruptible and above reproach from any venal standpoint.

Championed "Missouri Compromise."

Benton's career of constructive statesmanship was the greatest Missouri or the west has produced. He came upon the stage of public activity with the enactment of the Missouri compromise, which was largely his work. He left public life coincident with the repeal of that measure. Under this compromise Missouri was admitted into the Union (though it was some years later before the state was formally recognized) as a slave state, with the provision that no state created out of the Louisiana purchase, north of the southern boundary of Missouri, should be admitted with slavery. It hushed slavery agitation for a decade, and any attack upon it for a time was resisted by south as well as north. Benton was 39 years old when he took his seat and had lived exactly half the years given to him. Monroe was just beginning his second term as president, Calhoun was secretary of war, Henry Clay was speaker of the house of representatives. In the next presidential contest Benton supported Clay against Jackson, but ever after that he was Clay's political enemy and Jackson's warmest and strongest supporter.

Father of Homestead Law.

To Benton more than any other man is due the fact that there is no frontier in the United States today. What was a wilderness west of the Rocky mountains fifty years ago is now settled by happy and prosperous men and women by reason of his effort in securing the enactment of the homestead law. Benton established the policy of selling public land at a maximum of $1.25 an acre, giving preference to actual settlers and securing to settlers the right of preemption. This made settlement easy and streams of sturdy men and women began at once to move westward.

Benton looked into the future further than any other statesman of his time. In answer to the taunts that the western country, particularly Oregon, would never be anything more than a hunting ground, he prophesied that the time would come when there would be more people west of the Rockies than east. He advocated the construction of a military road to New Mexico, and was so earnest in his support of the idea of a transcontinental railroad that his enemies charged him with being mentally unbalanced on the subject, and even his friends feared he was too enthusiastic. In one of his first speeches he prophesied that the Pacific coast would soon become the door of Asia and advised sending ministers to China and Japan—a proposal at that time considered extremely humorous.

Brought About Specie Payments.

It was through Benton's effort that specie payments were established and that all our money became based on gold and silver. So earnest was he in the demand for a specie basis that he was nicknamed "Old Bullion," of which he became very proud, and in his speeches often referred to himself by that term. He was at first inclined to favor a protective tariff system, but later strongly opposed protection merely for the sake of protection. He stated his position thus: "The fine effects of the tariff upon the prosperity of the west have been celebrated on this floor. With how much reason let facts respond and people judge. I do not think we are indebted to the high tariff for our fertile lands and navigable rivers, and I am certain we are indebted to those blessings for the prosperity we enjoy." While he opposed the protective system he voted for a protective duty on lead, which was largely produced in Missouri. In this he made the mistake that has been made by so many senators and congressmen of this day, who say they oppose protection, but vote for protection on the products of their own states, thereby placing themselves in the position of not being able to successfully question the justice of the demand of those in other states for a larger share of protection for themselves.

After the election of Andrew Jackson to the chief magistracy Benton became the right arm of that great president. In the atttempted nullificaion of the tariff laws by South Carolina, Benton made effective Jackson's ultimatum to that state demanding submission to the law, by engineering the passage of a compromise tariff bill which stopped everybody from talking of fighting, but satisfied nobody.

Fought United States Bank.

Jackson's greatest battle was against the United States bank, which he declared must either be put out of business or it would run the government. Benton led this fight in the senate. He brought up the question in 1831 by submitting a resolution to the effect that it was not expedient to re-charter the bank. The war against the bank raged fiercely for years. It had many powerful adherents and obtained the support of a number of members of congress, as was shown later by investigation, through what amounted to brazen bribery in the way of favoritism on loans. In the midst of the fight the presidential election of 1832 took place and Jackson was triumphantly re-elected. Shortly after this Jackson made an order withdrawing the public funds from the bank. This precipitated a tremendous public uproar and the senate adopted a resolution censuring Jackson for the act. Benton immediately began a fight to expunge this resolution from the record, and finally, in the last days of the Jackson administration, the motion prevailed amidst great excitement and the resolution of censure was expunged by having a black border drawn around it and across its face the words: "Expunged by order of the senate, January 16, 1837." Jackson deeply appreciated the value of Benton's support and years later, on his deathbed, said to a friend: "Tell Col. Benton I am grateful."

Benton was the supporter of Jackson's successors to the presidency, particularly of Van Buren and Polk, but after Andrew Jackson, the presidents up to the Civil war wielded little influence compared with those before, and were largely engaged in a game of hide-and-seek on the slavery question.

In 1848 the anti-Bentonites carried a majority of the Missouri legislature, and a resolution was passed demanding that slavery be permitted to exist in territory north of the Missouri compromise boundary and instructing the senators to vote accordingly. Benton denounced this resolution as treasonable and refused to obey it. He said it did not represent the sentiment of the people of the state and he appealed from the Missouri legislature to the Missouri people. The struggle was bitter and intense. As Benton was up for re-election, it being the close of his fifth term as senator, the effort was to control the legislature which was to elect the senator for the following term. Neither side obtained a majority of the members and a deadlock resulted to be broken by the anti-Benton Democrats combining with the Whigs and bringing about Benton's defeat.

The old warrior was not dismayed and kept up the fight. In 1852 he was sent to the lower house of congress from St. Louis as a Union Democrat. For thirty years he had been absolute dictator in the politics of Missouri. His word was final, and his wishes law, but the tide had turned, and for the remaining years of his life set steadily against him. Yet at no time in his career does Benton present a more inspiring figure than when, with his back to the wall, crowded on every side by foes, he continued to battle for the principles he believed in. By compromising and by truckling to the public sentiment of his state he could have regained his seat in the senate, but he would have lost the love and admiration due the brave man who prefers defeat with the right to victory with what he considers wrong.

Benton's mannerisms were marked and did not tend to make him popular with the masses. He seemed egotistical to the point of absurdity, yet in him it was merely exaggerated self-respect. To the casual observer stern and pompous, he was gentle and tender-hearted to those who knew him well. His public and private life were above reproach. His high sense of honor as a public servant, his incorruptible integrity, his unwavering adherence at whatever cost to the principles he believed in, his powerful intellect and his aggressive energy combined to make him a fighter eminently qualified to lead and represent the militant people of the West in the first half of the last century.

He was defeated for re-election to the house in 1854, and in 1856 became the candidate of the Union Democrats for governor, and ran third in the race. He was now 74 years old, but as vigorous and robust as ever. Without lamenting his fate or the people's ingratitude, he cheerfully took up the completion of his "Thirty Years' View," giving a mental picture of the important events in the history of our country with which he had been connected. In 1858 he died in Washington, undismayed by the storm of public misunderstanding that had wrecked his political life. He looked into the future and saw the approval of coming generations whose views would not be obscured by the passions and excitement of the moment. When the news of his death reached Missouri there was an entire change of sentiment and all classes united to do honor to his memory. They then realized that the mightiest man of Missouri was dead, the man who towered above friends and foes. All the state was in mourning and his funeral at St. Louis was attended by more than forty thousand people.

Saved Missouri to Union.

It was the fight Benton made that enabled others, when the war came, to keep Missouri in the Union. If Missouri had seceded there probably would have been a different story to tell than that which came from Appomattox.

So Benton won life's battle by simple honesty, by perseverance, by having ideals and remaining true to them in sunshine and in shadow. His influence will be felt for good as long as this republic lasts, and the failure to secure political preferment at the end of his life by giving up the fight accentuates the grandeur of his character. He lost for the moment, but in losing he gained for all time. For him there was victory in defeat. The lesson of his life is—it is not essential always to win, but it is essential to keep the faith.

Having fought his duel and saved his honor by firing a shot in the air, the editor of a French provincial newspaper went back to his desk and the incident had quite left his mind when he felt something strange in his thigh. He looked and found that he was bleeding profusely.

A doctor was called, who discovered that a bullet was embedded in the editor's thigh some two inches deep and required extraction. "Why was this not taken notice of on the spot where the duel took place?" he asked. The editor was as much in the dark as the doctor. At the moment of the duel he had fired into the air and his adversary also took a distracted sort of aim. There had evidently been no intention of doing the slightest harm on either side. The editor felt nothing as he left the field and had shaken hands with his antagonist as a sign of reconciliation. How a bullet came to be lodged in his thigh was simply one of the mysteries of dueling.

GET CLOSER TO SUN

Waldberg's Simple Life Colony Does So by Being Nude.

Men and Women of Swiss Settlement Live Almost Without Clothing and Children Wear None—Say Nature So Intended.

Zurich, Switzerland.—In one small section of Switzerland the residents go through heat wave, snow storm and northern blast with impartial calmness. The name of the colony is the "Lienbluftheim" (light and air home) and it is located on the Waldberg, overlooking the town of Zurich.

While in the town I heard reports of the thoroughness of the methods by which the residents in the Waldberg institution get right back to nature, so I decided to make arrangements for a closer study.

To my surprise I found the people of Zurich, though they have their prude societies, regarded the Waldbergers merely as local curiosities. They showed no desire for the imposition of restrictions. On telephoning to the head of the colony, Herr J. P. Muller, formerly an officer in the Danish army, I received a cordial invitation to go up and see for myself.

Herr Muller is a splendidly built man about 6 feet tall, showing the muscles of a boxer rather than a wrestler, tanned a dark brown from head to foot. He has an intelligent face and laughing eyes. Carl Block, the famous painter, described him as "physically the most perfect man I have ever seen," and I agreed with the description as I watched my companion striding along beside me.

"Come along," said he, "you will find all my friends at play." Presently we passed a large meadow where a score of Waldbergers—men, women and children—were engaged in a game of handball, while others stood round as spectators. The men and boys only wore bathing pants; the women and girls were "dressed" in a short, single, loose decollete chemise—their sole garment—and the children were naked, while all dispensed with head and foot gear.

Waldbergers In Full Dress.

Not a "Crank" Collection.

Though I found the place interesting, the inmates were even more so. I was fully prepared to meet a fanatical set of freaks. I really met educated, refined men and women with a wide and cultured outlook on life. I am pledged to secrecy as to names—the only condition imposed upon me—but I may mention that the diplomatic, military and social circles of several European capitals were well represented in the colony.

The members of the colony hold that "Naked we were born into the world and therefore nature has intended we should go through life naked as far as climate will allow." Clothing, according to the Waldbergers, is the outward sign of the ill-health, immodesty and deterioration of the present generation. The skin, they say, is the natural clothing, and as one of the most important organs of the body it should be exercised and cared for in the open air and not hidden and choked under a packing of clothing. The ordinary person who tries to show as little skin as possible is, in their view, the slave of a foolish fashion, which causes many diseases, especially consumption.

The Waldberger rises at sunrise and before taking a bath goes through a number of exercises whereby the body becomes thoroughly warmed and prepared to enter the cold tub. After that he has another course of exercises, producing a feeling of great physical comfort. Slipping off his "costume" he is now ready for his morning stroll across the meadows and fields or among the scented pines.

Simple, Wholesome Food.

After a ramble of a couple of hours the Waldberger returns home with a razor-edged appetite for breakfast, which consists of coffee, milk, rolls, butter, fruit and berries. No fish or meat is served. The morning is spent in reading, writing, study, playing games in the open or taking sun baths. At noon lunch is served in the bungalow. After breakfast there are only two meals a day—at noon, the principal meal, and at 6 o'clock, which is really tea. In the afternoon there are gymnastics and athletic sports of all kinds and, when the weather is fine, a bathing excursion is arranged to the little lake of Katzensee, a few miles away, or a picnic party to a quiet spot in the forest. At nightfall the Waldbergers return to their huts and after a bathing excursion, is arranged to the beds, tired out.

Odd News From Big Cities

Stories of Strange Happenings in the Metropolitan Towns

Gun Fires Million Bullets an Hour

NEW YORK.—A gun that, its inventor says, can shoot a million bullets an hour at a cost of $20; that uses neither powder nor compressed air, and that fires bullets that do not require shells, was shot for the enlightenment of a delegation of New York reporters. The reporters saw the gun shoot, but they were not permitted to see that part of the gun out of which which the little steel bullets came with such rapidity.

A Swiss named Bangerter was introduced as the inventor. In order that the secret should be maintained, that part of the mechanism that it is said causes the rapid shooting was covered with oilcloth. Only the motor that operates the gun and the little bucketlike receptacles into which the bullets are poured by the quart were visible to the reporters.

There were targets made of a series of big boards arranged in box fashion, each plank about a foot behind the one in front of it. There were four boards in each target. When the bullets started to fly, they riddled the target into a pile of splinters a foot high, and they did it in less than a minute. All in all, it was estimated that no less than 15,000 bullets pierced the target.

The reporters were permitted then to enter the gunroom. They saw a motor from the wheel of which a belt was operated. The belt connected the motor with another wheel which was a part of the mechanism on the top of which was the oilcloth covered weapon out of which the bullets came.

But Mr. Bangerter and his associates refused to say anything about what was under the oilcloth in the little gunroom. They did give out a typewritten statement, however, saying that one of these guns "could face an army of thirty regiments of soldiers or 30,000 men, and could mow down that entire body of men as easy as a knife cuts the grass. There is no earthly possibility for any army to successfully face the fire from a gun of this kind which pours a veritable hailstorm of bullets into the attacking forces, who must either sacrifice their lives or turn in retreat."

West Pointers Inflict a 'Silence'

WEST POINT, N. Y.—To the average man who doesn't rub up much with army officers the West Point "silence," which has been inflicted on Capt. Rufus E. Longan, instructor in tactics here, is a good deal of a mystery. Most people understand that a "silence" is a refusal of the cadets to talk in the presence of the offending instructor or official, but that is about as far as their information goes.

A 'silence" is a well organized protest on the part of the students of the Military academy against some act of one in authority. It may even be an expression of general dislike, as seems to be the case in the ignoring of Captain Longan, who had only recently been assigned from the Eleventh infantry to do duty at the academy. How it originated no one knows, but it has been practised at the military school for many years, and in several cases has been effective in causing the removal of officers who have ceased to be useful because of their general unpopularity.

The "silence" is most effective in the mess hall, and it is here that it is almost invariably "sprung." While discipline is relaxed at mess, nevertheless the etiquette is strict. A cadet captain, by virtue of his corps rank, is superintendent of the mess. At the head of each table sits a member of the first class—the graduating class. Every private of the first class is an assistant of the mess hall under the cadet captain, and the tables take their cue from his conduct at all times. Tables do not ply knife and fork until the first class man gives silent permission. When it is agreed to inflict "silence" on an officer, no one looks at him as he appears in the mess hall. The first class men at the heads of the tables fold their arms and look straight ahead. The second, third and fourth class men imitate the attitude. There is absolute silence, not a sound or a movement being made to break the stillness.

Texas City Runs Its Own Abattoir

IT DOESN'T HELP ME ANY

PARIS, Tex.—The first and only municipal abattoir and animal reduction plant in the United States is in this city, and has been in successful operation for several months. It marks the beginning of a new era in municipal ownership of industries that directly concern the welfare of the people.

It is said that the idea is practical for all cities and that it would work to particular advantage in towns of 10,000 to 100,000 population. If generally adopted it may lead to a solution of the problem of high cost of meat and other food products.

In Paris, with an estimated population of 15,000, the municipal sanitary department found it very difficult to supervise the several separate slaughter houses maintained by the butchers. The health of the people was constantly menaced by the unsanitary conditions under which the animals were slaughtered and the meats handled.

The city then determined to establish its own abbatoir and to provide rules and regulations that would insure the slaughtering of only healthy and well-conditioned animals and the delivery to the people of meat in perfect sanitary condition. The proposition was agitated and met with general favor on the part of the public. An issue of $10,000 of bonds was voted for the construction of the plant. It was equipped with sanitary arrangements and is modern and complete in every respect.

Drinking Cup Sediment Kills a Pig

DRINKING WATER

CHICAGO—Public drinking cups are dangerous. They are excellent mediums for transmitting the germs of disease. Especially is this true in public and parochial schols, where a large number of children are compelled to use the same cups, according to the health bureau.

Statistics show about one person in sixty has tuberculosis, and among school children there always are those who have some of the communicable diseases in light form, and these undoubtedly are communicated by the use of the common cup.

So fully is this understood that several states have passed laws abolishing the public drinking cup, and compelling railroads and public carriers to supply individual ones. The plan also has been advocated in schools, but the better and safer plan is believed to be the installation of what are known as "bubbling" cups with the water flowing over the rims all the time.

A cup used in a high school for several months without having been washed was found to be lined inside with a thick brownish deposit. Under the microscope this deposit proved to be composed of particles of mud, thousands of bits of dead skin, and millions of bacteria. Some of this sediment was injected under the skin of a healthy guinea pig and forty hours later the pig died. An examination afterward showed that pneumonia germs had caused death. A second guinea pig was inoculated with some of the sediment from the same cup and developed tuberculosis. Careful inquiry showed that several pupils in this school from which the cup was taken were then suffering from consumption.

An agitation is urged asking the school board to install the "bubbling" cups in all schools.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Large Cities' Show a Healthy Growth

I THINK I'LL BE LEADER FOR SOME TIME TO COME N.Y.

WASHINGTON.—The census returns on the large cities of the country are now complete. The figures show that most of them have had a healthy growth during the ten years since the last count was made, but some of them have fallen out of the places they occupied then and their places have been taken by other cities.

A comparison of 29 cities in the 100,000 class shows that the aggregate population is 13,596,819, as against 10,376,012 in 1900 and 7,904,140 in 1890.

The fact is noted that the high rate of increase is not confined to any one geographical section. Of seven cities whose rate exceeded 40 per cent., two, Newark, N. J., and Bridgeport, Conn., are eastern; one, Atlanta, is southern, and four, Detroit, Denver, Kansas City and Columbus, are western. Of the two cities with the lowest rate, one is eastern and the other is western.

The rates of increase for Atlanta, Detroit, Denver and Kansas City are phenomenally high, but most extraordinary is the high percentage for New York, which exceeds the average of 28 cities by 11.4 per cent., and is itself exceeded only by the rates of seven cities.

Fifty-four cities of between 25,000 and 100,000 show an aggregate population of 2,723,498, as against 1,901,766 in 1900, a gain of 43.2 per cent., which the census bureau pronounces "phenomenally high." Thirty-one of these cities show a higher rate of increase for the past decade than for the previous one. No decrease is noted in any one of the cities.

Of the larger cities the gain of St. Louis during the decade was greater proportionately than that of Boston, its nearest competitor, while Kansas City is in twentieth place on the face of the returns. Kansas City has jumped ahead of Providence, R. I., and Indianapolis, Ind., Providence falling behind Indianapolis, which it led in 1900.

Political Pot Is Boiling Furiously

POLITICAL POT

REPORTS coming into Washington from all over the country tell how the seething political pot is furiously boiling. In New York, Indiana, Nebraska and Missouri the politicians are especially busy.

The New York state Republican convention was a triumph for Colonel Roosevelt. He was the temporary chairman, defeating Vice-President Sherman. That was the first rout of the regulars. He won a spectacular fight for the adoption of the platform of the progressives; he put through his slate and the close of the convention found the Roosevelt forces in complete control of the situation. Henry L. Stimson of New York city, Roosevelt's man, was nominated for governor.

In his speech distinguishing between a leader and a boss, he said "a boss drives, while a leader leads." He then proceeded to "lead" the convention to do everything that he wanted it to do.

The platform as adopted contained a plank indorsing the administration of President Taft and that of Governor Hughes and commending the wisdom of the president in choosing Hughes for the supreme court bench.

The keynote of the Indiana campaign was sounded by Senator Beveridge in a speech at Indianapolis. He was merciless to the interests, which he says have been controlling legislation for years. He defied the corporate interests to pollute the voters of Indiana. He favored the revision of the tariff by a genuine tariff commission. He gave Roosevelt credit for inaugurating the conservation movement.

Mayor J. C. Dahlman of Omaha, candidate for governor of Nebraska, responding to rumors about his early career, gave out a statement that he shot his brother-in-law in Texas for deserting his sister, fled the state and assumed the name in Nebraska of Jim Murray. The man he shot did not die. The only law he knew, he says, was the law of the pistol and the quick hand. "I got to be pretty tough, I admit it," he says. "The country was full of maverick cattle and no one was a better hand with the rope, chasing down these strays and putting the branding iron on them."

Missouri Democrats opened their campaign at Joplin, with Bryan, Folk, Francis, Reed and Stone as leaders and orators. Addresses were delivered afternoon and evening and the crowds were greater than the capacity of the meeting places

Uncle Sam's Health Zone Far Spread

THE activities of the public health and marine hospital service, to which is intrusted most of the general work of guarding the country against contagion from abroad and preventing its spread at home, form the topic of a paper by Surgeon General Wyman in the public health report.

The document was prepared for the American Public Health association which recently met at Milwaukee. This organization is composed of representatives from Canada, Mexico and Cuba, as well as from the United States, and the paper was regarded as of especial interest to them.

Beginning with "the utmost circumference of the influence of the organization," Doctor Wyman tells of the protective measures at foreign ports. He shows that medical officers of the bureau are located in most of the seacoast cities of Asia and South and Central America, and at some of those of Europe. The service also is liberally represented in Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippines.

In addition to keeping themselves and the home office informed regarding the prevalence of cholera, yellow fever, smallpox, typhus and plague, these officials are required to inspect American-bound vessels and to issue bills of health, without which the vessels might not enter American ports.

THIS WOOD-PILE IS WORTH $250,000,000
THAT'S SOME WOOD-PILE ALL RIGHT

FIREWOOD valued at $250,000,000 is used every year by the people of the United States, according to the latest estimate of the forestry service. Our forefathers used considerably more wood, but coal to a great extent has supplanted it as a fuel.

Little attention has been paid to the amount of wood used for fuel purposes. In 1880 the census estimated that at that time there were nearly 146,000,000 cords, valued at approximately $322,000,000, or $2.21 a cord, used for fuel annually.

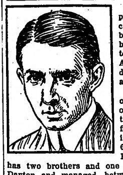
The population then was a little over 50,000,000. Since then the population has increased to over 86,000,000, but the use of wood for fuel has decreased not only in per capita consumption, but also in total quantity. A little more than 20,000,000,000 cubic feet of wood in all forms is used in the United States each year, and of this 7,000,000,000 cubic feet, or about 86,000,000 cords, is firewood.

Of the total estimated consumption of firewood 70,000,000 cords, or 81.4 per cent., was used in towns and cities with a population of from 1,000 to 30,000; 1,615,000 cords, or 1.9 per cent., in cities of over 30,000 population, and the remainder, or 2 per cent., in mineral operations. In these four classes of consumption the average value per cord ranged from $2.61 for the firewood used on the farms to $6.88 for that used in the cities.

The recent expansion of Japan from an island to a continental power through the annexation of the little "Hermit Kingdom" of Korea, makes it possible for the American and other governments to deal directly with Tokyo in the securing of redress for any wrongs committed on foreigners in Korea. The Japanese authorities have now assumed full responsibility for the protection of foreign interests in Korea.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

DARING YOUNG SKY PILOT



Walter Richard Brookins, the youthful sky pilot who made the successful flight from Chicago to Springfield, belongs in the aviation game by right of having been born in the city Wright brothers have given such great fame. He is a Dayton, Ohio, boy, who has been over a great deal of America and Canada, having been for a time a driver of racing automobiles before taking up air flying.

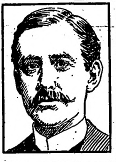
Brookins is just past twenty-two years old. He observed his last birthday July 11 by making record flights at Atlantic City, N. J. It was at this meet that he broke the then world record for high flight for the third time by driving his machine in a series of spectacular dashes to the height of 6,200 feet. Brookins' parents are Americans. Both his father and mother are living, and he has two brothers and one sister. Walter attended the public schools of Dayton and managed, between learning to run automobiles and watching the Wright brothers practise with their gliding machine, to graduate from the Dayton high school. That is as far as he got with theoretical schooling. After that he went out into the world and became an automobile man of more than ordinary skill. He perfected himself to such an extent in that profession that he decided to try to become an aviator.

The Wrights knew quite a little about Brookins as a boy. In their observations of his automobile experiences they recognized him as a safe man for their venturesome calling. They told Walt he might have a trial. Young Brookins began as a pupil of the Wrights the latter part of last March. He practised about five hours before he went up for his first flight alone. After that he kept training daily with Orville Wright. He was the first man trained by Orville Wright and it was not long before he was intrusted with the training of others of the Wright school.

Hitherto Brookins has confined his attempts at record-breaking to his specialties of height, quick turning and slow flights. He holds the world's record for the latter now, it being 21 miles an hour. This is almost as essential in the training of an aviator as is quickness in turning, both demonstrating the operator's control of his machine and the sense of oneness with his machine that he must have to be successful.

Since he started flying independently of the coaching of his trainer Brookins has made brilliant exhibitions at Indianapolis, Montreal, Atlantic City, Toronto, Detroit, Asbury Park, N. J., Boston and through the middle of Illinois on his wonderful flight from Chicago to Springfield.

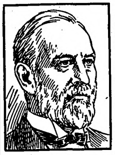
LEADER OF 'PROGRESSIVES'



In the battle between the regular and progressive Republicans in New York state one of the most prominent leaders of the latter and the principal leader before Colonel Roosevelt assumed command was Lloyd C. Griscom, diplomat and former ambassador to Italy, and the chairman of the Republican committee of New York county. When, after his relinquishment of his diplomatic post at Rome, he began to mix in the politics of the metropolic, the old leaders were inclined to be jocose at his expense, called him an amateur and said he had many things to learn.

Mr. Griscom is a native of Philadelphia, a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and a lawyer. Before being admitted to the bar in New York city, which was in 1896, he became secretary to Ambassador Bayard at the court of St. James. In 1897 he was deputy district attorney of New York. At the outbreak of the Spanish war he volunteered his services, was commissioned captain and assistant quartermaster and served four months in Cuba as aide-de-camp to Major General Wade. Then he resigned to enter the diplomatic service and was appointed secretary to the legation at Constantinople. He afterward served in Persia, Japan and Brazil and was decorated by the shah of Persia and received the order of Bolivar from the government of Venezuela.

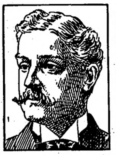
CONSERVED HIS OWN LIFE



Henry Wallace, the new head of the National Conservation congress, is himself a living example of the possibilities in conservation of human life. Thirty years ago, while holding the pastorate of a United Presbyterian church at Morning Sun, Iowa, he was informed by his physician that his days were numbered and that his only hope of prolonging life for even a reasonably short time was to get out of the pulpit. He did not wait to preach a farewell sermon; he went back to the farm and commenced anew the simple life. Today, at seventy-four he is a vigorous and healthy man, doing his full day's labor every day and with intellect as keenly alive to every issue of the time.

Mr. Wallace's special interest in the work came to a head when he consented to associate himself with others in the work of the Roosevelt Country Life commission appointed a few years ago to inquire into the needs of the farms and suggest methods of improving the life of the rural community. On that commission he was associated with Gifford Pinchot, President Bailey, President Butterfield and others.

NEW GRAND ARMY COMMANDER



John E. Gilman of Massachusetts, who was elected commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic at the forty-fourth national encampment, has an enviable record as a soldier and citizen. He belonged to the noted Twelfth Massachusetts, a regiment which vies with the First Minnesota as having lost the largest percentage of the men it carried into any single action. Commander Gilman fought bravely with his regiment through all its battles until at Gettysburg he lost his right arm by a wound from a shell.

He joined the Grand Army in 1868, and has since been zealous and active in its service. During the dark days of the order he was one of the mainstays, and has held nearly every office within the gift of his comrades as a reward for his fidelity and ability. He was elected commander of the department of Massachusetts in 1899, and gave that great department an efficient and satisfactory administration.

Commander-in-Chief Blackmar selected him for his adjutant general. He traveled with that official all over the United States, and made friends wherever he went. Commander-in-Chief King continued him after the lamented death of Blackmar, and he added to his popularity in that position. For years he has been the head of the Soldiers' Relief commission of Boston.

Personally the new commander-in-chief is said to be a genial and lovable man, whom any of his comrades can approach sure of hearty interest and sincere sympathy with him.

CENTER OF POPULATION.

In the predictions as to the showing which the census figures would make there was one virtually agreed upon—that the center of population would be shifted some distance westward from its location in 1890, which was six miles southeast of Columbus, Ind., says Toledo Blade. But this prediction was one of the kind which goes wrong. The census people have tentatively announced that the mark will have to be moved but slightly. The west has flourished tremendously in ten years. It has gained not only new railroads, but the old railroads have been renewed. Irrigation has caused new lands to be cultivated and new cities and towns to be builded. Such cities as Seattle have profited in wealth and population by the opening of new territory, the development of new resources, the filling in of the once deserted spaces between town and town. But in these same ten years an immense immigration has been distributing itself in the eastern cities—among the coal mines and steel plants of Pennsylvania, in the industrial districts of Lake Erie. It has offset the settlement of the far west.

Enforcing health regulations against ignorance and prejudice frequently is accompanied by difficulties. Cholera prevails in parts of Italy, and the officials have taken wise precautions against the spread of the disease. And one result has been a riot, accompanied by the wrecking of the health office in the town of Barletta. Of course the rioters are taking the precise course that opens the way for invasion by the deadly ailment. This is an age of enlightenment, but there are regions where there has been little advancement in ideas since the time when plagues swept away victims by wholesale because there was not sufficient knowledge to ward off the danger.

Those who have been able to hold back their vacations until now are to be congratulated. October is one of the finest months of the year for vacations, as any one who has been fortunate enough to have two weeks free at this time will tell you. The country lies before you. There is no better exercise than walking. Nature, in the full beauty of her late summer foliage, is at her best, and the crisp air of the approaching fall is noticeable mornings. Soon it will be on tap all day. Why not keep up your open-air vacation habits all winter?

The world's wheat crop this year is estimated at a little under 3,500,000,000 bushels, which will make it, with one exception, the largest ever gathered. The largest wheat crop ever gathered was that of last year, which was approximately 150,000,000 bushels more than the estimate of 1910. More than half of the shortage is figured in the crop of the United States. Although here as in Russia the crop is shorter than last year, the reserve of old wheat held over from the previous year is larger in both countries than it was in 1909.

The United States government has ordered another large installment of the rifle "silencers," by which the noise of firing is done away with. Experiments are also under way with similar silencers for cannon. It may yet come to pass that the noise of battle will consist mainly of the "shouting and the tumult" that were in order before the days of gunpowder.

Firearms as playthings are not entirely justified of wisdom, as proved in the case of a twelve-year-old Buffalo boy who received a gift of a rifle from his father and a few minutes later shot and killed his mother. Of course, it was an accident, and everybody concerned is very sorry, but the moral is that, given every possible opportunity and invitation, accidents will happen.

The epicurean world is still waiting for developments in the project to provide meat from hippopotami fed on water hyacinth. It sounds better than terrapin.

Seeing that Uhlan has trotted a mile in less than two minutes, without the aid of a wind-shield or other assistance of any kind, is it not time to begin talking about the minute-and-a-half trotter?

BIG CUSTOMS FRAUD

STORE RAIDED, GOODS SEIZED

Alleged Government Has Been for Years Systematically Cheated Out of Millions by Importing Concern —Millionaires Among Customers.

New York.—Charged with systematically swindling the United States out of millions of dollars of customs duties, Benjamin J. Duveen, one of the resident managers of Duveen Brothers, No. 302 Fifth avenue, the greatest art dealers and importers in the United States, was arrested Thursday on a bench warrant by federal officers. Other members of the firm are also involved.

Henry Duveen, his uncle, was arrested upon his arrival in New York on the Cunarder Lusitania. Duveen was released on bail of $50,000 for examination before United States Commissioner Shields. United States District Attorney Wise and Assistant District Attorney Wemple asked that the prisoners' bail be fixed a $100,000, declaring that the frauds of which the wealth art dealer is accused had been systematically practised for a long period of years and that the results of their operations in cheating the government were appalling.

Duveen Brothers for many years have numbered among their customers nearly all the millionaire art collectors in the United States. The firm was established in New York 32 years ago. The parent houses are in London and Paris. Joel J. Duveen, who established the house in New York, died only two years ago while visiting Paris. Scarcely a big mansion in Fifth avenue is without some work of art brought to the United States by the New York house. Among their largest and best-known customers are J. Pierpont Morgan, Otto H. Kahn, and Mrs. Collis Huntington. They make a specialty of antiques.

Other members of the firm whose names were included in the warrant of arrest are Joel J. Jr., Joseph A. and Louis J.

The arrest of Benjamin Duveen was made after a sensational raid of the famous store by six United States officers. Hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of art works were seized and carted off to the custom house, where they will be kept until the case is finally disposed of.

MAKES PLEA FOR BEVERIDGE

Roosevelt Plunges Into Indiana Campaign and Tells People Why Senator Should Be Returned.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Theodore Roosevelt plunged into the Indiana campaign Thursday with a trip across the state, in which he made a vigorous plea for votes to send United States Senator Albert J. Beveridge back to the senate.

The last speech of the day from the balcony of the Hotel English here was delivered before a crowd of 50,000 people.

From the time the colonel got on the back platform of his private car at Covington, just across the border line from Illinois, until he left Indianapolis he urged the throngs to elect the whole Republican state ticket so that a legislature would be put in that would support Beveridge.

The ex-president went to the utmost limit in indorsing Beveridge. He gave him credit for having initiated the fight against the beef trust that resulted in the passage of the pure food law. Without the amendments put in that bill by Senator Beveridge, the colonel insisted, there never would have been any pure food legislation passed that was worth anything.

SMASH 3 WORLD'S RECORDS

The Harvester, Aileen Wilson and Joan Trot Sensational Races at Lexington Track.

Lexington, Ky.—Three world's records were smashed at the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' association fall meeting here Thursday. The Harvester, driven by the veteran reinsman Ed. Geers, lowered the world's two-mile record held by Cresceus from 4:17 to 4:15¼, trotting the last quarter in the sensational time of 31¼ seconds.

Aileen Wilson, 2:02¼, a black mare by Arrow Wood owned by John W. Coakley, Boston, set a new record for pacing mares to wagon, negotiating the distance in 2:04½. In the Walnut Hall farm cup race, the four-year-old bay mare Joan, by Directum Spier, trotted the first heat in 2:05½, setting a new record for the race, and the third heat of the same event she trotted the mile in 2:04 3-5, making a world's record for a four-year-old of any sex.

FRANCE FEARS FOOD FAMINE

GREAT RAILROAD STRIKE IS PARALYZING BUSINESS.

Labor Leaders Boast They Will Make Tie-Up Complete—War Measures Are Adopted.

Paris.—The railroad strike has completely tied up the Northern, Eastern, Western, State and Paris, Lyons and Mediterranean lines, and the situation has assumed a most serious aspect. The leaders of nearly every class of workingmen are threatening to call a general industrial strike that will paralize business in every section of the country.

The electricians and the employes of the omnibus, metropolitan and subway transportation lines of this city Wednesday considered the advisability of seizing this opportunity to launch a strike for the redress of long-standing grievances. The situation throughout the republic is regarded as grave.

The railway companies are making a desperate struggle to maintain service with the aid of military engineers and men from the navy, but are meeting with little success.

The president of the grain syndicate said that the stock of flour on the Paris market did not exceed 75,000 quintals, which is less than eight days' supply for Paris.

This does not include the flour in bakers' hands, which, however, is not large. The bulk of meats, vegetables and fruits come in over the Western and Paris, Lyons and Mediterranean lines.

The National Railroad union, comprises only 100,000 of the total of 300,000 men employed in the railway service, but a large majority of the nonunion men are participating in the strike.

The government is adopting measures similar to those practised in time of war.

The calling of 30,000 of the strikers for army reserve duty is not likely to have any immediate effect on the situation, as the military code allows a man a delay of 15 days before responding to the call.

The strike leaders boast that soon the tie-up will be complete throughout the country. Premier Briand has issued a public statement in which he denounced the strike as an insurrection, purely, built up on criminal foundations.

The garrison of Paris has been reinforced by troops from the provinces and all the principal points along the railroads effected by the strike are guarded.

Many telegraph wires were cut including several connecting French points with London and Brussels.

President Fallieres hurriedly returned from his estate in the south and conferred with the ministers. The problem of food looms ominously. Already the market is pinched. Enormous quantities of milk and fish en route from Normandy and Belgium are stalled at points along the Northern road.

FAIR BOOMERS IN CHICAGO

Governor Sanders of New Orleans and Party Are Entertained by Press Club.

Chicago.—Chicago has been entertaining a lively party of boomers from New Orleans, who are urging the Crescent City's claims to the exposition that is to celebrate the completion of the Panama Canal in 1915. In the party were Governor Sanders, Mayor Behrman of New Orleans, C. H. Ellis, president of the New Orleans Board of Trade; M. B. Trezevant, secretary of the New Orleans Progressive Union, and J. L. Wright, secretary of the World's Panama Exposition company.

Immediately after their arrival Monday they were entertained at luncheon by the Press club, John C. Shaffer, retiring president of the club, presiding. In the evening they were the guests of the Southern club at dinner at the Congress hotel. Tuesday Governor Sanders addressed the National Grain Dealers' association, in convention here, and Mr. Ellis addressed the Board of Trade. The party was given a luncheon by the Cook County Real Estate board.

DOLLIVER'S HEART AFFECTED

Physicians Order Iowa Senator to Take Complete Rest—Condition Serious But Not Critical.

Fort Dodge, Ia.—Physicians attending Senator Jonathan P. Dolliver, who is confined to his bed, gave out a statement that his condition was due to stomach trouble which had affected his heart.

It was admitted that his condition is serious. Even his intimate friends are excluded from the sick room. While his condition is not now regarded as critical, his physicians have ordered a complete rest to prevent a general physical collapse which threatens as a result of his arduous work during the last session of congress.

JONATHAN P. DOLLIVER.
United States Senator from Iowa.

SEN. DOLLIVER DIES SUDDENLY

SENATOR STRICKEN BY HEART FAILURE AT FORT DODGE, IOWA.

HELD HIGH PLACE AS STATESMAN

Campaign Is Upset—Blow Dealt Insurgents by Death of Ardent Champion of Their Cause.

Fort Dodge, Oct. 17. — Jonathan Prentice Dolliver, senior United States senator from Iowa, died at his home here Saturday evening, while a physician stood over him making an examination of his heart with a stethoscope.

Death came without a moment's warning, and Dr. E. M. Vanlvetten, who was making the examination, when the instrument stopped, thought the stethoscope had been broken. He looked up into the face of the senator to find that, silently and with tragic suddenness, the death messenger had called the soul of the statesman.

Heart trouble was alone the cause of the death, and the minor ills which have been bothering the senator during the last three weeks had little effect on his passing. Although Senator Dolliver had been ill for three weeks or more, during the last few days he had been up and around, even as late as 2 p. m. today.

The colleagues of the dead senator were early to offer their condolence, and there were many words of sympathy from the statesmen and diplomats of Washington.

Mrs. Dolliver, her two daughters, Margaret and Frances, and her son George were in the room when Senator Dolliver died. A sister, Miss Gay Dolliver, is dean of women at Morningside college in Sioux City, Iowa; R. H. Dolliver, brother, is a minister in the Methodist church, but has not been in Fort Dodge during the illness of the senator.

Funeral services will be held Thursday at 2 o'clock. The obsequies will be in charge of Rev. W. H. Spence, pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Fort Dodge. Bishop Newell Dwight Hillis of New York City Frank Gunsaulus of Chicago, Dr. Newel DwightHillis of New York City and Gov. B. F. Carroll of Iowa, were invited to make funeral orations. If the weather is good the services will be held on the lawn of the Dolliver home. If this is not feasible, the orations will be delivered in the First Methodist church. Burial will be in Oakland cemetery, Fort Dodge, by the side of Senator Dolliver's parents.

Politics in Chaos.

The political situation in Iowa is in chaos. The thought that death would end Mr. Dolliver's term had never been entertained. It had been expected that he would not only complete his term, but be given another term. The campaign had been carried on wholly without thought of the senatorship. If Dolliver had died a week ago it would have been possible to submit the senatorship to the voters as a primary proposition on the day of election. It is too late now. The governor has the power of appointment.

Governor Carroll is a candidate for re-election and is standing as favoring neither faction of the republican party, and, it is believed, he will not care to appoint anyone until after election. He may announce an appointment after election, but it is considered more likely that he will wait until the legislature meets in about three months and allow it to elect.

Among the available men among the progressives are former State Senator A. B. Funk, of Spirit Lake; Attorney General W. H. Byers, of Harlan; former Governor Warren Garst of Coon Rapids, and Congressmen Hubbard and Haugen. Among the standpatters former Congressmen Hepburn and Lacey, and Congressman Walter I. Smith of Council Bluffs are considered.

An ability to talk—an oratorical ability which stamped him a leader wherever men congregated—made Senator J. P. Dolliver a central figure and brought him from the seclusion of Fort Dodge, where he was practicing law in 1889.

Blaine Hears of Dolliver.

Blaine heard of Dolliver when the former was running for president back in 1884, against Cleveland. Dolliver was then but 26 years old. Blaine made up his mind to secure the oratorical services of the young orator, sent for him and he and Dolliver stumped the east. Dolliver seemed to be destined to become a public figure and would have been heard from much sooner if Blaine had been elected. But although Cleveland won out, the young man from Iowa had accumulated some fame as an orator. Shortly after that memorable campaign and after Dolliver had gone back to his law practice, at Fort Dodge, the "boys" began to run him for congress. He did not take this running seriously until 1890, when he got out and carried his district. From that time he grew in prominence and his oratorical powers carried him to leadership.

Jonathan Prentiss Dolliver was born near Kingwood, W. Va., Feb. 6, 1858. His ancestors were of good old New England stock, sailors and fishermen. Mr. Dolliver's father was a circuit riding preacher in the old dominion, a strong Methodist and a vigorous speaker.

Senator Dolliver was graduated from the University of West Virginia in 1875 and was admitted to the bar in 1878. Previous to this time he had already begun to interest himself in politics, and, as early as 1870, when he was but 18 years of age, he made a political speech at Clinton Furnace, W. Va., which was thought notable. During the Hayes-Tilden campaign he spoke at Morgantown and various other places and already began to be looked upon as a promising man. Shortly afterward he removed to Iowa, was elected to the fifty-first congress from the tenth Iowa district and was re-elected to the fifty-second, fifty-third, fifty-fourth, fifty-fifth and fifty-sixth congresses. He was appointed United States senator to fill a vacancy in 1900 and was elected to the same office in 1902. He was re-elected in 1907 and was chairman of the committee on education and labor.

The business man was sitting in his office, thinking of starting for home, when a suspicious looking person came in with a leather bag in his hand.

"If you don't give me $25," said the visitor, coming at once to the point, "I will drop this on the floor."

The busines man was cool. "What is in it?" he asked.

"Dynamite," was the brief reply.

"What will it do if you drop it?"

"Blow you up."

"Drop it!" was the instant command. "My wife told me when I left home this morning to be sure and send up a bag of flour, and I forgot it. I guess it will take just about as much dynamite as you have there to prepare me for the blowing up I'll get when she sees me!"

He threw himself back in his chair and waited for the explosion, but it did not come.

"I'm a married man myself," said the dynamiter, and quietly slipped out. —Illustrated Bits.

Twenty-five million Red Cross Christmas Seals have been printed and are being distributed by the American Red Cross, and arrangements have been made to print 100,000,000 if necessary. It is expected that this number will be needed. While the sticker is perforated like those used last year, it is intended for use only, as a seal on the back of letters. The seal is one inch square with the conventional Red Cross in the center and the words, "Merry Christmas. Happy New Year. American Red Cross" in a circle about it. The colors are red and green. The design is by Mrs. Guion Thompson, of Waterbury, Conn., who received $100 as a prize for her sketch.

He Knew.

A small boy brought up by a fire-eating father to hate anything connected with England or the English was consigned recently to eat dinner with the nurse while the family entertained a genuine English lord in the dining room. The grown-ups' meal had come to that "twenty minutes past" stage where conversation halts directly, when a childish treble fell upon the dumb-waiter shaft from the kitchen. This is what the astonished nobleman heard:

"Fe, fi, fo, fum,

"I smell the blood of an Englishmun."—Wasp.

Slightly Mixed.

Two Englishmen were resting at the Red Home Inn at Stratford-on-Avon. One of them discovered a print picturing a low, tumbling building underneath which was printed: "The House in Which Shakespeare Was Born." Turning to his friend in mild surprise he pointed to the print. His friend exhibited equal surprise and called a waiter, who assured them of the accuracy of the inscription.

"'Pon my word," said the observing Englishman, shaking his head dubiously. "I thought he was born in a manger!"

COFFEE WAS IT.
People Slowly Learn the Facts.

"All my life I have been such a slave to coffee that the very aroma of it was enough to set my nerves quivering. I kept gradually losing my health but I used to say 'Nonsense, it don't hurt me.'

"Slowly I was forced to admit the truth and the final result was that my whole nervous force was shattered.

"My heart became weak and uncertain in its action and that frightened me. Finally my physician told me, about a year ago, that I must stop drinking coffee or I could never expect to be well again.

"I was in despair, for the very thought of the medicines I had tried so many times nauseated me. I thought of Postum but could hardly bring myself to give up the coffee.

"Finally I concluded that I owed it to myself to give Postum a trial. So I got a package and carefully followed the directions, and what a delicious, nourishing, rich drink it was! Do you know I found it very easy to shift from coffee to Postum and not mind the change at all?

"Almost immediately after I made the change I found myself better, and as the days went by I kept on improving. My nerves grew sound and steady, I slept well and felt strong and well-balanced all the time.

"Now I am completely cured, with the old nervousness and sickness all gone. In every way I am well once more."

It pays to give up the drink that acts on some like a poison, for health is the greatest fortune one can have.

RUSH RELIEF WORK

ADJUTANT GEN. F. B. WOOD IS IN CHARGE OF MINNESOTA SITUATION.

DEATH LIST NOW ONE HUNDRED

Gov. Eberhart Makes Thorough Inspection of the Burned Towns—Practically All Known Settlers Accounted For.

Beaudette, Minn. — With the arrival of Governor Eberhart and other state officials, the placing of Adjutant General Fred B. Wood in general charge of the situation, with additional militiamen at his command, and the arrival of more provisions and supplies, a great deal was accomplished in the way of temporary relief for the sufferers, and the basis was laid for permanent relief.

Wild and unconfirmed reports continue to come in of people found dead in the woods, but so far as the local authorities know there have been no more bodies found.

Eberhart Inspects Burned Towns.

Governor Eberhart made a thorough inspection of the burned towns of Beaudette and Spooner and went over to Clementson in a launch. He stated that those who had been burned out were being cared for and that relief would be sent to them. Lumber was hauled over from Rainy River and actual work commenced towards the building of temporary structures.

A crew of men, mostly refugees, was set to work on the first new building, which will be a temporary home for Mayor Holmes. The building will also be used for temporary headquarters. Clothing, general household effects and workmen's tools were distributed from the relief cars all day.

Governor Eberhart has received information that generous subscriptions are being received by the various branches of the Red Cross throughout the state and a telegram from Winnipeg announced that the city council had made an appropriation of $2,000 for the relief work.

Lumber will be given to those who wish to build, household goods will be provided, cows and horses furnished wherever possible, and they will be given such material assistance as will help them over until they are able to get back on their feet.

Partly Burned Timber Valuable.

Much of the partly burned timber is valuable if not left standing too long. This timber the lumber companies have agreed to buy, thus assuring a large number of settlers work and a competence during the winter months.

In laying out the town, particular attention will be paid to the sanitary arrangement, as there was an epidemic of typhoid fever in the village at the time of the fire and there are still 19 cases in old Baudette and Rainy River.

Most of these are being cared for under the direction of Dr. T. C. Clark of Stillwater and two trained nurses who came on the St. Paul relief train.

Baudette is rapidly becoming a village of tents which were brought in in large numbers. There are plenty of provisions for the present. The special from Crookston brought 4,000 loaves of freshly-baked bread in addition to a general line of groceries, clothing and $1,000 in currency which was raised in two hours.

Another train will be started from Crookston as soon as it is determined what is needed most. Just now stoves are needed as much as anything and a shipment has been ordered.

Settlers Accounted for.

With the arrival of Theodore Stabacken from 25 miles south on the Rapid River, practically all of the known settlers in the fire zone have been accounted for. Stabacken and his two cousins walked 25 miles through the burned forest. They reported that three cabins had been burned in their vicinity but no lives had been lost.

G. G. Chapin, of St. Paul, and Frank Curtiss of Roosevelt, forest rangers, started south through the burned country to look up any secluded refugees who are in need. Since the arrival of Stabacken no fears are entertained for the safety of the Easton search party.

Nineteen men and two boys, aged 5 and 7 years, arrived here after a 24-mile tramp through the woods from the Rapid River country. They reported that none had been burned in their vicinity, but their cabins had been destroyed and the families were living in root houses. They have been subsisting on vegetables ever since the fire.

List of Dead at 100.

International Falls, Minn. — Chief Deputy Sherman A. G. Rutledge of Beltrami county returned here with the optimistic word that many residents of the fire swept district reported as burned have been accounted for alive and that the death list in his opinion would not exceed 100.

MANY TONS OF HAY DESTOYED.

Fire Sweeps Prairie for Five Miles and Farmers Lose Fodder.

East Grand Forks.—A strip of prairie land about five miles long and three miles wide, near Euclid, east of this city, was burned and a large quantity of hay was destroyed. A. A. Weekly, a resident of this city, lost about one hundred tons of hay, together with a hay press and other equipment, while Nels Peterson, of Grand Forks, lost a similar amount of hay.

HEAR BISHOP NUELSON.

Northern German M. E. Conference Listens to Forceful Address.

Faribault.—Bishop J. L. Nuelson preached the annual conference sermon of the Northern German Methodist conference here in German. Many people were turned away, being unable to gain admittance. The bishop ordained the following clergy: George H. Brunes, Gardena, N. D., H. G. Schmidt, Bertha; Walter E. Mahle, St. Paul Park college; E. G. Meirbachtel, Hokah. Dr. F. E. Hirsch, president of Charles City, Iowa, college, spoke in English to a large audience.

The Sunday school anniversary was held, with addresses by a number of prominent workers. There will be a large number of changes in pastors this year. One important, change that is expected to be made by the bishop and the district superintendents is the consolidations of the three districts into two on account of the scarcity of ministers, probably to be known as St. Paul and Minneapolis districts.

The pastors unanimously passed a resolution asking for Bishop Nuelson to preside at the next annual conference, which will be held in the First German church in St. Paul.

RUSH TRAINING SCHOOL WORK.

Sauk Center.—Mrs. Fannie French Morse, whose Massachusetts methods of training the girls in the state school at Red Wing were recently so violently assailed, has made an inspection of the four cottages in course of erection here. She was greatly pleased with the rapidity of the contractor's work.

The contractors have been notified to rush the buildings, so that the desire of the board of control to move the girls as soon as possible to Sauk Center from Red Wing may be realized. In consequence of this rush order the buildings will be completed before the scheduled time. The plasterers and electricians are already at work on one cottage and the other three are rapidly nearing completion of the external parts.

MR. LINDBERGH BECOMES EDITOR

Sixth District Congressman to Issue New Magazine.

Sauk Center.—Congressman Charles A. Lindbergh, of the Sixth district, has purchased a printing plant and will issue a progressive magazine, which will deal scientifically with the problems of labor interests, the relation of the government to daily life and farming interests.

Mr. Lindbergh will continue to send out his letters to the public press from Washington, but in addition he will make known through this new magazine the inner workings of the government and will deal with many phases of extraordinary conditions that he has come in contact with in his congressional work. He expects to supplement what he says in his letters to the press with a more full detail of the workings of congress in such a manner that would not find space in the daily newspapers.

MINNEAPOLIS GETS BEEKEEPERS

Close Session at Albany by Nominating Officers.

Albany, New York.—The National Beekeepers' association closed its convention and recommended the following candidates for the election of officers to be held next month:

President, George W. Yorke, Chicago, and M. V. Facy, of Minnesota.

Vice president, W. R. Wright, Mississippi, and Thomas Chantey, California.

Secretary, Dr. B. N. Gates, Mississippi, and E. S. Tyrell, Michigan.

Treasurer, S. Coles, Texas, and N. E. Frace, Wisconsin.

The convention next year will be held in Minneapolis.

Amendment to Constitution for Reforestation.

It requires a majority of all votes cast at the election, Nov 8, to adopt the proposed amendment to the constitution for an annual tax of 1/15 of a mill on the dollar (equal to seven cents on $1,000). If adopted it will raise about $72,000 annually, which will be used by the Forestry Board in buying, at not exceeding $3 per acre, forestry land and producing and maintaining forest thereon according to forestry principles. Constitutional amendments are liable to be neglected by the voter, and it will require much attention to secure a majority vote. Forty years ago patriotic men in this state laid the foundation of our present permanent school fund of $20,000,000. Now is a chance for this generation to show regard for the future.

Minnesota Has 11,900 Autos.

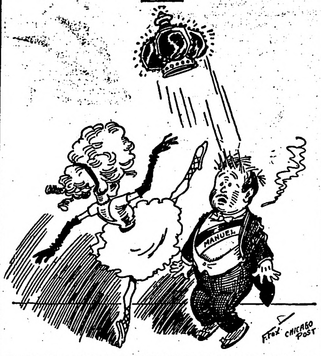
St. Paul. — The Secretary of State, Julius Schmahl, has issued to date 11,900 livenses, an increase of 5,000 over last year. He estimates the aggregate value at $12,000,000.

OPERATOR'S CARELESSNESS.

Stock Escapes From Cars—Traffic Is Interrupted for Hours.

Montevideo. — One man was instantly killed, two were fatally injured and died shortly afterward and a fourth was seriously hurt in a head-on collision between an eastbound stock train and a west-going freight train on the H. and D. division of the Milwaukee road near Minnesota Falls.

OBJECT LESSON FOR YOUNG MONARCHS



HUNDREDS ARE DEAD

FEW SETTLERS IN NORTHERN MINNESOTA ARE BELIEVED TO HAVE ESCAPED.

SEVEN TOWNS OFF THE MAP

Fifty Miles of the Rainy Lake Country a Mass of Fire—Martial Law for the Stricken District—Whole Families Are Destroyed.

Rainy River, Ont.—It was estimated Monday that at least 500 lives and $700,000,000 worth of property had been lost in the forest fires prevailing in this region.

The tales of horrible suffering brought in Monday by refugees is almost beyond narration. Oscar Johnson, wife and three children stood five hours in the Baudette river ducking their heads when the heat became too intense. They say the water in the river was heated to an uncomfortable temperature and that steam rose from the surface.

It will be some time before the loss of life is known even approximately, and in fact it may never be known. The residents of Rainy River, Ont., are doing everything possible to assist the homeless residents of the two American towns.

Poverty of the worst kind is added to the woes of the throngs that flocked into International Falls and Rainy River.

There were hundreds of homes destroyed in the territory, and as there are no roads in the district save for the trails through the bush, it is feared that many lives have been lost that will not be reported for weeks.

The state of Minnesota is sparing no expense to check the fire. The state fire warden is mustering every man he can procure, and he is instructed to use every possible means at his command, regardless of cost.

Rainy River, Ont.—Fire rangers throughout the forest fire territory between this place and Warroad, Minn., sent in reports Tuesday that 139 bodies had been located. Of these but 90 were recovered and only 60 have been identified.

While fires can be seen to the east and southeast, their progress is not dangerous to human life. Fire rangers here complain that the heat of the surface and gases arising therefrom prevent their proceeding far into the masses of charred tree limbs and burned underbrush. The air in the devastated district is still smoky and no further attempt will be made to locate bodies until re-enforcements and relief are secured.

Five nurses, a doctor, 50 cots and thousands of loaves of bread and thousands of pounds of meat have reached here from Winnipeg.

The streets of Rainy River are being patrolled by 60 armed guards under Fire Warden Hurst and national guardsmen from Bemidji, Minn., guarded old Baudette. The funerals of 19 fire victims have been held here.

The burned area is at least 36 miles wide and many of the settlers are new to the country and comparatively unknown locally. Much of this land was thrown open to homestead entry this summer and many of the settlers have gone in far beyond the roads, where they had only a path to reach their place. It may be months before they are discovered, and some of them may never be found.

Many bodies of fire victims have been robbed. This caused an order of "Shoot to kill," which applied to all the burned district.

Arrested for Mail Fraud.

On a charge of using the mails in a scheme to defraud, H. Brooks, manager of the Redeemable Investment company of Boston, a concern having capital stock amounting to $10,000,000, was arrested.

Negro Is Killed by a Mob.

Montgomery, Ala.—Grant Richardson, colored, was lynched near Centreville Wednesday by a mob of white residents. He was being brought to Bibb county jail on a charge of attacking a white woman.

CENT POSTAGE NOW PROBABLE

POSTMASTER GENERAL SHOWS RATE REDUCTION POSSIBLE.

Says It Will Be Accomplished Without Curtailing Service in the Slightest.

Washington, Oct. 13.—That the postoffice department will soon be self-sustaining and that penny postage for first-class letters is a probability of the near future are statements made by Postmaster General Hitchcock.

"Before the close of another fiscal year the federal postal establishment will become self-sustaining. This will be accomplished without curtailing in the slightest the service rendered or lescening in any respect its efficiency."

This was the statement made by the postmaster general, in connection with the announcement that he had submitted to the treasury department five days in advance of the time fixed by law, his estimates of appropriations for the post office department and the postal service during the fiscal year beginning on July 1.

In private conversation heretofore Mr. Hitchcock has indicated his belief that it may be possible within a year or two, through the operation of plans he had worked out, to place the postal service on a paying basis.

BIG SUPREME COURT DOCKET

Tobacco Trust, Standard Oil Corporation Tax, and Other Cases of Great Significance.

Washington. — Owing to the illness and deaths of the members of the United States supreme court during the past two years that august body, when it reassembled Monday, found the docket piled high with important cases which presaged a busy and important session.

Although the tobacco trust, Standard Oil, railroad and the corporation tax cases are regarded as the most important ones now before the Supremo bench, there are a number of other cases of considerable national significance. One of the latter is the original act of the state of Virginia against its next-door neighbor, West Virginia, in which several million dollars are involved as a result of the division of Virginia in its original state. The suit consists of an attempt to compel West Virginia to shoulder part of the debt that existed in Virginia at the time of the division.

There are two peonage cases appealed by the state of Florida; the appeal of a number of railroads in the western territory in the suit brought by them against the railroad commission of Missouri; three criminal cases brought by the United States on account of alleged violations of the pure foods and drug act; the appeal of the United States from the United States circuit court for eastern Missouri in its suit against the Western Terminal association of St. Louis, which is known as the Eads bridge monopoly case; and the libel suit of the United States against the Press Publishing company of New York which grew out of articles printed in the New York World about Theodore Roosevvelt, who was then president; William Nelson Cromwell and others in connection with the sale of the Panama canal. The docket contains also a corresponding case against the Indianapolis News.

The tobacco trust and Standard Oil cases are to be reargued and the clerk of the court has placed them on the docket for November without any definite date.

BENEFITS OF POULTRY SHOW

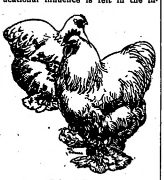
Of Particular Educational Value to Beginner—Gives Fancier Chance to See Live Birds.

(By R. H. WHITE.)

The educational value of the poultry show to the fancier, and particularly to the beginner, cannot be overestimated. A study of the standard or other descriptions without the opportunity to see live specimens could never give the clear, concise conception of a variety which the poultry birds creates. Nor is this benefit lost to the experienced fancier, for every opportunity which he gets to see the birds of his competitors and to meet and exchange ideas with his fellow-breeders is of direct educational value. After all, poultry breeding, like all other live-stock breeding, follows certain fashions, which are constantly changing more or less slowly, and for this reason the fancier who never has opportunity to observe other men's stock can scarcely expect to keep abreast of these fashions in birds. To the fanciers, therefore, both old and new, the poultry show is a liberal education, and in some sense a necessity.

To those not particularly familiar with poultry and who attend the show largely from curiosity the exhibition has a distinct educational value. It opens their eyes to the extent and degree to which poultry breeding has been carried, and brings a realization of importance of the industry. In this relation the show has a direct value to the industry in arousing interest in poultry breeding and in gaining many new recruits.

To the plain or utility poultryman the show has, of course, an educational value. It may open his eyes to the value of pure-bred stock as compared with scrub or mongrel stock, though here it would seem to fail somewhat in its possibilities. The writer has been informed, however, that this educational influence is felt in the increasing difficulty which is met by fanciers in selling cull stock. The inddustrial exhibits are also valuable to the poultryman, quite as much so, in fact, as to the fancier. To this class the show should have a much more far-reaching effect that at present exists, and it is in this respect that reforms should be initiated.



Prize Winners.

How to Feed the Flocks.

Scratching is of more importance than feeding, and it is not necessary to feed them more than twice a day, as the noon meal usually satisfies the fowls that they will not be inclined to scratch and then exercise. The hen that has to hustle for part of her living will be laying eggs while the overfed hen is serenely digesting her food and quietly waiting for her owner to bring more.

POULTRY NOTES

These bright days make work in the poultry yard a real pleasure.

Hens should not be expected to drink ice water or eat corn out of snow.

Hens will not lay well or thrive unless they have plenty of sunlight. Keep the windows clean.

The idea of perfect comfort should predominate in every building that is constructed for the chickens.

When fenced away from the gardens and flower beds fowls do little damage and cause scarcely any annoyance on a farm.

Chickens will not scratch when they are overfed nor when there is no feed in the litter. The idea is to keep them scratching.

The material from which egg shells are made is carbonate of lime and there are many forms in which this may be furnished.

Hens that are not laying these days can coaxed sometimes by feeding them a small amount of cut bone or fresh meat in some form.

When it becomes necessary to wash eggs on account of their becoming soiled in the nest, don't use soap or anything else but luke warm water.

The Indian Runner duck is to the duck family what the Leghorn is to the hen family. They are great layers, but not so suitable for market purposes.

If you keep the poultry house as clean as the dairy house and use equal energy and good sense in every other branch of the business you will make money.

Always pick up the feed troughs that are used in the pen after each meal, and put them back against the side of the building where they will not become filthy.

If you would have eggs in the winter try to imitate nature as much as possible. See that the fowls are comfortable and that they get plenty of fresh air, light and exercise.

OLD SOLDIER WISHES TO HELP SUFFERERS FROM KIDNEY, LIVER AND BLADDER TROUBLES

I am frequently troubled with kidney and bladder trouble, especially in the Spring and Fall. Being an old veteran of the Civil War, a little exposure or cold settles on my kidneys, and then I am laid up with kidney or bladder trouble. Your Swamp-Root was recommended to me a number of years ago, and I took a number of bottles of it and was more than pleased with the results. I consider Swamp-Root the greatest and best kidney medicine on the market, and it never fails to give quick results in kidney trouble, bladder trouble and lame back.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root has done me so much good that I feel if any words of mine will be the means of relieving any poor sufferers that you are at liberty to use this letter as you see fit.

Yours very truly,

History of Red Cross Seal.

"Charity stamps," first used in Boston in 1862 for the soldiers' relief funds during the Civil war, were the original forerunners of the Red Cross Christmas seal, which will be used this year to bring happiness and cheer to millions. The Delaware Anti-Tuberculosis society in 1907 for the first time in America made use of a stamp for the purpose of getting revenue to fight consumption. In a hastily organized campaign of only three weeks they realized $3,000. The next year, 1908, the American Red Cross conducted the first national tuberculosis stamp campaign. From this sale $135,000 was realized for the anti-tuberculosis movement. In 1909, under many adverse conditions, $250,000 was realized from these stamps. This year the slogan of the tuberculosis fighters and the Red Cross is "A Million for Tuberculosis From Red Cross Seals in 1910."

Tit for Tat.

Lloyd C. Griscom, in an interview in New York, said of party dissensions:

"They are animated by a nasty spirit, a tit-for-tat spirit; and they go from bad to worse.

"It's like the case of the engaged couple at the seaside dance. The young man, a little jealous, said coldly to his fiancee at supper:

"'Let me see—was it you I kissed in the conservatory?'

"'About what time?' the young girl answered, with a little laugh."

Poor Prospects.

"Yes," said Miss Passay, "I found a very nice boarding house today, but the only room they had to offer me had a folding bed in it, and I detest those things."

"Of course,' remarked Miss Pert, "one can never hope to find a man under a folding bed."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Pull Off That Sheep Coat.

John Sugstad has come out as an independant candidate for the state senate against senator A. D. Stephens, who defeated him for the republican nomination September 20th. Of course he is to run in the name of the Citizens' or Anti-Saloon League, which is composed of the most daminable corrupt "pot gang" of politicians that ever infested northern Minnesota. They are backed by corporations and trusts with plenty of money to hire unprincipled, and dirty skunks to tell and publish lies. The editors of some of the Skandinavian papers, that circulated in Polk county during the last campaign are a disgrace to American citisinship. These papers chief sourse of income is derived by geting up a big list of subscribers so as to place their names and votes on the auction block to sell out to the corporations and trusts.

The International harvester trust don't want A. D. Stephens in that senate because he is working to get that harvester plant in the Stillwater penitentiary in successful operation, which will knock the bottom out of that harvester trust. Then there are the twine trust, the broom trust, and the fake insurance trust, that Stephens has been after ever since he was elected to the state senate, that are all coming hid under that sheep skin called county option.

Where does this inexhaustible supply of cash come from to back up this, so called reform? Who paid the hire of that big Auditorium building in Crookston for meeting after meeting, with the most noted, and high priced liars that they could hire? Do you think it was the ministers of the gospel that were sincere in the county option movement? Oh no my friend, it was the wolf under the sheeps coat that was putting up the boodle. A D. Stephens could only afford to hire that Auditorium building once and then it was used by local speakers.

It it time that the people, and especially the farmers "got next" to this pot gang, and put them to sleep so sound on November 8th that they will never wake up again in northern Minnesota. The editors of Polk County owe it as a duty to strip the sheepskin covering off them wolves and show them up to the people in their nakedness.

The farmers are true and honest but they do not understand the situation, and think they are voting for county option, instead of the candidate of the Harvester trust.

James Gray has picked up the same old club that knocked the brains out of J. F. Jacobson, for governor of Minnesota.

It can not possiably make any difference to the passing of a county option law whether A. D. Stephens, or John Sugstad is elected for senator from Polk county, so that question had not ought to enter into this campaign. So you fellows that are supporting Sugstad might just as well get your share of the boodle for the gang that are backing him have got lots of money, and you might just as well get your share of it as to be working for nothing. When a man asks you to vote for Sugstad, just ask him how much salery he is geting?

Dan Lynch came home from Dakota last week where he has spent the summer.

Miss Esther Bourman spent Sunday with her mother Mrs. Bourman, near Lillo.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Hyland from Erie spent Sunday with Martin Hyland.

The Nesland Bros. have began to build on the barn of A. A. Rolandson this week.

You bet there is a new society recently in this neighbor-hood; It is called the T. F. Society. I tell you its a good one.

Some good news was heard the other day, I wonder if it is so.

Mrs G. Gunderson and Ole Nesland made a business trip to Plummer last Thursday.

Arthur Lund was around looking for a gasoline engine in this neighbor hood.

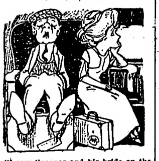
Miss Sarah Lindberg is helping Annibell Rolandson to do some sewing this week.

Mr Joe Helm from Red Lake Falls, came out in his auto last Thursday to call on Roland friends.

It was too bad that the threshing and cloth washing should stop that big wedding that was to be Sept. 21. If that is the case, better wash all the time if such a little thing should it.

Mrs. A. W. Brekke, Mrs. Nesland, Mrs. R. N. Fore, Mrs. R Halstad and Mrs Whalen called on Mrs A. Rolandson Monday.

The Difference.



"I saw Spooner and his bride on the train the other day."

"Were they in the parlor car?"

"No; they were on their way home from their honeymoon."

Queer, but the man who doesn't need credit is the one who can most easily get it.—Portland Express.

Diamonds Under Water.

An imitation diamond is never so brilliant as a genuine stone. If your eye is not experienced enough to detect the difference, a very simple test is to place the stone under water. The imitation stone is practically extinguished, while a genuine diamond sparkles even under water and is distinctly visible. When possible, place a genuine stone beside the possible imitation under water, and the contrast will be apparent to the least experienced.

Always Answered.

Children often are highly logical, though not quite in the adult manner. They attain conclusions by those processes of "pure reason" which, being quite unbiased by the opinions of others, sometimes result in startling truths.

Almost everybody, for instance, has heard of the little lad who, listening to the questions of an irreligious friend of the family as to what would happen supposing that one good Christian should pray for an east and another for a west wind at sea, innocently answered that of course there'd be an awful tempest, but not every one has heard of the equally pertinent and naive solution recently offered by a thoughtful youngster for the ever perplexing problem of "Are prayers answered?"

The child was talking with another, who asked the vexed and puzzling question, explaining at the same time that he didn't believe that prayers were answered, because he never got anything he asked for.

"You don't pray for the right things," answered little Mr. Wiseman. "Of course all prayers are answered, but sometimes the answer is 'Yes,' and sometimes it's 'No.'"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Rose Colds From Paper Roses.

"A patient of mine is subject to rose colds," a doctor said. "She caught a bad rose cold last week from a bouquet of artificial roses. That often happens. It is supposed to show the mystic, psychological aspect of disease, but as a matter of fact it is just as natural to take a rose cold from paper roses as from the real kind. Why? Because the paper roses that bring on rose colds are always perfumed. It is the fad, you know, to perfume artificial flowers. The scent used is the essential oil of roses, and it is this oil in the natural flowers that causes rose colds."—New York Press.

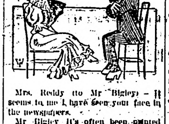
A Keen Observer.

Ethel, aged three, had been to visit her cousins, two fun loving and romping boys. She had climbed upon her father's knee and was telling him of her visit. "Papa, every night John and George say their prayers they ask God to make them good boys," said she.

"That is nice," said papa.

Then, thinking soberly for a few minutes, she said, "He ain't done it yet."—Delineator.

Familiar.



Mrs. Reddy (to Mr Bigley) – It seems to me I have seen your face in the newspapers.

Mr Bigley It's often been printed there

"What were you cured of?"

On Nagging.

My son taught me a lesson on the subject of "nagging" when he was but four years old and one that I have never forgotten. He had been guilty of a small misdemeanor and had tried to wriggle out of it by not telling the exact truth. I gave him a mild spanking and, as has always been my custom, talked the matter over afterward. I began by saying, "Now, Robert, if you had told me the truth I should not have punished you."

He stood before me, scraping one foot along the carpet, and he looked up at me and said, "What would you have done?" And I answered, "I should have only talked to you." "Well," he drawled, "how long would you have talked?"

He is a big boy in high school now, but when times arise requiring a reprimand and I get started I still hear that little voice, "How long would you have talked?" and I go right to the point and say what I have to say on the subject; but in the boy's own language, I "cut it short" and never refer to it again unless it is absolutely necessary.—Harper's Bazar.

Livingstone.

Of Dr. Livingstone it was said by Stanley that the missionary lived for years among the most cruel and ignorant savages in the world, but he never fired a shot in anger, never "clubbed or clouted or banned or blasted." His manner was that of a "cool, wise old man who felt offended and looked grave."

Circumstances Reversed.

Unkempt Smith—Mister, would youse kindly help a poor man as is all in, down and out? Jocular Citizen—Why, certainly. Just climb the fire escape on that skyscraper across the street and walk in on the top floor. Then you will be all out, up and in.—Judge's Library.

Striking It Rich.

"Did you ever strike it rich prospecting?"

"Only once," replied the westerner. "I was going along a trail in the mountains late one afternoon when I saw the gleam of metal. Hastening to it, I found"—

"Silver or gold?"

"Tin. It was a matchbox, full too. And I had been out of matches since my early morning smoke."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Halley's Achievements.

Edmund Halley was a very great man. He was not only the first to predict correctly the return of a comet, that which is now known by his name, but also—before Newton had announced his results to any one—arrived at the conclusion that the attraction of gravitation probably varied inversely as the square of the distance. While these and other important achievements of his are well known it seems to have been forgotten that Halley devised a method of determining the age of the ocean from chemical denudation.—Dr. G. F. Pete McAndress came up from St. Hilaire to day to visit his brother Walter

James Havel, an old employe of the Thief River Falls News, made this office a plesent call Wednesday.

Mrs. Walter McAndress and son Lenard left for Rochester Minnesota Monday to visit relatives.

The rise in the Red Lake river last week only lasted for two days and is lower than ever now.

Miss Mildred Hooper returned from her Wisconsin visit Sunday and started teaching school on Monday.

John Poloni is raising his residence up one story. Mr. Havel and son of Thief River Falls are doing the carpenter work for him.

Pete Eberhart was along the Red Lake river to-day taking an invoice of the dead head logs that have been taken out of the mud this fall.

An Oklahoma newspaper advertises as follows: "Full-blooded cow for sale, giving milk, three tons of hay, a lot of chickens and several stoves."

Glen Martz and Aurthur Hall came up from St. Hilaire Monday to cross section ditch No. 47, which has to be done when the ditch is dug with teams.

Carl Narveson and W.G. Hunt went up to the school house to the county division meeting on Tuesday evening, but found no convincers present.

Farmers should not pay for the publication of their final proof notices until after they are published. The money is just as safe in your pocket, as it is in the publishers, until he earns it.

Charles Clark is doing some breaking of corn land for us this week, as we expect to raise a number of acres of corn next year, or we wont. But we shall plant it and take pains to try to raise it.

Kris Larson, the Anton cattle buyer and Mike McAndress, of St. Hilaire will make a trip up in eastern Marshall and northern Beltrami county to buy stock in the fire swepted country.

A number of speakers came out from Thief River Falls to hold a county division rally on Tuesday evening, but as they only had four for an audiance, they reserved their steam for some future date.

Township supervisors Hammersteen and Stixrude were looking over the road work that has been done on the section lines between section 29 and 32 and 28 and 29, by the town and county, on Sunday last and pronounced it o.k.

Linihan & Sift, of Red Lake Falls have taken the contract to dig county ditch No. 47 running from section 7 in Deer Park, north and west to the Red Lake river on section 25 in the town of Kratka. They have started work on the ditch this week and will employ a large force of men and teams, so as to complete the ditch this fall.

Tore T. Lande, of Shelby Mon. who is visiting Deer Park relatives made this office a plesent call last Saturday. He informs us that he was going to again buy land in Deer Park, and make his home there, if county division did not carry. We have met this same story all summer, when anyone is talking of buying any land. Thief River Falls claims that it raises the value of land, but nobody seems anxious to get in on the ground floor of that kind of a raise, which means that the assessed value will be raised, so they can collect more taxes. You bet your land will be raised in value. The assessor will attend to that. Yes.

POLITICAL BOMBS.

So attorney Michelet got so sure that county division would carry he pulled out of the fight for county attorney. "Greater love than this hath no man shown."

At the Thief River Falls county division rally in St. Hilaire last week attorney Grady, of Red Lake Falls was present and invited the Thief River Falls men to meet him in debate on the question of county division, but the divisionists declined. Of course they had to, as they have only got one old story that it took them six months to make up, and which they have told so often that some of them are beginning to believe it themselves.

The Eleven Towns says that one of a family in Deer Park that will be seperated, by county division into differant counties had better sell out and move over into Pennington county. He can't sell out, as there is no buyers, and if county division should carry you could not sell a farm in that or any of the eastern end of Pennington county for four dollars an acre.

He Needed a Prodding.

His arm was round her waist, her hand was on his shoulder, and they were walking through the fields as they had been wont to do for nine long years.

"Em," said he, "we've been coortin' a tidy time now."

"Nine year come nex' August bank holiday, George."

"I told you, fust start off, as how I shouldn't be in no hurry to git married, Em."

"You didn't tell no lie about it, neither, George," she declared, with a sigh.

"You're a-talkin' as if you was sorry that I'm a man o' my word, Em," he said reprovingly.

"Well, George," she replied, "now you mention it I have bin thinkin' this last year or two that if you could see your way to go back on your word just this once it wouldn't be amiss."—London Mail.

The House Was Shaky.

When John Quincy Adams was eighty years of age he met in the streets of Boston an old friend, who shook his trembling hand and said. "Good morning, and how is John Quincy Adams today?"

"Thank you," was the ex-president's answer. "John Quincy Adams himself is well, sir; quite well, I thank you. But the house in which he lives at present is becoming dilapidated. It is tottering upon its foundation. Time and the seasons have nearly destroyed it. Its roof is pretty well worn out. Its walls are much shattered, and it trembles with every wind. The old tenement is becoming almost uninhabitable, and I think John Quincy Adams will have to move out of it soon. But he himself is quite well, sir; quite well."

With that the venerable sixth president of the United States moved on with the aid of his staff.

Had All His Nerve With Him.

In a downtown stand up lunch place, where the chief source of the waiters' revenue is in the form of tips and where the patrons are supposed to step lively so that those who wait may be accommodated, a man has been coming of late who brings a newspaper with him and reads it leisurely, sometimes for half an hour, while he takes his modest luncheon. The waiter at whose station he planted himself one day recently was prepared for the emergency, and when the man had finished reading his paper the servant handed him two others with the remark: "Maybe you'd like to see these?" The other waiters, knowing of the plot, looked to see the man wilt, but were disappointed. He took the papers with thanks, continued reading, and finally, when he asked for his check, asked also whether he might keep the papers.—New York Tribune

One of Falb's Predictions.

In 1874 Professor Rudolf Falb predicted an eruption of Etna on Aug. 27. He offered a Vienna editor to write an account of it if the editor would send him to Sicily. Falb was commissioned. When he reached Etna there was not the slightest sign of disturbance. As the 27th approached Falb was tortured with anxiety and spent sleepless nights watching the volcano. Nothing happened on the 27th and 28th. The following morning the servant rushed into the professor's room shouting. "An eruption, a terrible eruption!" Falb saw the spectacle and sent off his dispatch.

Why He Applauded.

"Are you fond of music?" asked a stranger of the young man at the concert who was applauding vigorously after a pretty girl had sung a song in a very painful way.

"Not particularly," replied the young man frankly, "but I am extremely fond of the musician."

Why Not Pass the Plate?

They ought to pass the plate at church weddings. It comes natural to do it in church, and to do so would add a pretty and useful employment to the duties of the ushers, who always have a little spare time before the bride arrives. And, really, getting married is more expensive than ever, and, though wedding presents are excellent in their way, what the young people usually need the most is cash. Instead of the list of gifts which the newspapers sometimes print we should read, "The collection yielded $4,000,000." That would be nice. It is much easier to store and care for money than plate and glass! And money always fits and there is no such thing as an embarrassing duplication of dollars.—Life.

"I am in the hands of my friends," said the political sidestepper.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

"Nine year come nex' August bank holiday, George."

"I told you, fust start off, as how I shouldn't be in no hurry to git married, Em."

"You didn't tell no lie about it, neither, George," she declared, with a sigh.

"You're a-talkin' as if you was sorry that I'm a man o' my word, Em," he said reprovingly.

"Well, George," she replied, "now you mention it I have bin thinkin' this last year or two that if you could see your way to go back on your word just this once it wouldn't be amiss."—London Mail.

The House Was Shaky.

When John Quincy Adams was eighty years of age he met in the streets of Boston an old friend, who shook his trembling hand and said. "Good morning, and how is John Quincy Adams today?"

"Thank you," was the ex-president's answer. "John Quincy Adams himself is well, sir; quite well, I thank you. But the house in which he lives at present is becoming dilapidated. It is tottering upon its foundation. Time and the seasons have nearly destroyed it. Its roof is pretty well worn out. Its walls are much shattered, and it trembles with every wind. The old tenement is becoming almost uninhabitable, and I think John Quincy Adams will have to move out of it soon. But he himself is quite well, sir; quite well."

With that the venerable sixth president of the United States moved on with the aid of his staff.

Had All His Nerve With Him.

In a downtown stand up lunch place, where the chief source of the waiters' revenue is in the form of tips and where the patrons are supposed to step lively so that those who wait may be accommodated, a man has been coming of late who brings a newspaper with him and reads it leisurely, sometimes for half an hour, while he takes his modest luncheon. The waiter at whose station he planted himself one day recently was prepared for the emergency, and when the man had finished reading his paper the servant handed him two others with the remark: "Maybe you'd like to see these?" The other waiters, knowing of the plot, looked to see the man wilt, but were disappointed. He took the papers with thanks, continued reading, and finally, when he asked for his check, asked also whether he might keep the papers.—New York Tribune

One of Falb's Predictions.

In 1874 Professor Rudolf Falb predicted an eruption of Etna on Aug. 27. He offered a Vienna editor to write an account of it if the editor would send him to Sicily. Falb was commissioned. When he reached Etna there was not the slightest sign of disturbance. As the 27th approached Falb was tortured with anxiety and spent sleepless nights watching the volcano. Nothing happened on the 27th and 28th. The following morning the servant rushed into the professor's room shouting, "An eruption, a terrible eruption!" Falb saw the spectacle and sent off his dispatch.

Why Not Pass the Plate?

They ought to pass the plate at church weddings. It comes natural to do it in church, and to do so would add a pretty and useful employment to the duties of the ushers, who always have a little spare time before the bride arrives. And, really, getting married is more expensive than ever, and, though wedding presents are excellent in their way, what the young people usually need the most is cash. Instead of the list of gifts which the newspapers sometimes print we should read, "The collection yielded $4,000,000." That would be nice. The Publisher's Claims Sustained

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the Dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

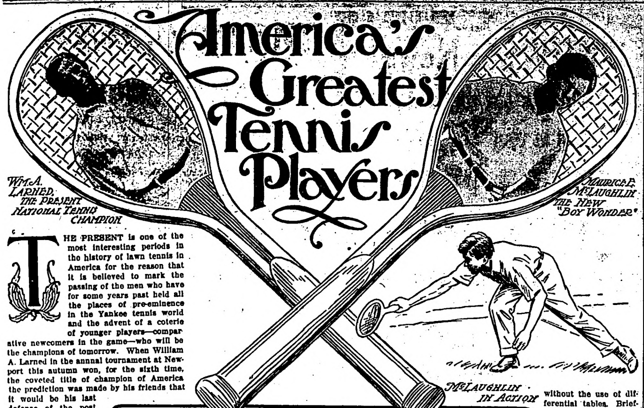
America's Greatest Tennis Players

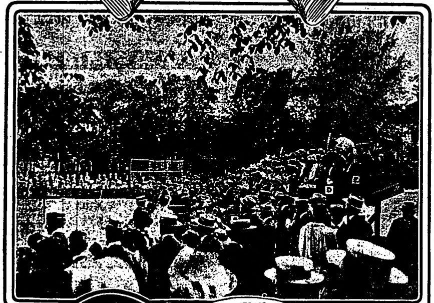


WM. A. LARNED. THE PRESENT NATIONAL TENNIS CHAMPION

MAURICE E. McLAUGHLIN THE NEW "BOY WONDER"

McLAUGHLIN IN ACTION

THE PRESENT is one of the most interesting periods in the history of lawn tennis in America for the reason that it is believed to mark the passing of the men who have for some years past held all the places of pre-eminence in the Yankee tennis world and the advent of a coterie of younger players—comparative newcomers in the game—who will be the champions of tomorrow. When William A. Larned in the annual tournament at Newport this autumn won, for the sixth time, the coveted title of champion of America the prediction was made by his friends that it would be his last defense of the post of honor he has successfully held against all comers for more than half a decade. If Larned does decide next year voluntarily to hand over the championship to the man who in the preliminary contests wins the right to challenge him, he will but be following in the footsteps of one or two of his famous predecessors who retired unbeaten after attaining the highest position in the game. That Larned should think of retiring is by no means strange. Indeed, the wonder is that he has been able to defend his title successfully against the young blood that has appeared in the game, for, be it known, the redoubtable Larned is more than forty years of age and has been playing tennis steadily for more than twenty years.



AT A CHAMPIONSHIP TENNIS TOURNAMENT

BEALS WRIGHT ONE OF AMERICA'S GREATEST TENNIS PLAYERS

That Larned at the age of two score years is yet America's best player, and quite possibly the best player in the world, is the more notable when it is taken into consideration that tennis, for all that it "looks easy" to the uninitiated, is in literal truth one of the most strenuous games in the whole category of outdoor athletics. Moreover, it is an all-around game. Not only does it call into play every muscle in the body to an extent unequaled by any other exercise, unless it be rowing, but it requires the nimblest brain work. To be a successful racketer a player must think quickly as well as act quickly.

Another veteran American player who stands behind Larned in skill and who ranks with him as affording evidence that youth is not the requisite in tennis that it is in some other sports is Beals Wright, former national champion. As long ago as, 1901 Wright had the national championship almost in his grasp and in 1905 he captured the coveted title. Latterly he has been in a sense eclipsed by Larned, but is yet a splendid and spectacular player. Only a few months ago Wright went abroad and worsted all the best players of Europe and Great Britain, only meeting defeat at the hands of A. F. Wilding, the Australian player, and that in a contest that cannot be regarded as wholly conclusive.

For all the splendid achievements, however, of the older tennis players experts who are yet very much in the game, there is ample evidence that the time is almost at hand when they must step aside for the group of younger men who have been forging ahead of late in a most determined manner. Oddly enough, almost all of these new stars of the tennis firmament are westerners. Very much in the public eye just at present is Bundy, the whirlwind player from California, who this year defeated "all comers" and only met his Waterloo when he faced Larned. Even at that the outcome might have been different had the lad from the Golden Gate state not been exhausted by a long series of contests.

Even more interesting is the future of Maurice E. McLaughlin, the "boy wonder" from California, whom Larned has lately taken up as his protege and upon whose shoulders it is rumored he proposes to let fall the mantle of the champion. McLaughlin, who is yet in his teens, is a dashing player, with terrific strength behind his strokes and with a deadly "serve" that is calculated to disconcert any player in the world. It is now the hope of all American tennis enthusiasts that Larned, Wright and McLaughlin can be induced to form a team that will go to Australia and attempt to recover the Davis cup—the great international blue ribbon trophy of the tennis world—which was won by Australian players some years ago and which neither American nor English players have ever been able to wrest from their grasp.

The game of lawn tennis resembles in some respects the ancient game of tennis, which in its earliest form seems to have been played in the open air. The modern sport seems to have originated almost simultaneously in the United States and England. Major Wingfield reduced it to a definite form in England in the year 1874, giving it the hopelessly classical name of "Sphairistike." Under the auspices of the Marylebone club rules were formulated the following year for what was then definitely known as tennis. The "hour glass" court was retained, with the net five feet high at the posts and four feet in the center, and the service lines 25 feet from the net. The ball used was covered, weighed 1½ ounces and was 2½ inches in diameter. The earliest form of tennis was replaced in 1876 by a rectangular court.

In 1879, when volleying was introduced by the Renshaw brothers, the service line was brought one foot nearer the center and the height of the line was raised again to three feet six inches, making the advantages of the different styles of play more equal.

Eight years later the English National Lawn Tennis association was formed. Ever since then it has been the governing body for England and the surrounding countries, in which the game has since spread. The courts of all countries have the same dimensions. The following is the official description of the American court: The court is 78 feet long and 27 feet wide. It is divided across the middle by a net, the ends of which are attached to two posts, standing three feet outside of the court on either side. The height of the net is three feet six inches at the post and three feet in the middle half way between the side lines and parallel with them is drawn the court line, dividing the space on each side of the net into two equal parts, the right and left courts. On each side of the net, at a distance of 21 feet from it are drawn the service lines. Two kinds of game are played, "singles" and "doubles," two partners on each side. The choice of sides of the court and the right to serve first are decided by the toss of a coin. The players stand on opposite sides of the net, the player who first delivers the ball being called the server and the other the striker-out. At the end of the first game the striker-out becomes the server, and so on alternately. The server delivers the ball, or service, from the right to the left courts. It must drop between the service line, half court line and side line of the court, diagonally opposite to that which is being served.

The system of scoring is framed on a basis of 15 for each stroke won; but the third stroke is called 40 instead of 45. If both players win three strokes, the score is called "deuce" instead of "forty all." The winner of the next stroke scores "advantage," and if he also scores the following stroke, he wins the game. If the stroke falls to the opposite side the score goes back to "deuce." Similarly the player who first scores six games wins the set, unless both should have won five, when a player must win two consecutive games to score the set. If he fails to do this the score is once more called "games all," and the same conditions prevail at every set. The players change sides at the end of every set.

All championship matches have since 1886 been determined by the winning of three sets out of five; but since 1897 the English system of handicapping occasionally has been employed, but without the use of differential tables. Briefly, a player is benefited by giving or owing strokes or giving bisques. A bisque is one point which can be taken by the receiver of the odds at any time in the set, except after a service is delivered or by the server after a fault.

The game was played in America within a year of its adoption in England, at Nahant, near Boston. The next year a court was laid out at Newport, R. I., which has since been the American headquarters of the game, although it has grown to such an extent that, in addition to the national championships there are held every year 26 or more championship contests by single states or groups of states. The first open championship game was held on the grounds of the Staten Island Cricket club in 1880. The next year the United States National Lawn Tennis association was formed, and rules adopted, which have, however, been modified and altered from time to time, and since then the national championships have always been played at Newport, R. I. A number of English players have frequently taken part in these championship games, with marked success at first, which gradually diminished as the American play developed along national lines. These may be summed up under these heads: The screw service, whereby the ball is made to curve in its downward flight, like the "out drop" of a baseball pitcher, imparting a double and most baffling motion; the practise of volleying from a position so close to the net that these strokes can kill the ball; the development of the "stop" volley, whereby the ball is simply stopped with a loosely held racket and falls over the net "dead;" lobbing very high with a slight cut that gives the ball a back twist. The American association has recently modified one of the two important differences between the rules of play in England and America by limiting the rests to which players were entitled between sets, to one rest after the third set and no more. The other difference, the foot-fault rule, remains.

Professional Eaters

Many striking customs of their past are still preserved by the Indians of the northwest, and of these none is more interesting than a peculiar practise yet followed by the Sioux of the Devils Lake reservation.

It appears, on competent authority, that from time immemorial these Sioux have adhered to an etiquette whereby it is the bounden duty of the host to supply his guest with all the food he may desire, and as a rule the apportionment set before the visiting Indian is in excess of the capacity of a single man.

On the other hand, by the same custom, the guest is obliged to eat all that is placed before him, else he grossly insults his entertainer. Now, it was found that this practise would work a hardship, but instead of dispensing with the custom the Indian method of reasoning was applied and what is known as the professional eater was brought to the front.

While the guest is supposed to eat all that is placed before him, it serves the same purpose if his neighbor assists in devouring the bountiful repast, the main object being to have the plate clean when the meal shall be finished.

It is not always practicable to depend upon a neighbor at table to assist in getting away with a large dinner, and in order to insure the final consumption of the allotted portion visiting Indians call upon these professional eaters, whose duty it is to sit beside them through a meal and eat what the guest eats.

The professional eaters are never looked upon in the light of guests but more as traveling companions with a particular duty to perform.

These eaters receive from $1 to $2 and even $3 for each meal where they assist. It is stated that one of the professional eaters was known to have disposed of some seven pounds of beef at a sitting.—New York Herald.

To love nobly, profoundly; to love at once with the mind and with the heart; to dedicate to another our sympathies, our reverence, and our trust, is the highest and the deepest interest of existence.—Quinlan.

The Place of Honor.

Farmer Hodge was of the good, old-fashioned school, and he always gave a feast to his hands at harvest time.

It was harvest time and the feast was about to commence.

Giles was the oldest hand and the hostess, with beaming cordiality, motioned him to the seat by her right hand. But Giles remained silently unresponsive.

"Come," said the hostess, "don't be bashful, Mr. Giles"—he was just Giles on ordinary occasions—"you've a right to the place of honor, you know."

Giles deliberated a moment, then spoke.

"Thank you kindly, Mrs. Hodge," he said, "but if it's all the same to you, I'd rather sit opposite this pudden'!"

HIS HANDS CRACKED OPEN

"I am a man seventy years old. My hands were very sore and cracked open on the insides for over a year with large sores. They would crack open and bleed, itch, burn and ache so that I could not sleep and could do but little work. They were so bad that I could not dress myself in the morning. They would bleed and the blood dropped on the floor. I called on two doctors, but they did me no good. I could get nothing to do any good till I got the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. About a year ago my daughter got a cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment and in one week from the time I began to use them my hands were all healed up and they have not been a mite sore since. I would not be without the Cuticura Remedies.

"They also cured a bad sore on the hand of one of my neighbor's children, and they think very highly of the Cuticura Remedies. John W. Hasty, So. Effingham, N. H., Mar. 5, and Apr. 11, '09."

Childlike Ignorance.

Laura Jean Libbey, discussing in Brooklyn her successful appearance on the stage, said:

"I talk in my monologue about love, marriage and the other interests of the heart. On these subjects women, especially young women, are strangely ignorant.

"They really make me think, you know, of the little girl who was asked by her teacher:

"'What can you tell us about Solomon?'

"'Solomon,' replied the little girl, 'was very fond of animals.'

"'And how, my dear,' said the teacher, 'do you make that out?'

"'Because,' answered the little girl, 'the Bible says he had 500 porcupines.'"

Seeing Phoebe Home

By JANE OSBORN

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

Phoebe Dare sat erect on the shiny haircloth sofa with her great eyes fixed on the flowered carpet of the Dare parlor. Before her, cramped and uncomfortable, sat Jonathan Crane, a grim smile on his homely face and his eyes intent on Phoebe.

"Say, Phoebe," he said at length, "who's going to take you to the Kingsleys' dance?"

Phoebe made no response, but merely raised her eyes proudly and with a tantalizing twinkle.

"Of course you wouldn't go with me?" he asked. He began with the "of course" in view of the fact that Phoebe had just emphatically declined his proffered hand and heart.

Phoebe made no reply and a long pause followed while Jonathan gazed with something like devotion at the girl before him.

"The reason why I wanted to take you," he began at length, with a drawl, "was because of that wager I made with Craig Taylor."

"What wager?" asked the girl, suddenly alert.

"Oh, I guess it wouldn't interest you," said Jonathan rising. "I'd better be going now."

The girl, whose curiosity was thoroughly aroused, barred the way to the door. "Tell me what wager you have with Craig," she demanded in the most pleading tones. "Please tell me."

"Oh, it wasn't much of a wager," said Jonathan, slowly. "I guess I shouldn't have said anything about it."

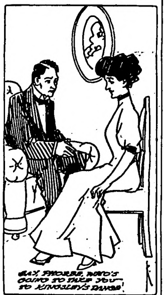
But Phoebe persisted.

"Oh, well," said Jonathan, at last, as if he had been moved by her entreaty, "you see, I bet Craig that I could take you to the dance, and he bet that he could. That was more or less the reason why I asked you to marry me, so's to sort of cinch the matter."

Phoebe looked at him with perplexity.

"Oh, it isn't any great matter," said Jonathan. "I hate to lose the money just now, but then I ought to have known enough not to take such risks.

Phoebe's cheeks were scarlet, and as she stood before him, holding the door, Jonathan could feel the anger that had risen within her.



SAY, PHOEBE, WHO'S GOING TO TAKE YOU TO KINGSLEY'S DANCE?

"Did Craig Taylor dare to take up that wager?" she asked.

"Yes," said Jonathan deliberately, watching her closely.

For another minute Phoebe still held the door closed. Then, as she opened it, she said with apparent tranquility:

"Say, Jonathan, if you want me to go to the Kingsleys' barn dance with you, I would just as soon."

So on the evening of the annual barn dance at the Kingsley farm, Phoebe dressed in her most bewitching frock, with a black ribbon at her throat to set off the pinkest and fairest of cheeks, and a rose in her hair to add to its dark luster. She was ready and waiting, wrapped well for the cold drive, when Jonathan came, and she stepped eagerly into the buggy beside him.

"Oh, do hurry," she begged, as her little foot tattooed on the floor of the buggy in anticipation of the dancing she loved. "I can hardly wait, and yet you go so dreadfully slow."

Jonathan felt the blood tingle within him as he realized that it was in his power to make her impatient—the girl who kept him in a mood of perpetual impatience.

Jonathan stalked into the floor of the Kingsley barn with a sense of momentary triumph. At his side beamed Phoebe, whose fickle heart, Jonathan was sure, had at some time worked havoc with well nigh every man there. His eye caught the self-satisfied smile of the city-bred Craig Taylor, whose recent friendship with Phoebe had filled Jonathan with maddening jealousy.

"Oh, hello, Phoebe," said Craig, stepping up to them and nodding slightly to Jonathan. Then as he lightly paid Phoebe a pretty compliment Jonathan was no longer able to disguise his ill temper. So Phoebe, with no other thought than to tease Jonathan, smiled adorably at Craig.

But when the last dance came and the lights had begun to burn low and lesser beauties than Phoebe had begun to droop, Jonathan's spirits began to rise in anticipation of the joy of seeing Phoebe home. He had taken his buggy from the shed and stood waiting for her, when all at once he heard her laugh and at the same instant realized that she was with Craig Taylor, getting into Craig Taylor's buggy.

"Hello, Jonathan," called one of the men, with a laugh, "thought you were going to take Phoebe home."

One of the girls suppressed a giggle and for a minute Jonathan had a great desire to fight every one. His next thought was of overtaking Craig, laying him flat and carrying off the girl he loved. Instead, Jonathan slowly swung into his buggy and drove thoughtfully through the crisp morning air.

It was a few days later, on Sunday afternoon, and Jonathan again sat in the little Dare parlor, before Phoebe, who, as usual, sat upright on the hair sofa. He had not seen her since the memorable dance and Phoebe expected to be scolded.

"I say, Phoebe," Jonathan said at length, "perhaps you'd like to go out sleighing with me—out to the lake. It's great sleighing."

Phoebe accepted readily and without further delay Jonathan was ready with his horse and sleigh, with heated bricks and heavy wraps to keep out the cold winds.

If Phoebe was radiant at a dance when the music and motion had brought the color to her face and the light to her eyes, she was even more so in a sleigh when the fresh, cold wind and the sound of the sleigh bells seemed somehow to work wonders.

It was a long drive, but Jonathan's spirits did not lag, and as they neared the shore of the lake, bleak and deserted, with not a sign of mortal for miles around, he could feel the girl at his side shrinking toward him helplessly.

"My, but this is a lonely spot in winter," she said. "Would you ever think it could be so nice in summer?"

"I don't know, Phoebe," said Jonathan, smiling. "Let's get out and walk about a minute to get up the circulation. You seem a bit cold."

So Phoebe, accepting the suggestion, got out from the sleigh, and, as she turned about for Jonathan to follow, she saw him quickly whip up his horse, and, turning as sharp a corner, as the sleigh would allow, he drove away from her.

"Jonathan, Jonathan!" she called in tones that were unavailing.

On he drove, with the distracted girl running and crying after him. At length, after he had gone half a mile through the snow, he stopped, and, with a grim smile on his face, watched the girl plod through the snow after him.

"Jonathan," she wailed when she had reached him, "Jonathan, whatever are you doing?"

"Well, I guess," said Jonathan with deliberation, "you can find some one else to take you home. You'd hardly expect me to, after the dance at Kingsley's, would you, seeing it's not your custom to go home with the man that brings you?"

Phoebe was in tears—tears of remorse and hurt pride, not of anger—and when a minute later Jonathan had seized her in his arms and put her gently in the sleigh at his side she clung trembling to his arm.

"Jonathan," she said, after they had driven through the snow for a few minutes, "Jonathan, I'm sorry.

Jonathan made no reply.

"Jonathan," she said again pleadingly, "Jonathan, did you win that wager?"

"There wasn't any wager," said Jonathan. "That was a lie I told you about the wager."

"Then—then you didn't propose to me just to 'cinch the matter?'" she asked.

"No," said Jonathan. "I proposed because I had a notion of marrying you."

And this time Phoebe accepted.

Keeping Flowers Fresh.

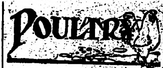
An authority on flowers has this to say in regard to their preservation: "Place the flowers in a vase filled with fresh water, to which a little charcoal or a small piece of camphor has been added. The vase should be set upon a plate or dish and covered with a bell-shaped glass. Around the edge of the glass a little water should be poured, so that air will be excluded. If fresh cut flowers need reviving, place the stems in boiling water, and by the time the water is cold the flowers will have revived. Cut the ends of the stems anew and place in fresh cold water.

Shakespearean Joke.

"But why, prithee," contended the First Critic, "should this new playwright, Shixpur, have introduced a comic gravedigging scene into his tragedy, yerdie?"

"'Tis easy of solution, by hen," answered the Second Critic. "Our author hath put in gravediggers for the purpose of unearthing a plot! Boy a cup of sack!"

Wit was crude in them days.



ROOSTS FOR POULTRY HOUSE

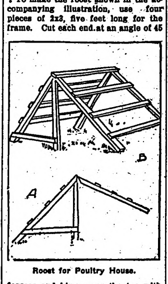
To make the roost shown in the accompanying illustration, use four pieces of 2x3, five feet long for the frame. Cut each end at an angle of 45 degrees and hinge over the top with eight-inch strap hinges. On these frames nail seven 2x2 strips seven feet long for roosts. Beginning at the top, nail these 15 inches apart, as indicated at B.



Roost for Poultry House.

Fig. A shows the end section with the support, which is a piece of 2x3, three feet four inches long, and the stay brace, which is a piece 1x2, three feet, four inches long. It also indicates how one side can be raised when the floor is cleaned.

CARE OF POULTRY IN WINTER

Not Much Hard Work Required to Keep Flock in Summer, but Different in Cold Weather.

(By B. A. WELCH.)

It does not require much hard work to keep a flock in good condition in the summer, but absolute neglect will often completely destroy the winter egg producing qualities of not only the old hens but the pullets as well.

If you have not removed every window in the chicken house and substituted wire netting in order to provide perfect ventilation do so at once.

Better that the chicks roost in the trees than they be confined in a vermin ridden building.

Body lice will worry a flock to death, or so nearly so as to destroy its usefulness. These can be killed but not easily.

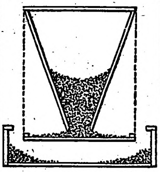
Persian insect powder will do the business. It should be applied with a powder spray by one person while another holds the fowls by the legs so that the powder may reach every part of the skin through the disturbed feathers.

HANDY HOPPER FOR CHICKENS

May Be Constructed of Wood or Galvanized Iron and Will Prevent Birds Scattering Grain.

An economical and useful device in the poultry yard is shown in the illustration.

This hopper may be made of galvanized iron or of wood. It is intended to prevent hens from wasting feed when eating, says Orange Judd Farmer. The hopper proper is hung above the lower box, which may be emptied back into the hopper when desired.



Hopper for Saving Food.

Plan of Feeding.

By giving the hens just as much food as they will relish in the morning and scattering some small grain in the litter, they will start scratching and will keep it up until their crops are filled.

At night they can be given all they can eat of acceptable foods, varying as frequently as circumstances allow. With the variety of food obtainable in the summer time, even for confined fowls, there is little excuse for having overfed birds.

Get Chicks to Roost.

To induce the young chicks to roost in the poultry house as soon as they are weaned, build a ladder of a wide board with narrow cleats nailed across at short intervals. Where the roosts are easy to reach the young birds are more ready to use them.

CONVINCING PROOF

OF THE VIRTUE OF

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

What is the use of procrastinating in the face of such evidence as the following letters represent? If you are a sick woman or know one who is, what sensible reason have you for not giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial? For 30 years we have been publishing such testimonial letters as these—thousands of them—they are genuine and honest, too, every one of them.

Mrs. S. J. Barber says:

"I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine in the world for women—and I feel it my duty to let others know the good it has done for me. Three years ago I had a tumor which the doctor said would have to be removed by an operation or I could not live more than a year, or two, at most. I wrote Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., for advice, and took 14 bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and to-day the tumor is gone and I am a perfectly well woman. I hope my testimonial will be of benefit to others."—Mrs. S. J. BARBER, Scott, N. Y.

Mrs. George May says:

"No one knows what I have suffered from female troubles, neuralgia pains, and backache. My doctor said he could not give me anything to cure it. Through the advice of a friend I began to use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and the pain soon disappeared. I continued its use and am now in perfect health. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been a God-send to me as I believe I should have been in my grave if it had not been for Mrs. Pinkham's advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. GEORGE MAY, 86 4th Ave., Paterson, N. J.

Mrs. E. F. Hayes says:

"I was under the doctor's treatment for a fibroid tumor. I suffered with pain, soreness, bloating, and could not walk or stand on my feet any length of time. I wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for advice, followed her directions and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. To-day I am a well woman, the tumor was expelled and my whole system strengthened. I advise all women who are afflicted with tumors or female troubles to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. E. F. HAYES, 1890 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

Mrs. W. K. Housh says:

"I have been completely cured of a severe female trouble by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and want to recommend it to all suffering women."—Mrs. W. K. HOUSH, 7 Eastview Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has cured many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, etc.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

How Stonewall Jackson Won Life's Battle

by JOSEPH W. FOLK, former Governor of Missouri

COPYRIGHT by JOSEPH B. BOWLES

"YOU may be whatever you resolve to be." This was the motto of Stonewall Jackson. By this rule he lived and conquered, and by it died in the rush of victory. Such was Jackson's faith in God and himself, he inspired not only his own men with the certainty of victory, but the entire confederacy felt sure of ultimate triumph while he was in the field. No warrior was ever worshiped by his people as was this Soldier Saint of the Lost Cause. While he lived and fought the people of the south saw in him the incarnation of God's justice struggling for them. When the wound which was inadvertently given by his own men at Chancellorsville terminated fatally, the news came as a chilling shock to southern hopes. The history of modern times affords no parallel to the deep sorrow that throbbed in the hearts of the confederate people when Jackson died. Those who had never seen his face wept for him as for their nearest kindred. They began to realize that with him removed their cause was doomed. As one of the leaders declared when he heard the news of Jackson's death, "God has deserted us, else he would not have taken Jackson."

In being so bowed down with grief at Jackson's loss, it must not be understood that they loved Robert E. Lee and their other generals less, for to the first named at least, their devotion amounted to idolatry, but there was something in Jackson that the others did not possess which appealed to the people of the south, and gave them a sublime confidence. This was the reflection of his absolute faith that the hand of Providence was guiding him on.

Christened "Stonewall" at Manassas.

Stonewall Jackson, as every schoolboy knows, was plain Thomas J. Jackson until in the battle of Manassas when the day seemed to be going against the southern forces, Gen. Bee rode up to Jackson and in despair exclaimed: "They are beating us back," and Jackson replied: "Then we will give them the bayonet." Catching the inspiration of Jackson's indomitable will, Bee galloped back to his command and shouted: "There is Jackson standing like a stone wall. Rally behind the Virginians. Follow me." Gen. Bee charged at the head of his men, and in a little while fell mortally wounded with his face to the front. From that time Jackson was known as "Stonewall," and his command became immortal as the Stonewall brigade.

Stonewall Jackson's ancestors had lived in Maryland and Virginia for more than 100 years and were of Scotch-Irish descent. They were all honest, God-fearing people, and they were of fighting blood, taking a conspicuous part, first in the Indian troubles, and then in the revolutionary war.

Not Robust in Boyhood.

The boy who was to become one of the greatest military commanders the world has ever known, was born in 1824 in Clarksburg among the beautiful mountains of what was then Virginia, and now West Virginia. He was left an orphan at an early age by the death of his father, and his mother being unable to support him, he lived with an uncle, through whose kindness he was given the benefit of the best schools of those times. Without showing any special aptness as a scholar, he by perseverance mastered whatever he undertook, and through hard study learned his lessons well Like all geniuses of war he excelled in mathematics. As a boy he was not strong physically, and in his early years suffered a partial paralysis, which later disappeared through the strenuous exercises at the military academy.

Served as County Constable.

Partly for the healthful outdoor work that the office would give and partly to obtain funds to aid in his further education, he secured the appointment as constable in his district. He was under age at the time, but was in such general favor that no one raised the question as to the legality of the court appointing a minor to the office. He performed the duties of this place with industry and fidelity, though the kind of people he was thrown in contact with officially, were not such as to aid in the development of character.

As he approached manhood he did not display that sober, serious nature that afterwards dominated him. The spiritualization of everything he did, and his rule of making every act of his life a religious act came later. At this time he was little different from other young men in attending horse races, house raisings and country dances. His truthfulness and aggressive honesty remained untarnished from childhood. He was always modest, self-reliant and full of dignity and courtesy.

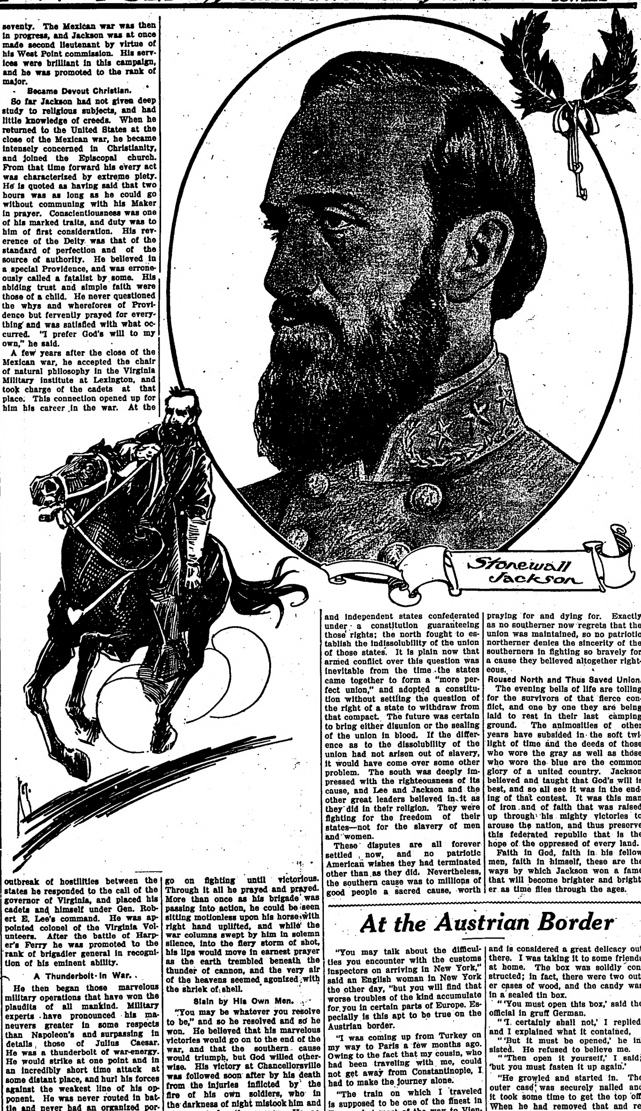
Success in Mexican War.

At the age of 18 he obtained a West Point cadetship and entered that institution. His literary education had not been thorough, and he progressed with difficulty. In the examinations which closed the first half year's novitiate, he came within a fraction of failing. He steadily improved, however, through his earnest application and untiring perseverance, and graduated at the age of 22, in 1846, seventeenth in a class of about seventy. The Mexican war was then in progress, and Jackson was at once made second lieutenant by virtue of his West Point commission. His services were brilliant in this campaign, and he was promoted to the rank of major.

Became Devout Christian.

So far Jackson had not given deep study to religious subjects, and had little knowledge of creeds. When he returned to the United States at the close of the Mexican war, he became intensely concerned in Christianity, and joined the Episcopal church. From that time forward his every act was characterized by extreme piety. He is quoted as having said that two hours was as long as he could go without communing with his Maker in prayer. Conscientiousness was one of his marked traits, and duty was to him of first consideration. His reverence of the Deity was that of the standard of perfection and of the source of authority. He believed in a special Providence, and was erroneously called a fatalist by some. His abiding trust and simple faith were those of a child. He never questioned the whys and wherefores of Providence but fervently prayed for everything and was satisfied with what occurred. "I prefer God's will to my own," he said.

A few years after the close of the Mexican war, he accepted the chair of natural philosophy in the Virginia Military institute at Lexington, and took charge of the cadets at that place. This connection opened up for him his career in the war. At the outbreak of hostilities between the states he responded to the call of the governor of Virginia, and placed his cadets and himself under Gen. Robert E. Lee's command. He was appointed colonel of the Virginia Volunteers. After the battle of Harper's Ferry he was promoted to the rank of brigadier general in recognition of his eminent ability.



A Thunderbolt in War.

He then began those marvelous military operations that have won the plaudits of all mankind. Military experts have pronounced his maneuvers greater in some respects than Napoleon's and surpassing in details those of Julius Caesar. He was a thunderbolt of war-energy. He would strike at one point and in an incredibly short time attack at some distant place, and hurl his forces against the weakest line of his opponent. He was never routed in battle and never had an organized portion of his army captured. The baffling strategy which he brought to bear upon the opposing forces, his furious attacks, and his remarkable marches made his name and fame as a leader of armies undying. While the battle raged he would be in the very front of danger, and when the crisis was passed he would retire to his tent for prayer. His trust in the Almighty made him fearless of all things else. He united qualities that seemed incompatible, by combining military genius of the highest order with intense religious fervor. He would never tell his plans of war even to his closest associates, and those around him would not know what he intended to do until the orders were given. He made rapid marches, advancing and retreating with a swiftness unheard of before in the annals of war. His sudden onslaughts usually swept all before him, and when the opposition brought against him overwhelming numbers he would suddenly disappear to crash like lightning in a new and unexpected place. His tactics were to advance and fight and go on fighting until victorious. Through it all he prayed and prayed. More than once as his brigade was passing into action, he could be seen sitting motionless upon his horse with right hand uplifted, and while the war columns swept by him in solemn silence, into the fiery storm of shot, his lips would move in earnest prayer as the earth trembled beneath the thunder of cannon, and the very air of the heavens seemed agonized with the shriek of shell.

Slain by His Own Men.

"You may be whatever you resolve to be," and so he resolved and so he won. He believed that his marvelous victories would go on to the end of the war, and that the southern cause would triumph, but God willed otherwise. His victory at Chancellorsville was followed soon after by his death from the injuries inflicted by the fire of his own soldiers, who in the darkness of night mistook him and his escort for the enemy. He accepted the Divine Will with that same satisfaction he did His favors, knowing it to be best. As he lay on his deathbed conscious that his earthly aircastles were in ruins, and that his life was ebbing fast, he was thoroughly resigned to his fate. When the shadows came closer, and he realized that the end was at hand, he said as his last words: "Let us cross over the river and rest under the shade of the trees." So he died courageous and trustful, a noble example of the winning of life's battle by simple faith and devotion to duty.

Fought for State's Rights.

Was he sincere? His critics question. How, it has been asked, could a man pray for the continuation of human slavery? The civil war was not waged for or against slavery. It is true the agitation of the slavery question brought about the issues out of which the war came; but the south did not fight to keep negroes slaves, nor did the north fight to make negroes free. The south battled for what it conceived to be the rights of free and independent states confederated under a constitution guaranteeing those rights; the north fought to establish the indissolubility of the union of those states. It is plain now that armed conflict over this question was inevitable from the time the states came together to form a "more perfect union," and adopted a constitution without settling the question of the right of a state to withdraw from that compact. The future was certain to bring either disunion or the sealing of the union in blood. If the difference as to the dissolubility of the union had not arisen out of slavery, it would have come over some other problem. The south was deeply impressed with the righteousness of its cause, and Lee and Jackson and the other great leaders believed in it as they did in their religion. They were fighting for the freedom of their states—not for the slavery of men and women.

These disputes are all forever settled now, and no patriotic American wishes they had terminated other than as they did. Nevertheless, the southern cause was to millions of good people a sacred cause, worth praying for and dying for. Exactly as no southerner now regrets that the union was maintained, so no patriotic northerner denies the sincerity of the southerners in fighting so bravely for a cause they believed altogether righteous.

Roused North and Thus Saved Union.

The evening bells of life are tolling for the survivors of that fierce conflict, and one by one they are being laid to rest in their last camping ground. The animosities of other years have subsided in the soft twilight of time and the deeds of those who wore the gray as well as those who wore the blue are the common glory of a united country. Jackson believed and taught that God's will is best, and so all see it was in the ending of that contest. It was this man of iron and of faith that was raised up through his mighty victories to arouse the nation, and thus preserve this federated republic that is the hope of the oppressed of every land.

Faith in God, faith in his fellow men, faith in himself, these are the ways by which Jackson won a fame that will become brighter and brighter as time flies through the ages.

At the Austrian Border

"You may talk about the difficulties you encounter with the customs inspectors on arriving in New York," said an English woman in New York the other day, "but you will find that worse troubles of the kind accumulate for you in certain parts of Europe. Especially is this apt to be true on the Austrian border.

"I was coming up from Turkey on my way to Paris a few months ago. Owing to the fact that my cousin, who had been traveling with me, could not get away from Constantinople, I had to make the journey alone.

"The train on which I traveled is supposed to be one of the finest in Europe, but most of the way to Vienna it stops every few minutes. They told me the reason was that they had been unable to get enough coal to start with and that these stops were necessary to get fuel. Apparently they took on about a shovelful at each station.

"We reached the Austrian frontier about two o'clock in the morning, and then uniformed customs officials went through the train routing out everybody. They wouldn't let the women dress, and I had to hurry out with nothing on but a dressing gown, and the night was cold, too. We were huddled in a room in the station and our hand luggage was brought out, while every compartment in the train was searched. Then they made us open our bags and satchels.

"The man who attended to my luggage was a very disagreeable sort of person. He insisted upon my opening every parcel I had.

"Now, in my effects was a large box of Turkish delight, which, as you may know, is a sort of sweet paste or gum and is considered a great delicacy out there. I was taking it to some friends at home. The box was solidly constructed; in fact, there were two outer cases of wood, and the candy was in a sealed tin box.

"'You must open this box,' said the official in gruff German.

"'I certainly shall not,' I replied, and I explained what it contained,

"'But it must be opened,' he insisted. He refused to believe me.

"'Then open it yourself,' I said; 'but you must fasten it up again.'

"He growled and started in. The outer case was securely nailed and it took some time to get the top off. When he had removed that and revealed another wooden box the official swore. Then when he had got the top off the second box there was the tin. He spoiled the blade of his knife cutting that open and then when he came to the Turkish delight he was disgusted.

"Of course I laughed in his face. Then he refused to pack the boxes again, but I insisted, threatening him with all sorts of things about appealing to the British ambassador, and so on, so he finally turned in and did as I ordered him, while my fellow passengers chaffed him at being ordered about by a woman.

"I learned afterward that a woman traveling alone had been smuggling a lot of Turkish tobacco into Austria and that the officials had lately been keeping a sharp lookout for her. My being unaccompanied had aroused suspicion."

The dentists who took a stand against kissing probably lost the patronage of all kissable girls.

CROESUS OF KOREA

Hoosier Farmer Boy Becomes Millionaire in Hermit Kingdom.

Financier Born in Indiana, Whole Career Reads Like a Modern Arabian Night's Tale—Man With Midas Touch.

Columbia City, Ind.—At irregular intervals throughout the year a private car pulls into the little station at Columbia City, disgorges a solitary passenger and is shunted onto the siding to await its owner's pleasure. The passenger, having shaken hands with the ticket agent, greeted the telegraph operator with a quiet salutation and nodded a nonchalant recognition to the drivers of the two or three cabs lined up in waiting, steps into the tonneau of Columbia City's one public automobile and is whisked out of the town and along a country roadway to a farmhouse some thirteen miles north of the little burg.

The passenger in question is the Korean mining magnate, Leigh Hunt, and the farmhouse which is his destination is the homestead where was born about fifty-four years ago the financier whose career reads like a modern Arabian Nights tale.

Hunt, after his schooling, became the principal of the village high school. His tastes were expensive and he got into debt. Then he departed suddenly. He became a lecturer on Lincoln, superintendent of schools in a Tennessee town, later he got a similar position at Ames, Ia., after that the principalship of a school at Des Moines, and then the presidency of the Iowa agricultural college. Again his salary proved too small for his needs and he cut loose and went west with only $200 in his pocket. Here his first step was to seek an interview with the proprietor of the Seattle Post. Was the publication for sale?

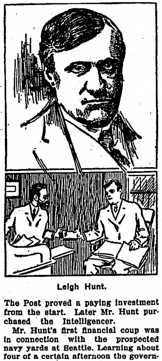
The proprietor intimated that it was, upon the proper terms.

"And those are—?" delicately hinted Mr. Hunt.

"Eighteen thousand dollars," replied the newspaper man. "On time," he added, with what must have been occult prescience of that lone $200 reposing in his caller's inside pocket.

"I'll take it," promptly responded Mr. Hunt, and forthwith handed over his $200 to bind the bargain.

Things now began to come Leigh Hunt's way. The latest Midas touch developed with surprising celerity.



Leigh Hunt.

Mr. Hunt's first financial coup was in connection with the prospected navy yards at Seattle. Learning about four of a certain afternoon the government's probable choice of a site for these yards, Mr. Hunt hurried off and before nightfall had secured an option on the land. He cleared $200,000 on the deal.

And now one day there came to Seattle and to the office of the Post-Intelligencer a young civil engineer from the middle west. He was bubbling with a project which he proceeded enthusiastically to lay before the owner of the publication. His proposition was the purchase in conjunction with Mr. Hunt of lands adjoining the city, and the inauguration of a boom which should net each of the promoters an independent fortune. The rest is the history of Seattle's boom of the early nineties, which netted Leigh Hunt a cool million.

Then came the panic of 1893, and the proprietor of the Post-Intelligencer came out of the crisis worsted to the extent of that same million—and then some.

Again he cut loose. This time Korea was his ultimate refuge, and here it was that fortune perched again, and finally, upon his banner, and he now has a fortune beside which the shorter lived one swallowed by the panic in Seattle was a mere bagatelle.

On the old homestead near Columbia City and in the comfortable dwelling of hewn logs in which her famous son was born, lives the widowed mother of Leigh Hunt.

Upon large and well conducted farms near by reside two brothers of the multimillionaire, prosperous farmers and content thus to remain. A third brother is located in Chicago, and a fourth, after some years in the Korean mines, now lives with his mother on the old home place.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Wild West Outdone in New York City

NEW YORK.—The wild west was once the home of most that was romantic and daring in crime. Today it is superseded by the wild east—by New York city itself. Crimes are being committed here which for daring and unwontedness can scarcely be surpassed even by the most imaginative of writers of fiction.

A few weeks ago, up the river in the neighborhood of Hudson, there was a hold-up such as Deadwood Gulch or Coyote Canyon never surpassed. A paymaster and his guard returning from a bank with $5,000 to pay off the laborers in a brickyard were held up and shot to death within a few hundred yards of their office, and to this day not one of the assassins has been captured and not the slightest light has been thrown on the tragedy.

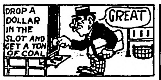
Recently in West Forty-seventh street there was a duel between two parties of men. Each of them was in a big touring car and they maneuvered up and down the street exchanging shots like two battleships in action. There was another duel between two automobile parties on Seventy-second street a couple of evenings later.

Not long ago, one afternoon when Broadway was crowded, a gambler stood in front of one of the best known of New York's theaters and engaged in a pistol duel with another whom he claimed had wronged him. The aggressor was the poorer marksman and was filled with lead. Half an hour later the sidewalk had been scrubbed up and was dry and dusty again, and the surging crowds gave as little comment to the affray as the border men used to when a man was killed over a game of cards in Abilene or Dodge or any other of those roaring cities of the cow country a quarter of a century ago.

One of the most daring deeds in the history of the metropolis was that performed by Myles McDonnell. He walked into a saloon, where he knew a lot of his enemies were waiting to kill him. The minute he stepped inside the door three or four of his foes opened fire on him. He drew his pistol without batting an eye and answered shot for shot. The doctors of the Harlem hospital were busy for several days thereafter attending to the dead and wounded.

New York today has the greatest clearing house for thieves in the world. It is there that congregate the transatlantic robbers, men who work the ocean greyhounds. After each round trip they meet at this rendezvous and divide their spoil. There also assemble the master thieves, the big robbers, the clever men who steal by brains as well as by force.

Now the Slot Machine Grocery Store



DROP A DOLLAR IN THE SLOT AND GET A TON OF COAL GREAT

CINCINNATI, O.—The corner grocery store in the crowded tenement sections of great cities in the United States will be crowded out by automatic grocery stores if the formation of a great corporation to install slot machine stores in congested districts proves a success.

Rev. H. E. Robbins of New York city, who came here to attend the general Episcopal convention, has recently been appointed chairman of the committee of 60 business men and philanthropists who will direct the placing of the stores.

"Our automatic grocery store and lunch is not entirely for profit," said Mr. Robbins. "It will really be a great philanthropy. The poor in the tenement parts of the big cities buy in small quantities and have to pay the highest prices. A woman who purchases 10 cents' worth of coal gets it at the rate of $20 a ton. So with the other necessities of life. The cheap groceries are also unsanitary, and much time is lost waiting to be served, especially if a child is sent to make the purchase.

"Our grocery stores will consist of a small room with a lot of slots in the wall. If a man wants a dime's worth of coal all he has to do is to drop a dime in the slot and he gets a whole 10 cents' worth. So with beans, sugar, coffee and all the rest of the groceries, done up in clean packages, prepared at a central point and bought in large quantities, which explains the big saving. You cannot haggle over prices with the slot machine, nor do you lose time in being waited on. Prices will be from 1 cent up."

Bring Rare Antiquities From Egypt

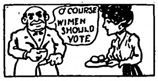
BOSTON.—The Egypt exploration fund of England and the United States has forwarded to its headquarters in Tremont Temple a valuable consignment of antiquities to be divided among museums contributing to the society's excavations in Egypt. These objects were displayed in King's College, London, and represent the result of last winter's work conducted at Abydos, Ehnasiya and Sidmant.

Abydos has proved an especially valuable site for exploration. Here Osiris and Isis had their chief altars, to which offerings were brought from the farthest borders of Egypt during the period of centuries from the twenty-eighth to the thirtieth dynasties.

The main work, which was carried on under the general direction of Prof. E. Naville, consisted of an attempt to clear finally the royal tombs of the first and second dynasties; but much still remains to be done at this site, and good results are expected from the continuation of the work next season. From these excavations come slate palettes, jars and vases, ornaments of glaze, wood, stone, carnelian, amethyst and flint; flint razors, ivory carvings, beads and pottery.

It is a significant fact that many of the discoveries of the last year are injured by dampness, because they lie so near the area of cultivation.

Women to Pit Salon Against Jackpot



O' COURSE WIMEN SHOULD VOTE

CHICAGO.—The "jackpot" is to be supplanted by the "salon" at Springfield. Tea and wafers are to vie with the stronger stimulants which have been inseparable from legislative lobbying before. Pretty girls will pit their skill against that of corporation lawyers and saloon keepers.

Feminine methods are to be introduced into political wire pulling and those who are familiar with the internal politics of women's clubs predict that even the most practical politician will learn something new.

The invasion was decided upon at a meeting of the Political Equality League in the rooms of the Chicago Woman's club upon suggestion of Mrs. Catherine Waugh McCulloch, a justice of the peace at Evanston. The league will maintain a salon in Springfield throughout the next session of the legislature. This salon will be quite the equal of those through which brainy women so often swayed the destinies of France.

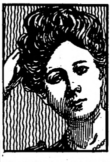
The foundation of the salon will be a good-looking young woman, and her chaperon. This champion, who is to guide legislators to right thinking on the suffrage question, already has been selected. She is Miss Harriet Grim, state organizer of the society. She will be assisted by the club women of Springfield and by Chicago members of the league.

The headquarters of the salon will be in an apartment in Springfield, which will be furnished by the league for the express purpose, and open house will be kept as long as there is a legislator or his wife in Springfield to be entertained. The definite aim of the league for the coming session of the legislature is municipal suffrage.

It is lucky that women have no sense of humor, otherwise they would not buy this year's hats.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

IS ESTEEMED BY QUEEN MARY

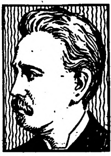


The beautiful Lady Lister-Kaye, who was Natica Yznaga, the youngest of the three charming Yznaga sisters of New York, is one American resident in England who need have no fear for her position in society or of her reception by royalty. For some time speculation has been rife as to the social fate of the American women in King George's reign. There is a general feeling that for a while at least they will be much less conspicuous at court than they were during the late King Edward's regime. However, Lady Lister-Kaye is sure of her standing and knows that she will be quite welcome at Buckingham palace.

This gracious daughter of America is a sister of the late Dowager Duchess of Manchester (Consuelo Yznaga), who was one of King Edward's most esteemed confidants and with whom her friendship was of long duration. Unlike many of the late ruler's associates the dowager duchess was a close friend of Queen Alexandra and held a prominent place in all things social in the royal set. Lady Lister-Kaye was not only highly regarded by the late king and Queen Alexandra, but she has enjoyed the warm friendship of Queen Mary for several years, which is somewhat unusual, as Queen Mary and Queen Alexandra have few friends in common. While the queen was princess of Wales she honored this American woman conspicuously by dining in her home several times. Beyond these personal ties is the fact that her husband, Sir John Lister-Kaye, is a groom-in-waiting upon King George.

Though certain of the residents in the American colony in London may not be in first favor in royal society this winter, Lady Lister-Kaye will not be denied her position and, as has been the case for many years past, a member of the Yznaga family will be prominent in the social affairs of royalty.

PRESIDENT OF PORTUGAL



Theophile Braga, provisional president of Portugal, in an interview, emphasizes what he calls the "philosophical" source of the revolution.

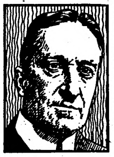
The men who have been spreading the doctrines of republicanism, he says, are professors, mathematicians, writers and generally men of learning. The result, he thinks, is, first of all, a victory for the cause of "education"—an effort to restore the Portuguese people to the intellectual rank lost for so long a time.

"It is our aim," he says, "to show the Portuguese as a race of the elite, both physically and intellectually. It is our greatest honor by an admirable revolution to demonstrate to the world that the Portuguese are worthy of their ancestors."

From the names announced of the provisional government the "intellectuals," the idealist republicans who dream of making Portugal worthy of her former glory, have carried through this movement, or at any rate are for the moment in control. Putting Theophile Braga, the one Portuguese scholar of international reputation, at their head, is a shrewd move on the part of the revolutionists. It follows the curious Latin fashion of bestowing political power on literary men, but it also declares to Europe that the true men of progress, the men of education and of position, are directing the revolution, and not the street rabble of Lisbon. Among Senhor Braga's colleagues are many college professors, while military and naval men are noticeably absent.

Dr. Theophile Braga is a man about fifty-five years old and a graduate of a leading European university. He began the practise of medicine in Lisbon when a young man and has been prominent throughout Portugal for many years past.

LEADS NEW YORK DEMOCRATS



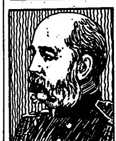
John A. Dix, the Democratic nominee for governor in New York, is a prosperous business man and interested in various corporations. He was born at Glens Falls in 1860. He was educated at the academy there, and entered Cornell university in the class of 1883, but left in his junior year. In 1889 he married Miss Gertrude Allen Thomson, the daughter of a lumber merchant. He began his business career as a member of the firm of Reynolds & Dix, dealers in black marble, and later became associated with Lemont Thomson in the lumber business.

Mr. Dix is not unfamiliar with politics, however, being chairman of the Democratic state committee and a former candidate for lieutenant-governor, when he ran with Lewis Stuyvesant Chanler in 1908. Even prior to that time, in 1906, when William R. Hearst was nominated for governor at Buffalo the name of John A. Dix went before the convention and he received some complimentary votes.

His work in creating a county chairman's organization won him the nomination for lieutenant-governor two years ago. He favored them, and does now, a system whereby the power of the county chairman should be more absolute than at present.

After his unsuccessful campaign two years ago Mr. Dix certified to the secretary of state that he contributed $3,983.50 for campaign expenses, of which $2,500 went to the state committee.

LOS ANGELES TIMES' OWNER



Gen. Harrison Gray Otis is the owner and editor of the Los Angeles Times, the building and plant of which was recently wrecked by an explosion attributed to enemies of the paper.

General Otis was born near Marietta, Ohio, February 10, 1837. With the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted as a private in the Twelfth Ohio infantry, June 25, 1861. He was made a second lieutenant November 12, 1862, and a first lieutenant May 20, 1863. He was transferred to the Twenty-third Ohio infantry July 1, 1864, and made a captain July 25, 1864. He was breveted a major and lieutenant colonel March 13, 1865, for gallant and meritorious service during the war and was honorably mustered out July 26, 1865. He was twice wounded during the war.

In 1866-67 General Otis was official reporter for the Ohio house of representatives and was foreman of the government printing office 1868-69. During 1870 and 1876 he was chief of a division in the United States patent office, and special agent of the United States treasury in charge of the seal islands of Alaska, 1879-81.

General Otis was appointed a brigadier general of the United States volunteers May 27, 1898, and placed in command of the First brigade, Second division of the Eighth army corps, in the Philippine islands. He led the brigade at the capture of Caloocan, February 10, 1899. He was breveted a major general of volunteers March 25, 1899, and honorably discharged July 2, 1899. He entered journalism in California thirty-three years ago.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Cruise of World for Naval Cadets

WASHINGTON.—The fighting ships are going on another cruise, partly for the sake of the cruise and partly to advertise the navy and attract young men to it. Sixteen of the battleships will turn their prows away from the home land and steam off into the Atlantic, bound on a tour of the European ports.

When this cruise was first announced, several months ago, the navy department issued advertising matter to draw recruits. One of its most effective documents was a circular letter, prepared at Washington, but sent out from the various recruiting stations. It was written in a heart-to-heart style. The cruise meant, according to the letter-writer, "that thousands of young Americans will have a chance to see the world and get paid for it. Do people who save for months or years to go abroad ever regret it? I want to ask you this important question: Are you willing to travel if you are well paid for it, or would you rather stay at home and read about it?"

Naturally, when it is put up to him in that fetching fashion, the young man concludes that he would a good deal rather travel and get paid for it, and he hies to the nearest recruiting station and enlists. Long cruises cost a lot of money, but they bring in young men and the navy must have young men even if they do come high.

Another heart-to-heart letter is addressed to the young man who is tired of his job. "Perhaps you are unhappy in your present job," writes the recruiting officer. "Perhaps it doesn't pay you enough. Perhaps there is no future to it. Perhaps your present work will never satisfy your burning ambition to win great success. Well, now if you want to change your job, I'd like to have a talk with you and tell you all about a bluejacket's life in the navy."

If the young man isn't tired of his job that letter is calculated to make him tired of it, and the navy gets another man. Other appeals are made, but the cruise talks are what bring the best results.

Put Under Bonds to Keep the Peace

MEXICO
PEACE BONDS

MEXICO is a striking illustration of the way modern business puts nations under bonds to keep the peace. A naturally turbulent Latin-American republic, mainly Indian in blood, pays coupons on its government bonds to citizens of 21 nations. That is the number of countries represented last year. In 1907, coupons on Mexican government bonds were redeemed for citizens of 16 nations.

Every country so interested, through its citizens, in the stability and honesty of the Mexican republic, is an influence on the side of peace and order in Mexico. In a very real sense the Mexican nation has given bonds to keep the peace by selling government securities to foreigners living under many flags.

Less directly, but still in ways that count heavily the sales of private property to foreign investors are also equivalent to giving bonds to keep the peace. In the last quarter of a century American capital to the amount of not less than $1,000,000,000, according to excellent authorities, has been invested in Mexican mines, plantations, railroads and other Mexican property. European money has poured into Mexico in a similar stream.

Of course, no Mexican government ever guaranteed the security or the profitableness of such investments. No government of any great power would undertake to collect from the Mexican people, as a nation, money to make good the losses sustained by Americans making unwise investments in Mexico.

Such international business bonds of peace are constantly becoming more important in many parts of the world. Every year the financial and commercial ties which knit the nations together increase in strength. Always the tendency of the times is toward the creation of closer international relations and a surer sense of common interest in the preservation of peace.

Bank Failures Due to Lax Examiners

IT'S SOUND ALL RIGHT BANK EXAMINER
BANK

CLOSE upon the heels of the radical shake-up in the ranks of the United States bank examiners, by which 20 men were shifted to new fields, Controller of Currency Murray announces that he will make a personal investigation of conditions in all examination districts. In deciding upon this course of action the controller says:

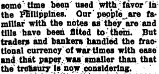
"In almost every case of a national bank failure since I have been controller the insolvency could have been averted had the national bank examiner determined the true condition and reported his findings in time for me to force a correction in the administration of the bank's affairs."

After citing that examiners of failed banks had offered excuses that they had been unable to learn in advance of a bank's true condition, that officers and directors of banks would not correct conditions brought to their attention, or any one of another dozen reasons, Mr. Murray in his statement says:

"Many of the examiners state in their reports of examinations, forwarded to the controller's office, that it is a hardship not only on the examiner but upon many of the members of the directory of country banks, to ask the various boards to meet with the examiner during the progress or at the close of the examination.

"This investigation by the controller and his chief of the division of reports is also an investigation into the methods employed by every national bank examiner, and upon seeing them make an examination of several banks and afterward holding a meeting of the directors, he will be able to determine who of his examining force, if any, are inefficient."

Want to Shorten 'Long Green' Notes



I DONT CARE WHAT SIZE IT IS JUST SO IT'S GOOD

THE length and breadth of the paper money issued by the government are not fixed by statute, but by habit the notes are 3.04 inches long and 7.28 inches wide. The treasury department renews the plan more than once proposed before to reduce these dimensions. The size talked about is 2.5 inches by six inches, which has for some time been used with favor in the Philippines. Our people are familiar with the notes as they are and tills have been fitted to them. But traders and bankers handled the fractional currency of war times with ease and that paper was smaller than that the treasury is now considering.

The cost of the change would be in providing an entire new series of plates and that would be much greater than the renewal of such as wear out. On the other hand the experts reckon that a saving of $612,603 a year may be made by the reduction in size. The secretary will ask congress to conform the bank bills to the new dimensions at government charge for new plates.

The work of so modifying the paper currency would require 18 months, so that no sudden appearance of the smaller notes can be expected. While engravers and printers might be busy, the scheme would pass into an old story.

The department hesitates to go forward in the matter without public approval and invites criticism and suggestion. The clipping off of more than half an inch in width and 1.28 inch in length saves so much in paper and permits five notes instead of four to be printed on a sheet. The guess how much longer the smaller note will last than the present paper can be verified only by trial.

Some men have a voice in public affairs, but most of us have only a growl.

THE SUNBEAM.

W. G. HUNT, Publisher.

SUNBEAM. MINN.

THE BEST REAL "PULL."

Now that the summer is nearly over hundreds of young men who were graduated last June from colleges and high schools are entering the vocations which they intend shall be their life's work. Some are still seeking suitable openings. The young man without a "pull" may believe himself handicapped. He is likely to see instances where the employer gives first consideration to his son, his nephew or the son of a friend. But that is no more than right. The average business man recognizes the obligations of relationship and friendship, up to the point where they do not impair his material interests and those of his associates. His nephew and his friend's son must make good—his own son, most of all. His tendency, in fact, is to be more strict with his son than he is with any of his other employes, says the Cleveland Leader. If a young man thus favored with the first opportunity shows that he will be a failure in the work he is doing, he is removed. Family ties and friendship usually will not hold him. Then comes the chance of the young man who may have felt discouraged because he had no "pull." The best "pull" any young man can have in starting in life is honesty, industry and the determination to work for his employer as though he were working for himself. He should realize that, in fact, he is working for himself and that he has a financial interest in the business, to the extent of his pay. Such a young man is bound to succeed.

A year ago a tipless hotel of the first class was opened in London. The management "positively announced" that no gratuities to waiters, porters, maids or other employes would be permitted or suffered. The "experiment," as everybody called it, seemed extremely interesting, but the result was considered doubtful. Skeptics said: "Wait a month or two." The hotel is now a year old. The public is assured that the no-tip policy has been enforced to the letter, that the establishment has prospered beyond all expectations, and that there has been no trouble whatever in getting employes—and good, fit, well-mannered employes, too. This is very gratifying news indeed, says the Chicago Record-Herald. Presumably the hotel pays wages and salaries that compare favorably with those of hotels where tips "go," or run riot, at all hours of the day and night. Mere prohibitions, where temptations exist, will not eradicate an abuse. But if everybody is satisfied at the tipless hotel there is no reason why its policy should not succeed permanently.

Upon a Newport "farm" which cost a fortune the young owner lies ill of typhoid fever. A wealthy woman nearby suffers from the same "disease of dirt." In Manhattan last year there was a sporadic outbreak in the region of costly apartment houses. This year it is Brooklyn's turn, says the New York World. In this city, with its guarded water supply, it is likely that typhoid at this season is brought from insanitary summer resorts or incurred during automobile runs. Every life lost by typhoid is a wasted life. It is absolutely preventable. People who live in marble halls without caring whether poison runs in the pipes behind them; the very rich who spend millions in display but neglect sanitation; college professors caught unaware by epidemics like that in Ithaca—these have themselves to blame if the disease occurs. Typhoid originating in any community disgraces it.

A new method of making physical examinations to detect the presence of tuberculosis has been demonstrated at Guy's hospital, London. The examination is made by the aid of X-rays, and shows tuberculous ravages in the lungs, it is said, at an earlier stage than they are revealed by the stethoscope. The X-ray is valuable for many purposes, but must always be used with caution, as numerous sad experiences have taught.

Cable reports that in Berlin during ring bouts a band always plays lively airs, and many boxers not only keep time with their feet but seem to take their hitting and sidestepping cues from the music. This is magnificent, but it is not boxing. Over here there's no music required save the thud of the padded glove and the contestants have to move lively enough.

An interesting incident at the convention of the National Association of Master Bakers in Baltimore was the reading of a paper by a Washington lady dealing vigorously with the methods of bakers and pleading for home-made bread both for sanitary reasons and as a matter of economy. The bakers were gallant enough to allow the lady to have her say, and if her objection to some of the practises mentioned are well founded doubtless there will be reform

AMERICA II IN DISTRESS

APPREHENSION IS FELT FOR THE CREW SIGHTED BY CANADIAN LUMBERJACKS.

TELL STORY OF ADVENTURES

Daring Aviators Fight 32 Miles Without Food.—Blanckerts and Companion Reach Railroad Almost Dead.

Montreal, Que., Oct. 24.—It is the opinion of August Blanckerts, aid of the balloon Germania, that Allan R. Hawley and Augustus Post of New York, pilot and aid respectively of the America II., which left St. Louis last Monday and from whom no word has since been received, are fighting for their lives through the wilderness of northern Quebec.

Mr. Blanckerts arrived here from La Toque, Quebec, some distance from the spot where the Germania landed on Wednesday. He and Captain Hugo Von Abercron had a desperate fight for their lives after coming to earth. They were 32 hours forging to the railway line with only a few crusts of bread for sustenance. Their clothing was torn to shreds and they were almost in a state of collapse when they struck the railroad. There they met a construction gang and from them learned that a large yellow balloon had preceded the Germania over practically the same route by half an hour. The railroad men told Blanckerts that the other balloon was very high up and maintained the same altitude until she passed out of sight toward the Ungava wilderness.

Mr. Blanckerts Is Positive.

Mr. Blanckerts expressed the opinion that the balloon was the America II. The later report of the landing of the Dusseldorf II. in the same region explains to the satisfaction of many the appearance of the first balloon, but Mr. Blanckerts has not changed his opinion.

Colonel Theodore Schaeck, pilot of the Helvetia, met Blanckerts here Saturday night and after comparing notes found that the Germania had gone 100 miles farther than the Helvetia. The Dusseldorf II., according to unofficial estimates, exceeded the distance record of the Germania by about 70 miles.

The Germania came to earth at 11:15 a. m. Wednesday. At that time there was still considerable ballast on board, and the big balloon could have kept in the air for several hours longer, but Captain Von Abercron feared that they were passing entirely beyond the lines of civilization and it was this that prompted him to land.

Balloon May Be in Forest.

Colonel Schaeck of the Helvetia came down for the same reason. He had enough ballast to continue for 48 hours, he said. It had been generally believed that the balloons could not have kept afloat later than Wednesday night, but the evidence of Von Abercron and Schaeck has exploded this theory and if the America II. kept them company on the journey into the far North, her crew may still be struggling through the almost impassable forests of the Ungava district, many hundred miles from succor.

N. M. CLAIMS PART OF TEXAS.

New Boundary Dispute Raised By Baby State.

Santa Fe., N. M., Oct. 24.—The committee of boundary of the New Mexico constitutional convention decided to report that the 103d meridian is the true historical boundary between New Mexico and Texas. This would give New Mexico two hundred square miles now a part of Texas.

The committee on legislation adopted a modified referendum proposition through which a law passed by a legislature may, within a certain time, be submitted to voters at the following general election upon the petition of ten to twenty-five per cent of the qualified voters in every judicial district.

The committee on judiciary decided in favor of an appointive supreme court of three judges to serve 12 years at $7,500 a year.

Saloon Men Are Indicted.

Sauk Center, Minn., Oct. 24.—The Todd county grand jury surprised citizens of that county with the return of many indictments against saloonkeepers at Staples. They are charged with selling liquor to little boys and other disregard for the liquor laws.

Queen's Brother Dies.

London, Oct. 24.—Prince Francis of Teck, brother of Queen Mary, is dead. He had been ill for some time with pleurisy. The king and queen were at the bedside.

Dietzes Will Seek Funds.

Milwaukee, Oct. 24.—Clarence and Myra Dietz are expected in Milwaukee on Monday, and will open headquarters to collect a defense fund according to W. B. Rubin, attorney for the defense, who returned here from Hayward, Wis.

Smith Not Candidate.

Council Bluffs, Oct. 24.—Representative Walter I. Smith has announced that he is not a candidate to succeed the late Jonathan P. Dolliver.

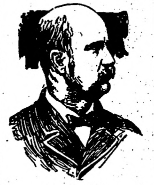
DAVID BENNETT HILL IS DEAD

FORMER SENATOR AND GOVERNOR PASSES AWAY.

Was Prominent for Years in Democratic Party and as Executive of New York State.

Albany, N. Y.—David Bennett Hill, ex-United States senator and former governor of New York, died suddenly Thursday at Wolferts Roost, his country home. He was 67 years old.

About two weeks ago Mr. Hill was seized with a bilious attack, and although his condition was not considered serious at the time, his physician advised him to remain at home for a few days. The patient appeared to be on the road to recovery until Wednesday night, when he suffered a sinking spell, which resulted in his death.



David B. Hill.

Mr. Hill was born August 29, 1843. He was elected to the assembly in 1870 and again in 1871. During his first term in the assembly he made his memorable fight to abolish contract convict labor, and during his second term he was a member of the judiciary committee, with Samuel J. Tilden, they being the only Democrats on the committee, which had the task of investigating the alleged scandalous and corrupt conduct of certain New York city judges.

AMERICA CREW IS RESCUED

Wellman and Companions Are Picked Up and Return to New York on the Trent.

New York.—Walter Wellman, who with his crew of five men sailed from Atlantic City, N. J., for Europe in the immense dirigible balloon America last Saturday, got back to this city Wednesday on the Royal Mail Steam Packet line steamer Trent.

Barring a few injuries to his right arm and one of the fingers of his right hand, the man who directed this daring attempt to cross the ocean in a gas bag returns in good physical shape although his nerves are somewhat shattered and he has reached the conclusion that in the present development of the dirigible the task he undertook is a hopeless one.

The members of his crew came back bubbling with enthusiasm over their adventures and with open expressions of willingness to try it again as soon as anyone produces a balloon which has half a chance of making the journey.

New York.—The first attempt to cross the Atlantic in a dirigible balloon has proved a failure. The America, with Walter Wellman and his party of five on board, was picked up Tuesday morning almost 375 miles due east of Cape Hatteras, by the incoming Bermuda liner Trent.

News of the rescue came in two wireless messages from Captain Down of the Trent, one reporting to the company agents here and another informing the New York Times of the result of the expedition in which it had taken a leading part.

Captain Down reported that at five o'clock Tuesday morning he first sighted the airship. Signals of distress and calls for help were given. For three hours the Trent maneuvered in the heavy sea to get alongside of Wellman and his wrecked companions. The entire party finally was taken aboard, even to the cat, which was taken along as a mascot. The America was abandoned where the rescue occurred, in latitude 35.43, longitude 68.18.

TAFT AT ELLIS ISLAND

President Visits Immigration Station With Secretary Nagel and Commissioner Williams.

New York, Oct. 19.—President Taft made his proposed visit to the Ellis island immigration station, where he was met by William Williams, commissioner of immigration. Secretary Nagel of the department of commerce and labor came from Washington to make the trip with the president.

The party had lunch on the cutter Immigrant, and the president met a number of men of prominence during his trip, some politicians among them.

Passengers Numbering 547 Are Safe But Ship Cannot Be Floated Until Cargo Is Jettisoned—Nine Lives Lost in Storm.

New York.—The destructiveness and the devastation wrought by the West Indian hurricane along the Florida coast, south of St. Augustine, is being revealed as wire communication is slowly restored.

Dispatches from Tampa and Key West received by roundabout routes give a long list of vessels wrecked and lives lost.

Most thrilling of all is the report telling of the grounding of the French transatlantic steamship Louisiane, with 547 passengers, on Sombrero Reef, fifty miles east of Key West. Fortunately, however, all hands are reported safe. The vessel lies in eight feet of water and cannot be floated until most of her cargo has been jettisoned.

Three of the crew of the schooner Harry I. Haywood of Boston were drowned when that vessel went on the reefs at Boca Ratone.

Six men were drowned when the sloop Nabob was swept to sea and swamped off Masquesos.

The captain, mate and one seaman of the schooner William W. Converse of Philadelphia were lost when the schooner went to pieces on Tuesday. Five survivors were brought to St. Augustine.

The schooner Edward T. Stotesbury of New York is also reported wrecked on a reef.

The Texas oil barge Dallas, with nine men aboard, broke her towing line in a ninety-mile gale off Jacksonville, Fla., and has not been heard of since.

The steamer Brazos of the Mallory line left Galveston on October 12 with sixteen cabin and fifteen steerage passengers. Since a dispatch was received from her captain on Sunday that she had anchored in the Gulf of Mexico nothing has been heard of her.

GOVERNMENT IS TO DEFEND

Validity of Law Making Initial Carrier Liable for Damage Is Before High Court.

Washington.—Argument was begun Wednesday in the United States Supreme court as to the validity of the so-called Carmack amendment to the Hepburn rate law of 1904. The initial carrier of interstate commerce is not only made liable by this amendment for damages which may occur in transportation on its own road but also on all its connecting lines.

The contest is probably the greatest of all the legal controversies which have arisen out of the passage of the Hepburn rate law.

Attacking the constitutionality of the law at this time are the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad company and the Louisville and Nashville Railroad company.

In addition to those claiming damages for shipments over these roads, Attorney General Wickersham of the department of justice has come forth to defend the constitutionality of the law. From two primary points of view the railroads attack the law.

DOLLIVER IS LAID TO REST

FUNERAL HELD WHILE RAIN FALLS IN TORRENTS.

Senator Cummins, Governor Carroll and Others Pay Last Tribute to Memory of Dead Statesman.

Fort Dodge, Ia.—The funeral of the late Senator Jonathan P. Dolliver took place here while the rain fell in torrents. Burial was in Oakdale cemetery.

The drizzling rain, driven by a raw, cold wind, compelled the family to abandon the original plan of holding the services on the lawn of the Dolliver home. The funeral, therefore, was held in the Fifty-sixth regiment armory, which accommodates 6,000.

Contrary elements could not keep away the devoted friends of Senator Dolliver, however, who crowded every available space in the big building.

Standing outside the building, straining to catch a word of the eulogies being pronounced upon the departed statesman, were almost 3,000 people.

They crowded around the building until finally Senator Clapp of Minnesota left the services inside and went outside, making a short speech to them.

On the stage of the armory were seated the clergy, the United States senators and congressmen, the committee from the two houses of the Iowa general assembly, all state officers and other speakers.

The space in front of the stage was a perfect mass of flowers. Particularly noticeable was the huge wreath sent by the United States senate.

Preceding the speeches at the armory the regulation Methodist Episcopal burial services were held.

Following the ritualistic services of the church, eulogies were delivered by the following men: Rev. Charles M. Stuart, Chicago; Governor Carroll, on behalf of the people of Iowa; Senator Cummins, as representative of the United States senate; Bishop William Fraser McDowell of Chicago, "A Fallen Leader."

CRIPPEN TELLS HIS STORY

American Dentist Takes Witness Stand In Own Behalf In Trial for Wife Murder.

London.—The climax was reached in the sensational Crippen murder case Thursday when Dr. H. H. Crippen took the witness stand to refute the charge that he had murdered his wife, that he might marry his pretty typist, Ethel Clare Leneve.

Crippen admitted that he lied concerning his wife's disappearance.

"I said those things to cover up the scandal, for both our sakes," said the witness. "It is true that many of the things I said were false. She repeatedly threatened to leave me, telling me that she could go to America to join Bruce Miller. I last saw her on January 31 of this year, and I believed that she fled to America. To avoid scandal I concocted a story that she had gone to America to attend to certain private business for me in California, and that while on her way across the American continent she had died and had been incinerated there."

Telling of his flight to North America, Crippen said:

"Ethel and I were hunted and we wanted to escape. The quartermaster of the Montrose volunteered to help us. We were to be smuggled ashore in a piece of baggage, but our plan was frustrated. I wrote the suicide note to throw the authorities off the track and give us more time to get away."

Completely Pauperized.

Albert W. Hebberd, New York's charity expert, said at a recent dinner:

"The great danger of charity is its pauperizing effect. This effect must be avoided, or the recipients will all become Jack Hanches.

"Jack Hanch, on the score of bad health, never worked, and the pastor of the Methodist church, a man whose heart sometimes outran his head, sent the idler and his family weekly gifts of food and clothing—supported the whole crew, in fact.

"A church visitor, after listening to Jack's complaints one day, said:

"'Yes, of course, you have had bad health, we know that; but one thing at least you ought to be thankful for, and that is our pastor's kindness in sending you all this bread and meat and jelly and blankets, and so on. Don't you think it is good of him to look after you so well?'

"'Good of him?' said Jack, impatiently. 'Why, what's he for?'"

A Logical Landlord.

Many a tenant will sympathize with the man in this story, from the Philadelphia Record. He was renting a small house which the landlord had refused to repair. One day the owner came to see him.

"Jones," he said, "I shall have to raise your rent."

"What for?" asked Jones, anxiously. "Have taxes gone up?"

"No," the landlord answered, "but I see you've painted the house and put in a new range and bathtub. That, of course, makes it worth more rent."

She Probably Could.

Senator La Follette, apropos of certain scandals, said at a dinner in Madison: "These things recall the legislator who remarked to his wife, with a look of disgust: 'One of those land lobbyists approached me today with another insulting proposition.'

"The wife, a young and pretty woman, clapped her hands. 'Oh, good!' she cried. 'Then I can have that sable stole after all, can't I, dear?'"

A Physician on Food.

A physician, of Portland, Oregon, has views about food. He says:

"I have always believed that the duty of the physician does not cease with treating the sick, but that we owe it to humanity to teach them how to protect their health, especially by hygienic and dietetic laws.

"With such a feeling as to my duty I take great pleasure in saying to the public that in my own experience and also from personal observation I have found no food equal to Grape-Nuts, and that I find there is almost no limit to the great benefits this food will bring when used in all cases of sickness and convalescence.

"It is my experience that no physical condition forbids the use of Grape-Nuts. To persons in health there is nothing so nourishing and acceptable to the stomach, especially at breakfast, to start the machinery of the human system on the day's work.

"In cases of indigestion I know that a complete breakfast can be made of Grape-Nuts and cream and I think it is not advisable to overload the stomach at the morning meal. I also know the great value of Grape-Nuts when the stomach is too weak to digest other food.

OBJECTS TO RULING

EXCEPTIONS ARE FILED TO THE OPINION OF THE MASTER IN CHANCERY.

IN MINNESOTA RAILROAD CASES

E. T. Young and E. S. Durment Acting As Special Counsel—Famous Rate Cases to Go To Supreme Court.

St. Paul.—Another important step in the fight to maintain the validity of the Minnesota rate laws was taken when general and special exceptions of the state of Minnesota to the findings of Judge Otis, special master in chancery in the rate cases, were filed with Judge Otis at St. Paul.

The general exceptions, contained in 33 closely typewritten pages, were prepared by E. T. Young, former attorney general. The special exceptions, of about the same length, were prepared and submitted by Edmund S. Durment. Both appeared as special counsel for the state in the preparation and trial of the case and in the exceptions filed acted for C. F. Staples, Ira B. Mills and Charles E. Elmquist, members of the state railroad and warehouse commission, and for George T. Simpson, attorney general.

Case an Important One.

Inasmuch as the case is one of vital importance to the people of Minnesota, involving principles of state sovereignty and the rights of the state to regulate and control the affairs of public service corporations, the state's attorneys have incorporated in their exceptions every material point affecting the merits of the case which may be the possible subject of contention in the supreme court of the United States. The reasons for each exception are set forth at length.

Direct issue is taken with Judge Otis' findings that the state exceeded its constitutional powers in prescribing the contested rates because, as the master said, such rates constitute a direct interference with and impose a burden upon interstate commerce.

The state maintains that the constitution gives congress control over commerce beginning in one state and ending in another and the interstate commerce act provides for the federal regulation of transportation carried on between different states; that the laws involved apply by their terms only to intrastate business and do not overlap and conflict with any federal laws.

Although substantive law is cited in support of the constitutionality of the Minnesota rate laws, expediency and public policy are also urged in that a judicial finding which cripples the commerce power of a state does not enlarge the commerce power of the nation.

Judge's Method Criticized.

General exception is entered to the method adopted by Judge Otis in fixing the valuation of the railroad property employed in the state. This is considered the most important feature of the Otis decision. After stating that the master ignored the original investment as a measure of the valuation upon which they are entitled to a return and also ignored the outstanding stocks and bonds of each company, which exceeded the actual investment, Mr. Young says:

"He adopted the so-called cost of reproduction as the sole measure of the value of railroad property. The plan followed by the master reduces railroad valuation to a mere exploit of the imagination. Under it the value of railroad property can be fixed at any figure which interested parties will swear they believe it to be worth, and if such a plan is upheld by the courts, railroads can make the public pay any rates they see fit to charge."

The attention of the master is also called to the fact that the actions are brought by the stockholders and not the railroads and that a railroad stockholder has no right in law to claim a return from the public on anything more than the face of his valid stock. At the suit of a stockholder the value found cannot, according to the state's attorneys, exceed the outstanding stocks and bonds.

Another Exception Filed.

Exception is filed to Judge Otis' apportionment of interstate and intrastate freight and passenger business carried on railroad property strictly within the state. This point is regarded as of the utmost importance for on the proper and just apportionment of this business depends the property valuation which determines whether or not the rates in question in this case are confiscatory, as found by the master.

The state objects to Judge Otis' division of the value of railroad property between state and interstate business, both passenger and freight. It is stated that Judge Otis by charging to intrastate business an undue percentage of the common value of both intra and interstate business, it is made to appear that the railroads are not earning a compensatory income on their Minnesota investment and that therefore the Minnesota rate laws are confiscatory.

The next step in the proceedings will be the consideration by the master in chancery of the exceptions filed by both the railroads and the state. He will make further recommendation based upon the exceptions and another stay of 30 days will be allowed for the lawyers of both sides to submit further exceptions. The entire record in the case, including the evidence, findings of the master, the two sets of exceptions, the master's findings on these exceptions and the additional exceptions, will then go to Judge Sanborn of the United States circuit court.

Judge Sanborn will set a time for hearing the arguments of counsel. The recommendations of Judge Otis on the exceptions filed will probably be filed within a week or ten days and in the order of business the arguments of law and fact will probably come up before Judge Sanborn early in December. The case will be appealed direct to the United States supreme court.

HENNEPIN VALUATION BIG.

County's Personal Property Is Worth $55,655,192.

St. Paul.—Personal property in Hennepin county is valued by the state tax commission at more than one-fourth the value of all the personal property in the state. The report of the state commission, sitting as a state board of equalization, made today, places an assessed valuation of $209,586,904 on the personal property in the state. Of this amount $55,655,192 is in Hennepin county.

The commission increases the return submitted by the Hennepin county board just $1,250,780. The county board made a valuation of $55,655,192. The assessed valuation of personal property in Ramsey county is raised from $30,716,843, the estimate of the Ramsey county board, to $32,129,,176.

Last year the board placed $203,428,334 as the valuation for the state. The increase is $8,550,296.

Of the thirty personal property items the biggest increases for the state are as follows: Shares of bank stocks, $2,663,450; automobiles, $1,402,258; retail merchandise, $963,107; manufacturers' machinery, $522,198; pianos, $397,693; hogs, $353,447; bonds and stocks, $304,137. The biggest decreases on the list are as follows: Private banks, brokers and stock jobbers, $803,602; manufactured articles, $699,551; wheat flour in the hands of manufacturers, $227,810; watches, $188,752.

The figures of the commission are final.

GEORGE W. HIGGINS DIES.

Prohibition Committee Chairman Succumbs to Heart Disease.

Minneapolis.—George W. Higgins, chairman of the state Prohibition committee, candidate for governor on that ticket in 1898, member of the legislature in 1907 and probably the leading Prohibitionist of the state, died suddenly of heart disease.

For 14 years Mr. Higgins has been chairman of the state committee with the exception of the time he made the run for governor in 1898. Long before he was chairman he was an active member of the committee. He was 54 years old and leaves a widow and three daughters: Mrs. W. A. Stromme, Miss Elsie and Miss Gertrude Higgins. The last few years he has been in the real estate business and before that in the brick industry. For several terms he was president of the Builders' and Traders' Exchange.

BEMIDJI GUARDS 'FIRE WATER.'

City Takes Rigid Steps to Save Saloons by Protecting the Indians.

Bemidji.—Bemidji is to take no chances on losing its saloons as a result of the activity of the Indian bureau of the department of interior in enforcing the Indian treaty which prohibits the sale of liquor to persons of Indian blood.

Every precaution is being taken to make the sale of liquor in this city harmonize with the desires of the government. At a meeting of the city council an application for a license to establish a new saloon was rejected and the council went firmly on record against permitting the establishment of any additional saloons here.

More than that, the chief of police was named by the recent Democratic in watching the saloons for any possible violation and to work in accord with the government agents.

On top of all this, the council favored increasing the cost of a saloon license from $500 to $1,000, and City Attorney Torrance was instructed to draw up an ordinance along these lines and present it to the council at its next regular meeting on Oct. 24.

UNCLE SAM SELLS MUCH TIMBER.

Washington, D. C.—A sale of 314,785,000 feet of timber for $20,709,330, an average price of $8.59 a thousand feet was effected by awards which the secretary of the interior made on the bids for the ceded Chippewa timber in Minnesota. The bids were submitted at Cass Lake, Minn., September 15 last, and the average price this year is about $2 higher than in 1903 and 1940, when timber of a better quality was sold.

M'CONNELL GOT GOOD START

Fourteen Chances Accepted and Three Hits in One Game Marked His Initial Performance.

By AMBROSE McCONNELL.

(Copyright, 1910, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

How I got my start was by accepting 14 chances and making three hits in one game. The reason I got my start was that I was offered a dollar and a half more a week to play one game of ball than I had been getting for working six days in a mill.

I was a boy in a small Vermont town and when I was sixteen I had to handicap myself in the baseball line because it was necessary for me to work in the mills. All the time out of the shop I played baseball. That limited me to between the six o'clock whistle and dark in summer and Saturday afternoons. I was fast and I loved the game. I was getting six dollars a week for working in the mills, averaging ten hours a day, and playing ball Saturday afternoons. I used to pay my own expenses to get into a game, and the dream of my life was to see a real major league team in action. I remember starting to save money once with the intention of going to Boston to see the champions play. But I never succeeded. In fact the first major league game I ever saw I played in.

Sometimes a team of one of the towns around would offer us our expenses to play in their towns. Sometimes they would offer me my expenses, consisting of dinner and a dollar to hire a rig, to play with them. If they played on week days I would lose half a day to get to play. One day we were invited to play at Powell, and they offered expenses. We took our team up and gave them a beating, although they had a paid team. I had six put outs, eight assists and three hits. That night they paid for our supper and while we were at the table the manager of their team came to me and asked me how I would like to play with his team Saturdays. I told him all right if he paid. He offered me $7.50 a week. I almost fainted, not knowing that he was paying some of his other men $15 a game. I jumped at the chance, for it looked easy to make more in an afternoon of fun than in a week's work in the mill. Things seem easier than they are. I went into baseball that way. I jumped to Burlington, then into the Eastern league and in two years into the big leagues.

Ambrose McConnell.

It is a serious business, and one requiring much work and strain, and unless a fellow is willing to work harder on the ball field than he ever did in the mills, he ought to stick to the mills, or the plow.

WORLD'S BEST POLO PLAYERS

Earl of Rocksavage Pays Glowing Tribute to Americans Before Sailing for His Home.

"In the Americans I have met the finest players that the world knows, and the best sportsmen." This was the earl of Rocksavage's parting tribute to the American polo players, against whom he has been playing recently in New York. Rocksavage sailed with F. A. Gill, another member of the Raneligh team. He said before embarking:

"The last two months of polo mark an epoch in my life. The American players are wonderful, and it has been my good fortune to witness feats of horsemanship and mallet work that seemed almost incredible. I am only too keen to return next March along with the team that will compete for the international cup.

"The winning of that cup by the Americans served to stimulate English polo as nothing else could possibly have done. The tactical methods of play provided a revelation to British lovers of the sport. The Americans injected new ideas into the game, created new ways and means of accomplishing the old things, and altogether have livened things up in a truly wonderful manner.

"From every aspect, our visit to America has been a most successful venture."

Burke to Manage Hoosiers.

James Burke of St. Louis, manager of the Fort Wayne club of the Central league during the season just closed, has been appointed manager of the Indianapolis club of the American association to succeed Charles Carr, resigned. Burke was manager of the Louisville club in 1908, and third baseman on the Indianapolis club in 1909.

McAleer Signs Again.

James R. McAleer has signed a contract to manage the Washington American league baseball club for two years. McAleer is to have complete charge of the team in all matters connected with the players.

Andrew's Ancestors

By JANE OSBORN

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

"Genealogist, P. O. Box 172:

"My Dear Sir:—In answer to your advertisement in the Saturday Review, I wish to make some inquiries concerning your genealogical work. I should like to have my family traced down to my grandfather. In his father's time, I believe the records were in the family, dating back to the sixteenth century in Scotland; but party owing to fire, partly owing to indifference, these records have been lost. I should like to restore them.

"If you will undertake this work for me, let me know your terms and I will forward whatever information I have. Very truly yours,

"Andrew MacPherson."

Cella Dale began to read this note with the interest she always felt in a possible order for work, but when she came to the signature she exclaimed in surprise:

"Andrew MacPherson!" she said to herself. "If that isn't queer! I sha'n't let him know who I am, though. Of course, he's well to do, or he wouldn't have been at the mountains last summer, and if he knew I worked—" Cella smiled.

She would have thought the coincidence still stranger if she had known that Andrew MacPherson had had her in mind when he answered the noncommittal advertisement inserted in the magazine by "Genealogist, P. O. box 172."

Andrew was a newspaper man. The shiftlessness which made it so easy for his grandfather to lose track of family records, the fire which destroyed thousands of acres of lumber land in Michigan when it burned his grandfather's house and possessions, were still a heavy drain on the young man's energy. His father, as energetic as Andrew, had devoted himself body and soul to his work as a backwoods Presbyterian minister, and family pride and possessions had dwindled even as the spiritual life of the community where he labored increased. Andrew, at thirty years of age, was still working to care for his mother, to see a younger brother through college and to keep the Michigan property until the new growth of timber was ready to cut.

Hence Andrew was poor. Until the preceding summer he had not cared. Then one day he had been sent to interview one of the big trust magnates who was staying at a fashionable mountain resort, and there he had met Cella Dale. He had seen her three or four times in the course of the following fortnight, for he thought it necessary to take unusual pains in submitting the article he had written as the result of the interview for the capitalist's approval.

For Andrew, confirmed bachelor as he thought himself, had fallen in love. He tried to find out where Cella would spend the winter, but although she was friendly enough, she grew cold and distant when he pressed this point. But she told him she would be in the mountains again the following August, and he determined to live somehow through the winter, work harder than ever before, and then indulge himself at all costs in a two weeks' vacation the next summer in Cella's company.

Then it was that Andrew's poverty began to bother him. He was making a good income, to be sure, enough even with his heavy expenses to support a wife simply. But Cella, who was used to spending her summers at one of the most fashionable mountain resorts in the country, could never be expected to accommodate herself to a five-room apartment in New York, with an occasional week-end out of town and a fortnight's vacation each year spent quietly in the country as diversion.

So Andrew, dejected and helpless, fell back on his family. In a rash moment of foolishness he chanced to see Cella's advertisement.

"It's something to have a family that stretches back for centuries," he said to himself. "If I can't offer her money I can at least offer a name that she can be proud of." And with a vague idea of falling on his knees and begging her to accept a typewritten account of the lineage of the MacPhersons for generations back Andrew answered the advertisement.

Cella, it chanced, lived for eleven months out of the twelve in a small room not far from Andrew. She was an orphan, and although she had a rich aunt, she insisted on supporting herself, boarding with friends in the city and looking up genealogies. Once a year she spent a gay month in the mountains with her aunt, who begged Cella never to speak of her work and to do her best to make a suitable match.

But Cella's ideas of a suitable match did not agree with those of her aunt, and after four summers of gaiety Cella still dug away in musty library books and ancient records.

Cella went to her task of finding Andrew MacPherson's lost ancestors with enthusiasm. She liked tracing genealogies, and there was an added zest in tracing, under safe cover of P. O. box 172, the lineage of some one she knew—and Andrew MacPherson at that.

With the information which Andrew, unsuspicious, forwarded to her, Cella managed to trace his ancestors from the pioneer times in Michigan back to a landing in Virginia, and then over the seas and back to the days of one Andrew, laird of the MacPherson ancestral hall in the Scotch Highlands. It was really a very interesting line of ancestors that she arranged in neat, typewritten array over several sheets of foolscap.

But the end of her search Cella came upon trouble. At first she thought she had made a great find, for in an old record she came across a verse of many stanzas about a bold Scotch knight named Andrew, of the house of MacPherson, and a fair lady whose name and history nobody knew, but who captivated the bold knight. They were about to be married when one moonlight night at the edge of a lake the knight asked the lady who she was.

"The lady's eyes were ocean blue; her brow was lilies fair;
Her lips gave forth the rose's hue, and sunlight was her hair,"

sang the ditty. But when she opened her rosy lips and told the knight that she was a humble peasant maiden he was so enraged that she should think of marrying a knight of his degree that he clapped his hands and summoned a mystic boat, which carried her over the lake into darkness and oblivion.

"What an awful man to have for an ancestor," thought Cella. "The story would be good reading, but it's only a legend, I suppose. I just won't put it in." So without this romantic addition Cella forwarded the genealogy of the proud house of MacPherson and waited for summer.

In radiant expectancy Cella went to the mountains, and took all her aunt's advice and scoldings with laughing good grace.

Andrew arrived as he had planned, and the two weeks of his vacation were even happier than he had dared hope. Cella welcomed him frankly, and as the days passed their friendship progressed so far that Andrew took heart.

He had the modesty to leave his family tree at home, for he realized that it would seem like idle boasting to show it to Cella. But he never told her how poor he was. He knew it was cowardly, but he could not tell her—Cella, who seemed to have everything that money and riches could give her.

Cella remembered her aunt's advice, and guiltily kept still about her work. How could a man like Andrew MacPherson, prosperous and well to do as a man must be to spend his vacation at such a place, take any interest in a girl that had to look up other people's genealogies to support herself.

The last day of Andrew's stay came, and he and Cella spent the evening canoeing on the lake.

"Cella," said Andrew, as they stood together at the water's edge, taking a last look at the moonlit lake, "I am going back tomorrow. Before I go I must tell you what I came up here to tell you. I didn't suppose there was any hope for a man like me—you, with money, and friends, and everything any one could have. But you are so different from every one else up here; you're so genuine and honest. As you stand there in the moonlight, Cella, you're like the sunshine and the ocean and everything that is wholesome and true."

Cella stood rigid. A moment before she had known what she would say when Andrew made his plea. The fact that he did not know she was poor and worked did not seem to matter. But the words sunshine and ocean brought back the untimely fate of the poor little peasant girl, and Cella seemed to see, not a pleading young American lover, but a grim Scotch knight before her. The lapping of the waves seemed to be the oars of the mystic boat which was to bear her to oblivion once her identity was known.

"Don't," said Cella. "Oh, please take care of me," she whispered as the wind blew the water splashing on the shore. "Don't you see, I cannot listen to yours? I've been deceitful. I'm dreadfull poor, and I have to work to take care of myself, I do genealogies. I did yours. I'm P. O. box 172. But I didn't want you to know I was poor."

"Cella," said Andrew, taking her in his arms, "Cella, you're not poor!" Then, as she struggled, sobbing, to free herself, "Cella, I'm glad. I'm poor, too."

"Some day," said Cella, a few hours later, "I'll tell you a story of a knight and a lady that belong to your genealogy."

Englishman's Defense.

When Booker T. Washington was in England in 1899 he found the average Englishman very stolid. "It was hard for me to get accustomed to speaking to English audiences," he writes. "The average Englishman is so serious and is so tremendously in earnest about everything that when I told a story that would have made an American audience roar with laughter the Englishman looked me straight in the face without even cracking a smile." And the London Chronicle explains: "The trouble is not that the Englishman does not see the American joke, but that he saw it before the Mayflower sailed, and no longer thinks it new and funny."

Was Getting Monotonous.

A handsome woman who had been so unfortunate as to find occasion to divorce not one but several husbands was returning from Nevada. In Chicago she happens to meet her first husband, for whom, by the way, she always has entertained a real affection.

"Upon my soul, if it isn't Charlie!" exclaimed the ex-wife, cordially shaking hands with the gentleman whose name she formerly had borne. "I'm awfully glad to see you, Charlie!" Then, after a wistful expression had come to and been banished from her countenance, she added:

"Old chap, I've often wondered where you were and what you were doing. It was too bad we didn't get on better together. I hope your experience hasn't been as unpleasant as mine. I'm just sick and tired of marrying strangers!"

Easy for Her.

An extremely corpulent old lady was entertaining her grandchild at luncheon when she found occasion to reprimand the little girl for dropping some food on the tablecloth.

"You don't see grandma dropping anything on the table," she said.

"Of course not," replied the child; "God gave you something in front to stop it."

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

There is no campaign in Red Lake county, only county division.

Should county division carry the eleven towns farmers will soon be singing that old song of "all I can get" when a loan agent asks them how much money they want to loan on their farm, but they wont be able borrow enough money to move out of the county with.

We understand that John Saugstad will ware a vale during the close of his "sticker" campaign in Polk county. His backers had ought to get the rear end of an old cows hide to bawl over their heads, and start diging their holes, so as to be ready to crawl in and hawl the hole in after them November 9th,

There is one drawback in this part of Red Lake county, and that is the large amount of vacant land. Would you that are liveing here like to see this land occupied? If you would do not vote for county division and drive out emigration, and some of the farmers that are here now to Canada.

Should county division carry there is a large number of farmers that will loose their farms in this part of the county. There is no emigration to help matters out, as that has already stopped. It looks funny to us to see a man that had a citation issued to the sheriff to collect his last years personal tax, howling for county division, to double them.

The talk of burning up court houses originated with E. L. Quist, who reminds us of a fussy old woman giving orders to children. This old woman calld to her chil and said: "Now Johney and Kittie I am going over to the neighbors, and if you poke any peas up the babies nose while I am away I will punish you." As soon as she was out of sight the "kids" began to try to poke peas up the babies nose, something that they would never have thought of, if mother had not told them. That is the way with this county division fires. Quist started them and the farmers believe that it is part of the game to burn up old seckond hand buildings that are being used for court houses, so as to get new ones.

Fossils and Gold.

In Alaska the bones and often the entire bodies of extinct animals, such as the mammoth, the mastodon, the reindeer and the bison, are found most abundantly in layers of soil directly above gold bearing gravels. So intimate is this association between fossil animal remains and auriferous deposits that one scientist who has explored Alaska says fossils serve prospectors as indexes of the metallic richness of the soil. In ancient times both gold and the bones of animals were deposited at the bottoms of valleys by action of rivers and smaller streams, many of which have now disappeared; consequently the appearance of fossils is, it is claimed, an almost certain indication that gold will be found in the neighborhood. The cabins of many miners are ornamented with huge tusks and antlers unearthed in the diggings.—New York Tribune.

PERSISTENT BEGGARS.

The More Egyptian Mendicants Get the More They Demand.

In Egypt one should never give baksheesh except for actual services rendered. Resist calmly but firmly every attempt at extortion. Never pay till the stipulated service is finished; then, after you have paid a little more than the bargain called for, turn a deaf ear to the protestations and entreaties that always follow. Bear in mind that the more baksheesh you give, the more clamorous becomes the applicant. Real thanks and gratitude must not be expected for gifts.

A friend of mine once broke one of these rules just to see what would happen. As we passed through a little mud village twenty miles from Cairo he gave a sturdy beggar a millieme (half a cent). This beggar, accompanied by others, followed us to the edge of the village, asking for more. My friend then gave him a piaster (5 cents).

They followed us a hundred yards or so and were more persistent than before. When they showed a disposition to go back he gave them 5 piasters. They followed us half a mile and became very clamorous. I was afraid we should get into trouble and wanted him to stop it, but when they began to lag he gave them 20 piasters.

They followed us two miles, and the experiment might have ended seriously had we not met a company of travelers with a dragoman, who sent the beggars about their business. This may help you to understand Egyptian character.—Christian Herald.

Did They "Hock" Them.

"In the olden days they had no watches, you know," said the father.

"And how did they tell the time?" asked the son.

"By sundials."

"Well, father," said the young man, feeling of his watchless chain, "how much could a fellow get on a sundial do you suppose?"—Yonkers Statesman.

Consistent Mrs. Biggle.

Optimist—Ah! It is cherishing our illusions that keeps us young.

Pessimist—Yes; but only if we cling to the illusion that we are still young.

LAPLAND BABIES.

For Their First Few Months They Live In Wicker Baskets.

Little Laplanders spend the first few months of their existence in baskets of wickerwork provided at the top with a conical framework too close for the baby to fall through and yet giving the infant plenty of light and air.

Before commencing her work for the day the Lapp mother places her child in the basket and hangs it on the limb of some nearby tree, occupation being found for the little one by stringing toys under a cord passed across the top of the basket.

Thus provided the child spends the entire day in the open and yet at the same time is guarded from the troubles and dangers of outdoor child life in other countries.

The basket idea curiously parallels the Indian idea of strapping the papoose into a carrying case, but the Lapp baby has the advantage over its Indian fellow in that its limbs are unconfined and a certain amount of liberty of movement is afforded.

The child is carried from place to place in the same basket, the cord by which it is attached to a tree being slung over the shoulder.

Definite Instructions.

Telegraphers have their troubles, like the rest of mankind, and the men who follow the dots and dashes tell stories based upon actual happenings that almost test the credulity of the hearer. A man now in charge of a Postal office is responsible for the following, which occured to him when he was holding down a key in an obscure place in the suburbs:

"A farmer came in one day and handed me a message to 'Mrs. Smith, New York city.' I asked for the address, and my patron, looking at me with a pitying smile, replied:

"'Sonny, you just send it to Mrs. Smith, who keeps a boarding house in New York. Don't let any one know you don't know where her place is.'"—Philadelphia Times.

Followed Instructions.

She was a woman of very puritanical notions, and when she came into his room to kiss her little boy good night and found that he had not said his prayers she was very much shocked. "How was it, Willie," she asked, "that you neglected such an important duty?"

"You see, mamma," he replied, "when dad sent me in a hurry to bed he said there mustn't be another word out of me tonight."—Lippincott's.

But of course it don't make any difference when the ditch is dug, after they get things in shape so the farmers can start paying taxes. The farmers did not petition for the ditch because they wanted it, but to furnish a life job

We met Martain Hyland at Highlanding last Sunday, and he informs us that Oklee will be the nearest railroad point for the Deer Park farmers. It appears that Thief River Falls made a little mistake by not shoving the line of that railroad farther sou: th, in exchange for the name of Pennington county. However it is hard to tell who did get the best of that deal, but if old Pennington gets his name put out of having a county named after him, he may come to the conclusion that the eleven towns farmers are not such suckers as be took them for, and that he might just as well built the road where they intended to build it, between Clearwater and Red Lake rivers.

POLITICAL DOINGS.

* * * Look at these five stars * * They represent the proposed county Commissioners of Pennington county. Look again, and you will see that there are three to represent Thief River Falls and the territory west of it, and we have two. Three and two make five, and three is more than two. Oh due stackare fran foberball (the poor wrech from the reservation) that votes for county division is jumping out of the frying pan into the fire. Take another look at the stars.

The farmers over in Polk are begining to understand that "league" sticker campaign of John Suagstads and will put him to sleep proper in November where "stickers" and kickers belong. We fought the nomination of A. L Hanson for senator of this district as hard as we could, but on November 8th, we will vote for him. Go way back and sit down you kickers, and remember that you are in America, and not in Cuba, where when one side wins, at the ballot box, their opponents start a revolution. It is better to never go into politicts if you can not stand defeat.

Trial of a Dead Man.

Mr. Christopher Hare's book on "Charles de Bourbon, High Constable of France," mentions the strange trial which succeeded the close of that turbulent career. He had died in conquering Rome, which his leaderless soldiers straightway sacked. For this crime it was necessary to find a scapegoat, so "on July 20, 1527, in the presence of King François I., on his seat of justice, assisted by the peers of France and the assembled chambers, Jean de Surie, first usher of the court, called Charles de Bourbon three times—at the bar of the parliament, at the marble table and at the marble steps—and then reported that the said De Bourbon had not appeared. The sentence was drawn up, then solemnly read out: 'The connetable de France, dead, was condemned, his goods returned to the crown, and the door of his palace by the Louvre was painted yellow.'"

A still life by Jan van Huysen in the museum at The Hague was injured, but it is believed that the perpetrator was neither vandal nor thief. The picture represents a basket of fruit on which a number of insects have gathered. On a pale yellow apple, which is the centerpiece in the cluster of fruit, is a large fly, painted so true to nature, so say the officials of the gallery, that the canvas was injured by some one who endeavored to "shoo" it and brought his cane or hand too close to the canvas. "A tribute to the painter's genius," says the letter recording the fact, "for which the work had to suffer."

Arctic Rock Weed.

Drifting down from Alaska comes the greatest of all sea plants, the arctic rock weed, that grows in shape like a huge ship's hauser and sometimes with branches 500 feet long. There are no signs of leaves, but at intervals of a fathom or so a knob, for all the world like the buoy on a drift net, grows around the stem, aiding, as does the buoy, in keeping the plant afloat and creating the impression that some nets have gone astray. —New York World.

Method In Her Breakage.

"Augusta is an awfully bright girl, isn't she?"

"Yes, indeed. When she is reading a novel on the front porch her mother never thinks of asking her to wash the dishes."

"Why not?"

"She's sure to break so many of them."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

English of Long Ago.

The king's English has changed as kings have come and gone, says the St. James' Gazette. Here is a passage from the record of a crowning of long ago: "The Cardinall, as Archebishoppe of Caunterbury, showing the king to the people at the iiij parties of the said pulpitt, shall say in this wise, 'Sirs, I here present Henry (true and rightful, and undoubted enheritour by the lawes of God and man to the coroune and roiall dignite of England, with all things thereunto ennexed and apperteyning, electe, chosen and required by all three estats of the same land to tak yppon him the said coroune and roiall dignite, whereupon ye shall vnderstand that the daie is prefixed and appoynted by all the piers of this land for the consecracion, envnccion and coronacion of the said most excellent Prince Henry; will ye, sirs, at this tyme geve your willes and essentes to the same consecracion, envnccion and coronacion? Whereupon the peple shall saie, with a greate voice, 'Ye, Ye. So be hit. King Henry! King Henry!'"

Weighing the Mayor.

A mayor, particularly an English mayor, is traditionally a man of weight and substance, but there is only one municipality that insists that his honor get on the public scales and prove it. Of the thousands of quaint and curious customs surviving in "the old country" this is perhaps one of the most odd. The mayor of High Wycombe has to be weighed on Nov. 9 of each year, inauguration day, and this custom has been observed for about six centuries. The mayor elect walks at the head of a procession consisting of the councilors, the beadle and the mace bearer. He is clad in cocked hat, silk stockings, blue coat and knee breeches. Upon reaching the town hall the mayor is placed upon the scales by the head constable, and a record of his avoirdupois is solemnly made in a book kept for this purpose.—Harper's Weekly.

The Gullible Public.

Two boulevardiers of Paris tell how they proved the gullibility of the public. They bet a friend 1,000 francs that by inserting three advertisements of three lines each in papers in the course of a week they would receive 500 francs without giving any explanation or making any promise to the senders.

On a Saturday the following advertisement appeared:

"Intelligent persons will send 5 francs to such an address."

On the Wednesday the insertion ran:

"Last possible day is Sunday. Send your 5 francs then, or refusal."

The third on the following Saturday was:

"All 5 francs posted after tomorrow will be inexorably refused."

By the Sunday morning seventy-seven postal orders for 4 shillings each had come in, and the next morning eighty-two more arrived. The gullible public had sent in not 500 francs, but 795 francs in a week. Having proved their point and won their bet, the two boulevardiers naturally returned the postal orders to the ingenuous senders.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

Health and Hymen

By STACY E. BAKER

(Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.)

As Damon approached, suitcase in hand, the driver of the great car chugging restlessly by the curb bounced eagerly down from his seat and relieved the youth of his luggage.

"For a small town, this Blissville has them all beat," ruminated the young cigar salesman, leaning back on the rear cushions. "Blissville for mine, hereafter, at every opportunity. Must be a peacherino of a hotel when it sends an automobile after its guests."

In all truth, the chauffeur was establishing a speed record. Houses flashed dizzily by, and the main stem of the little burg unfolded as a dirty gray ribbon [illegible] unsophisticated roadster, who was even then making his initial visit to the trade.

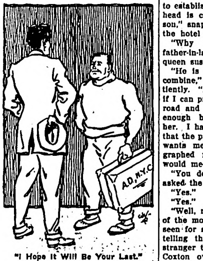
On and on went the car at an ever-increasing pace. Damon's eyes opened to contemplate a picturesque building just ahead. Four stories high, it flared to the very sky several gaudy gables which a color-loving owner had caused to be smeared with all the colors of the rainbow.

"Gee!" murmured the astonished youth as the car slowed suddenly down to turn in at a green-hedged roadway leading to the spacious porch that connected with the institution, "mine host must suffer from an acute attack of coloritis. This is the happiest looking plant I have ever stopped at." The machine came to a slow stop, and the active driver jumped hastily down and opened the door for Damon to alight.



"I Hope It Will Be Your Last."

A fussy little person came forward and grasped the youth's suitcase. "You are here, I see," he bellowed in a voice that told of no lack of lung power.

"Just so," acknowledged Damon. He eyed the man curiously. "I suppose you are the proprietor. This is my first trip through this section."

The squat, monkeylike person stared. "I hope it will be your last," he rumbled. "No, I'm not the boss, but I take his place when he's gone. I'm the general athletic instructor. Mulqueen is my name." He seized the soft hand of the labor-ignorant drummer and squeezed it to a beating pulp.

Arthur Damon had some experience with hotels, big and little. In fact, the youth's income had allowed him to see something of life on a most expensive plane, and this move in the capacity of a cigar salesman had nothing to do with needing the money. There were other reasons. But in all Damon's experience an athletic instructor [illegible] the guests of a hotel was unheard of. "You are a what?" he gasped.

"An athletic instructor," roared the strenuous voiced one. "I give 'em their bumps, I do." He summed up the [illegible] the erect shoulders-back attitude of the youth before him. "You look as if you could go some," he volunteered. "I have set your try-out for 2 o'clock."

"Me," gasped Damon. "Not me, my friend. I have other business to attend to." They were now on the inside of a large well-furnished office. "Where is your register?" demanded the cigar salesman.

"You don't have to register," loudly assured the athletic instructor. "Everything is O. K. We have had your room reserved for you for three days."

"Say!" preluded Damon, taking the stocky one by the arm and leading him toward a cushioned seat at some little distance away. "You and I want to get together. There's some mistake here. You evidently take me for some one else. I am Arthur Damon, a cigar salesman, and I'm in your old burg on business and not to pull off boxing bouts with—er—athletic instructors."

"You think you are," calmly came from the other, "but as a matter of fact, you are Andrew Dimeling, of New York, suffering from a nervous breakdown caused by too much burning of the candle at both ends, and you are here, gentle stranger, because papa telegraphed for a suite for you, explaining the many little mental vagaries of his promising son as he did so. Now, my boy, you just leave it all to us. Don't worry. Physical culture and a total abstinence from grog will serve to put you properly back on your feet again, and you will thank the Blissville Physical Culture sanitarium for your cure."

"Blissville Physical Culture sanitarium!" reiterated the youth. "Isn't this a hotel?"

"This, my lad, is a health resort. We hand you an ample abundance of the vital spark here—at so much per spark. Your board is paid in advance, youngster. Don't worry."

"Listen," came from Damon, who was now beginning to understand the situation. "Don't interrupt. Just pretend that you believe me, you know, and I'll entertain you for a few brief moments.

"In the first place, I really am who I say I am. I have no empty rooms in my belfry, and I haven't the least idea what made your driver bring me here—unless it is that my initials, A. D., N. Y. C., are on my suitcase. Anyway, to get down to the subject, I am here on more explicit business than the mere selling of cigars. My prospective papa-in-law is at the hotel—the real hotel in Blissville—and I am supposed to meet him and discuss—er—certain things."

"Which you won't," bellowed the other, and with a click of his stern jaws. "I wouldn't dare let you go while the boss is away, and, besides, I don't believe you."

"It will be an easy matter for you to establish my identity, if your thick head is capable of assimilating reason," snapped Damon. "Just call up the hotel and verify my statement."

"Why should your prospective father-in-law be here?" asked Mulqueen suspiciously.

"He is at the head of the cigar combine," explained Damon, impatiently. "I am to marry his daughter if I can prove, by sticking out on the road and selling cigars, that I have enough business ability to support her. I have a million, more or less, that the pater left me, but Mr. Coxton wants me to prove up. He telegraphed me this morning that he would meet me in Blissville today?"

"You don't mean John Coxton?" asked the athletic instructor.

"Yes."

"Yes."

"Well, my boy, either you are one of the most imaginative bugs I have seen for some time, or else you are telling the brand of truth that is stranger than fiction. Anyway, John Coxton owns and controls this institution, and if he is in Blissville, as you say, he will be out here, and you will have a chance to see him and prove your story."

"I'll prove it all right," Damon asserted grimly.

And this was easily done, for to the dying whirr of a suddenly-stopped motor Coxton entered the office.

"Mr. Coxton!" Damon arose eagerly and strode toward the man. The stout, middle-aged one, with the florid cheeks and iron-gray hair, turned in surprise.

"You—Damon!" he ejaculated.

"Just so," ventured the youth, extending his hand. "Kindly assure your—er—athletic instructor as to my sanity—I was kidnaped by the driver of this sanitarium, and this gentleman wants to keep me here."

"This is Damon, Mulqueen," came from the cigar magnate, crisply, "and he is all right—but I don't understand this complication. Explain."

Damon speedily explained.

Coxton laughed at the completion of the tale. "Well, anyway, you're here—and unhurt," he ventured. "I wanted to see you and tell you that your sales up to date have proved that you can make good. No use in covering these tank towns. I'll accept your resignation, if you like, and you can go home and prepare for an early autumn wedding."

"Sorry we can't have that go," ventured Mulqueen as some time later the youth was leaving the institution.

"I'm not," grinned Damon, surveying critically the husky frame of the man. "I'm in training for a bout with Hymen, and I don't care to take on anyone before the great event."

THE gown at the left is of smoke gray and yellow mousseline de soie made up over yellow liberty, the two thin materials being used together—the gray over the yellow in charming effect.

The corsage forms a part of fichu bordered with a little ruffle. It is trimmed with embroidered bands and straps of gray mousseline de soie, and crosses in front and is finished with a narrow girdle and a large rosette of yellow glace taffeta. The plastron is of yellow mousseline de soie tucked crosswise and trimmed with fine and Irish lace. The skirt is gathered at the top and bottom, where it is drawn in with ruffles and embroidered bands. The other gown is of black mousseline de soie made up over red liberty.

The corsage and sleeves are cut together and trimmed with plaited ruffles of the mousseline de soie edged with black liberty ribbons. The plastron is of red mousseline de soie tucked crosswise and ornamented with tiny red passementerie buttons. The knots and girdle are of red liberty.

The skirt, also of the black mousseline de soie, is drawn in at the bottom with a ruffle of the same, bordered with the black liberty ribbons.

MAKING USE OF OLD LINEN

One of the Most Valuable Assets of the Housekeepers and Should Be Kept.

No old linen should ever be thrown away. It is one of the most valuable assets of the housekeeper.

When sheets wear away in the middle cut them down the center. Put the two outside edges together so as to form a seam and hem the outer thin edges.

When the new center wears out also cut the good pieces into squares as large as possible, edge them with torchon or crochet lace and utilize them for tea table or tray cloths.

The remainder tear into long strips, wash, mangle and roll up and keep them for use in case of illness.

Old huckabacks make an excellent polishing cloth for plate. For wiping delicate china old linen has no equal.

Old muslin curtains should be well boiled to free them from starch. The muslin makes good bags for tying up herbs and spices in soups and stews, while, if the meshes are not too large, it will be found the very thing for straining sauces and gravies.

Salt bags should never be thrown away. Well boiled to remove the dressing the material contains they will be found to provide really very useful jelly bags.

A Pillow for Baby.

A dainty baby pillow is made in this way: A plain center of the material is left quite large enough for the baby's head and a circle of oval eyelets worked which are run with pale blue or pink ribbon, tied at the top in a soft bow of loops and ends. A wreath of small flowers worked solid can also be embroidered just beyond the circle of eyelets if one wishes a more elaborate pillow. Finish the pillow case with a hemstitched hem on the edge of which fine narrow Valenciennes lace can be whipped.

Hats for Juniors.

Simplicity in the millinery world should be adhered to emphatically when the young girls are fitted out for the autumn.

The most attractive models are those that reflect the colors of the autumn. Brown with touches of red or yellow is always good. The dull moss green or stone grays touched up with purples that hint of autumn skies are usually becoming to young girlish faces.

Wool Embroidery Latest.

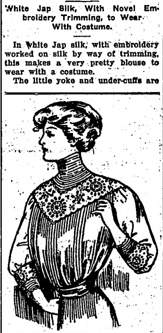
Wool embroidery on coarse net is one of the new trimmings. This decorative work is expensive, but any girl, even one unskilled in embroidery, could make the entire trimming for her dress at little expense. She should buy the transfer patterns and sew the paper to the under side of the net, then carry out the design on the right side. The thread used resembles the old-fashioned crewel wools.

MAKES A PRETTY BLOUSE

White Jap Silk, With Novel Embroidery Trimming, to Wear With Costume.

In white Jap silk, with embroidery worked on silk by way of trimming, this makes a very pretty blouse to wear with a costume.

The little yoke and under-cuffs are of tucked net, the embroidery below net forming a point in center front. The embroidery of our model is worked on a shaped piece of silk; but insertion might be used and sharply mitred to form the points.



Material required: 2 yards 34 inches wide.

Colored Handkerchiefs.

The colored handkerchief is much in vogue, the latest fancy being a handkerchief exactly half of which is white and the other half colored. The color division is on a bias line. The new printed handkerchiefs appear in dark coloring, brown, purple, prune blue, deep rose color and navy and French blue. Men especially are carrying them in Paris with evening dress in dark purple, green and brown.

To Protect the Walls.

To keep a piece of furniture from scratching or defacing the wall or woodwork if you are not able to get the little rubber buttons or guards, take the fingers of an old kid glove, stuff hard with cotton to the size you need, fasten on the back of the article in question with tiny tacks at each end, and they will answer the purpose splendidly and are quite inconspicuous.

To Clean Lace.

A good way to clean fine lace is to place a sheet of paper on a flat surface and sprinkle thickly with fine magnesia. Put lace on this coating and cover with magnesia. Tow with another sheet of paper and weight. Allow lace to remain covered this way for several days.

SUPERIOR MILK PAIL HOLDER

Relieves Farm Hand of Labor and Strain of Clasping Receptacle Between His Knees.

In order to relieve a farm hand of the labor and strain of holding a milk pail clasped between the knees, a pail holding device has been invented consisting of an attachment that may be strapped to the leg and to which the pail may be secured as desired, says Scientific American. The pail holder consists of a foot base, on which the shoe of the operator rests, and a vertical rod which extends upward to the operator's knee. The foot plate is strapped to the shoe and the rod is strapped to the calf of the wearer. Mounted on a rod is an eye adapted to receive a hook carried by a central hoop on the milk pail. A clasp is arranged to slide on the rod and is provided with a projecting lug adapted to be moved into engagement with an eye formed on the upper hoop of the milk pail. By means of these two securing devices, the pail may readily be attached to, or disengaged from the rod.

NINE GOOD RULES FOR DAIRY

Regulations Given at Meeting in Boston by P. M. Harwood for Proper Care of Milk.

At a meeting held in Boston in the interest of pure milk, under the auspices of the state board of agriculture, the Woman's Municipal league of Boston, the Massachusetts Agricultural college and the state dairy bureau, nine good rules for the care of milk were given by P. M. Harwood.

1. Take in milk and cream as soon as possible after being left at your door and place in the refrigerator.
2. Keep milk and cream cold until ready for use. The bottom of the refrigerator is colder than the ice container.
3. If ice cannot be had, wrap the bottle in a wet cloth and stand it in a dish of water by an open window, out of the sun; evaporation of the water will cool the milk.
4. Keep milk or cream covered until wanted, and in the bottle in which it is delivered; in open bowls or pitchers they will absorb odors from food and collect flies and dust.
5. Pour from the bottle only what milk or cream is needed for immediate use.
6. Milk or cream that has become warm should never be poured back into the bottle of cold milk.
7. Utensils used for milk should be cleansed with cold water and then with boiling water, thoroughly drained and allowed to become cold before being filled with milk.
8. Wash and return all milk or cream bottles daily.
9. Have a separate quart of milk for the baby, what he does not use others may have.

GOOD POINTS OF DAIRY COW

Animal Should Possess Rather Thin, Pliable Elastic Skin—Udder Is Important Feature.

A good dairy cow possesses rather thin, pliable, elastic skin. A coarse, harsh handling skin is a poor indication. When cows possess these qualities of skin they are rarely good producers.

Much attention should be given the udder of the dairy cow—a large udder does not indicate that it is a good one. They are often very fleshy; a good udder should be elastic and pliable, and shows many folds when milked out. The teats should be placed equal distances apart and which is generally always the case if the udder is symetrical and well proportioned. Large milk veins are good indications, the more winding and branching they are the better the indication. The veins do not carry milk, as many think, but carry the blood from the udder to the body and the more blood that passes through the udder the more milk there is produced because the milk is produced from the blood.

Blanket Cow While Milking.

Blanketing each cow while milking her will reduce her nervousness and switching.

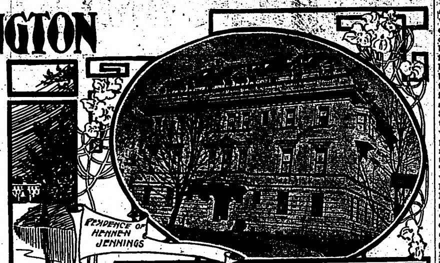
NOTABLE NEW MANSIONS AT WASHINGTON

FROM time out of mind the public has been wont to think of the city of Washington as gaining its greatest if not its sole distinction from being the seat of our national government—certainly honor enough for any community. Within the past few years, however, the city on the Potomac has come to have another significance. It is rapidly taking rank as the foremost residential mecca of the wealthy leisure class in America—even surpassing Newport in that respect. During the past decade wealthy men and women have been flocking to the District of Columbia from all parts of the country, and these wealthy invaders are erecting magnificent mansions that are coming to vie with the government buildings as objects of interest to the tourists and sightseers who journey to Washington each year.

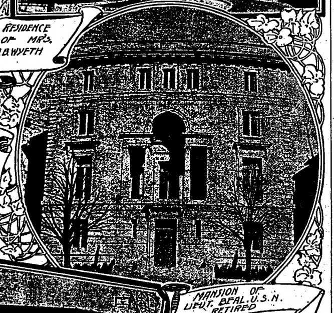
The moneyed folk who are taking up their residence at the capital of the nation are distinctly of the leisure class. No multi-millionaire would think of settling in Washington primarily for business reasons. There is practically no manufacturing and no extensive commercial interests in the city—none of the ordinary channels of wealth production for Americans. However, it is just this absence of the commercial atmosphere combined with the mild and delightful winter climate of Washington that is attracting so many of the well-to-do newcomers. Having made their fortunes, they are eager to enjoy life in a city where almost everybody has more or less leisure; where there are infinite opportunities for amusement; where the climate is conducive to out-of-door sport all the year, and where, finally, there is ever to be witnessed the spectacle of official life with its parades, ceremonies and picturesque social functions.



RESIDENCE OF HENNEN JENNINGS

RESIDENCE OF MRS. S.B. WYETH

MANSION OF HERBERT WADSWORTH



MANSION OF LIEUT. BEAL. U.S.N. RETIRED

RESIDENCE OF GEN. CHARLES L. FITZHUGH

Whole "colonies" of wealthy folk have migrated from different cities to Washington, notably from Chicago, Pittsburg, New York and Boston, and to some extent these colonies have foregathered in certain districts in their adopted city. A most interesting group of multimillionaires the members of which have lately built handsome mansions in Washington is made up of what is known as the "South African millionaires"—men who acquired the bulk of their fortunes in the gold mines and the diamond mines of the Dark Continent. Among these men who are now enjoying life at Washington are Hennen Jennings, Gardner Williams, who was for a long time manager of the famous De Beers diamond mines, and John Hays Hammond, chum of President Taft and the highest salaried mining engineer and expert in the world.

Perhaps the most notable feature of the invasion of Washington is found in the number of famous and wealthy widows who have taken up their abode there, most of them purchasing or erecting mansions. Among the well-known widows who have "adopted" Washington are Mrs. George M. Pullman, widow of the founder of the sleeping car company; Mrs. Mark Hanna, Mrs. John Hay, Mrs. Albert Clifford Barney, Mrs. R. R. Hitt, Mrs. "Phil" Sheridan, Mrs. John A. Logan, Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh, widow of the Colorado mining king; Mrs. Mary Scott Townsend, who inherited many millions made in Pennsylvania coal and oil interests; Mrs. Slater, who requires 18 servants to minister to her lone comfort in a monster mansion ,and a number of others.

The influx of wealthy householders has caused the price of real estate in Washington to advance by leaps and bounds in those favored sections of the northwest portion of the city which is being to a considerable extent monopolized by the fashionables. Land that a few years ago sold for $1 to $2 per square foot has jumped within a few years to $10 per square foot, and in some exclusive neighborhoods it is almost impossible to secure a large building site for love or money. The mansions which have been erected have cost all the way from $50,000 to $1,000,000 each and some of them have stables and garages that have cost as much as $25,000 each.

The two principal hubs of this new moneyed colonization of the most beautiful city in the world are found in the two little circular parks or plazas known respectively as Dupont circle and Sheridan circle—so named because statues of these heroes grace these bits of greensward. Around Dupont circle are grouped the stately mansions of Mrs. L. Z. Leiter and Mrs. Robert W. Patterson of Chicago, the Herbert Wadsworths of New York; Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Boardman and their daughter, Miss Mabel (of Red Cross fame), formerly of Cleveland. Nearby is the new mansion of Perry Belmont of New York and the home of George Westinghouse, the famous inventor and manufacturer of Pittsburg.

Encircling Sheridan circle are the mansions of Hennen Jennings, Mrs. Barney, Mrs. S. B. Wyeth of Philadelphia—another famous widow; Mrs. F. B. Moran, Gen. Charles L. Fitzhugh, Mrs. Sheridan, widow of the general; Lieutenant Beale, a wealthy retired officer of the United States navy, etc. The new mansions in Washington are notable not less for their magnificent architecture than for their spotless appearance. Washington being the cleanest of cities, it has been possible to make use of marble, terra cotta and delicately tinted mosaics on the exteriors of the residences and to have them retain indefinitely their pristine beauty.

Pathetic Case

Not so long ago the writer heard a little parting talk between a married couple. It wasn't a case of eavesdropping, because the conversation was right there to be necessarily overheard. The man was over forty and his wife was pretty close to forty herself.

"Well, you look pretty good to me, now that you're hiking off, young feller," he said to her, sort of sneaking his hand over so's to get hold of hers. "Look pretty middling good to me any old time, when it comes to that. It begins to look to me that I'm mashed on you beyond all redemption. If it does you any good to have your man make that kind of a fool schoolboy speech after all our years at the matrimony thing, why, you're welcome, kid, that's all."

"Well, I'll take mine out in thinking, dear," she replied, "and I'll write all of my foolish things in my letters. Now, you're honestly going to remember to feed the canary every day, aren't you? The maid can attend to cleaning the cage, but you yourself will feed little Dickie every single day, now won't you? Promise me again, so I can feel comfy about it."

"Sure, I'll feed the bird. Say, I've just been noticing those hazel eyes of yours. You've sure got 'em all skinned forty ways from the jack when it comes to the brown lamps, and—"

"Such silliness!" she interrupted him, looking pleased. "Now, dearie, listen. You won't be getting poor old Melinda to cook you those dreadful messes—things with horrid cheese in them—that you're so crazy over and that make you sick, will you? Promise me solemnly once again, now, won't you?"

"Nix on cheesy things, as solemn as you want it," said he. "Going to be a mighty dreary, dismal old imitation of a flat without you in it, sis, and don't you ever forget that. It sure does get me gulpy around the glue works to see you going off, and I find that it's getting harder every time you go away for a little trip to see your folks. One of these old days I'm going to pour an awful gob of grief all over you by going along with you when you go away."

"Now listen, Jim; I darned up all your socks day before yesterday, but I forgot to put them in your drawer, and you'll find them in my work basket, and my work basket is in the box couch in the sitting-room, and for mercy's sake, Jim, pul-lease remember this so you won't pull the whole flat to pieces looking for your socks, won't you? Now, there you are, with a faraway look in your eyes, and you're not hearing one single, solitary word that I'm saying to you."

"G'way, I've heard every word you've said. You said you sewed some buttons on the box couch in the spare room, and that—"

"Now, just listen to that! Listen to me, sir—stop looking at those crazy skylarking dogs on their way to the baggage car, but listen to me. I said socks. Socks in the work basket, in box couch. Repeat the words after me, sir, just like this: Socks in work basket in box couch."

"Wocks in sork basket in cox bouch—say, hun, I haven't time for any such fool things as socks. It's your going away that's got my goat. Doggone it, can't I stand here and mutter my thinks to you without your ringing in work couches and socks and birds and cheese puddings and such junk on me?"

Most husbands are pretty good fellows, when it comes to all that. Dub along, most of 'em, and do the best they can, considering that they're ornery he-creatures. And most of 'em, despite the old funnyistical gag, just nachually HATE to see their wives go away.—Washington Star.

NEED MONEY FOR GOOD WORK

Plans of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

What "A Million for Tuberculosis from Red Cross Seals" will do in providing some of the 275,000 beds needed at once in the United States for consumptives, is explained in a recent bulletin of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. There is just about one bed for every ten indigent consumptives, and if all tuberculosis persons in the country are counted, both rich and poor, hardly one for every 25 or 30. If sufficient hospital accommodations are provided only for those who are too poor to pay the full price for their treatment fully 275,000 more beds in special institutions for tuberculosis will be needed at once. The immense outlay necessary to provide and maintain so many beds in hospitals, makes it imperative, the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis declares, that such institutions be erected from public money, either municipal, county or state. In order to get appropriations for public hospitals for tuberculosis, agitation is necessary, and in order to create a campaign of agitation, organization is demanded. But in order that an organization may carry on an effective campaign, funds are needed.

These funds it is proposed to secure in as many communities as possible from the sale of Red Cross seals.

Why We Should Fertilize the Soil

by BURT E. POWELL

TWO FIELDS OF CLOVER IN SOUTHERN ILLINOIS SHOWING EFFECT OF USING LIMESTONE, ROCK PHOSPHATE IN ADDITION TO MANURE

MAN'S best friend is his mother—the earth. All she asks is the opportunity and she will yield him the wealth of an account that has been growing for ages. And he has treated her as he usually treats his best friends. He has taken all she had to give, bought an automobile and a house in town and then hid his address from his relatives of the soil for fear they would bring their earthy smell into his new residence.

With quiet indifference old Mother Earth endures this ingratitude, but the time comes when she has nothing for his greed. What happens then? Look to India for one answer. Ten million of our own Aryan blood starve there in a single famine year—starve upon a soil that once was, and still could be, almost inconceivably fertile.

Russia offers another reply, where with stomachs empty men enter a world that never fills them. Yet another answer, centuries old, may be found in the Tigris-Euphrates valley, which, once marvelously fertile, now scorches uselessly in the tropic sun. The necessity of man forged a weapon that brought him plenty; but the greed of man forged a weapon that brought him penury. For do you think there can be prosperity when the earth no longer yields? Do not forget that the shame of Rome was coincident with the time when one bushel of seed returned but four in the harvest. When the soil is exploited, that is when it is so farmed that the essential elements are taken out in crops and nothing returned to build it up, the result is exactly the same as when men are exploited in workshops and nothing returned to build up their bodies. You cannot haul phosphorus and nitrogen in oats and wheat and corn from your farms year after year and maintain the fertility of the soil, if you give back no phosphorus and nitrogen in return. Twelve thousand abandoned farms in the state of New York alone testify to this. After sixty years of cultivation the lands of the corn belt are beginning to hint at the same thing.

CORNFIELD IN URBANA PLAT. 8 YEAR ROTATION, NO TREATMENT

We all feel the results; and it is not the man with the hayseed in his hair who feels it first but the man with the pen behind his ear. Month by month the price of each separate commodity puts a little large puncture in his salary, until by the end of the year his savings, which began hopefully, as an unknown quantity, have ended as "X = nothing." He it is who knows the cold dread of middle age; for unless the land can be induced to yield abundantly prices will not settle down to the point where the man on a moderate salary can live free from fear. Farmer and clerk alike, we are all vitally concerned in this problem of maintaining and increasing the fertility of the soil that is fertile, and of restoring soils that have been cruelly exploited.

Fortunately they can be restored. Intelligence is more potent than avarice and can undo the evil it has wrought. Even those soils that have been exploited to the point of apparent ruin can be nursed back to health. Dr. Cyril Hopkins, head of the agronomy department of the University of Illinois, a soil specialist of national reputation and the author of numerous pamphlets and a book entitled "Soil Fertility and Permanent Agriculture," is one of the most enthusiastic workers along this line. He is a man of hard facts and loves pretty theories even as the devil loves holy water. Every fact that he gives out must prove itself over and over again in tests upon his own farms, or those belonging to the university or upon one of the various experimental plots. There are about thirty of these plots scattered through the state of Illinois, where the soils are carefully examined and then cropped according to their needs. I could tell you tales of what Mother Earth has done in the way of corn, wheat, oats, or clover when she has received proper treatment that would set you to building castles in the air upon an earthy foundation. The corn yield upon one of the university farms in 1909 was 87 bushels to the acre, due to treatments with limestone and phosphorous. But before we go farther let us consider a few fundamentals of crop growing.

First, there are six positive, absolutely essential factors. They are: (1) the seed, (2) the plant home, (3) the food of which the plant is made, (4) moisture, (5) heat, (6) light. Now, except in the case of the seed and plant food these factors are largely beyond the farmer's control. Dame Nature can, however, be trusted to attend to them satisfactorily. How, then, has the farmer made use of his ability to control the two factors? By exercising judgment and care in the selection of seed and by ignoring the matter of plant food entirely. The result? When the land was worn out and had no plant food to give the good seed the agriculturist arose irately in farmers' institute and told what he thought of the seed seller. The trouble all the time was not with the seed but with the soil, which had had the elements of plant food removed in previous crops, and as a consequence could not respond to the call of the seed.

What are these elements? There are ten in the list, but eight are provided abundantly. Three—oxygen, hydrogen and carbon—come directly from the air and water. Most normal soils contain enough potassium, magnesium, iron, calcium and sulphur, although sometimes the first must be supplied. The problem of plant food, therefore, narrows itself, in most cases, to maintaining and increasing the phosphorus and nitrogen.

Now nitrogen is as easy to catch as the measles if one knows how. The air contains it in inconceivable amounts. Dr. Hopkins has estimated that the air above an acre of ground contains about $10,000,000 worth, if sold over the counter at ordinary commercial rates. In order to induce this nitrogen to enter the earth, where it may reappear as food for man, all that is necessary is to plant clover, alfalfa, peas or any legume. By means of the bacteria upon the roots these legumes draw the nitrogen into the soil. How necessary the element of nitrogen is may be seen from the fact that a 100-bushel crop of corn takes from the soil almost 100 pounds of nitrogen in the corn and about 48 pounds in the stalks. Rich, well-balanced land in the corn belt contains about 8,000 pounds of nitrogen. Therefore, if the process of subtraction of nitrogen goes on year after year with never an addition, it can be seen clearly that the farmer's finances cannot multiply. Rotation plans for grain farmers always should include a crop of legumes. Wheat, corn, oats and clover is a satisfactory rotation; also wheat, corn and cow peas; also cotton, corn and oats and cow peas. The first of these rotations should include a catch crop of clover seeded the first year and plowed under for corn as late as practicable the second year. The other two should include catch crops of legumes whenever possible. Legumes when plowed under perform valuable services besides supplying the soil with nitrogen—as they decay they supply organic matter to the soil which helps other elements of plant food to free themselves from the earth and into the farmer's bank account.

Now that the question of nitrogen has been outlined, suppose we turn to the problem of phosphorus, the only element of plant food we ever shall have to buy. As to the importance of the use of phosphorus upon the common soils of the United States, Dr. Hopkins has this to say:

"Phosphorus is the key to permanent agriculture on these lands. To maintain or increase the amount of phosphorus in the soil makes possible the growth of clover or other legumes and the consequent addition of nitrogen from the inexhaustible supply in the air; and with the addition of decaying organic matter in the residues of clover and other crops and in manure, made in large part from clover, hay and pasture, and from the larger crops of corn and other grains which clover helps to produce comes the possibility of liberating from the immense supplies in the soil sufficient potassium, magnesium and other essential abundant elements supplemented by the amounts returned in manure and crop residues for the production of large crops at least for thousands of years; whereas if the supply of phosphorus in the soil is steadily decreased in the future in accordance with the past and present most common farm practise, then poverty is the only future for the people who till the common agricultural lands of the United States."

Phosphorus may be applied in liberal amounts—as much as 1,000 pounds to the acre every three or four years—and it costs about $7 a ton.

After the problem of returning the elements to the soil has been solved the farmer may find another condition of the soil which must be corrected before his farm will produce as it should. This is the tendency of certain soils to acidity. Clover, alfalfa and other valuable legumes cannot thrive upon soil that is sour. Sometimes on acid soils when applications of farm manure are made, the legumes will seem to grow well, but examination reveals the fact that the nitrogen gathering bacteria fail to develop properly. Hence the most valuable contribution the legumes have to make to the soil is largely lost. Upon certain fields belonging to one of the most famous agricultural stations in the world, that of Rothamstead, England, applications of natural limestone were made a century ago. They are still moderately productive, although other fields near by, which have never received the application, are extremely unproductive.

Care should be taken that limestone is used for the one and only purpose of correcting soil acidity.

And while we are upon this subject of soil stimulation, have you ever thought that most of our improvements have that in view and that only? Improved seed, improved machinery, irrigation, even crop rotation, all are means for extracting from the soil the richness that is in it, not for returning any of the food elements of grain building. All of these methods of soil stimulation are excellent in their way, if used in connection with methods of returning the elements of plant food; but if used without them they are means of hastening the impoverishment of the soil.

To return to the question of limestone, one ton to the acre finely ground will correct the acid condition of most soils. It is, however, in the end cheaper and easier to apply more and to apply it less often. As much as ten tons to the acre was applied to the soil of one of the experiment fields in southern Illinois and the crop yields there have been greater than upon any other fields in that district.

A question that has been given much attention lately is the question of crop rotation. Undoubtedly it is absolutely essential for successful grain farming, but it is not the universal panacea some would have us believe. For instance, a group of theorists have declared that fertilization is unnecessary, that crop rotation will keep the soils in perfect condition. The idea is that plants do not injure the soil because they use its plant food elements but because they throw off poisonous excreta as animals do. Therefore a so-called worn-out soil simply has become saturated with this excreta. Plant a crop which will neutralize the poison of the last crop and the soilsoil will be sweetened and the breasts of Mother Earth kept dripping with plenty forever. This is very attractive—as a theory. It has, however, no foundation in fact. As Dr. Hopkins has said, the rotation of crops has just the same effect upon wealth in the sooil as the rotation of the check book among the members of the family has upon the wealth in the bank. Plant food elements cannot be used up and not returned without resulting in impoverishment of the soil.

MARK THE BOUNDARY

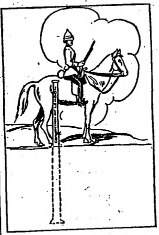
Each Nation Has Way of Delineating Its Frontier.

Pillars and Statues Most Commonly Used Where Natural Boundaries Do Not Exist—Most Famous of All Marks.

London.—Happy is the country which possesses natural boundaries. England is better off in this respect than almost any other nation, for the whole of her 2,755 miles of frontier is guarded by the sea. Next comes Italy with 2,472 miles of coastline, and the Alps like a wall across her northern boundary.

Contrast these cases with those of Germany and Austria. The latter country has a frontier line of about 3,800 miles, of which 2,996 is land, every mile of which must be guarded against the encroachments of her neighbors. Germany is almost equally badly off, for her seacoast line is only 744 miles, while 2,255 miles of land frontier border upon Russia, Austria, Switzerland, France, Holland and Belgium, and far the larger portion of this great distance is not protected by mountains, rivers or any other natural boundary.

The Germans guard their frontiers with unceasing vigilance, especially that which faces France along the southern border of Elsass-Lothringen, and France is by no means behind in her precautions. The steep Vosges mountains guard a portion of this frontier, but the rest is flat country, and the boundary line runs through forests and fields.



Post of Iron and Wood.

Where the line runs through woods a broad belt has been cleared, and is kept free of all undergrowth. Along the center, at distances of about a quarter of a mile, are erected stone posts very like ordinary milestones. Whenever a road runs along the frontier it is marked by tall wooden posts painted on one side with the French and upon the other with the German colors. Customs houses stand not only on the railways, but upon all main lines of traffic, and are well guarded by police and troops. Rows are of constant occurrence.

The Russo-German frontier is marked in similar fashion, and here troubles are of frequent occurrence, for the hungry, ill-paid cossacks are constantly raiding over the border in search of poultry and pigs.

While the boundary between the United States and Canada follows for many hundreds of miles the River St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes, there is a vast distance of prairie land beyond with no natural demarcation. This is artificially delimited by pillars of iron and wood placed a mile apart. These are supplied alternately by the Canadian and United States governments, and run from Lake of the Woods to the Red River Valley. Beyond, mounds of earth and cairns of stone are used as marks.

The pillars are hollow castings, eight feet high, eight inches square at the base, four at the top. Inside are well seasoned cedar posts. Each pillar is inscribed in raised letters on the north, "Convention of London," on the south, "Oct. 20th, 1818." The stone cairns are seven feet high, eight feet at the base, and shaped like a pyramid. Earth is used where stone is not available.

The most famous of all boundary marks in song and story is the "Pillar of Farewell," which marks the line between Russia and Siberia. It stands between Ekaterinburg in Russia and Tiumen in Siberia, and is on the main road along which tens of thousands of exiles have passed. It is an obelisk of brick about sixteen feet in height. On the west side it bears in Russian characters the word "Europe," on the other "Asia."

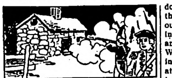
Odd News From Big Cities

Stories of Strange Happenings in the Metropolitan Towns

Historic Barn Is Used as a Church



PHILADELPHIA.—Grace Lutheran church of Roxborough is erecting a handsome Gothic edifice on the northwest corner of Ridge and Roxborough avenues. The site is a historic one and was long revered by the older residents for the part taken there during the revolutionary war. The old stone dwelling has been demolished, but the large barn in the rear not only has been preserved, but is being used as a house of worship while the building of the church home is in progress.

Both the barn and the house figured in a cowardly proceeding during the winter of 1777-1778, while the British were in possession of Philadelphia. Washington's army was at Valley Forge, enduring the hardships of that terrible winter and scouting parties were frequently sent out from the encampment there to the outlying districts of the city. One December afternoon, during a snowstorm, a company of Virginia troopers rode down Ridge avenue, then known as the Plymouth road, through Roxborough, and, seeing the spacious and inviting barn, stopped at the house and asked permission of Andrew Wood, the owner, to spend the night in the barn. Wood was a patriot, and at once acceded to the request, urging a number of the troopers to spend the night in the house.

Midnight passed, and the weary troopers were indulging in dreams of deliverance from their foes and a safe return to their own firesides when suddenly the sentinel detected the approach of a body of horsemen. He had scarcely given an alarm when they rushed by him. In a moment the house and barn was the scene of confusion, alarm and disorder. Already had some of the Virginia troopers mounted their horses and were hastening to escape by Care's lane, opposite the house, when the British rushed on to the attack, giving no quarter.

Grace Lutheran church, after holding services in the Roxborough Lyceum hall, rented the Woods' house, the lower part of which was fitted up as a chapel, with Sunday school rooms on the upper floors. The property was subsequently purchased, the old house torn down and the barn brought into service.

Telephone Now Used for Advertising

SURE, I GOT DE FINEST LINE IN DE TOWN

NEW YORK.—A number of business houses in New York are using the telephone instead of circulars for advertising purposes. Probably this will meet the approval of Uncle Sam. If adopted wherever practicable it might extensively relieve the strain on the postal service. A retail dry goods merchant receives a consignment of choice laces. It takes only a few minutes to ring up two or three dozen of his best customers who would be especially interested in such goods and ask them to call and examine the laces. The flattery of such an invitation appeals strongly to many persons. Circularization has been carried to such an extent that much of its effectiveness is frequently lost and many circulars never reach the buyer to whom they are addressed, whereas the telephone call can usually be a direct communication. A haberdasher telephones his patrons to note his latest importations in neck scarfs, the newst shirtings or special offers in silk hose, a clipping bureau rings up a prominent financier, tells him his name is mentioned in the dailies in connection with an important railroad deal and asks him to subscribe to the bureau's extremely efficient service; a dealer in antiques begs that madame will call to examine some rare old Sheffield plate just received. Such attentions have all the exclusiveness of a varnishing day invitation, and it would be a patron of hardy nerve who would fail to buy.

Chicago Hair Industry Is a Big One

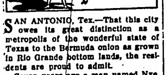
I JUST WONDER IF I AM WEARING SOME CHINAMAN'S HAIR—!—?—!
CHINESE HAIR ALSO FOR PUFFS AND SWITCHES 25 CTS.

CHICAGO.—According to the manager of one of Chicago's big "hair factories" his plant is doing a million dollars' worth of business a year. Said Mr. Manager: "Why, the foreign dealers who used to make colonial wigs never began to have the trade we have. You can see this letter from a well-known firm rushing us on with an order for 5,000 switches, and those ten band boxes over there contain exactly $30,000 worth of first quality hair all to be sold to department stores. A woman up in Wisconsin has made nearly $50,000 simply by selling the hair she has bought from country women all over the state.

"All hair that is not Chinese is first quality hair, but 75 per cent. of the false hair now worn is from a Chinaman's queue—second quality hair we call it. When a Chinaman dies or is sent to prison his queue, which averages 40 inches in length, is cut off and sold at a big auction sale. Our agents bid for it by the pound and then ship directly to us. Over at our laboratory these queues are first thoroughly disinfected, the greatest care being taken, then they are bleached perfectly white and put through a refining process, which makes them more like the natural hair. After they are dyed the ordinary shades they cease being queues and become 'switches.'

"Then they are put on a hackle, a board set with sharp steel spikes, where they are separated into even lengths. For instance, a 26-inch switch, the popular length, must have every hair precisely 26 inches long. In the average switch there are about six different shades of one color which must be blended together on the hackle.

City Thrives on the Bermuda Onion



BERMUDA ONION
IF IT WASN'T FOR ME SAN ANTONIO WOULDN'T BE ON THE MAP

SAN ANTONIO, Tex.—That this city owes its great distinction as a metropolis of the wonderful state of Texas to the Bermuda onion as grown in Rio Grande bottom lands, the residents are proud to admit.

Seven years ago a man named Nye, who thought he had been cheated in a land trade, asked the agricultural department what he could raise on the land. It was dry and sandy soil near San Antonio. Bermuda onions, was the answer. This year the Bermuda onion crop marketed from this district exceeded $3,000,000 in value.

As soon as Mr. Nye demonstrated that the so-called desert land near San Antonio would return a profit of $500 to $800 an acre in onions, if slightly irrigated, someone tried cabbage. The cabbage shipped from this district brought $1,000,000 this year. Then other garden truck followed naturally and this brought back $3,000,000.

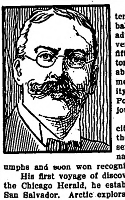
When truck growing with river irrigation proved successful, an effort was made to get water through bored wells. Artesian wells have added more than a million acres to the cultivatable land.

Of course, as the business grew, San Antonio prospered. From the trading point for a cattle country it became the distributing center for one of the richest small farming districts in the world.

The population of the city was 37,673 in 1880, and in 1900 it had increased to 53,321. This year the total soared to 96,641, and, with suburbs, it far exceeds the charmed 100,000 mark. The nearest rival in Texas is Dallas, with 92,104. What gives the greatest joy locally is that eight years ago all Texas was saying that San Antonio had reached its limit.

IN THE LIMELIGHT

WELLMAN OF BALLOON FAME



Walter Wellman, who failed in his daring attempt to cross the Atlantic in the big dirigible balloon America has had a career of thrilling adventure. He was born in Mentor, Ohio, November 3, 1850, and is of English descent. When fifteen years old he established a paper at Sutton, Neb. In 1876 he went to Philadelphia and abandoned the country newspaper field for the metropolitan. He had barely attained his majority when he established the Cincinnati Evening Post. Soon afterward he became a free lance in journalism.

In the early eighties for a year or two he was city editor of the Chicago Herald. He covered the legislative sessions at Springfield and was sent to Washington as correspondent. At the national capital he scored frequent newspaper triumphs and soon won recognition for his judgment and powers of analysis.

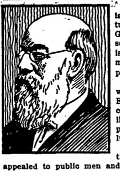
His first voyage of discovery was made in 1892, when, commissioned by the Chicago Herald, he established the spot on which Columbus landed on San Salvador. Arctic exploration next cast its lure about Mr. Wellman. In fifteen years he made five trips into the frozen north. In 1894 he led an expedition, reaching 81 degrees north. He placed many new islands on the map and made such a valuable collection of scientific data that his second voyage north in 1898 aroused keen interest among geographers.

In 1906 he announced that he would seek the pole by aerial route. He had a dirigible balloon built and it was taken to Spitzbergen, but it turned out to be defective and the trip that year had to be abandoned. The next year found Mr. Wellman back at his camp on Dane's island, with a rebuilt balloon. A start was made September 2, but a furious gale came up and drove the airship back. A landing was made on a glacier.

Two years later, in 1909, Mr. Wellman was back for the third time at Dane's island with the America, again remodeled. When the start was made, after covering 32 miles the equilibrator parted. The big dirigible was towed back to its landing place, when a gust of wind carried it careening over the ice hummocks and it exploded.

The discovery of the pole by Peary took away the main lure of arctic voyages, and Mr. Wellman, turning his thoughts in another direction, announced last July that he would try a transatlantic voyage by airship. This also proved disastrous after he had covered over 500 miles of the distance to Europe.

LEADER IN PUBLIC AFFAIRS



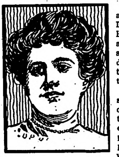
One of the recognized leaders in public affairs is the Rev. Washington Gladden. For half a century in New York, Massachusetts and Ohio Dr. Gladden has been a great influence in the church, society and politics. His friends declare that it is due to his influence and efforts that public morality in Columbus was advanced to a higher plane.

Prior to 1884 the state election in Ohio always preceded the national election by a month. Every four years on this account there was a condition of vast turmoil when the different political influences were at work. Dr. Gladden was pastor of the First Congregational church of Columbus when he set at the work of public reform.

His first appeal was for a change in the election law. He wrote about the evils of the system, appealed to public men and sent out a petition for signatures at his own expense. A few dollars thus expended enabled him to arouse popular enthusiasm and his point was carried.

In 1900 Dr. Gladden, to defeat antagonistic interests in the Columbus city council, announced himself as an aldermanic candidate and was elected. He served two years, taking an active and important part in street railway, gas, electric light and interurban policies.

HEADS THE WOMAN TEACHERS

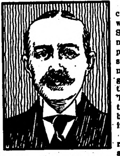


In 1905 Miss Grace C. Strachan placed herself at the head of the army of women teachers at Brooklyn, N. Y., in their fight for better pay. Her ambition was to see the day when her associates would receive as much pay for their services as the janitors. She made her point plainer by demonstrating that the average pay of women teachers at Washington, D. C., was not equal to that received by the city dog catcher.

She is now president of the Interborough Association of Women School Teachers of the City of New York, and has perfected an ideal organization. As the head of 15,000 women school teachers she is trying to have the state of New York place male and female teachers upon an equal pay basis. Three bills to bring about this were vetoed, but the fight is still in progress.

Her great effort has been to make the organization work as a unit. She has been discouraged by business men and politicians, but a champion was found in the late Senator Patrick H. McCarren, who introduced her first bill in behalf of the movement.

NOW GOVERNOR OF NEW YORK



Lieutenant Governor Horace White of Syracuse became governor of the state of New York when Charles E. Hughes retired to go upon the Supreme court bench at Washington. For three months Mr. White will be governor of the Empire state and, logically, he should succeed himself, the chosen of the people. But, though unanimously nominated two years ago for lieutenant governor, his name was not even mentioned at the recent nominating convention at Saratoga. The new governor will do his work for a brief three months, but his political career, once so brilliantly promising, his friends feel, is closed in all probability.

Belonging to one of the most prominent and respected families in the state, possessing all the advantages of education and social position and wealth, with a record of 13 years in the state senate and with the reputation of an orator and genial gentleman of the most polished manners. Governor White, at the age of forty-five, finds himself beyond the pale so far as further political preferment is concerned, although there may come a rehabilitation and a restoration to public favor in years hence.

And all this because of his lamentable connection with the People's Mutual Life Association and League of Syracuse. Mr. White all along has maintained that he did no wrong and that what he did was in his capacity as legal adviser, but to the skirts of the lieutenant governor has clung enough of the onus of the transaction to injure his immediate future politically.

DOINGS AT THE CAPITAL

Uncle Sam Has New Ward in Liberia

WASHINGTON.—An obscure chapter, it has long lain unread in American annals, in spite of the interest that surrounds it. But now that the United States has come to take an active hand in the government of Liberia, it is natural that the founding of that old half-American, half African-negro state should attract our interest. Founded back in 1820 as a home for the freed slaves from this country, Liberia became a republic in 1847. Today its population numbers some 60,000 Liberians along the coast, while 2,000,000 negroes run wild in the interior. No white man can acquire citizenship or own property.

By an arrangement with bankers in this country, France and Germany and with the approval of Liberia and the European powers, a loan of $2,000,000 is to be floated by our government to the end of setting straight Liberian finances and assisting the country to establish itself upon a firmer basis. The United States will have control of the little state's financial, military and agricultural departments and will administer the republic's relations.

The popular accounts of the founding of Liberia credit the achievement somewhat vaguely to the American Colonization society, of which Henry Clay was president. There is a less-known chapter of that perilous enterprise which attributes the martyrdom of a life in this effort to open a new world to the slaves to Rev. Samuel Bacon, an American minister of the Episcopal church.

The government decided to send out the ship of war Cyane and the transport Elizabeth with mechanics and laborers under two agents for the purpose of breaking ground for the reception of liberated slaves. On January 8, 1820, having previously been in the service of the colonization society, Bacon received from President Monroe the commission making him the head of the proposed expedition.

A species of African fever appeared among the members of the little band of settlers. Soon 25 of the party were brought down with it. Breaking under the labors he had assumed Bacon presently discovered symptoms of the malady in himself.

Bankson and others of the party survived. The founding of the colony went forward. But on the sacrifice of Bacon's life Liberia was built.

Soldier of Fortune May Lose Rights

YOU'LL NEVER GET SUCH A CHANCE AGAIN

IF Capt. Jorge Neiken Y. Waldberg, erstwhile of Argentina, pretended American, typical soldier of fortune and one of the few men who ever succeeded in selling a gold brick to one of the nation's most prominent men, does not return to Washington within the next sixty days, he is likely to lose his alleged American citizenship and be denied the protection of the American flag.

Captain Waldberg flourished in Washington 12 years ago, during the Spanish-American war, and a few years later, at the Pan-American exposition. The captain came to Washington with a long military record. Having been born in Argentina, he has lived in half a dozen South American countries and been engaged in as many revolutions in the cause of liberty. Exiled, when unsuccessful, he dropped into New York one day and organized a company of Greek fruit venders, whom he took to Athens, joined the Greek army and fought in the Graeco-Turkish war.

All that he got out of that contest was a little military glory and a wife. He married a very beautiful daughter of a professor in the University of Athens and returned to America in time to take up newspaper work at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war.

Not long ago the captain turned up in Constantinople and became involved in some trouble there which prompted him to demand the protection of the the American flag. He presented his case at the embassy, and in endeavoring to establish the fact that he was a naturalized American citizen, some disclosures came to light regarding his papers which led the American charge to refer the matter to the state department.

The department in turn made inquiry at the district court, with the result that an order was issued requiring him to show cause within sixty days why his papers should not be canceled.

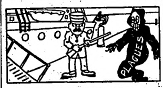
Puzzlers for the New Customs Court

WHAT IS IT ANY WAY?

IF A HEN is not a bird, why is a pair of rubber boots an article of woolen wearing apparel? Funny question, is it not? There are many others, but this one is enough to show how Uncle Sam is puzzled at times to properly classify imported articles so that the correct rate of customs duties may be levied and collected. In the above case, it is simply because the highest customs authority of the land held that as the boots had linings in which there was an appreciable quantity of wool they should bear the rate prescribed for woolen apparel. That same highest authority decided that frogs' legs are dutiable as poultry.

The customs court, a new judicial body that is just getting down to business at Washington, already has many cases that will cause the public to laugh. One of the first questions for it to decide is whether the hen is a bird. Ornithologists would unhesitatingly declare she is, but the new court is not composed of such men. Eh? What is the odds? Wait a minute, and you will see how it concerns every housekeeper. If the court can be induced to decide that the hen is a bird, down will go the price of eggs, for the present tariff bar makes every importer of edible eggs pay five cents a dozen for all he brings into the country. Bird's eggs are on the free list.

Credit Due Foreign Health Officers



FEW persons realize to what extent the welfare of this nation is preserved by the splendid service of the medical forces which are stationed at all the danger ports abroad to prevent the introduction of plagues and pestilences into this country through shipping agencies. This force of public health officers is well equipped. Moreover, in all places the work of these trained experts is further supplemented by the efforts of the consular officers. In places that are too small to support a trained force, but are quite large enough to transmit disease by emigration, the consular officers do splendid work unaided.

The stringent laws of quarantine and the penalties which attach to all attempts to evade them put effective repressive weapons into the hands of these officials, so that no attempts are made to escape from compulsory compliance and securing a clean bill of health at the point of departure and ports of call. A vessel that starts from a port with no appearance of infectious diseases among her crew or passengers, and which is again subjected to rigorous examination on her arrival at any American port, stands little chance of bringing any infected passengers past the several inspectors.

As there is no way of measuring what might happen if this force were not employed, its members do not always receive the full amount of credit to which their unremitting care and attention entitle them. They stand among the many preventive forces which the country utilizes to safeguard the people and to whom the debt of the nation is greater than the public is in the habit of acknowledging.

The truth of the saying that time is money seems to be borne out by the way most people squander it.

FOR CLEAN FOODS.

Addressing the American Health association in convention at Milwaukee, Prof. James O. Jordan of Boston, chairman, pointed out the need of protecting foods from contamination not only by dirt, dust, insect life, dogs and cats, but also from handling by human being, says the Buffalo Express. He must have had in mind careless masses to whom the rules of cleanliness are practically unknown. The effort of the day, among civilized people is generally for clean food. Restaurants are sometimes accused of being less particular than they should be, but local health officials can keep them up to the standard or have them discontinued. If such power is not accessible by any health officer, legislation should provide for such an arrangement. Professor Jordan spoke also for milk, saying: "Less money spent on millinery and beer and more devoted to procuring clean milk will yield health dividends more than commensurate with the capital thus invested." It is hardly necessary for the individual to forego much beer or much millinery to provide clean milk. The task is the community's. Only one class of milk should be tolerated, and that, clean, reasonably rich, and delivered in cleanly vessels and vehicles.

A part of the theory touching the nature of matter is that the ions, which are the constituents of atoms, are not only in constant motion, but that this energy is working toward a lower quality of matter; that is, that gold is developing toward copper or toward some other kind of metal of less value. So of silver and the diamond. These precious metals never transmute upward, but always downward. The changes may not be observed in centuries, but in millions of years they will manifest themselves. This disintegration of the atom and its transmutation into the base metals suggest two inferences—either the advance of civilization in the eradication of gold and other precious metals, or that the so-called baser metals are of greater value and use in the social economy. Of course, long before the eradication of gold through this process, mankind will disappear from the planet. yet the lesson is left by this scientific discovery that in the great plan of nature, copper and iron are more to be esteemed than gold or silver.

The day of a doze is no more—that delicious moment as the day breaks, when the sleeper wakes and rolls over in a half dream and yields himself to a drowsy spell that gives to joy a sort of real existence—well, it is no more. These days of advance have blotted it out. Invention and rapid life are too many for it. When a person wakes, he wakes. No lotus-eating for him. No floating away on a silvery mist out into the land of forgetfulness. Listen to that motor cycle running from away down the street, sputtering, cracking and crashing as it comes, rushing past your window as the very devil himself would; and then, that snorting, ripping and slashing clamor sweeping by in the form of an automobile—goodby, old Somnus and Momus, and all ye divinities of night and sleep, farewell, says the Ohio State Journal. Some day we may meet again, but in some other world or some other time when the long, lingering doze at dawn may be looked upon as one of the sacred rights of mankind.

Before the year's outing season is over nearly half a million persons will have sought recreation and health in the national forests. The use of the forests for recreation is as yet in its beginning, but is growing steadily and rapidly—in some of the forests at the rate of 100 per cent. per annum. The day seems not far distant when 1,000,000 persons will annually visit them. The records show that the seasonal use of the forests runs from two months in a Colorado forest, such as the Routt, to 12 months in an Alaskan, such as the Tongass. But the uses differ. In Colorado the 2,030 visitors entered the forest to fish, to camp, to climb and to drink the medicinal waters; in Alaska, the 1,000 almost solely to hunt and fish. The 21,000 persons who went into the Conconino forest, Arizona, during nine months went to camp or to enjoy the scenery. The most popular of the forests is the Pike, containing the famous peak of that name.

The official census-statistics give Chicago a population of 2,185,283, a gain of 486,708 in ten years. This is doing very well, as the returns show Chicago to be the second city in the United States in number of inhabitants, ranking next to New York both in population and in rate of increase. Yet Chicago is not satisfied. The metropolis thought it should have at least 3,000,000. Apparently the only way to get such a total is to annex some more of the outlying territory.

AIRMEN AT QUEBEC

HAWLEY AND POST REACH CANADIAN CITY IN FAIRLY GOOD SHAPE.

BIG CROWD WELCOMES THEM

Balloonists Tell of Hardships They Endured in Struggles Through Forests and Wilderness—One Was Injured, Making Travel Slow.

Quebec, Que.—Looking somewhat fatigued from the several days' hardship succeeding their sensational flight through space, which won for them the coveted trophy of the world's greatest conquerors of the air, Alan R. Hawley and Augustus Post disembarked from the Quebec & St. John train in the old historic city of Quebec Thursday night.

The United States consul was there to greet them, as well as a number of enthusiastic citizens who cheered them lustily.

Their balloon, the America II, is still at Lake du Banc de Sable, the township in which they landed. It is believed that Joseph Pednaud and Joseph Simard, two trappers who brought the balloonists in a bark canoe to St. Ambroise, will go back and see what can be done to get the big bag from its cache on the side of the mountain to the railroad here.

Messrs. Hawley and Post landed about 46 hours after their departure from St. Louis. The balloon basket touched earth at 3:35 the afternoon of October 19. They probably flew about 1,600 miles, although the direct distance between the two points, on which the international race is decided, is only 1,355 miles. This would make their average rate of progress about 35 miles an hour.

WILSON MAKES MILK RULING

Bars From Agricultural Department All Lacteal Fluid Not Subjected to Turberculin Test.

Washington. — An order issued by Secretary of Agriculture Wilson bars from the department and all its branches milk which has not been subjected to the tuberculin test. This is so important a ruling that all the departments are expecting to have similar orders issued. This will be a severe blow to the dealers in milk who are opposing pasteur and tuberculin tests and many of these dealers have undertaken to attack pasteurization before the department of justice.

JURY PROBES TREASURY STEAL

CALLS OVER FIFTY WITNESSES IN $173,000 CASE.

Removal of U. S. Marshal at Chicago Bring New Developments in Mysterious Theft.

Chicago.—It was developed that the federal grand jury has been for some time seeking evidence on which to base new indictments against certain persons who are believed to have been accomplices after the fact with George W. Fitzgerald, the former paying teller at the Chicago subtreasury, and now under indictment on the $173,000 robbery of that institution.

More than fifty witnesses have been called before the grand jury in the past few days. Many of these were employes of banking and business houses supposed to have had dealings with Fitzgerald.

Books of the Northern Trust company are said to have been taken before the grand jury on the statements of witnesses that they believed Fitzgerald had a deposit there.

New evidence which has developed since the arrest of Fitzgerald also has been presented before the grand jury, and witnesses have been asked to relate their accounts of deals with him as a preliminary to their testimony in court.

Attorney E. R. Litzinger, who represents Fitzgerald, claims the present calling of witnesses shows a weakness in the government's case and an effort to bolster it up. This is denied by District Attorney Edwin W. Sims, who claims the government had a strong and conclusive case at the time it returned the secret indictment against Fitzgerald last February, just before the statute of limitations expired.

A new scandal promises to crop out in connection with the case in the plot to discredit Marshal Eberstein, the government's chief investigator, who collected much of the evidence against Fitzgerald. Eberstein has been superseded as chief investigator for the Department of Justice by Charles F. De Woody.

VICTORIA, B. C. FIRE SWEPT

Flames in Business District Destroy Many Fine Structures—Loss $1,500,000 to $2,000,000.

Victoria, B. C.—Fire, which started late Wednesday night and burned with unabated fury, swept through the heart of the city's business section, wiping out several of the finest buildings and causing a loss estimated at $1,500,000 to $2,000,000. Huge firebrands floated on the high wind, which swept toward the water front, and it was with great difficulty that the firemen, aided by the militia and the garrison at Work Point barracks, kept the flames from sweeping a broad path to the edge of the water.

Many blazing embers were carried out over the bay, endangering the shipping in the harbor.

Among the buildings burned were the Victoria Times office and the Five Sisters building, a five-story office block. The five-story Pemberton building and the Driard hotel were threatened, both were saved.

Fire Loss Was $15,000,000.

Washington.—Six billion board feet of lumber, valued at about $15,000,000, was destroyed in the recent forest fires upon the national forests in Montana and northern Idaho. The total area burned over in this one district was put at 1,250,000 acres.

The first rough estimate of the fire loss in the great district was completed by officials of the government forest service.

UPRISING IN GREECE

UNCONFIRMED REPORTS DECLARE REVOLUTION HAS BROKEN OUT IN EMPIRE.

CABINET STRIFE IS CRISIS

Capital, Said to Be Seat of War, Fails to Respond to Inquiries Made From Paris—Rumor King George Flees—Been Brewing for More Than Year.

Paris.—Unconfirmed advices stated that a revolution, sweeping the entire empire, broke out at Athens Thursday and that King George and the royal family fled for safety.

Efforts to get into telegraphic communication with Athens failed.

The revolution, if it has started, is an echo of the internal troubles with the military league one year ago.

There has been much ill feeling at Athens recently against the national assembly, culminating in the dissolution of that body last Tuesday. The assembly was especially elected for the purpose of undertaking a revision of the constitution.

At the request of King George, M. Venezelos, the Cretan leader, formed a cabinet October 18. The ministry was not received in a friendly spirit by the chamber, the members of which repeatedly absented themselves when Premier Venezelos attempted to secure a vote of confidence.

The premier, discouraged, announced the resignation of the cabinet October 23. King George, however, refused to accept the resignation, and Monday the chamber adopted a vote of confidence in the premier by a ballot of 208 to 31.

The premier was not satisfied, fearing that it was a vote of complaisance rather than sincere support, and insisted that the assembly be dissolved. He had his way and November 28 was set as the date for the elections for a new revisionist chamber.

Opposed to the recent assembly was the ministry, cordially supported by the king and the populace.

Berlin.—An unconfirmed rumor was circulated on the Boerse Thursday that a revolution had broken out at Athens. The fact that telegrams of inquiry sent to the Grecian capital remained unanswered was taken as partial confirmation of the truth of the reports.

ETHEL CLARE LENEVE FREE

Girl Companion of Dr. Crippen, Sentenced to Death, Acquitted of Charge as Accessory.

London.—Ethel Clare Leneve was acquitted Tuesday as an accessory after the fact in the murder of Belle Elmore by Dr. Hawley H. Crippen. The trial lasted but three hours.

It was for love of Miss Leneve that Dr. H. H. Crippen, now under death sentence, murdered his wife. The crown counsel, Richard Muir, failed to show that Miss Leneve had knowledge of either the American's intention or of the crime itself.

No witnesses were called by the defense. Immediately upon the conclusion of the speech of Miss Leneve's attorney, F. E. Smith, Justice Alverstone delivered his charge to the jury and they retired, returning in twenty-two minutes with a verdict of acquittal.

Miss Leneve's slim, girlish figure was the center of interest as she stood before the bar and, in a sweet, low voice, replied to the court's interrogation as to how she would plead:

"Not guilty, my lord!"

STRAUSS WISHES TO RETIRE

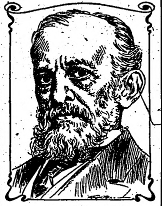
United States and Ottoman Governments Are Without Single Diplomatic Hitch.

Washington.—Believing he has accomplished his mission, Oscar S. Strauss, the American ambassador to Turkey, is desirous of retiring from the diplomatic field and return to the United States permanently.

Mr. Strauss saw the president and reported that all the matters in dispute between Turkey and the United States which he had been delegated to adjust have been satisfactorily disposed of, leaving the two nations for the first time in many years without a single diplomatic hitch between them.



Oscar S. Strauss.

Because of this state of affairs and for the reason that his acceptance of the Turkish ambassadorship was based on the representation that his services were needed to restore harmony between the two governments, Mr. Strauss feels that his mission has been accomplished and there is no further reason for him to expatriate himself. He has not resigned his post and if the president insists upon it Mr. Strauss will return to Constantinople at the end of his sixty days' leave of absence.

RUIN WROUGHT BY CYCLONE

Believed 100 Lives Lost in Storm, Tidal Wave and Volcanic Eruption in Southern Italy.

Rome.—The extent of the havoc wrought Monday by the strange elemental combination of cyclone, tidal wave and volcanic eruption on the slopes of Vesuvius and on the island of Ischia, has not yet been definitely determined, owing to the interruption of communication.

One hundred persons are said to have been killed. The monetary loss will probably be great.

The disaster appears to have come in the form of a cyclone, having three centers, the first over the island of Ischia, the second over the town of Torre del Greco on the east coast of the Bay of Naples, and the third sweeping the gulf of Salerno.

Accompanying the cyclone were a cloudburst, a tidal wave and violent eruptions from Mount Vesuvius and from a crater suddenly opened on the summit of the long extinct Mount Epomeo on the island of Ischia.

Many houses collapsed in this city due to the subsidence of the surface of the earth during the recent volcanic eruptions, and thirty feet of mud covers many of the roads in the outlying districts.

The inhabitants fled to the higher parts of the island, and those who escaped the rush of water are reported to be suffering from hunger and exposure. The Italian minister of the interior has been appealed to for relief measures.

Ischia is an island almost directly west of the city of Naples in the Mediterranean sea. The storm which caused the wave has broken communication and details are lacking.

It is reported that shipping was damaged and many boats lost. Property damage in Casamicciola was heavy.

THE FIRST TASTE

Learned to Drink Coffee When a Baby.

If parents realized the fact that coffee contains a drug—caffeine—which is especially harmful to children, they would doubtless hesitate before giving the babies coffee to drink.

"When I was a child in my mother's arms and first began to nibble things at the table, mother used to give me sips of coffee. As my parents used coffee exclusively at meals I never knew there was anything to drink but coffee and water.

"And so I contracted the coffee habit early. I remember when quite young the continual use of coffee so affected my parents that they tried roasting wheat and barley, then ground it in the coffee-mill, as a substitute for coffee.

"But it did not taste right and they went back to coffee again. That was long before Postum was ever heard of. I continued to use coffee until I was 27, and when I got into office work, I began to have nervous spells. Especially after breakfast I was so nervous I could scarcely attend to my correspondence.

"At night, after having coffee for supper, I could hardly sleep, and on rising in the morning would feel weak and nervous.

"A friend persuaded me to try Postum. My wife and I did not like it at first, but later when boiled good and strong it was fine. Now we would not give up Postum for the best coffee we ever tasted.

"I can now get good sleep, am free from nervousness and headaches. I recommend Postum to all coffee drinkers."

BLAME R. R. FOR FIRE

CANADIAN NORTHERN CHARGED WITH SETTING FIRE THAT BURNED BAUDETTE.

THE TOTAL DEATH LIST IS 29

Blaze Started in Canada Crept Underground, Say Probers.—Damage Placed at Five Million Dollars.

St. Paul. — The Canadian Northern Railway is held responsible for the fire which destroyed Baudette, in a report made to General C. C. Andrews, forestry commissioner, by Geo. Chapin of St. Paul and Frank Curtis of Roosevelt, who have been investigating the origin of the forest fires in Minnesota for the last two weeks.

The report says there is sufficient evidence to show that a fire was set by the railroad on the Canadian side during the latter part of July. This fire worked south to the North branch of Baudette river and north to Rainy river, covering about eight square miles. It burned up to the west side of Baudette and lay smouldering until Oct. 7, when it was fanned by a terrific wind and led to the disaster.

About the same time a fire was set on the right of way just east of the Winter Road river. This fire worked east three miles and about two miles back on each side of the track, where it connected with the fire which was started on the Baudette side of the river.

Fires Smoulder in Moss.

This fire also lay smouldering in the moss, gradually eating into the root of the timber and felling it, making conditions favorable for another fire. Four other fires also were started in this vicinity in August, covering from one to eight square miles. These fires were also fanned into life Oct. 7 and resulted in the terrible disaster.

The report says the country through which the fire traveled is wild and thinly settled. It has been lumbered and slashed extensively for the last six years, and the accumulation of slashing was lying on the ground. In ordinary years it is very wet, making it impossible for a fire to travel any great distance. As a result a thick growth of moss covered the accumulation of long-decaying vegetation. This year the country experienced a drought. The swamp and moss became dry, and as a result the ground formed a peat, holding the fire below the surface and keeping it smouldering during the entire summer. The report said that if there had been no slashings on the ground the fires could have been choked.

Prosecutions Are Pending.

Eight prosecutions against the Canadian Northern railway for allowing combustible material on the right of way are now pending in the district court of Beltrami county. The railroad is fighting the constitutionality of the law. If the state wins in these cases, the forestry department plans to bring action against the Canadian Northern for sixteen other fires alleged to have been set since July.

The loss from the recent fires is estimated at about $5,000,000 by the agents of the forestry commission. Of this, property valued at $1,700,000 was destroyed in the towns.

The exact number of dead is placed at 29. This is below the last reports sent from Baudette which placed the loss of life at 34. The list includes two families with seven children each, and one family with three children. There were five lumbermen and one girl, Miss Kate Jasmer, who also lost their lives.

800 Persons Homeless.

In a report to the governor, General Wood says there are 800 homeless families to be provided for. He has already arranged for the shipment of enough lumber to build 50 houses in the fire district. An administration building is nearly completed, from which all relief work will be carried on. General Wood reports there is great jealousy between Baudette and Spooner and that the relief committee will have to use great diplomacy in assisting these towns.

DULUTH FARMER FOUND DEAD.

Fresh Bullet Wound Indicates Probable Murder.

Duluth.—The dead body of a farmer named George Riley was found in the town of Lakewood, near Duluth, and a fresh bullet hole in his body revealed a probable murder. A neighboring farmer, named Joseph Schmidt, was in Duluth complaining to the county attorney about Riley about the time the authorities were notified by telephone of the finding of the body.

Riley and Schmidt have had frequent quarrels and Schmidt was arrested on suspicion of having fired the fatal shot. No charge has yet been filed against him.

Riley leaves a widow and five children.

CONFESSES BRUTAL MURDER.

Crime Committed in Farm House in Houston County.

Winona. — Developments came fast at Houston in Houston County, south of Winona, in a baffling murder mystery which was uncovered on Sunday afternoon. Chris Overby, 24 years old and son of a prominent farmer, is in the county jail at Caledonia, a self-confessed slayer of Chron Olson, aged 65, a fruit gardener who has been living alone on the outskirts of the village.

With his head beaten almost to a pulp, the recluse was found dead in bed Sunday afternoon by a neighbor who called at the farm house to inquire about his health as had been his custom. Olson has a private telephone line connecting with the residence of Knute Kassa, who called at the home Sunday morning and received the reply that Olson was asleep.

The informant gave his name as Christ Overby. Kassa visited Houston in the morning, not stopping at the house until his return trip home. There a grewsome find was made. The walls of the bedroom were spattered with blood and on the bed was the corpse of the man, distorted and disfigured. Finger prints were visible on the neck of the dead man. A trail of blood, as though made by fingers dripping with blood led to the wash basin in an adjoining room. There the hands still bloody, were wiped on a towel.

In that condition the authorities, who were immediately notified, found the interior of the little home, Coroner Phines of Caledonia, decided to hold an inquest and immediately ordered the apprehension of Overby who was missing.

He was located near his home on Oak Ridge, west of the village, and taken into custody. Before the coroner's jury he admitted his guilt, giving as his defense that Olson struck him first with a gun. He said he took it away and struck his assailant, who fell. When he attempted to arise he struck him again and then placed the bleeding body on the bed.

On Saturday the young man and his aged victim had been drinking together in the village, and they returned to the home intoxicated in the evening together. The crime took place after breakfast the following morning.

Overby Held for Murder.

Overby, aged 25 years, was arraigned before Justice A. J. Fylnn for the murder of Theron O. Hemey at Houston, on the 23rd of October, 1910. He waived examination and was held to answer for the charge of murder in the first degree to the district court at its next general term, to be held in Houston county. Intoxication was responsible for the deed.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT WARREN.

Apparatus Called From Near-By Town To Help.

Warren. — A very destructive fire in Warren caused great excitement in the town during which the local agent for the Soo line sent for a special train bearing fire-fighting apparatus, and the Great Northern agent wired Argyle, a town north of Warren, to send assistance. Thief River Falls also sent an engine.

Fire had broken out in the basement of the K. J. Taralseth & Co.'s department store, and the building and the town hall were soon in ruins. The store was valued at $25,000, with $5,000 insurance. The stock, valued at $70,000, was also destroyed. It was insured at $30,000.

The city water gave out and the firemen had to fight the flames with buckets of water. The Argyle department sent down an engine as the Warren fire engine had blown out a cylinder head. Automobiles carried the Argyle fire department to the scene in time to help in the work of protecting the other buildings in the town.

The State bank, Ed Quist, Dr. Theodore Braterud and Dr. W. S. Anderson suffered partial losses placed at $3,000, fully insured. The walls of the buildings are being torn down and the K. J. Karalseth company will rebuild at once.

The center wall of the building fell to the ground, completely covering Tom Keefe, a fireman. He was severely cut on the head and body, but will recover.

ORE VALUATION WILL STAND.

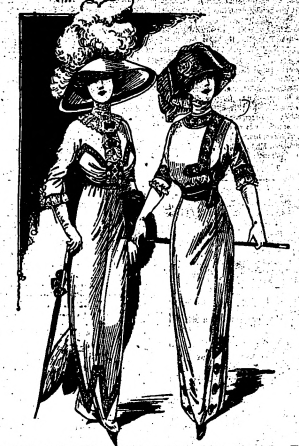
Tax Commission Upholds Individual Mineral Land Increases.

St. Paul. — The individual increase of $10,000,000.00 on the valuation of the mineral properties in upper Minnesota will be allowed to stand by the state tax commission. Objection to the increases were made by the representative of the mining companies at a conference held with the state commission. A few decreases were made, but further increases decided upon will make the total increase at $10,000,000. The mining companies had accepted the general 5 per cent. increase announced several days ago but objected to the individual increase on the ground that they were unfair.

BRYAN AT ST. PAUL.

St. Paul. — Hon. Wm. J. Bryan drew his customary big audience here. From the auditorium platform Mr. Bryan charged that former President Roosevelt, in his Ossawatomie speech, had borrowed Democratic doctrine. He claimed that the progressive legislation of the last few years was due to Democratic support, and urged his audience to vote for James Gray and Justice Thomas D. O'Brien, and gave special emphasis to the candidacy of J. L. Gieske, Democratic nominee for congressman of the Fourth district.

Made Up in Green



THE toilet at the left is of emerald green satin finished cloth. The corsage is draped by means of crosswise plaits in front, and has a deep yoke of the material which is cut in one piece with the sleeves. It is trimmed with bands of embroidery to match and with passementerie buttons. The collar and sleeve ruffles are of fine lace with jabot of the same ornamented with little knots of velvet and buckles of brilliants.

The skirt with raised waist line is made with an inverted plait in the middle of the front and is finished at the bottom with a flounce of the material cut in points at the top and headed by a band of the embroidery.

The other toilet is of moss green cheviot, or light weight cloth. The blouse is cut in one piece with the sleeves and is trimmed with applique bands of black satin which are embroidered with cord matching the gown. The guimpe and sleeve puffs are of white tulle or mousseline de soie; the girdle is of black satin fastened at the left side with a pretty knot.

The skirt has an odd tablier which forms a point at the bottom where it is bordered with large black satin buttons with loops of cord. The back and sides of the skirt are finished with a flounce headed by a band of the embroidered satin, which also trims the middle of the back extending from the top to the flounce.

PARIS TIRED OF BUTTONS

Novelties in Tailor Suits for Fall Show Smart Styles Sure to Be Popular.

A tailor suit has been observed in Paris that is as common as the chestnut leaves and which we have seen seldom in America. Ten to one it will be the suit of the autumn with us. It lends itself too readily to the cheaper style of ready-made clothes, in which it has already appeared in the huge department shops here, and yet it is very smart.

The skirt is narrow, more or less so according to the inclination, and has a bias band around the edge of a short, narrow coat. The skirt, mind you, has no bias band. It seams are lapped and stitched, and there is a row of small buttons for about six inches up the two front seams.

Paris is very tired of buttons, so these are left off in the suits made for the American trade. The skirt is about a yard and a quarter wide, but this will be enlarged by our tailors.

The coat just covers the rounded part of the hips, and its bias band runs from three to four inches wide. The shoulders are inclined to be narrow, because they are not padded, and the buttons, which go straight down the front, are large bullets of lead-colored metal, or brass if one prefers. The sleeve is long and plain, the rever short and square at the edges.

If you want to know just how the majority of smart women look at noon at Trouville, Deauvill and the boulevards you must imagine in your mind's eye this suit.

The skirt is short, showing dark gray silk stockings, with heavy clocks up the sides, and patent leather American pumps, with a flat bow, which will be replaced by heavy shoes with grap tops. A high collar attached to the blouse shows above the coat, and in the front is always a plaited frill, with lace at its one edge.

The hat is still flat and rather large, but in the next week or two it will be replaced by a tall, plaited turban of changeable velvet, bordered with fur or grebe. There is little trimming on these hats for noon wear, but for afternoon use they are repeated with the addition of a pair of Mercury wings placed directly in front and made of iridescent pin feathers.

Some Glove Hints.

Both long and short gloves will be needed for the fall, coat sleeves being long, but sleeves for dressy occasions short.

Among kids, glace, pique, cape and mocha will be most fashionable. Suede and all dull finishes will not be much worn.

In fabric gloves, chamois-finished lisle still leads in favor, the best colors being black, white and yellow.

Kid and silk gloves will be shown principally in black and white, though tan, slate, mode and, to a lesser extent, blue and green will be in the fashion.

Finally, embroidered silk gloves will continue in popularity.

EFFECTIVE FOR YOUNG GIRL

Cashmere Would Make Up Well in Model That Has Much to Recommend It.

Cashmere is selected for our model, which has a wide panel taken down back and front which is left open at sides and is edged with silk that is cut in vandykes; silk muslin fills up the opening at sides; two rows of gauging are made on the hips.

On the bodice, the front and back are cashmere edged with silk, and are tucked on the shoulders, the sides ar of muslin. Piece lace is used for the yoke and sleeves.

Materials required: Four yards cashmere 48 inches wide, two yards silk, three yards muslin 27 inches wide, one and one-fourth yard lace.

A New Silk Braid.

The woman who wants embroidered effects, but does not like arduous work, will welcome a new silk braid that looks like chain stitching. A design is stamped as for ordinary embroidery and the braid is sewed on the outlines by hand. A few filling stitches or French knot centers increase the effect of hand embroidery. These braids come in colors to match most of the new shades of dress material. They are especially effective on pongees and shantungs done in self tones.

The Unit

By JENNIE O. LOIZEAUX

Over his draughting board Howard Wiltsie leaned, quite absorbed in his drawing. He worked rapidly and correctly, his bright eye half closed to get the general effect, his good jaw thrust out more than was actually necessary. It was almost closing time, and he saw from the set of Harris' shoulders, visible at the desk beyond, that their argument was not closed. It meant some more words. Well, all right—Harris, if he was his superior, could have them, and there would be no uncertain sound to his tumpet, either.

And his expectation was correct. While they were closing their desks and getting ready for leaving, and the stenographers and clerks were chattering, fluffing at their hair, pinning on their hats, Harris, junior partner of the firm, touched him on the shoulder.

"I want a word with you, Wiltsie. Going to walk? All right, I'll ride Shank's mare, too."

The young fellow put on his coat and girded himself for the verbal fray—he was quite as determined as Wiltsie, and he was sure that, being a married man, his own wisdom was infinite. They started out into the fresh spring air, swinging along joyously enough. Suddenly Harris began.

"Confound you, anyway, Howard, for a subborn, unobliging fellow! What good are you as a friend if you won't help Madge and me out a little? What on earth are we to do with Tessie Gray on our hands the next two months if you don't be decent? What's the use of you're being Madge's second cousin if you can't help entertain her guest? And what on earth makes you think you can't come to our house party for a few weeks? I don't see! It's just as easy to come to the office from our house as from your old boarding house. What ails you?"

Wiltsie shrugged his shoulders, and stuck out his jaw again. "I like you and Madge and your charming house—you know that. But I'm not a 'shiner' in the company of the fair ones. I don't want to be too plain, but you've pestered me till I'm positively ill tempered. You've accused me of being a woman-hater—I'm not. And of being a bachelor—which I plead guilty to. If you must have it straight, I'm determined to keep on being a bachelor for some years. And I'm so dead easy, such a girl-lover, that my only safety is in flight and numbers. And another thing, Madge was my cousin before she was your wife, and I have the right to state emphatically that she's the most deadly matchmaker in my large experience. I'm thirty, and though she's three years my junior she's been trying to get me in love and married for ten solid years. And you can't deny, blinded as you are by her charms, that she has chosen Tessie Gray as the final instrument for my undoing. Not for me, thanks!"

Harris had to laugh outright. He would tell Madge that her methods were not as hidden and subtle as she imagined—it would do her good!

"You selfish old bachelor, don't you know that you don't count? You're nobody and nothing—just a lost half floating about and useless to the world. Don't yon know that the family, the two-in-one, is the unit of society? Why, man, you're a cipher!"

"All right—but I'm pretty good at backing up units. I come after, to be sure, but I at least create an interest! I'll come and see your wonder, but I warn you now that I won't marry her. Of course she also is a victim in your wife's hands, and probably unconscious of the dire intention to get her married. She won't like me. But I'll be decent—take her about some, and call anl all that, but I'll be hanged if I'll come into the mesmeric circle of a house party composed of a married couple, two engaged couples and—an extra girl! I know enough to keep out of danger. This is my corner and I'm off. So long, and tell Madge I'll come to her dinner, and be glad—but I'm on to her!"

A few evening later, groomed within an inch of his life, his blue eyes wary, and his jaw in evidence, Mr. Howard Wiltsie betook himself to the house of his employer and second cousin by marriage. The pretty house, its pretty mistress, the couples and the host were at their best. He already knew them all but Miss Tessie Gray, who fulfilled even the extravagant promises which Madge had made for her beauty and charm. The bachelor was introduced—and galvanized with surprise. The lady was like a piece of ice—to him. No fault could be found with the perfection of her manner, but neither could a ray of warmth be discovered in her.

Of course she fell to his lot at dinner—an [illegible] of talking to Coop[illegible] [illegible] to that gentleman [illegible], since his fiancee demanded his full attention. Wiltsie then tried Mabel Strand, on his other side—but she was impervious to more than a few laughing remarks chinked in between the pauses of her interest in her host, who was telling her boyhood reminiscences of John Gardner, her fiancee. Madge was plainly worried, and Tessie took pains to show her strange dislike to Wiltsie. Then that young man, bound to redeem himself with Madge, piqued by the honor-guest's coolness, laid himself out to be nice. He was very funny, indeed, and everybody laughed; he talked a lot—and well—and the girl was forced to listen, reluctantly but with attention. Harris wondered what had happened to Madge's dinner; she usually knew how to make a successful evening. He was perplexed, but he saw that his friend was rising to the situation.

After dinner, Wiltsie followed Miss Tessie Gray into the parlor, and thence to the porch. He was used to being smiled at, and the change amused him. She tried to escape, but in vain. To whom could she flee? The other men were all engaged, and she would never let herself fall pitifully back on the host or hostess. She endured his assiduous attention, but she did not thaw. He enjoyed bothering her.

After that there were parties, and a little dance, and a few picnics, and many dinners. Drawn into the current, Wiltsie could not escape—he took it good naturedly, always paired off with the girl, though Madge had tried vainly to get some other satisfactory and unattached man.

"I believe everybody in the world but Tessie and Howard are engaged," fretted Madge to her husband. "I'm worn to a frazzle. They hate each other, and yet they have to stay together. There's no other way. And he seems to take positive joy in following her about and being raptly attentive. She's horrid—and any other girl would be wild with delight. He's so good looking and clever, and he'll be a partner next year, won't he?"

Harris assented, but inwardly he was greatly amused.

A few weeks later on, after a home dinner, and when the couples had innocently enough lost themselves about the garden, the porch, anywhere to be comparatively alone, Howard Wiltsie took his banjo and sat down on the front steps at Tessie's feet. He began to strum and sing odd little songs, and to be generally entertaining.

"Don't try so hard to be nice to me! It tires you, and is quite a superfluous sacrifice! Take it more easily—you are not running half the risk you think you are. There is nothing mesmeric about me and I don't like matchmaking any better than you do, and even if I wanted to be married, I can assure you that you, of all men, are quite safe! I appreciate your bravery in thus coming into the danger zone to help out your cousin, but I assure you it's no pleasure to me to be 'entertained' so strenuously. I'm going back home."

Tears came to her flashing eyes, and before he could find a word to answer to this crushing tirade, the girl jumped to her feet and went into the house. "You can tell Madge I have a headache and don't want to be disturbed. I dislike asking you to tell a lie, but since you act them so beautifully perhaps you won't mind!"

She was gone. The young man stared a little; then he laughed. When his hostess asked for Miss Gray he coolly remarked that the young woman had a bad attack of temper and had gone to her room. He himself waited until he got a word with Harris in the den. He went straight to the point.

"Did you tell Madge what I said about her matchmaking and all that stuff that night coming home from the office?"

"Why—yes, I did. I tried to keep still, but the night Tessie came, Madge was talking about you, and of course—"

"Being a good husband, you had to tell. When and where did you tell her?—and where was Miss Gray?"

"Gone to bed. Madge and I were on the porch. Why?"

Wiltsie said he only "wanted to know." Then he went home—or pretended to. He knew Tessie Gray pretty well by now. When he was sure the others would be asleep, he went back to Harris' garden and sat down in the little summer house and waited. It was very late, nearly twelve, but a very warm night. Would she by chance come out? She was of course too angry to sleep. Howard Wiltsie was a good guesser.

Evidently she had recovered from her rage, for she was coming down the path, occasionally holding her handkerchief to her eyes. When she was almost at the summer house, he went out to meet her. She jumped, but she did not scream. She looked as angry as she could. He faced her, looking straight into the tear-filled eyes.

"Are the tears for me, Tessie? or are they—for yourself?"

She stared, not understanding him, her rage and resentment giving way before that new thing she saw in his eyes—a new and welcome thing.

"Hasn't is dawned on you, Tessie, that I'm—in love with you? All that idiotic stuff I told Harries and which you heard him drivel over to Madge—was before I knew you. Dear, don't you see that?"

She nodded, and then he took courage—and both her willing hands.

"And don't you see that you—love me, too?—and that Harris was right about my being a cipher?"

She nodded again—against his shoulder, very comfortably. And again in the history of man and woman one-and-one made one, the unit of society.

A Chat On County Division.

We do not have our opinion on county division written by an expert in either Thief River, or Red Lake Falls, and we are not representing the interest of either city, but what we consider the people living on this reservation and what is best for them.

There is no use denying the fact that this part of Red Lake county are heavy borrowers of money and will continue to be for a number of years. What we all desire to see is the lowest rate of interest that we can get, and the only way you can get money at a low rate of interest of eastern capitol is to have a good credit. All the farm loans in this part of the country are eastern mens money, and as soon as you divide this county you cut off all competition between the banks of Red Lake Falls and Thief River Falls in the making of farm loans, and up goes the rate of interest.

As a matter of fact the Merchants Bank of Red Lake Falls has made more farm loans on the eleven townships than all of the banks in Thief River Falls combind. If you do not believe this, ask any well posted banker, from Thief River Falls, if it is not a fact. Furthermore ninty per cent of these loans was made by the bank at Red Lake Falls AFTER the farmers had TRIED to get their loan in Thief River Falls. If you do not believe this, we can refer you to hundreds of farmers on this reservation that will tell you that this is true.

Now my farmer friends do you feel that you are ready to stop this competition by divideing this county? If you do vote for division. If you want to continue to get accommodations in Red Lake Falls that you can not get in Thief River Falls, vote down this division schem. It is not the fight of either Thief River Falls, or Red Lake Falls, so far as you are concerned, but it is YOUR FIGHT, and if you think you can afford the luxury of county division at this time vote for it, carry it, and when you run up "against it" in Thief River Falls, as hundreds of you have in the past five years, we will have the satisfaction of saying: "we told you so." It is up to you!

The publishers of the Eleven Towns have allowed themselves and their sheet to be used as a "cats paw" to botray and sell out the best interests of the farmers on the eleven towns, for the purpose of giving a few men office, and booming a city for county seat twenty five miles away. This is a brand of dirty work that will reap its own reward, and in less than six months you will hear them squealing, like the title of a litter of fourteen pigs, and saying: "we are not geting a fair deal." Then you can look back at your files and read the dirty stuff that you have published in this campaign and say: "I am reaping as I have sown." Judas sold Jesus Christ for thirty pieces of silver, and we hope you did not cut on prices when you sold out the interests of the poor homesteaders on this reservation, to the bankers and politicions of Thief River Falls.

A farmer made the remark to us that he thought Pro. Hay was a pretty good speaker for a man that was 127 years old. He figured out his age by adding together the number of years that he had lived in each of the different counties of the state before he came to Red Lake county. That started us to figuring, and we began to figure where he was going to get the large number of votes that he was talking about on the south side of the division line. The only way we could figure it out was that they might go down into Lambert and tell them fellows that they had ought to give them a vote for division in exchange for their help to get the Soo railroad built down through their territory, instead of between the Red Lake and Clearwater Rivers.

Two Dimensional Vision.

Most people do not know that they ought to be very thankful for having both eyes in one plane instead of having them one on each side of the head. If the latter obtained no one could tell that an object had more than two dimensions until experience and the sense of touch educated the brain to it. Any one can try it for himself. Shut one eye and look at different objects. They appear flat. With binocular vision two views of each object are obtained and neither is exactly like the other, so the idea of depth comes in.

The most easily shown example of the difference is as follows: Take a ring and hold it about two feet from the eye. With one eye closed it will take at least five trials to thrust a pencil through the ring, whereas with both eyes open it can be done on the first trial.

All animals with eyes on opposite sides of the head labor under this disadvantage, as do all insects. It is called two dimensional vision, as the idea of depth is not possible. All this is on account of the image thrown on the retina of the eye being in only two dimensions.—Philadelphia Press.

Woodcarvers of Burma.

The woodcarvers of Burma are the most skilled in the world. They select and cut the best logs along the Irawaddy river in the dry season, and these are thrown into the shrunken stream. There they lie until the freshets of the rainy season lift them and bear them down to the populous cities below.

Then huge elephants are employed to drag the heavy logs from the stream and take them to the sawmills. They are then worked up into timbers suitable for the woodcarvers. The carvers use the figure of Buddha or some other emblem concerning the Buddhistic worship in the greater part. The details are worked out in a careful way.

Sterns of boats are carved in an elaborate manner, and some of them would be worth a fortune in this country. The prow of the boat is usually ornamented with a figurehead of very elaborate carving. The art of woodcarving is handed down in the families in Burma, the children being taught by their fathers.—Wichita Eagle.

Distilled Gold.

The investigations of a French chemist show that gold in the electric furnace boils freely at a temperature of 2,400 degrees C. In two or three minutes, it is said, from 100 to 150 grams of gold pass into the state of vapor. In condensing upon a cold body this golden vapor forms filiform masses and cubic crystals. At its temperature of ebullition gold dissolves a little carbon, which at the time of resolidification is deposited in the form of graphite. In an alloy of gold and copper, copper distills first. In an alloy of gold and tin, the tin distills more abundantly than the gold, and when a large quantity of these mixed vapors is taken the tin burns on contact with the oxygen of the air, forming oxide of tin, colored purple by a fine dust of condensed gold. This is one method of preparing the color known as "purple of Cassius."—Harper's Weekly.

Japanese Children.

The Japanese child is exceedingly shy and retiring before its elders, and girls are taught to practice this more than boys. In the morning [illegible] they are up the [illegible] parents in turn. [illegible] the ground and say "Good [illegible]" or "How is your honorable [illegible]" Before a meal they lift the chopsticks to their foreheads and bow in thanks, whether their parents are present or not, for the meal set before them. Before going out to school or elsewhere and on returning they must kneel before the mother and bow. When father or mother go out the children must go to the porch, kneel down and say "Deign to go forth" or "Honorable return [illegible]" be. As soon as infants can bow their heads the nurses train them in these respectful salutations.—Exchange.

Truly Answered.

Boats trading in the Medway in former years rejoiced in rather curious names, and the following was only one of the many amusing incidents resulting from this:

A boat named What's That to You? passing a dockyard at one time was hailed as usual by the coast guardsman.

"Boat ahoy! Your captain's name?"

"Captain X."

"And what are you laden with?"

"Coals."

"Where bound for?"

"Chatham."

"Ship's name?"

"What's That to You?"

"I asked you the name of the ship."

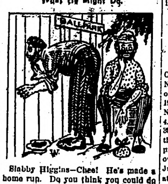
"What's That to You?"

"You shall be reported for your [illegible]" roared the coast guardsman. [illegible] he put the question, and, [illegible] same reply, the boat was [illegible] where she was [illegible] boats were seen [illegible] The officials, as they [illegible] with his authority [illegible]

Political Sessions of 1844.

[illegible] elements of picturesque [illegible] drama in the politics of the [illegible] the war time which are lacking nowadays. Marion Harland tells in her autobiography of a Whig rally which makes the political meetings of today seem tame, cut and dried affairs. It was in 1844, the year of Clay's defeat, and feeling ran high. At that particular time John Tyler was perhaps the most unpopular man in the Union. In the progress of his review of national affairs the orator at last came to the hated name. Instantly uprose the majestic figure of Captain Cock, the local eccentric, clad in the scarlet English hunting coat he invariably wore. "The Lord have mercy upon the nation!" he cried, his voice solemn with wrath and sonorous with the mint juleps for which the Bell was noted. "Fellow citizens, I always cry to high heaven for mercy upon this country when John Tyler's name is mentioned! Amen and amen!"

What He Might Do.



Slabby Higgins—Chee! He's made a home run. Do you think you could do that?

Wabbly Walkins—I could if I had a dog after me.

The Brain is Very Adaptable.

Each vocation makes a different call upon the brain and develops faculties and qualities peculiar to itself, so that as the various professions, trades and specialties multiply the brain takes on new adaptive qualities, thus giving greater variety and strength to civilization as a mass, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine.

When the world was young the brain of man was very primitive, because the demand upon it was largely for self protection and the acquisition of food, which called only for the development of its lower, its animal part. As civilization advanced, however, there was a higher call upon the brain and a more varied development until today, in the highest civilization, it has become exceedingly complex.

Science and Cheese.

A medical authority kindly assures [illegible] that as long as cheese isn't decayed [illegible] not affect the health of the [illegible]. This is a fact that we have [illegible] for a considerable time. But how is the ordinary cheese epicure to detect the difference unless he waits for results?

There is cheese so thoroughly disguised in the costume and aroma of decay that its proper standing on the sanitary testing table would puzzle a conjurer.

For instance, there is the brand known as limburger.

But why pursue the subject?—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

It might not make much difference to you who is elected to county office, but it will make a differ nce to you if this county is divided. Turn out to election

When the Hen Crows.

Willsford in his "Nature Secrets" (1658) writes:

"Beasts eating greedily and more than they used to do prenotes foul weather, and all small cattle that seem to rejoyce with playing and sporting themselves foreshews rain. Oxen and all kinds of neat, if you do at any time observe them to hold up their heads and snuffle in the air or lick their hooves or their bodies against the hair, expect then rainy weather. Asses or mules rubbing often their ears or braying much more than usually they are accustomed presages rain. Hogs crying and running up and down with hay or litter in their mouths foreshews a storm to be near at hand. The little sable beast (called a flea) if much thirsting after blood it argues rain. The cock if he crows in the daytime very much or at sunsetting or when he is at roost at unusual hours, as at 9 or 10, expect some change of weather and that suddenly, but from fair to foul or the contrary. But when the hen crows good men expect a storm within doors and without."

Lured Into Bathing.

In a railway carriage that the other day a London medical man told a good story which had come within his own experience. A mother was frequently bringing her child to him for treatment, but the doctor could discover nothing amiss except its need of a good wash. She was certain the infant was suffering from some terrible complaint and begged the doctor to do his best. He prescribed a daily wash with the water in which potatoes had been peeled. Never suspecting that this was merely a ruse to get the child washed, the mother followed the instructions to the letter. Rosy cheeks appeared, and a clean, healthy looking child gladdened the mother's heart. She sounded the doctor's praises everywhere and advised other mothers to test the efficacy of potato water. It never occurred to her that precisely the same results would have followed the daily application of soap and water.

A Spanish Ship Treasure.

In 1762 the largest bulk of treasure ever taken from a ship at sea was brought into London. It was the whole of the cargo of the Spanish ship Hermione, captured on May 21 by H. M. S. Active. The Hermione surrendered to the Active without an action, and the treasure was landed at Portsmouth and conveyed to London in twenty decorated wagons, with British colors over Spanish and an escort party of sailors. The strange procession reached London on Aug. 12, the day on which George IV. was born. On being sold the treasure realized £519,705 1s. 0d., and the share of the officers and men of the Active was as follows: The captain, £65,053 13s. 9d.; three commissioned officers, each £13,004 14s. 1d.; eight warrant officers, each £4,336 3s. 2d.; twenty petty officers, each £1,806 1s. 8d.; 158 seamen, each £485 5s. 4d.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Jury Penalties.

Nowadays no penalty is enforced when the twelve men chosen to form the jury are unable to agree upon a verdict. Formerly, however, a refractory juryman was committed to prison and the verdict of the eleven was taken. In the reign of King Edward III. the judges decided that a verdict given by a majority was a nullity and recommended that the judges should carry the jury about with them in a cart till they should agree. The old custom that jurors should fast until they had agreed to their verdict prevailed long, but was mercifully relaxed somewhat in Tudor times, and during Queen Elizabeth's reign a banquet was usually given to the jury by the successful party to a suit.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

THE GIFT OF GAB.

Why Stephenson Thought There Was No Power Equal to It.

When George Stephenson was visiting the seat of Sir Robert Peel at Drayton on one occasion, says the writer of "Famous British Engineers," there happened to be present Dr. Buckland, the scientist, and Sir William Follett, the famous advocate.

Stephenson discussed with Dr. Buckland one of his favorite theories as to the formation of coal and, though undoubtedly in the right, was ultimately vanquished by the arguments and oratory of the doctor, who was a better master of tongue [illegible]nce than himself. Next morning while pondering over his defeat in the solitude of the garden he was accosted by Sir William Follett and confided to that gentleman the story of his failure.

Sir William, acquainted with the details of the matter in dispute, agreed to take up the case and soon afterward attacked Dr. Buckland on the subject. A long discussion ensued, in which the man of law completely silenced the man of science, who was at last compelled to own himself vanquished. Sir Robert Peel, highly amused at this example of "tit for tat," then turned to the inventor and inquired, with a laugh:

"And what do you say on this matter, Mr. Stephenson?"

"Why," he replied, "I will only say this—that of all the powers above and under the earth there seems to me no power equal to the gift of the gab."

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

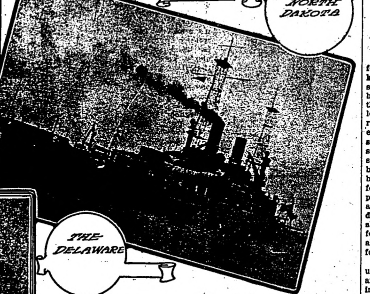
The NATION'S NEW DREADNAUGHTS

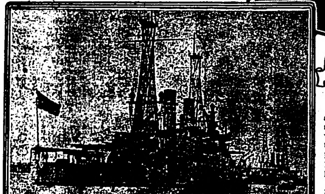
THE SOUTH CAROLINA

AN AMERICAN "DREADNAUGHT"

THE NORTH DAKOTA



THE DELAWARE



THE MICHIGAN

PRESIDENT TAFT recently declared that this nation ought to build two battleships of the "Dreadnaught" class every year until the Panama canal is completed and open for traffic. After that water way is completed and the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States are in effect brought nearer together in a naval sense—that is, it is made possible for our warships to get from one coast to the other more quickly in the event of trouble—it might, in the president's judgment, be advisable to slow down in the matter of battleship building. Perhaps after the canal diggers have cut the continent in two it will suffice to build one battleship a year, but for the time being two a year—and Dreadnaughts at that—are needed, in the opinion of the administration.

Now "Dreadnaughts" are a comparative novelty in the United States navy and for all that there are several of these vessels flying the Stars and Stripes, and more building, there is a considerable share of the public that has never grasped the significance of these new-style sea warriors. To put the matter in a nutshell, it may be explained that a "dreadnaught" differs from the ordinary battleship principally by being larger and heavier and carrying an increased number of guns of a big caliber. The term "Dreadnaught," it will be understood, has come to stand for a whole class or family of battleships rather than for any individual vessel.

All the same, this new nickname for the latest fashion in floating fortresses did originate with one particular vessel—the first of her type. The pioneer "Dreadnaught" was a British product and she blazed a new path in battleship design. Prior to the advent of this new-pattern peacemaker the average battleship, whatever her nationality, had been armed with 12-inch or 13-inch breech-loading rifles and with a variety of less powerful hitters, including 8-inch, 5-inch and 3-inch guns, and so on down through the whole catalogue of naval weapons to the one-pounders. The British naval architects and shipbuilders when they produced the original "Dreadnaught," pointed the way to a new policy. In arming the new style vessel they cut down the number of guns of lesser importance—particularly the weapons of intermediate size, such as the 8-inch and the 5-inch, and placed almost all the responsibility for offense and defense on guns of the largest size.

The whole naval world was immensely impressed with the naval novelty which John Bull produced and all the leading nations, including the United States, straightway set about following his example by constructing such ships of their own. Thus it came about that the name "Dreadnaught," which originally applied to only one ship, came to stand for the whole family of "all-big-gun" ships, no matter under what flag such a vessel might be in service. The United States now has four battleships of the "Dreadnaught" class in service; two more will probably be ready to join the big fleet within a year; another pair are under construction, and yet others will be contracted for this winter. It is costing a pretty penny, too, to assemble such an array of heavyweight fighters, for each of these largest-size vessels costs complete upward of $12,000,000. Likewise does it make a big tug at Uncle Sam's purse-strings to keep these huge armor-clads in active service, for each of them requires the services of nearly one thousand officers and men—half as many again as were required for the largest of the old-style battleships.

The first American "Dreadnaughts," the battleships South Carolina and Michigan, are yet so new that few of the people even in our large seacoast cities have had a peep at them. They are sister ships—that is, exact duplicates of one another—and are 450 feet in length and 80 feet beam or width. Each of these battleships carries eight of the big 12-inch guns arranged in pairs in turrets. This is just double the number of the big barkers to be found on any of the battleships that were the accepted thing up to a few years ago. Neither battleship has any other weapons except the three-inch and three-pounder guns that are provided to repel torpedo attacks.

It was only a few months ago that the second pair of "Dreadnaughts," twins, made their appearance in navy. There are the Delaware and North Dakota. Each vessel is 510 feet in length and 85 feet beam, and they go their predecessors one better in the matter of "shooting irons," for each has five turrets instead of four and carries a total of ten instead of eight of the 12-inch guns. Moreover, the Delaware and the North Dakota have each a powerful secondary battery made up of fourteen of the effective 5-inch guns. Next year will see another brace of "Dreadnaughts," the Utah and Florida, take their places among the ships of the line. They are almost identical in size with the Delaware and North Dakota. After them will come the Arkansas and Wyoming—each 554 feet in length and 93 feet beam and carrying a full dozen of the 12-inch guns, but it will be several years ere these record-breakers are ready to report for duty.

Next to the importance of providing fighting ships for Uncle Sam's navy is the task of preparing the ships and the men who handle them for the work they are intended for—fighting the battles of the country, should the dread specter at any time descend upon us. The thrilling experiences on board big ships playing at war are interestingly described in the following account written by one who witnessed the recent naval evolutions.

The plain red pennant for "commence firing" was hanging like a stain from all yards. "Load!" from the ordnance officer. The stains glide down, to the shrill peals of the stand-by bells. Never stood men so braced and rigid as those spotters, staring through the soft rubber eyepieces of their binoculars, as the ordnance officer gravely syllabled the final range and deflection, as he got them from the substation prophet, who had been advised by the performance of the ranging shots: "The range is 10,500; deflection 47."

It is the last suspense. Slowly, far below, the moving turrets begin to nose upward their guns like intelligent creatures. The big fo'castle deck is an empty, slim, flat, cigar-shaped finger, lazily dealing forward slippery ruffs of whiteness. Foam oozes up complacent around the anchor chains, and your eyes rest unwittingly on a four-masted schooner, a passenger steamship with a red funnel, astern the waiting targets. Every living sinew scattered on our faraway decks is transfixed—on the bridge screen the skipper's arms, bright with their four gold stripes, the midshipman on watch with the nickeled stadimeter at his eyes, the white bluejackets in boats on the superstructure, some with cameras poised—all leveled to the same trenchant awe. Vague murmurs, not quite a shouting, rise; the rumble of a belated loading hoist, the hoarse hiss of air blasts clearing the bores. The nerve-racking tsung of a primer discharged in some breech, with the bravado of utter preparedness. Choking smoke clouds vomit up over us from the crater of the forward smoke pipe, with the heat of a Turkish bath.

"Fire!"—and all around on the rails of our cage snarl out the buzzers.

All the sea to starboard goes ribbed and scittering, as if under the first blow of a tornado.

"Knots ten right." (Deflection.) "Down 600." (Range.) "Knots six left." "Down 300." "Salvo!" You miss, or cannot remember after, the exact shouts of the spotters, the key to the actual marksmanship, cried out as the geyser-gardens rise, and, transformed, as they echo in the substation, into the craft that guides the great spurts to bloom out where we all hunger for them to be—bunched together and hiding the target with their spray.

"The Georgia's shooting at our screen." That last one winged her." You catch such feverish comments between times, slowly grasping, too, that the yards and angles of range and deflection keep dwindling in size, as shouted. "Hit!" comes, now and then, in the climax like a hammer blow; and as the four-minute eternity ends on the long alarm bell for cease firing, you hear, like a man coming out of a trance, the ordnance officer calmly observing that the deflection wasn't a knot out all the time, but d——n that forward turret for hanging fire so that those poison fumes hid the splashes. You are coughing, in a first remembrance of their strange, acrid, burning strangulation.

The run is over, the spectacle and the human burden of it delivered, as the order is passed to call up all divisional officers to report any misfires.

Swinging out now to the targets, hungrily searching them for shell holes, the throng of officers on the quarterdeck vent their relaxed tension—"Our dispersal was good, but the rangefinder read 500 yards over. That's always the fault. And half the time it figures under." Or you hear, "A difference of 30 per cent. in range makes a difference of 300 per cent. in the difficulty of spotting." One learns that the forward twelves hung fire because water splashed the sights. We discern three hits in our target—none in any of the other three, glory be!—picking them reluctantly from rents made by the seas; as the repair boats, putting out from each ship of us, set their half-naked crews struggling with the mast and screens, herding the precious canvases aboard the flagship, for judgment by all umpires assembled.

POULTRY

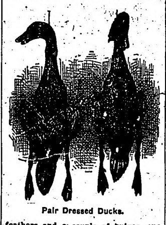
KILLING DUCKS FOR MARKET

Two Good Methods Are Being Successfully Used by Some of the Largest Raisers.

There are two methods of dressing ducks for market, by dry picking and by scalding. Both of these methods are good and are being successfully employed by the largest raisers. Some have a preference for dry picking and others for scalding, and it becomes only a matter of taste which method is used. When birds are dressed by scalding, they should be dipped several times, or until the feathers come out easily. The back should be dipped in the water first. After scalding, wipe them as dry as possible with a sponge and pick the breast feathers first.

A bird when dressed for market has left on it the feathers on the wing, the tall feathers and the feathers on head and neck. The legs are left on, and generally, the birds are not drawn.

The process of dry picking is considered the simpler of the two methods, and one who is accustomed to the work can readily dress three dozen birds a day. The picker's outfit consists of a chair, a box for the feathers and a couple of knives, one knife being dull and the other being sharp-pointed and double-edged for bleeding. The bird is taken between the knees, the bill held open with the left hand, and a cut made across the roof of the mouth just below the eyes. The bird is then stunned by striking its head against a post or some hard substance. The picker seats himself in the chair with the bird in his lap, its head held firmly between one knee and the box. The feathers are carefully sorted while picking; the pinfeathers are thrown away and the body feathers with the down are thrown into the box. Care should be taken about this, as the feathers from each bird will weigh about two ounces and will quite pay for the picking.



Pair Dressed Ducks.

The dull knife and the thumb are used to remove the long pinfeathers, and this should be done without tearing the skin. The down can usually be rubbed off by slightly moistening the hand and holding the skin tight. Often some of the pin feathers cannot be taken out without tearing and disfiguring the skin; when such is the case they should be shaved off. Seven or eight minutes is all the time necessary to dress a bird.

After the birds are picked they should be carefully washed and plumped by placing in a tank or barrel of ice water. They are hardened in this ice water and given a rounded and full appearance.

They are then packed in barrels or boxes and shipped to market. The first or bottom layer is packed with backs down; a layer of ice is then placed over them, and all other layers are packed with the breasts down, a layer of ice being over each layer of ducks. The top of the box or barrel is then rounded off with ice and covered with burlap. A barrel will hold about three dozen birds. Some raisers use boxes for shipping and have the empties returned free.

Size of Eggs.

The size of the egg is chiefly controlled by the breed or by selection of layers of large eggs. In a number of tests at experiment stations slight differences in the size of eggs have been noted with varying rations and environment, but this cannot be attributed to anything more specific than the general development and vigor of the fowls. Pullets at the beginning of the laying period lay an egg decidedly smaller than those produced at a later stage in life. The average food value of the large egg is slightly greater per pound than that of the small eggs, because of a smaller percentage of shell in the former.

Separate Fowls Into Bunches.

If convenient separate the fowls into several bunches. They will lay more eggs than if crowded together in one house. For instance if a hundred hens are kept, divide them into four or five flocks and have a separate house and apartment for each flock.

Unprofitable Fowls.

Where fowls are unprofitable, the failure can usually be ascribed to three causes, which are poor birds, poor care and improper food unwisely fed.

DOCTORS ADVISED OPERATION—DECIDED TO TRY GREAT KIDNEY REMEDY

I want to tell you in a few words what your Swamp-Root did for me, believing that my testimony may do some other suffering person a great deal of good.

About six years ago, I was dangerously ill, consulted three doctors, all of whom said I had kidney trouble. One of the doctors analyzed my urine and reported that I had gravel, and further said that in order to regain my health and life, an operation would be necessary. I did not want to be operated on as I was afraid that I would not recover. Someone told me of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root and said it was a reliable medicine for kidney trouble, so I decided to try it and went to Mr. Rose, the druggist, at 303 Central Ave., Minneapolis, and bought a bottle, took it, noticed results and continued taking it until I was entirely cured.

Having been free from any kidney trouble for over six years, I consider that I am absolutely cured and know that Swamp-Root has the credit.

I never fail to tell my friends about your remedy, as I believe it is the best of its kind. Your U & O Ointment is also very good. We are never without a jar in our house.

Yours very truly,
MRS. MARGARET E. ANDERSON,

The Christian village of Hombo in Africa is a proof of the power of the gospel. At daybreak every morning the horn is blown and the people assemble at the king's house to hear the word of God read, and to praise and pray. Witchcraft and superstition have fallen under the power of the gospel, and the heathens are taking knowledge of it. Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

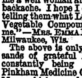
Milwaukee, Wis.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me a well woman, and I would like to tell the whole world of it. I suffered from female trouble and fearful pains in my back. I had the best doctors and they all decided that I had a tumor in addition to my female trouble, and advised an operation. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman and I have no more backache. I hope I can help others by telling them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—MRS. EMMA IMSE, 333 First St., Milwaukee, Wis.



The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

The Office Cat

By TEMPLE BAILEY

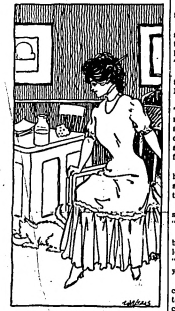
Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

The judge had always looked upon Miss Staley as a machine. Every morning she took his dictation for an hour and later she brought the letters to be signed. That was the beginning and the end of their intercourse. The judge was a very busy man, and it was only when some one interrupted his routine that he gave exasperated attention. Expertness was the price of indifference. Hence the first time he saw the human side of Miss Staley it came as something of a shock.

She was feeding the office cat. That forlorn feline, as far back as the judge could remember, had been a thin-bodied reproach to the community. There was a tradition that she lived by catching rats. But such living was evidently precarious, for she had always gone about lean and lank, and somewhat plaintive. On warm days she took her airings in a restricted back court, but in cold weather she curled herself, apologetically, near a radiator in a corner of the hall, subject always to the moods of the janitor.

Today, however, things were changed. There was a bottle of milk on Miss Staley's desk and her sponge cup had been converted into a feeding dish, from which the cat ate ravenously while the little lady watched her with a tender smile on her lips and a tired relaxing of her slender figure which made her seem, for the first time, to the judge's eyes exquisitely feminine.

The judge's post of observation was his window, which looked across an airshaft into Miss Staley's small room, where a typewriter and a great oak desk hobnobbed with a pot of pansies on the sill.



The Cat Ate Ravenously.

Moved by a sudden impulse, he raised his window and motioned, and the girl came blushing to hers.

"I couldn't help it," she confessed, across the space; "she is such a poor little creature."

"Why didn't some of us men think of it?" the judge demanded. "We are selfish—"

"Oh, but men are so busy," was her defense.

"We aren't much busier than you."

"No, but a woman—oh, it's a woman's privilege to do such things, isn't it?"

The judge liked that. So many women of his own world seemed to have forgotten the claims of compassion, and at times the judge, remembering his own mother and her gracious personality, had yearned for some evidence of brooding tenderness.

He had certainly not expected to find it in his office girl. Yet here was Miss Staley looking after a distressed animal as his own lady-mother would have done, feeding it and making a bed for it in a paper box; and saying, as that dear woman would have said, that "men were too busy" and that this was "a woman's privilege."

He thought about it so much after he left the office that the next day Miss Staley was surprised by a large parcel, upon the delivery of which the judge came over to make explanations.

"It's a basket for the cat. That old box doesn't look in keeping with the rest of the furniture."

He had chosen it of sober brown wicker, and there were two linen covers for the cushion, to be washed weekly.

"Oh, Pussykin, Pussykin," Miss Staley rejoiced, "you won't quite know what to do with such magnificence."

But her eyes were shining as she thanked him. "Now she can keep her white fur. It is hard for her, poor thing, when there are so many ashes."

The screen made such an effective hiding place that no one but the judge and Miss Staley knew of the good fortune that had come to the office cat. It furnished them, too, with a little secret and delightful interest, and brought into the judge's somewhat staid bachelor life a freshness which was a relief from the stale excitements of late suppers and showgirls which seemed to satisfy his clubfellows.

Reverence for women had been instilled into the judge by his mother, but he had found few who had justified it. It was a real joy to discover the depths of Miss Staley's nature. He had to go about it slowly, for she permitted no cessation of their strict business relations. The only subject which he dared to discuss with her informally was the office cat. Never did a feline acquire importance more suddenly. It became a daily occurrence for the judge to step in and say good morning to "Pussykin." He put her milk on the office expense account, experimented with prepared foods, and furnished fresh and dried supplies of catnip, until at last, when the one-time starving took her place beside the pot of pansies on Miss Staley's window, she was a joy to behold.

Thus all went well until one cold morning, when Miss Staley came in for dictation. The judge saw that her usual self-possession had forsaken her. He gave her three letters before she broke down, and then she wrung her hands and said, wistfully, like a child: "Oh, I've lost my cat."

"How," the judge sat up, "you don't mean—?"

"Yes, I do. I haven't seen her for two days. The janitor has had it in for me ever since I told him that if I heard him beating his boy again I would report him to the police."

"Well," the judge stated, "he will find out that I—"

The janitor, after much compulsion, admitted that he had carried the cat to the edge of the city, and had dropped her near the ash dump. "She was mine," was his defense.

"I will get you another cat," was the way the judge tried to comfort Miss Staley.

But Miss Staley shook her head. "Oh, no, you mustn't. I think the reason I liked this one was because she was alone, and nobody seemed to care for her, and since I came here—among strangers—I know how it feels."

Then, lest she should seem to claim his sympathy, she turned it off with a little laugh. "But I have enough to eat—"

"As if that sufficed," the judge soliloquized, when she had left him. "Why what she needs is—love—"

The suddenness of the revelation brought him up with a jerk. "Oh, look here," he admonished himself, "you mustn't think of such a thing, you know."

But he did think of it, and the outcome was an invitation to Miss Staley to go with him that afternoon in his car to hunt for the office cat. Under stress of circumstances, Miss Staley consented. They did not find the cat, but the judge found out where Miss Staley lived.

During a second search, the judge discovered that Miss Staley's name was Margaret, and on the third trip he had the joy of buying her a bunch of violets.

The fourth day Miss Staley declined to go with him. "I am busy, and I am afraid it's of no use to look further," she said.

The judge wasted the next day in meditation, and having come to a decision, he went back late to his office to look over a case that was coming up the next day. Thus it happened that, at midnight, he heard in the hall an unmistakable "mew."

He was out of his room like a shot, to find before Miss Staley's closed portal a shivering, foot-sore creature who dragged herself to him over the stone floor.

"Why, Pussykin, Pussykin," he said, and petted her and carried her back to his office, and made her comfortable beside his radiator. Then he telephoned to the corner lunchroom for a bottle of milk and a box of fried oysters, and they had their late supper together, happily.

The rapture of Miss Staley the next morning was his reward. But he was not content to let it end there. "We've got to plan it out," he said, firmly, and shut the door of Miss Staley's sanctum and sat down and faced her, while the regenerated Pussykin purred at their feet. "That cat can't stay here—it isn't really businesslike, you know—"

"I know." Miss Staley's tone was deprecating. "But I live in a boarding house, and—"

"I don't," said the judge.

"You mean," her glance met his, "that you want her?"

"I want both of you," the judge clared, bluntly; "my house is empty, and my heart is empty—Margaret."

When they planned their wedding journey the judge suggested England in general, and Cheshire in particular.

"Because of the cheese?" was Miss Staley's demand.

"Because of the cats," was the whimsical response.

So away they went, and they were not missed greatly by Pussykin, who was absorbed in raising a snowy family in unparalelled ease and opulence.

START DUE TO AN ACCIDENT

Steinfeldt, Star Third Baseman of Chicago Cubs, Gives Credit for Career to Door Mat.

BY HARRY STEINFELDT.

(Copyright, 1910, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

If my father had not stepped over a rug in his office I never would have been a professional ball player. It happened this way. I had been working for an ice machine concern. I had played baseball as a boy in Texas, but never thought of it as a means of making a living, nor had I any intention of becoming a professional. It was fun for me to play ball and I never lost a chance to get into the game. I was a pitcher and catcher and shortstop, but mostly a shortstop, around Fort Worth. Then I came to St. Louis and got a job with the ice machine people, to learn the business expecting to go into that line of work.

My father had his own plant in Texas and he wrote me to come home and go to work in the office. Visitors came in tracking mud across the floor and father told me to put a mat in front of the door for them to wipe their feet upon. It happened that a couple of days later he hurried into the office, stepped over the mat and started to work, I caught him by the arm and pointed to the mat and jokingly reminded him of the fact he had forgotten to use it. He was worried about something else and told me if I didn't like the way he did to work somewhere else. I flared up and told him I would, and went out to hustle for myself. It happened that there was a baseball tournament at Longview, Tex., and someone offered me money to take a team up to play seven games. We had a guarantee of expnses and we won five straight games—McAllister, now a catcher in the Eastern league, pitching all five. Coming back we met the Houston team on the train and their shortstop was hurt, so they offered me a job. Then next year I went to Denham to play with the Paris team, and before long I had a hundred dollars. The Fort Worth shortstop broke his arm soon afterward and I was asked to fill in until he was able to be back on the job. He never got back on the job, for I worked my head off and hit so well they kept me and I bounced from there into faster company and two years later into the National league.

Harry Steinfeldt.

I think much of my success was due to the fact that when I was starting at the business I was lucky enough to get in with a bunch of fellows who knew the game, some older and some younger than myself. They made a fellow learn the game and kept me working and thinking all the time to hold my place. Five members of our little club eventually landed in the major leagues and made good.

FINDS RACING CLEAN SPORT

Former Minister of Justice in New South Wales Talks of Conditions in Australia.

Prize fighting and horse racing are clean and manly sports if properly conducted, in the opinion of Thomas M. Slattery, former minister of justice in New South Wales, and at one time a member of the Australian parliament. Mr. Slattery spoke before the Irish Fellowship club at a luncheon while in Chicago the other day.

"Horse racing is under the control of the government and nothing that does not savor of true sportsmanship is tolerated. Any Irishman should own a horse or horses, it's born in him, and naturally should take pride in owning the best racers. I have a small string of horses myself, and it is needless to say I enjoy the race course.

"Boxing is a fine, manly sport, and being a bit of a sport myself, I enjoy watching a bout."

Paddy's Verdict.

Paddy Fitz is a policeman who has a post three miles long in the Glendale precinct patrol.

"Me shadow's me only company usually," said Paddy, "but the other morning just at dawn I saw a queer sight. I got curious to see what was in a big lawn around a fine mansion, so I peeked over the high board fence. And there were three of the finest young ladies I ever see. They had no shoes or stockings on and with sleeves rolled up to their shoulders they waded about, finally lying down and rolling over and over in the wet dewy grass."

"Kneipp curists," suggested a listener.

"Back to nature beautifiers," said another.

"Did you arrest 'em for improper conduct?" asked a third.

"Arrist thim?" asked the indignant Paddy. "Indade, if I may be a judge it was a most dacent ixposure, sir."—New York Sun.

What About Him?

The talk had gone back and fro, and the youthful socialist had been announcing that no man ought to get his living by cheating, and we all listened to him, and agreed that it was dreadful when men and women did not tell the truth, but tried to make their living by deceiving people. Millionaires, landowners, financiers, we scarified all of them who cheat the public. "No one should make a living by deception," said the young man. Then a quiet voice from a woman came from the corner of the sofa. "What about the conjurer?"—London Chronicle.

AWFUL BURNING ITCH CURED IN A DAY

"In the middle of the night of March 30th I woke up with a burning itch in my two hands and I felt as if I could pull them apart. In the morning the itching had gone to my chest and during that day it spread all over my body. I was red and raw from the top of my head to the soles of my feet and I was in continual agony from the itching. I could neither lie down nor sit up. I happened to see about Cuticura Remedies, and I thought I would give them a trial. I took a good bath with the Cuticura Soap and used the Cuticura Ointment. I put it on from my head down to my feet and then went to bed. On the first of April I felt like a new man. The itching was almost gone. I continued with the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment and during that day the itching completely left me. Frank Gridley, 325 East 43rd Street, New York City, Apr. 27, 1909." Mutual Expectations.

A notoriously close-fisted man was taking his golfing holiday in Scotland, where he hoped to improve his game, and, by driving a hard bargain, had managed to secure the exclusive services of a first-class caddie, who was known to be a very good player. "Mind, now," said the ambitious southerner, "I expect to receive some really good tips from you during my stay here, you understand?" "Aye," replied the Scotsman, hitching up the heavy bag, "an' Ah'm expectin' the like frae ye, ye ken."—Golf Illustrated.

PROTECTION FOR SONG BIRDS OF THE UNITED STATES

TODAY the songbirds of the United States have thrown about them the strong arm of protection. For a quarter of a century there was hard and systematic work to save creatures who were helpless to save themselves and against whom, as someone has put it, the hand of man and the head of woman constantly were raised. It perhaps is hardly necessary to say that the allusion to the head of woman had to do with the fashion of wearing the plumage of native wild birds for decorations for hats and bonnets.

It was a hard fight to get the masses of the people interested in the bird protection movement. Today very little is known in a general way of the manner in which success was wrought out. It is not at all uncomman even now to hear the bird protectors spoken of as mere sentimentalists, and there are men who have had a part in the fight to save the wild life who have been sneered at as effeminate. The truth is that most of the men who engaged in the work of preserving the feathered species were hard-headed and could prove on occasion that they were hard fisted.

It takes only a casual glance at a woman's hat today to show that the fashion of wearing feathers is still if not supreme, at least a ruler to a considerable degree. It should be known, however, that not once in a hundred times do you see on a woman's head today the plumage of a native American bird. The traffic in the feathers of bluebirds, robins, catbirds and other dooryard pets has been almost entirely stopped. Even those who wish that the plumage-wearing habit should cease altogether are powerless to prevent the sale of the feathers of certain species of foreign birds. The aigrette of which woman is so fond is a part of the plumage of the snowy heron, a bird which lives not only in the United States but in certain foreign countries. If a bird is to be found in America and also abroad the sale of its plumage is generally forbidden in the United States, but there is, and always has been, some difficulty in proving from whence came the supply. Law, generally speaking, has its technicality loopholes and the bird protective law is not exempt.

Out of the bird protective movement grew the biological survey of the department of agriculture of the United States government. The biological survey has been of great service to the farmers of the United States and to all men engaged either directly or indirectly in any form of agricultural pursuits. When the survey was threatened with extinction a few years ago by the apparent intention of congress to refuse it an appropriation, the farmers of the United States with the bird protectors and the real sportsmen, rose in its defense and saved it. The survey probably will be spared to continue its useful work as long as the agricultural department has existence.

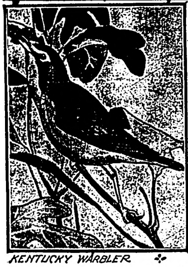
GRAVE OF GUY M. BRADLEY, ASSOCIATION WARDEN IN FLORIDA, KILLED IN PERFORMANCE OF DUTY



KENTUCKY WARBLER

The history of bird protection in the United States naturally and of right, is connected with the history of two organizations, the various state Audubon societies for the protection of wild birds, and the American Ornithologists' union. Recently William Dutcher of New York, who is the president of the National Association of Audubon societies and a fellow of the American Ornithologists' union, told the ornithologists of the world assembled in convention in a European city the story of the bird protection movement in North America. Mr. Dutcher and all the other officers of the National Association of Audubon societies are men who have devoted their lives to the study of birds and to their protection.

A celebrated French scientist said not long ago that if the bird life were to be swept out of existence man could survive only a few months. Because of the ravages of the insects now held in check by the birds, the vegetation creatures would be destroyed by the insect enemies. So it would seem that if this French scientist is right, that in making their fight for the birds the defenders have been making their fight for man, a fact which is not appreciated by some of those who would suffer were it not for the constant saving efforts of men whom on occasion they have seen fit to call cranks.

To lead up to the establishment of the Audubon societies, of which nearly every state in the Union has one, it might be said that it was not until the year 1883 that the public in the United States awakened to the fact that too many wild birds were being slaughtered, largely for millinery ornaments and other decorative purposes. In addition, thousands of song and insectivorous birds were killed annually for food. In his story of the movement for bird protection President Dutcher told of the beginnings of the crusade to save the lives of the songsters which year by year were coming back to the farm and the garden in greatly decreased numbers. Mr. Dutcher said, speaking of the condition in 1883:

"The newspapers published items almost daily on the subject, and many strong editorials were written. A quotation from one of these entitled 'The Sacrifices of Song Birds' will show the earnestness of the press in respect to the situation: 'The destruction of American wild birds for millinery purposes has assumed stupendous proportions. The unholy work gives employment to a vast army of men and women and this army wages its campaign of destruction with a diabolical perfection of system.'

"The editorial in question further refers to details of the work published in other columns of the paper, which furnishes evidence of the ghastly character of the business. The logical result of this newspaper agitation was that the American Ornithologists' union at its annual meeting held in New York city September 30, 1884, appointed a committee of its members to investigate the extent of the alleged wild bird destruction and to devise means to stop the slaughter by legal or any other legitimate method.

"This committee found that the claims of the press and of individuals were not in the least exaggerated, but on the other hand did not fully represent the terrible inroads that were being made on the non-game birds. After a lapse of a quarter of a century it is hard for the people of the present day to realize the enormous number of birds that were slaughtered for the millinery trade alone.

"The greatest sufferers were the white plumage sea and swamp birds, such as terns, gulls and heron, but incredible numbers of land birds also were sacrificed, some 60 or 70 species being included in the lists. In one millinery establishment alone 150 skins of the Baltimore orioles were found.

"From the work started by this committee in 1884 the present well-organized and financially endowed corporation known as the National Association of Audubon Societies for the Protection of Wild Birds and Animals has resulted, although in the interim there were many periods when the outlook for bird protection in North America seemed doomed to failure."

It was the result of an appeal made to congress by the council of the Ornithologists' union that led congress to vote an appropriation of $5,000, the money to be administered under the direction of the department of agriculture for the purpose of taking means to save the lives of the native American birds which were useful to man.

As William Dutcher says further in his story of the protective movement:

"In recognition of the action taken by the American Ornithologists' union in securing the appropriation, the secretary of agriculture invited the council of the union to select a superintendent to carry on the work and at a subsequent meeting held in Washington, Dr. Clinton Hart Merriam was selected as the superintendent and Dr. Albert K. Fisher as his assistant. Both of these noted ornithologists were among the founders of the American Ornithologists' union."

It was from this humble beginning that the present biological survey, a division of the United States department of agriculture, has grown. It is perfectly apparent from the letters which agriculturists send to Washington constantly that the work of the biological survey has its value appreciated more and more every year. The survey has published a great mass of valuable statistics of the food habits of birds and their relation to agriculture and forestry.

As has been said, there are Audubon societies for bird protection in nearly every state in the Union. They are affiliated in one great society called the National Association of Audubon societies. The writer of this article from personal knowledge can speak of the beginnings of one of the largest and most active of the state organizations.

Persons who were known to be interested in birds were asked to meet to form a protective organization. A good many persons not particularly interested in bird protection also were invited. Several women came to that first meeting, wearing the plumage of wild birds in their hats. At first the society intended to do its work by persuasive missionary efforts, and along this line to a considerable extent the endeavor has been ever since, but it was soon found that while some people were willing to be guided by pleas of humanity and by stories of the destruction of the growing things because of the rapid increase in insect life, there were others who could not be reached by any except hard handed methods.

So it is that the bird protectors not only have carried on a great work in the education of children and in moral suasion among the elders, but they have taken cases into court and have prosecuted wilful and persistent violators of the law; until today the bird protective laws are as much feared as any other laws on the statute books. There always have been some laws against the wanton killing of useful birds; but until the men and women of the American Ornithologists' union and of the Audubon society went earnestly at their labors the laws were laughed at and violated with impunity and almost always with immunity.

Years ago untold thousands of useful native birds were trapped to be sold as pets in cages. The women of the south complained to the women of the north who were engaged in bird protection work that their mocking birds and red birds (cardinals) were being trapped in multitudes because of the demand by the trade in northern cities for caged songsters. The bird protectors of the north took the matter up and in nearly all places today it is illegal to sell caged wild native American birds.

About fifteen years ago there was a week of zero weather in some of the southern states The blue bird, which is a northern favorite, does not go far enough south in winter to escape all of the storms of the winter season. The unusual cold of that winter fifteen years ago almost annihilated the tribe of bluebirds. There were only a few left to come back to the northern fields in the spring. The blue bird, however, was protected, and the efficiency of the Audubon society's work was never more clearly shown than in this case. The blue birds today have recruited their ranks under protection and are as numerous as ever they were.

For years the bird protectionists went ahead with their work with the treasury at a low point.

It always had been hoped that some kindly disposed person would realize the strength and beauty of bird protection work and would give of this substance to the cause. The man known as a scientist nor as a bird student. One day, however, Albert Willcox saw a newspaper account of some of the bird protection work done by the national Association of Audubon societies and he wrote a letter asking for more details. He received the information that he wanted and he wrote to say that he was about to make a new will and felt so much pleased with the work of the society that he would give it annually during his lifetime a considerable sum of money to be used in carrying on the work of the association, and that when he died he would give the society a legacy of $100,000 in his will, and, he added, "I may not limit it to this amount."

Albert Willcox died four years ago. He left $100,000 to the Audubon society as he had promised, and in addition he made the society his residuary legatee to the extent of one-half his estate. Today the National Association of Audubon societies, through the generosity of Mr. Willcox, is placed on a sure and lasting foundation. The bird protective work has been going on for a quarter of a century. It has all sorts of trials and tribulations, but today it seems that the friends of the feathered kingdom have triumphed in their cause. The promise is that there will be no cessation of the work which means so much to the bird and more to man.

ARE STRANGE TWINS

Missouri County Claims Distinction in Unusual Kinship.

Man and Tree Made Their Start in Life on the Same Day and Have Grown Up Together—Now 63 Years Old.

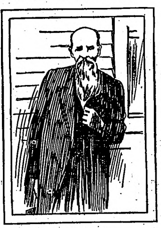
St. Louis, Mo.—New Garden neighborhood in Ray county, Missouri, boasts the possession of unique twins, a man and a tree, 63 years old. March 15, 1847, saw the birth, on his father's farm near New Garden, of Samuel Hightower. The same day Elias and Thomas, older brothers of the new arrival, set out in the yard before the house a slip of a sugar tree, or hard maple, as many know it.

Thus the two made their start in life together, and thus while the babe that was to be a man, hard thinking and hard working, fought its way through the precarious first days of its existence to a securer hold on life, before the door the slip that was to be a tree, great and spreading, underwent the same process.

When passing years had given the youngster sufficient strength to toddle about the yard one of the chief of the innumerable wonders his round eyes beheld was the sturdy young "sugar tree." His first efforts at climbing were expended on it.

The hard maple is of slow growth, and this one at that time was not large, yet to the child it seemed of great size.

Through the years of his childhood his happiest hours were those spent in scrambling around over its limbs. As he grew older, large enough to take a part in the work in the fields, he found a new pleasure in the sugar tree. Resting in its shade during the noon period was a pleasing reprieve from the toil in the sunbaked fields.

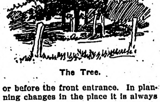


The Man.

In time the boy reached man's estate and married, but as the young couple made the old place their home, the association between the twins was not interrupted by this momentous event in the man's life. It was in the tree's shade that the bridal party, on arriving at the house, halted to recuperate from the drive through the July heat. The grassy plot beneath it formed the parlor where friends and relatives were entertained on hot days.

When children came to the couple the young mother availed herself of the sugar tree's help in caring for them. A cradle or pallet underneath its boughs, and a mosquito net, insured baby a sound nap.

As time transformed these babies into children they, like their father before them, found their chief delight in clambering about over the tree, and now, though they are grown men and women, they still cherish a deep affection for it. Houses have come and gone from the yard, but each succeeding one has been so built that the sugar tree commanded a place of honor before the front entrance. In planning changes in the place it is always taken into consideration. Nothing is done that may endanger its vigor or detract from its beauty in the least.



The Tree.

Mr. Hightower, or "Uncle Sam," as everyone calls him, is inclined to be old fashioned as regards the love of home, and has never traveled much, so in all the 63 years there has scarcely been a day that he has not seen the maple.

Wireless Music.

New York.—A recent test of wireless telephony was made to show its value for transmitting music. Several selections were sung in a transmitter at Park avenue and Fortieth street, New York, and were listened to by a group of newspaper men at the Metropolitan Tower. At times the singing was very clear, but frequently it was impossible to hear anything but a confused blur of sound.

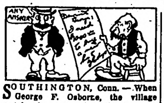
HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Mourns for His Mythical Sweetheart



SOUTHINGTON, Conn.—When George F. Osborne, the village watchmaker, came into the court of Judge Thomas F. Walsh the other day to face William A. Barnes, he wore a bit of black bound about his hat, emblem of mourning for the death of a sweetheart who had never lived.

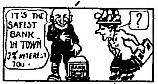
Barnes and Osborne had been cronies all their lives. Osborne wanted a sweetheart but he was far too timid to win one unless some one helped him. Barnes told him about Gladys Willson. He had known her in Philadelphia. She was beautiful. Barnes said he had told her of Osborne and she was interested. He thought she would not be offended if Osborne wrote to her. And Osborne wrote a halting little letter and Barnes promised to place it in Gladys' hand. An answer came and that day was the happiest that Osborne had ever known. There were other letters and Gladys began to tell him about her affairs. An estate had been left her and there were certain details of ridding it of legal incumbrances and tangles and need for money, and Osborne sent her all his savings, through Barnes, and counted every sacrifice for her a delight.

The village watch tinker prepared for her coming as his bride. Through the years she had set dates and even named trains. But always there was something to prevent her coming.

He had become so insistent for a sight of the one he adored that even the resourceful Barnes had run out of excuses. There was only one way out of it. He would have to kill Gladys. He hated to do it because she had been very profitable to him, but there did not seem to be any other way out of it. So he went down to Philadelphia and wrote a letter to Osborne, telling him that Gladys was dead. He was staggered by the blow. She had never been born in flesh and blood, but she had lived in his mind and heart.

Somebody asked him about the bit of black bound around his hat and he told a little about Gladys Willson, loved and lost, and showed the letter that Barnes had sent telling him that she was dead. Somebody was suspicious and told the sheriff about it and it did not take him long to learn that Gladys was not dead because she had never lived. Barnes was arrested and is now under bail awaiting trial.

Attention Given Women Bank Patrons



IT'S THE SAFEST BANK IN TOWN 3% INTEREST TOO
BANK

NEW YORK.—"Ladies' accounts respectfully solicited." This polite invitation hangs up in numerous bank windows and is printed in alluring circulars setting forth the reliability, convenience and attractiveness of the banks that cater to women, as almost all banks do nowadays with the exception of those in the distinctly financial quarter.

In 1869, when Joseph S. Case, at that time a teller in the Second National bank, persuaded the directors to fit up a room for the accommodation of women and give them a separate window for the transaction of their business, there were so few women carrying separate accounts that other officers of the bank were far from enthusiastic over the innovation. There were only five depositors when the bank opened this department.

The substantial growth in the deposits made by women and the talk of the matter attracted the attention of other banks, not only in New York, but in other cities, which sent representatives to look into the matter and the Second National's plan, widely copied everywhere, met with success.

It was only a few years after the Second National bank established its women's department that the Fifth Avenue bank did the same thing. It has today probably the largest number of women depositors of any bank in New York—between four and five thousand.

At the time of the panic, three years ago, the number of women depositors in the banks was emphasized. Many stood in line as doggedly as the men and others hired substitutes to keep their places. On the whole they behaved neither better nor worse than men under stress of panic. They were just human beings who did not want to lose their money.

Chicago Is Not Such a Wicked City

1,000 TEMPLES OF DIVINE WORSHIP
I DON'T THINK THAT IS A BAD RECORD
CHICAGO

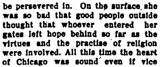
CHICAGO.—Chicago is proving to the world that she is not as black as she has been painted! Long has she been held up as the wickedest city in the nation, a place for the righteous to avoid if this line of conduct was to be persevered in. On the surface she was so bad that good people outside thought that whoever entered her gates left hope behind so far as the virtues and the practise of religion were involved. All this time the heart of Chicago was sound even if vice flourished openly in parts of the city.

If the queen city of the west were as inky as she has been pictured she would never have reared 1,000 temples for divine worship and maintained them. Men and women do not do this unless imbued with piety and the necessity for public worship.

The Chicagoans are manifesting this religious spirit just now in the eagerness of the church-going to promote this practise among those who pay little or no heed to it. The former are going about seeking out the latter and finding why church attendance is neglected. How thorough is this movement is borne out by the fact that 15,000 men and women are engaged in it and that they have reached 2,000,000 persons. They find that 900,000 regularly attended church and that 50,000 were irregular attendants, making a total of 1,350,000 that were more or less under the influence of Christian preaching.

The census proves that Chicago is more religious than any other of the metropolitan cities of the country and that few of the smaller cities relatively can match her in attendance upon and devotion to the church.

Millions of Eggs Placed in Storage



O-O-OOH WHAT A — SMELL -?-!-!

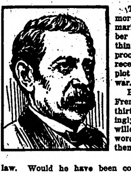
OMAHA.—A short report in the local market news serves to recall the agitation of six months or more ago against high prices and the more or less frenzied talk about drastic legislation for reducing the cost of living. The item states that in Omaha there are today about 4,000,000 dozens of eggs in cold storage in the various packing houses and the cold storage vaults—that is 48,000,000 eggs, or half an egg for every man, woman and child in the United States; and these figures are for Omaha alone; other cold storage centers, such as Chicago, New York, Philadelphia and other large cities are not reporting the size of their stocks.

During the winter, when eggs are scarce, and prices proportionately high, these 48,000,000 eggs, with some few million dozens more, will be dumped into the markets of the country under a system of distribution that will be sure to avoid gluts anywhere and a corresponding slump in prices; not one of them, it is said, is less than six months old now and when they come out of storage and are exposed for sale they will have an age of all the way from eight to ten months; their distribution, along with other eggs now in cold storage, will, of course, operate to prevent "egg famines" here and there—that is, a short supply and inordinately high prices—but the question of their effect on the public health is of much more importance than the consideration.

How long can a ten-month-old egg remain fit to eat after it is taken from storage and comes into a normal temperature? Does anybody know? These questions are vital ones, because it is on this point that cold storage legislation is going to hinge.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

FRENCH REPUBLIC'S MASTER



The great railroad strike in France brought more than ever to the notice of the world a remarkable man. On the reassembling of the chamber of deputies Premier Briand created something of a sensation by declaring that he had proof, through confessions of the leaders of the recent railroad strike, that there was a deliberate plot to ruin France by violence, anarchy and civil war.

Briand, now prime minister and master of the French republic, was nobody ten years ago. At thirty-five he was an outsider, and, worse, seemingly a failure even as a lawyer. Suddenly he willed, and all came easy to him. Easy is the word that seems to characterise him now and then.

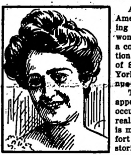
Born in St. Nazarine, he conquered a degree of law. Would he have been content to plead party wall cases, marry an $8,000 dot, play the violin, sing admirably, beat them all at billiards and talk politics? He was not of the ruling set of St. Nazaire. Possibly resentful, possible great-hearted, he certainly felt for the workingmen, who at once understood him and swore by him.

Buying a second-hand press in Paris, he took it from the freight office alone with a horse and wagon, and with one boy put it together, set the type and launched the Democracy of the West. Briand excited great animosity of the ruling classes, and so, for one reason or another, he got himself disbarred as a lawyer.

He quit St. Nazaire, his career apparently broken at the start, and began to write. Paris socialists were edified by the young stranger's grasp of their subjects. His articles in the Lanterne became at once noted for their clearness and boldness. They expressed the discontented workingman to himself—as if it were the workingman who wrote them.

He walked into the sovereign office of French deputy, first in 1902, again in 1906, and now, as simply, he has walked into the cabinet—and put himself at its head. No one realizes how he does it. All happens tranquilly, without fireworks. He steps through cruel difficulties without effort.

MISTRESS OF BIG MANSION



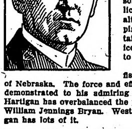
After nine years the most costly house in America has been finally completed, and presiding over it will be a petite young lady who has won her way to this queenly position through a courtship which once threatened to upset a section of Washington politics. The house is that of Senator W. A. Clark of Montana and New York, and is situated at the corner of Fifth avenue and Seventy-seventh street, Manhattan.

The house, when viewed from the exterior, appears rather heavy and massive for the space occupied, but, once within, one appreciates the real harmony of it all. Each of the nine stories is massed with every conceivable adjunct of comfort and luxury; from top to bottom is a store of storied wealth and mechanical device unsurpassed in the modern construction of house building. The bare structure alone cost $5,000,000.

And the copper king has reared this palace for one who not so many years ago was the daughter of a poor physician in Montana. At that time her name was Anna La Chappelle, and her father, dying penniless, commended her to the care of Senator Clark, urging his interest in her musical talent.

The senator sent his ward to the Boston Conservatory of music, where her progress was so marked as to cause him to send her to Paris, to perfect her studies. It was during this period, says Human Life, that the senator began to realize that his affection for his ward was of more than the fatherly order. While society was busy linking his name with that of nearly every eligible young lady, he became assured his ward's feelings were the same as his own, and asked her to become his wife.

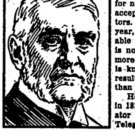
RESEMBLES "FIGHTING BOB"



John C. Hartigan, BrBigadier-General of the Nebraska National Guard, frequently designated as the prototype of "Fighting Bob" Evans, is a conspicuous figure, particularly in the West at the present time. Forty years of age, a native of Missouri, he is described as a natural born fighter who never knows when he is beaten. From boyhood Hartigan was always "licking" somebody. After his school days were over he licked his opponents in two races for the mayoralty at Fairbury. In 1897 he went to the Philippines as a private soldier and came home a captain. He did some gallant work in active service, and on his return was successively promoted to his present position of honor and usefulness.

Hartigan is known as a knight of the mailed fist, and he is one-to-ten shot as a favorite son of Nebraska. The force and efficiency of his military career have been fully demonstrated to his admiring fellow citizens, and it has come about that Hartigan has overbalanced the popularity of that other illustrious Nebraskan, William Jennings Bryan. Westerners admire pluck, and it is said that Hartigan has lots of it.

RAILROAD HEAD RESIGNS



Marvin Hughitt, who has been president of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway company for nearly 24 years, has given up that position to accept the chairmanship of the board of directors. Mr. Hughitt, who is in his seventy-third year, is in many ways one of the most remarkable men in the railway service. There probably is no man in the railroad world today who is more widely known and yet about whom so little is known in detail as Mr. Hughitt. This is the result of a lifelong policy of doing things rather than of talking.

He was born in Genoa, Cayuga county, N. Y., in 1837, and began his career as a telegraph operator at Albany for the New York and Buffalo Telegraph company in 1852. In 1854 he located in Chicago and worked as an operator for the Illinois and Missouri Telegraph company. Mr. Hughitt entered the railway service in 1856, and until 1862 he was consecutively superintendent of telegraph and train master of the St. Louis, Alton and Chicago at Bloomington. From 1862 to 1864 he was superintendent of the southern division of the Illinois Central.

In 1870 Mr. Hughitt left the service of the Illinois Central to become general manager of the St. Paul road, and a year later George M. Pullman induced him to become the manager of the Pullman company. Mr. Hughitt in 1872 accepted the position of general superintendent of the Northwestern railroad, after which his rise to the presidency was rapid and was marked by the constantly increasing importance of the system in the western railroad world.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Postoffice Department May Pay Out

I'LL PAY MY OWN WAY NOW
POSTOFFICE DEPT

WASHINGTON.—The estimates of Postmaster General Hitchcock for next year show that the postoffice department promises fair to pay its own way. The mail service comes nearer to the people than any other branch of the government, for it reaches every home as well as shops and offices. It costs a lot of money. Mr. Hitchcock asks for $250,733,943, and the appropriation for the department always is set forth in the expenditures for each year, but the earnings from the mails bring back the outlay to the treasury. This business is not reported in the current daily statement of the treasury which set forth only the deficit paid. This amounted last year to $17,000,000, and will be $6,000,000 less for the current twelve months, while it is predicted that it will disappear in the next fiscal year. The department gets no pay for the vast tons of matter which it carries for other branches of the government. If it did the offset against the deficit would be very large. The rent of offices in Washington and in public buildings elsewhere does not cover this traffic.

The work done by the postoffice is a marvel of cheapness. In volume and in extent of territory covered there is nothing to be compared with it. The reduction in rates since the days when 25 cents was charged for a letter from New York to Columbus, O., does not cease to be a wonder. The system which for two cents delivers a message in writing weighing an ounce from Maine to San Francisco not only but to the Philippines, or from the southern point of Florida to the northern extremity of Alaska, is a model of efficiency at the minimum of cost.

Europe is compact in population with distances measured by hundreds of miles only. This is especially true of Great Britain. There penny postage is proclaimed as a triumph and an example. Americans forget that the British penny is the equal in current value of two cents of our money. The cent is often called a penny, but it is only half a penny, and thus the term is a misnomer. Our postal rates on letters are now just those of Great Britain. Penny postage has long prevailed here as well as there.

Has Plan to Care for Ex-Presidents

FOR EX-PRESIDENTS

THE great movement for the conservation of the natural resources of the country, at the present time exerting salutary influences upon every important national activity, has embraced a new field. A safe, sane and successful method of conserving and finding a method of caring for our ex-presidents is the latest idea in the conserving line. A provision in the constitution of the national conservation congress is responsible for the proposal, and serious consideration is being given it, not by the political dreamer or theorist, but by the great public figures of the country.

Bernard N. Baker, retiring president of the congress, by virtue of a clause in the constitution, becomes a member for life of the executive committee, and will, so long as the congresses are held, continue to give the benefit of his counsel and experience to the president.

The suggestion has been made, and has already crystallized into an organized sentiment, to adopt the same method with the president of the United States, make him, for life, an advisory member of the president's cabinet and give him a competence sufficient to make him independent. Speaking of this proposal, Mr. Baker said that it was really surprising how many men there were in the west who thought that this method furnished the solution of the perpetual perplexing question as to what disposition to make of our ex-presidents.

"On its face the proposition is certainly a plausible one. It stands to reason that after a man has been president for four or eight years he knows the problems and difficulties which confront the man at the helm of the ship of state better than does his successor. If the ex-presidents could be made advisory members of the cabinet of the president, the latter would get the benefit of the advice of the former.

Expert to Head the Economy Bureau

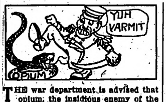
I'LL SAVE MONEY FOR 'IM ALL RIGHT
UNCLE SAM'S PURSE

WHAT is considered a real step toward greater economy and more efficiency in the management of the government's business was taken when President Taft appointed Dr. Frederick A. Cleveland, director of the bureau of municipal research in New York city, as the head of a central staff that will work on the economy and efficiency problem under the direction of the president. Announcement was also made that each of the cabinet officers will organize in his department a committee or commission to be known as an economy and efficiency organization.

These steps were taken under the law passed at the last session of congress directing the president to conduct an investigation into the business methods of the several executive departments, and giving him $100,000 with which to carry forward the inquiry. The final plans were not approved by the president until he had consulted with a large number of business men and had received written suggestions from numerous audit companies.

The central staff, of which Mr. Cleveland is to be the chief, will be composed of four men in addition to the chief. Its function will be to keep the president informed as to conditions in the several departments. It might properly be called a bureau of inspection. The economy and efficiency commissions to be organized in each department will undertake to ascertain if greater efficiency can be obtained without increasing the cost of the service.

Opium Invades Army at the Presidio



THE war department is advised that opium, the insidious enemy of the armies of the world, has invaded the ranks of the United States troops stationed at the Presidio, near San Francisco, to such an extent that a strong campaign, in which are involved more than 2,500 men, has been launched in an effort to crush it out.

The officers admit the seriousness of the situation, and declare it to be the gravest problem they have been called upon to settle. Drastic measures are now being taken to rescue those of the troops who have fallen victims to the subtle opiate. With all the energies of the department of war bent to the battle, an appeal has been made to the civil authorities.

Just how general the use of the poppy juice has become is not estimated, but it is admitted to be more alarming than ever before in the history of the army. Acting Commander Col. C. Deems said that in all his career he had never encountered such a general addiction to the drug, and that at worst his observation had never disclosed a higher percentage of opium using than two to three per cent. It was at first estimated that forty per cent. of the men at he Presidio were using the drug, but this was declared excessive, a more probable figure after company and hospital statistics had been compiled, being ten per cent.

Alarmed at this high percentage, appeals were directed by Colonel Lundeen, commandant at the post, to the district attorney's office and to the office of the chief of police, with the result that raids on opium dens by the civil authorities are being made.

SCHOOLS IN PUBLIC PARKS.

Boston's finance commission has placed itself upon record as favoring the building of one of the public schools in one of Boston's public parks. If the suggestion should be acted upon by the Boston city government it would probably involve a unique experiment. A schoolhouse is to be built in a portion of the city where property is high-priced, and even at a high price it is difficult to get a suitable site. In Washington park the city has an area of 396,125 square feet in such location as to make an ideal site, says the St. Paul Dispatch. The commission argues that the school building will occupy but 12,000 square feet of this space, and that the curtailing of the breathing area will, therefore, not be serious. On the other hand, the fact of having a school in the park will attract to it a maximum number of children and promote the object of the park.

While the finance commission does not wish to make its recommendation a precedent, it has in it a suggestion of value. The plan might be worked both ways, locating schools where convenient in public parks so as to give the children a maximum of ground for recreation, and turning the grounds about such buildings into breathing spots for the use of the neighborhoods, especially in vacation times.

A Brooklyn woman lately wrote to the marriage license bureau of that city to know if she could be supplied with a good, honest, sober husband. The clerk in charge explained that, while he had a few model men on hand, they were all married and the supply was entirely too limited for the demand. The fact that the matrimonial market is understocked with honest, sober husbands may be one reason why the divorce courts are overcrowded.

The pessimist can always find food for gloomy thought. The facts that the census shows a big increase in population while the death rate is decreasing will prove to that individual, who, like the proverbial Scotchman, is never happy unless he is miserable, that the nation is going to be overcrowded until somebody has to be shoved off the earth to make room for the rest.

Those who have been wondering as to whether America would produce a "new race" have their answer. The hobble skirt race has been inaugurated on Long Island. It was won in seven falls.

That marriage is the worst kind of a failure is the opinion of a Gotham broker who is paying his first wife $240 a month alimony and whose second wife wants alimony to the tune of $500 more.

Girls caught shoplifting in Philadelphia explained that "they wanted to be stylish." In order to satisfy that desire they should have confined their misdeeds to smuggling.

FRENCH CABINET OUT

PREMIER IS RETAINED BY FALLIERES TO REORGANIZE NEW MINISTRY.

CRISIS COMES OVER STRIKE

Dissensions Arise Among Ministers, After Vote of Confidence Adopted by Deputies, Over Labor Problems —Briand Wants United Body.

Paris.—Acceding to the urgent request of President Fallieres, following the tendering of his resignation by each member of the French cabinet Wednesday, Premier Briand set out at once upon the task of forming a new ministry.

The new cabinet will be largely the old ministry reorganized, with the distribution of the portfolios made with special reference to a solution of the vexatious labor problems.

The news of Premier Briand's action came on Paris like a thunderclap with no previous warning. The country seemed to be thoroughly in support of M. Briand.

The collective resignation of the ministers was the direct result of the bitter attacks made in the chamber of deputies upon the government's action in suppressing the recent railroad strike. Although a strong Republican majority voted strongly in support of the government, dissensions arose at a recent meeting of the ministry and M. Briand announced that a united body would be needed to meet the new and serious labor problems which had grown out of the labor troubles.

At the meeting at which M. Briand suggested the resignation he said that he had been violently accused and even charged with scheming to throttle the public liberty. He knew, he said, that his detractors had been repudiated by the Republican confidence vote, but he considered a new ministry necessary to meet the impending crisis.

Just what M. Briand's program of future legislation provides had not been made known to the public when the resignation of the cabinet was announced.

Chicago.—A true bill, naming Attorney Charles E. Many other demands have been made and it is believed the government will meet them in order to prevent serious disorders.

BOMB CAUSES WILD PANIC

BELIEVED EXPLOSION DUE TO "BLACK HAND" MISCREANTS.

Three-Story Building in Italian Colony Is Partly Wrecked—No One Is Killed.

Chicago.—A bomb wrecked the three-story brick building at No. 2107 South Clark street, which was occupied by a number of Italian families, early Tuesday. A wild panic among the occupants immediately followed the detonation, many leaping from the lower windows, while others rushed down the stairways.

The explosion, which is declared by the police to have been the work of "Black Hand" immigrants, blew in almost the entire front of the building on the ground floor, which is occupied as a grocery. Part of the wall was demolished and all the windows were shattered. The shock made the building totter, and those asleep, believing it was collapsing, were almost helpless in their fright.

By the time a policeman, hearing the bomb's report, had reached the building, it had been emptied entirely of its occupants, many of whom stood shivering in their light attire. A call to a police station brought detectives, who, however, were unable to find a clue to the perpetrator.

The detectives learned that Antonio Frenzi, proprietor of the grocery, who, with his family, is an occupant of the building, had received a number of threatening letters directing him to put $1,000 in a certain place within a certain time, which had elapsed.

CRISIS IN EXPRESS STRIKE

Negotiations for Settlement Fail at New York Over Question of Recognizing the Union.

New York.—The express strike situation again reached the critical stage Thursday when all negotiations between the companies and their former employes failed and it was discovered that the law may make it obligatory upon the city to withdraw the police protection from every express wagon that may attempt to go forth.

The negotiations between the committees and the companies failed because the men insisted upon the recognition of their union, while the city discovered an ordinance which requires that express wagon drivers shall be licensed, which has not been done with the strike-breakers.

Insurance Man Is Shot by Burglar While Wife and Children Look On.

Chicago.—After a desperate hand-to-hand encounter with a burglar who had entered his home at 2138 Fulton street, Sunday night, Guy Williams, a solicitor for the Prudential Life Insurance company, was shot and killed by the intruder.

Williams' wife and two young sons, cowering behind a door but a few feet distant, saw in the dimly lighted room the struggle of the husband and father with the burglar. They saw the two men fight for mastery. They saw the flash of the revolver shot.

SETTLERS HELD UP

NINE RANCHERS HELD ON REMARKABLE CHARGES BY FEDERAL GRAND JURY.

INSANE ASYLUM A WEAPON

One Homesteader Is Said to Have Been Railroaded to Institution After the Ranch Owners Had Destroyed His Home and Machinery.

Omaha, Neb.—Indictments returned by the federal grand jury against nine ranchmen of western Nebraska were made public. The indictments charge conspiracy to drive from their claims homesteaders who took sections of semiarid land under the Kinkaid homestead law.

The men named in the indictments are Perry S. Yeast, his son, Frank W. Yeast, Leslie E. Ballinger, M. C. Hubbel, Emil Anderson, Willmot Z. Emerson, Harry Sutton, Boone B. Hawthorne and Dr. Harry H. Huff.

Doctor Huff and Sutton are members of the insanity board, and the indictment alleges that through conspiracy C. J. Davasher, a settler on land wanted by the ranchmen, was found insane and sent to an asylum.

The specific case of Davasher is mentioned in detail. It is charged that Yeast and the other defendants, accompanied by a band of cowboys, visited Davasher's home and after threatening him and his family with death if they did not leave the country, destroyed his home, broke up his machinery, cut his harness to pieces and in other ways mistreated him. Later, according to the indictment, Yeast conspired with members of the insanity board and secured Davasher's incarceration in the asylum.

This latter act, according to the indictment, was committed in a high-handed manner. The insanity commissioners, it is alleged, went through a mock examination, declared Davasher insane and issued a warrant for his arrest. This was served on the spot, and within an hour he was rushed off to the asylum without being permitted to have the advice of counsel.

Davasher's case was brought to the attention of the superintendent of the institution, who conducted an examination into the case. He at once decided Davasher was not insane, and the latter was released by habeas corpus proceedings.

According to an official of the interior department the present indictment covers one of the most remarkable attempts at land grabbing that has recently been brought to the attention to the department.

A letter written by one of the victims to President Taft is said to have caused the investigation which resulted in the indictments being returned. Many thousand acres of grazing land are contained in the tracts in question.

IS WINNER OF $2,000 PRIZE

Johnstone Breaks World's Altitude Record at Close of Aviation Meet —Ascends 9,714 Feet.

New York.—The international aviation meet was brought to a close in a blaze of glory Monday when Ralph Johnstone, flying in a Wright "baby" biplane, a craft which he drove for the first time in his aerial flights, broke the world's altitude record by ascending to a height of 9,714 feet.

For his daringly spectacular feat he received a prize of $2,000. If he had been able to soar just 287 feet higher he would have won an additional prize of $5,000 offered on the condition that the altitude record be over 10,000 feet. He was prevented from reaching this height because his machine would not climb and more on account of lack of fuel.

It took Johnstone about one hour and twenty-six minutes to reach his highest point in the sky. For an hour he was utterly beyond the sight of the naked eye. He made his descent from the perilous height of almost two miles in the air in less than six minutes.

Moissant, flying the Bleriot in which he captured the Statue of Liberty prize, won the Aero Club of America's distance prize of $2,000. In two hours he made the course fifty-six times, a total distance of about eight-seven and one-half miles.

Moissant made a sensational landing in front of the grand stand, smashing his propeller and breaking one wheel of his monoplane. He climbed out of the machine, however, uninjured. Latham was second in the race with thirty-five laps.

Grahame-White, who was flying in the speed race against McCurdy, overturned in front of the grand stand and was buried under the machine. Helpers lifted the machine off him and he walked out limping slightly, waving his hand to the crowd to let them know he was not seriously injured. His machine was damaged.

AWARD MINE HEROES MEDALS

FIFTY-EIGHT PERSONS ADDED TO CARNEGIE FUND.

Thirteen Brave Fellows at Cherry Disaster Receive Recognition—Widows and Children Remembered.

Pittsburg, Pa.—Fifty-eight names were added to the Carnegie hero list in the United States by the Carnegie hero fund commission at its fall meeting. For acts of heroism thirty silver and twenty-eight bronze medals were awarded the life savers or their families in cases where death resulted.

While heroes and heroines come from the Atlantic coast to the Pacific, the greatest number (sixteen) come from Illinois.

The Cherry mine disaster has been considered and thirteen heroes are named from its rescuing parties. First of all is Isaac Lewis, liveryman, who rescued so many miners and then lost his life. His widow is given a silver medal and $40 per month pension, with $5 additional for each of three children until they become sixteen years of age.

Other heroes of the Cherry mine extended medals and pecuniary rewards are Dominik Ferment, Andrew McLuckie, Alexander Norburg, Henry Stewart, Robert Clark, James Speir, John Bundy, John Sznabrinski, Charles Waite, John Flood, Walter Waite and George Eddy.

Allen S. Blood, a school boy of Grayville, Ill., is awarded a bronze medal for saving three young men from drowning. James L. McFarland of West Frankfort, Ill., gets a bronze medal for saving Ruby Cantrell, a fifteen-year-old girl, from being run over by a train.

Henry P. McCoy of Tucson, Ariz., tried to save Frank L. Sherrer at Mendon, Ill., from suffocating by gas. He gets a bronze medal and $1,000 as needed. Charles Evans of Mendon, Ill., almost lost his life in the same attempt at rescue and gets a bronze medal and $1,000.

STRIKE CAUSES A TRAGEDY

Poverty-Stricken Garment Worker Slays His Wife, Shoots Baby and Kills Himself.

Chicago.—Worry over the loss of his position as the result of the strike of the 40,000 garment workers and the fact that he had been estranged from his wife led to a tragedy Thursday in which a husband shot and killed his wife, wounded his one-year-old baby and committed suicide.

The tragedy occurred in the small store conducted by Mrs. Mary Sekanina, twenty-five years old. Her husband, John Sekanina, who was a Bohemian tailor, had been one of the alleged underpaid employes of a big clothing firm and was one of the army of 40,000 unemployed that are fighting the factories of that establishment. Driven by poverty, it is declared, he quarreled with his wife, who separated from him.

After the strike, with his meager wages cut off, he faced starvation and it is said, had existed upon funds furnished him by the union and friends.

Chicago.—Policeman Edward Engelmeyer was injured and six men and a seventeen-year-old girl were arrested in a riot of striking garment workers in front of Tieson & Co.'s tailor shop in West Division street Tuesday.

Another riot occurred in Market street, near Adams, when a band of 500 strikers invaded the loop district. Mounted policemen, caring not where they drove, spurred their horses upon the sidewalk and into the crowd. The action was greeted with hisses from crowds thronging the streets and in windows.

For a time a clash between the workers and the uniformed men was imminent, but the appearance of more policemen on foot, who forced the marchers to disperse, prevented more serious trouble.

While the police were battling with the paraders, 1,000 more workers walked out in the various shops in the loop district and joined the ranks of the union. The walkout, however, had been expected, and before the strikers could form in line to parade the streets a squad of policemen, summoned by a riot call, dispersed them.

Becoming desperate at the progress of the strike, officials of the firm of Hart, Shaffner & Marx, whose shops are practically closed as the result of the general walkout, are said to have appealed to Sheriff Strassheim for aid.

A Complaint.

We're for women, first, last and all the time. We like 'em beautiful or plain, clever or just ordinary; witty or not, shapely or pudgy, but confound it we do wish that each and every one of them would get over the notion that a man has no right to turn the pages of a newspaper just because he's wedged against her in a street car. We've been frozen by a look, stabbed by a sneer and wounded to the quick by a sigh just because we've tried to read the story continued on page seven, column five, and the thing that hurts the most is that we still think that we had a perfect right to do so.—Detroit Free Press.

STOPPED SHORT

Taking Tonics, and Built Up on Right Food.

The mistake is frequently made of trying to build up a worn-out nervous system on so-called tonics—drugs.

New material from which to rebuild wasted nerve cells is what should be supplied, and this can be obtained only from proper food.

"Two years ago I found myself on the verge of a complete nervous collapse, due to overwork and study, and to illness in the family," writes a Wisconsin young mother.

"My friends became alarmed because I grew pale and thin and could not sleep nights. I took various tonics prescribed by physicians, but their effects wore off shortly after I stopped taking them. My food did not seem to nourish me and I gained no flesh nor blood.

"Reading of Grape-Nuts, I determined to stop the tonics and see what a change of diet would do. I ate Grape-Nuts four times a day, with cream and drank milk also, went to bed early after eating a dish of Grape-Nuts.

"In about two weeks I was sleeping soundly. In a short time gained 20 pounds in weight and felt like a different woman. My little daughter, whom I was obliged to keep out of school last spring on account of chronic catarrh has changed from a thin, pale, nervous child to a rosy, healthy girl and has gone back to school this fall.

"Grape-Nuts and fresh air were the only agents used to accomplish the happy results."

THOUGHT SHE HAD PRACTISED

Frenchman's Suspicions Really Something of a Compliment to the Men of America.

Claude Grahame White, the English aviator, praised, at a dinner in New York, the good fellowship of Americans.

"The American woman is regarded abroad as an angel," he said. "The man is admittedly a good fellow, but an angel he is far from being.

"You've heard of the Frenchman, perhaps, whose sweetheart spent the summer in America? After her return the poor Frenchman seemed quite blue.

"'What's the matter with you?' a friend asked.

"'I am worried,' the other muttered, 'about my fiancee. You see, since her return from America she kisses so much better than she used to.'"

AN INTOLERABLE ITCHING

"Just about two years ago, some form of humor appeared on my scalp. The beginning was a slight itching but it grew steadily worse until, when I combed my hair, the scalp became raw and the ends of the comb-teeth would be wet with blood. Most of the time there was an intolerable itching, in a painful, burning way, very much as a bad, raw burn, if deep, will itch and smart when first beginning to heal. Combing my hair was positive torture. My hair was long and tangled terribly because of the blood and scabs. This continued growing worse and over half my hair fell out. I was in despair, really afraid of becoming totally bald.

"Sometimes the pain was so great that, when partially awake, I would scratch the worst places so that my finger-tips would be bloody. I could not sleep well and, after being asleep a short time, that awful stinging pain—would commence and then I would wake up nearly wild with the torture. A neighbor said it must be salt rheum. Having used Cuticura Soap merely as a toilet soap before, I now decided to order a set of the Cuticura Remedies—Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills. I used them according to directions for perhaps six weeks, then left off, as the disease seemed to be eradicated, but toward spring, eighteen months ago, there was a slight return of the scalp humor. I commenced the Cuticura treatment at once, so had very little trouble. On my scalp I used about one half a cake of Cuticura Soap and half a box of Cuticura Ointment in all. The first time I took six or seven bottles of Cuticura Pills and the last time three bottles—neither an expensive or tedious treatment. Since then I have had no scalp trouble of any kind. Standing up, with my hair unbound, it comes to my knees and had it not been for Cuticura I should doubtless be wholly bald.

"This is a voluntary, unsolicited testimonial and I take pleasure in writing it, hoping my experience may help someone else. Miss Lillian Brown, R. F. D. 1, Liberty, Me., Oct. 29, 1909."

Passenger Section Collides With Cattle Special.—Accident Is Blamed to Glare of Electric Lights in the Stockyards.

Montevideo.—Five men were instantly killed, two were perhaps fatally injured, an engineer and fireman severely hurt and a score of others badly shaken up and bruised in a wreck which occurred here between two sections of train number six on the Hastings and Dakota division of the Milwaukee road. Three carloads of livestock were incinerated, and a caboose and half a dozen cars of the freight train were either burned or smashed to splinters. The locomotive was also destroyed.

Seriously injured, now in Montevideo hospital:

George Rahseld, Aberdeen, S. D., stockman, caught in burning caboose, rescued by firemen. Possibly fatally burned.

William Borning, Miles City, Mont., stockman, caught in burning caboose. Burns very serious, will probably die.

G. Parker, Montevideo, engineer of passenger train, hurt in jumping.

Train No. 6 is the regular night passenger train from the West, which enters Montevideo at 5:45 a. m. daily. On account of the heavy traffic the train was run in four sections, the first being the regular Aberdeen passenger, the next two sections being special stock trains, run on passenger time, and the last section being the heavy Butte passenger train.

First Section on Time.

The first section reached here at 5:45, exactly on time. It was closely followed by the second section, but the third section was slightly delayed. Just as this second stock train was backing into the Montevideo stock yards, about a mile west of here, the heavy passenger train, which making up time, was seen to come down the steep grade at high speed.

It was too late for the train crew to stop. Reversing their engine, Engineer Parker and Fireman Sticken leaped for their lives and the passenger train struck the rear end of the freight train with a deafening crash. There was a hiss and roar of steam, and the locomotive of the passenger dived under the caboose of the freight train, containing the six ill-fated stockmen. Almost immediately the caboose was a mass of flames, and the adjoining cars began to burn.

Mingled with the cries of the imprisoned stockmen in the burning caboose were the cries of several hundred head of cattle which were being incinerated in the stock cars. Terrified passengers who had been thrown from their seats by the impact of the collision came up to the wreck and with axes made an opening in the blazing caboose through which the two stockmen, Rabseld and Borning, were rescued. The others had already been overcome by the flames and when the rescuers reached them their bodies were blackened and charred.

The train crew attributes the accident to the electric lights in the stockyards here, the glare of which prevented them from seeing the rear lights of the stock train until it was too late to stop.

ELECTROCUTED WHILE AT WORK.

Owatonna Manager of Public Service Operating Co. Killed.

Owatonna, Nov. 5.—Charles Yergin, local manager of the Public Service Operating company of this city, was instantly electrocuted while working behind the switchboard at the lighting plant.

The electricity entered his right hand and arm, the voltage being somewhere between 3,000 and 5,000. Physicians were immediately summoned and worked over him for nearly two hours, but with no avail.

Mr. Yergin, who was one of Owatonna's most popular young men, came here several years ago from Goshen, Ind., to manage the local electric plant which is run by an Indiana corporation. He was held in high esteem among the business men of the city and attained no little prominence this year through his negotiations with the city council over the renewal of the lighting franchise. No arrangements have yet been made for the funeral.

MINNESOTA TUBERS LARGE.

Potato Crop in Southern Part of State Surprisingly Good.

Winona.—The potato yield in Southeastern Minnesota this fall has been unusually large and of the very best quality, the big size of most of the potatoes being a surprise to the farmers themselves. It was thought during the prolonged dry spell in July and August that the tubers would turn out a very poor crop, but the moisture which came later happily destroyed anticipations of this character.

REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE DIES.

Al. J. Smith, Six Years County Attorney, Succumbs to Long Illness.

Minneapolis. — Hon. Al. J. Smith, county attorney and candidate on the Republican ticket for re-election is dead, after an illness of long duration that culminated in the last few days in a state of nervous exhaustion. He had been confined to his home since the primary elections. His friends and relatives knew for some time that he was in a serious condition, but did not give up hope until the last minute.

The dead man has served Hennepin county in the attorney's office, both as assistant and as county attorney, for 10 years. He was well known throughout the state and had a large following of personal friends. Although he was in poor health for fifteen years he did not allow it to interfere with his work and the majority of his friends had no idea that he was anything but well.

In addition to serving Hennepin county he was assistant United States attorney at Fergus Falls for two years. He was considered one of the best criminal prosecutors in the Northwest and the best Hennepin county has ever had. His prosecution of the Ames graft cases, eight years ago, brought him into prominence all over the Northwest and among members of the bar throughout the country.

James Robertson, who ran second for the nomination for county attorney, was picked by the County Republican committee to take the place of the late county attorney on the ticket.

Chairman James Nash began sending out the calls to the 17 members of the committee for a meeting as soon as he heard of Mr. Smith's death. The haste was not unseemly, as the name of the man chosen will have to be substituted by printed stickers on thousands of ballots in the county districts and on all of the 266 voting machines in the city.

The fact that the city precincts all use voting machines is of immense advantage now. Where it not so the committee and election officials would have to put the stickers on almost 50,000 ballots. As it is, in the country districts they will be put on several thousand.

SEABURY OBSEQUIES HELD.

Funeral of Late St. Paul Merchant at Family Residence.

St. Paul.—The funeral of Channing Seabury, St. Paul pioneer and senior member of the firm of Seabury & Son, wholesale grocers, who died suddenly, was held from the residence. Rev. F. H. Budlong conducted the services, and interment was at Oakland.

The active pallbearers were: A. M. Peabody, Thomas A. Abbott, Samuel B. Diether, Edward Dugan, McNeil Seymour and W. D. Mitchell, all of St. Paul. The honorary pallbearers are: E. H. Bailey, Edward Sawyer, John De Laitre, of Minneapolis; J. J. Hill, Dr. William Davis, Colonel Samuel Appleton, V. M. Watkins, J. J. Watson, Dr. Charles A. Wheaton, A. L. Larpenteur, George A. Du Toit, of Chaska, Minn.; N. P. Langford and Judge H. R. Brill.

Mr. Seabury's death came suddenly from heart failure after three years of ill health. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Elizabeth P. Seabury, three sons, John, Gerald and Paul, and one daughter, Miss Edith Seabury. He was 68 years old, and has lived in St. Paul since 1860.

TO LOG BURNED TIMBER.

Heavy Operations Will Employ Large Crews in Northern Woods.

Bemidji.—As a result of the recent forest fires which swept through Beltrami and adjoining country this part of Northern Minnesota is to enjoy a period of extraordinary activity, furnishing work for more men than possibly can be obtained.

Expert cruisers who have just completed an extensive investigation of the burned over area say that the total damage done to the stand of timber has been considerably exaggerated, but admit that it will amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars, providing the scorched trees are not cut and made into logs within the next few months, for they will soon become wormeaten and dozy.

TEACHERS HEAR FOLK SONGS.

Pretty Feature at Opening of the Minnesota Educational Association.

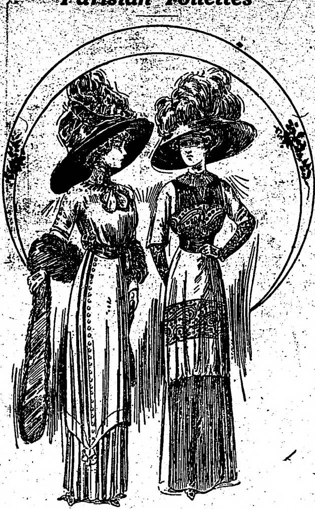
St. Paul.—An interesting group of folk songs given by 400 boys from nine of this city's grade schools was the pretty feature with which the Forty-eighth annual convention of the Minnesota Educational Association opened here. The young singers were directed by Miss Elsie M. Shaw, supervisor of music in the city schools. Superintendent E. M. Phillips of Albert Lea delivered his address as president, and talks followed by Superintendent M. G. Brumbaugh of Philadelphia and S. Y. Gillan of Milwaukee. The convention address will be delivered by President E. J. James of the University of Illinois. The convention lasted three days.

DIPHTHERIA AT WHITE EARTH.

Twelve Cases Reported and the Agency Quarantined.

White Earth. — An exceedingly violent epidemic of diphtheria has broken out among the pupils of the agency boarding school here. Twelve cases are reported and one death has occurred. Agency officials have quarantined the school buildings and hospital agency. Police patrol the quarantined grounds both day and night. Three doctors are in attendance.

Parisian Toilettes



The costume at the left is of old blue cashmere de soie. The skirt is finished with a deep plaited flounce over which falls the tunic. The latter is bordered with a hem or tuck, and ornamented with buttons and bands of velvet, rosettes of which finish the points of the tunic.

The corsage and the sleeves are cut all together with seams at the shoulders. They are ornamented with the velvet and buttons and with an embroidery of soutache. The girdle is of velvet, the cravet is of the cashmere de soie bordered with velvet, and the little guimpe is of white lace.

The other costume is of brown cashmere and liberty of a darker shade. The upper part of the skirt is of the cashmere encircled with a wide band of beautiful cord embroidery to match; it is slightly gathered at the bottom and finished with a deep plain flounce of the dark brown liberty.

The corsage and sleeves are cut in one piece, the corsage is almost covered with the embroidery, and has odd revers of the liberty, of which the girdle is also made.

The undersleeves are of the material or of tulle to match, covered with the embroidery. The collarette is of plaited white tulle and lace, with tiny cravat of blue satin ribbon.

REMOVING THE YELLOW TINT

How Delicate Embroidery, Long Packed, May Be Restored to Proper Color.

A young woman who was given half a dozen antique hand-embroidered round collars and under sleeves of exquisite stitchery found them just the style to use with round-neck and kimono sleeves.

The drawback was the yellow tint from years of packing. An old colored laundress succeeded in whitening them without acids or weaking fabrics made delicate with age. This is the way to do it:

The pieces are put into cold water, which is thick with pure white soap and a drop of bluing. This is allowed to come to the boil. Remove the articles at once, rinse through several lukewarm waters, finally through a bluing water, and put on the grass while wet to bleach.

Do not rub or squeeze hard. Sometimes it is necessary to repeat the washing and boiling if the pieces are very yellow.

When bleached put the right side down on the ironing board, smooth edges into place and iron under a linen cloth. Do not use too hot an iron, as old materials scorch easily.

If the grass is dusty put pieces on a clean towel. They bleach better when flat on the grass, though sometimes they need an after rinsing.

Never permit old embroidery to be casually done up. If you cannot do them yourself find an expert.

Uses of Foulard.

Foulard is becoming one of the most popular silks for fall wear. It is used not only for entire dresses and for trimmings, but also for lining loose coats, being especially favored with those of shantung and like materials. It is an excellent material to choose for a frock for week-end visits, as it packs well, and is easily shaken, after unfolding, into smoothness and freshness.

Plain foulard is supplemented for these purposes with the dotted and striped weaves and those printed in tiny flowers or in oriental designs. Altogether it is a wise choice for the woman who must be economical in dress.

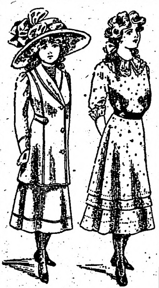
Ruffles on Skirts.

The prevalence of the tunic and the overskirt has given rise to a modification of these in the shape of circular ruffles, extending from waist to ankles. This is quite in the old style of several years back, but somehow combines fluffiness with simplicity, and maintains the tight and narrow skirt announced for this fall and winter. Usually five ruffles are used on a skirt; sometimes these are plain, again they are edged or veiled with chiffon or tulle. This style is becoming to every one but the short, stout woman, who should beware of it.

FOR GIRLS NOT YET "OUT"

Costume and Dress Suitable for Young Ladies of From 14 to 16 Years.

The first design shows a simple costume of mulberry colored serge; the skirt is a plain five-gore shape trimmed at the foot by two rows of Russia braid, which also trims the front seams of coat and edges collar and cuffs; a belt is taken round back as far as front seams, a button keeps this in position each end. Material faces the collar and cuffs.



Hat of soft straw trimmed with ribbon.

Materials required: 5 yards serge 46 inches wide, 7 buttons, 4 yards silk for lining coat.

The second would be suitable for delaine; the skirt fits plainly round waist and has a deep hem above which are two one-inch tucks.

A belt of velvet or satin to match spot on material gives a smart effect to the waist.

Materials required: 6 yards delaine, 30 inches wide.

Hats for Juniors.

Simplicity in the millinery world should be adhered to emphatically when the young girls are fitted out for the autumn.

The most attractive models are those that reflect the colors of the autumn. Brown with touches of red or yellow is always good. The dull moss greens or stone grays touched up with purples that hint of autumn skies are usually becoming to girlish faces.

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

De Forest, Wis.—"After an operation four years ago I had pains downward in both sides, backache, and a weakness. The doctor wanted me to have another operation. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I am entirely cured of my troubles."—Mrs. AUGUSTE VESPERMANN, De Forest, Wisconsin.

Another Operation Avoided.

New Orleans, La.—"For years I suffered from severe female troubles. Finally I was confined to my bed and the doctor said an operation was necessary. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial first, and was saved from an operation."—Mrs. LILY PEYROUX, 1111 Kerlerec St., New Orleans, La.

Thirty years of unparalleled success confirms the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to cure female diseases. The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing feminine ills from which so many women suffer.

If you want special advice about your case write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

Strong Preaching.

The minister's eight-year-old daughter was returning with her parents from church, where the district superintendent had that morning occupied the pulpit.

"Oh, father," asked the little girl, her face alive with enthusiasm. "Don't you think Brother C. is a very strong preacher? I do."

Gratified by this evidence of unusual intelligence on the part of his offspring, the minister eagerly inquired into her reasons for her statement.

"Oh," replied the little miss, artlessly, "didn't you see how the dust rose when he stamped his feet?"—Judge.

The Test of Time.

Benjamin Hapgood Burt and U. S. Epperson of Kansas City were motoring in Long Island the other day and stopped at Evan's hotel in Douglaston. They ordered large quantities of raw oysters, some of which were thrown aside by the oyster opener.

"How do you determine when an oyster is bad?" asked Mr. Epperson.

"You wait a short time and if you have ptomaine poisoning the oysters were bad," said Mr. Burt. "If you are not ill they were good. That's the only safe way to tell good oysters from bad ones."

Pride.

"Chicago has a lot of local pride, hasn't it?"

"Well," replied Mr. Lakemish; "it depends on whether you are talking about baseball or the grain business."

LITTLE RED SPOT.

If He Were Bigger This Spider Would Be a Real Peril.

Strangely enough, the one really dangerous spider on the American continent is small, obscure and practically unknown to popular or journalistic hysteria. Latrodectus mactans is its scientific name. It is about the size of a large pea, black with a red spot on the back—a useful danger signal—and spins a small web in outhouses or around wood piles. So far as is known, its poison is the most virulent and powerful, drop for drop, secreted by any living creature. Cobra virus, in the minute quantity which the latrodectus' glands contain, would probably have no appreciable effect upon man, whereas the tiny spider's venom, in the volume injected by the cobra's stroke, would slay a herd of elephants. Were this little known crawler as large as the common black hunting spider of our gardens and lawns its bite would be almost invariably fatal. Happily the "red spot's" fangs, being small and weak, can with difficulty penetrate the skin and are able to inject venom in dangerous quantity only when the bite is inflicted upon some tender skinned portion of the body. Nevertheless fatalities consequent upon the bite of this insect are sufficiently well attested to take rank as established scientific facts.—Samuel Hopkins Adams in Everybody's.

CHANGING THE SUBJECT.

What Lincoln Said After Harvey Ended a Two Hours' Talk.

The Hon. Peter Harvey, the friend and biographer of Daniel Webster, was a large man with a small voice and that pomposity of manner that many very diffident men possess. Above everything he valued and prided himself upon his friendship with the "great expounder."

The first year of the war between the states he went to Washington and on his return was asked how he liked President Lincoln.

"Well," he said, "Mr. Lincoln is a very singular man. I went on to see him and told him that I had been an intimate personal friend of Daniel Webster; that I had talked with him so much on the affairs of the country that I felt perfectly confident I could tell him exactly what Mr. Webster would advise in the present crisis, and thereupon I talked to Lincoln for two solid hours, telling him just what he should do and what he should not do, and, will you believe it, sir, when I got through all Mr. Lincoln said was, as he clapped his hand on my leg, 'Mr. Harvey, what a tremendous great calf you have got!'"

Proof of Fairness.

A frown developed on the countenance of the new patient as he studied the bill the physician had handed him. "What do you mean," he at length snorted, "by charging me $25 for a two weeks' treatment when you charged Handerson only $10 for a treatment extending over the same length of time?"

"If you mean that I am not impartial in my charges," retorted the bristling doctor, "I want you to distinctly understand that you have absolutely no foundation for your insinuation. I ordered Handerson to eat three square meals a day, while I forbade you to eat more than one light lunch. Now, sir, if you will add the cost of Handerson's meals to my charge of $10 and compare the result with the cost of your meals plus my charge of $25 you will obtain such proof of my equitableness that you, if you are a man, will humbly apologize to me for your unkind and unwarranted attack."—Chicago News.

His Chance to Vote.

The chronicles of our vice presidents are notoriously barren of incident. This probably was the reason for the way Adlai Stevenson secured the exercise of a constitutional prerogative. It was one sleepy day toward the end of his term as vice president. The United States senate was plowing through the calendar and passing many bills. Bills are considered agreed to in the senate if no oral objection is raised after they have passed through the preliminary stages, but the usual form of asking for the yeas and nays is followed by the presiding officer. The vice president had said:

"Senators in favor of the bill will say 'Aye.'" Pause. "Contrary, 'No.'"

Not a single response.

"The vote is a tie," announced Mr. Stevenson.

The senator in charge of the bill paused on his way to the cloakroom and looked surprised.

"In case of a tie the vice president may cast the deciding vote. In the exercise of his constitutional privilege the vice president votes 'Aye.'"

HIS QUICK LUNCH.

A Cleveland Man's Experience In a Toronto Restaurant.

The Canadian brother certainly differs from us in several strongly marked respects. A Cleveland man went into the leading restaurant of Toronto and said to the waiter in his customary quick lunch voice:

"Crackers 'n' milk—cup coffee—apple pie."

The waiter bent a little lower.

"Beg pardon, sir!"

The Cleveland man said it again and, being slightly irritated, said it faster.

The waiter shook his head.

"I'm afraid we 'aven't it, sir," he deprecated, as Hashimura Togo might say.

"Haven't you any crackers?"

"No, sir." Then, with a sudden inspiration, "We 'ave biscuits, sir."

"All right; bring me biscuits. And you can give me some milk, can't you—milk in a bowl?"

"I'll inquire, sir." Then another inspiration. "We can give you coffee, sir."

"Good! How about the apple pie?"

"No, sir. We've never 'ad it to my knowledge, sir. I think there's no call for it." Another inspiration. "We 'ave apple tart, sir."

"Fine! Bring me biscuits 'n' milk—coffee—apple tart, and be as quick as possible, please."

But it was exactly thirty-seven minutes later when the Cleveland man brushed away the crumbs and reached for his hat.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

HOLD THE RIGHT IDEALS.

Latent Courage and the Power of Mental Suggestion.

We not only can strengthen mental weaknesses and deficiencies, but it is perfectly possible to increase the general ability through the power of suggestion, says Orison Swett Marden in Success Magazine. Indeed, the susceptibility of all the mental faculties to improvement, to enlargement, is something remarkable.

Sometimes very strong faculties are latent until especially aroused. There are many people who pass for cowards, who are humiliated because they have so little courage, when, if they only knew how, they could strengthen this deficient faculty wonderfully by holding the courageous ideal, by thinking and doing the courageous deeds, by carrying the thought of fearlessness, by reading about heroic lives, by constantly thinking the heroic thought and trying to live it. The courage may be small in a person because it has never been called into sufficient exercise. It may need only to be aroused. There are many people living lives of mediocrity who might do great things, might become mental giants, if their dormant faculties were aroused their general ability improved and enlarged.

The Number Nine.

There were nine earths, according to mediaeval cosmogony, nine heavens, nine rivers of hell and nine orders of angels. The number being perfection since it represented divinity was often used to signify a great quantity, as in the phrases, "A nine days' wonder," "A cat has nine lives" and "Nine tailors make a man." In Scotland a distempered cow was cured by washing her in nine surfs. To see nine magpies was considered extremely lucky. Nine knots made in a black woolen thread served as a charm in the case of a sprain. It was also believed and is still by some that if a servant girl finds nine green peas in one pod and lays them on the window sill the first man that enters will be her beau. Nine grains of wheat laid on a four leaved clover enables one, it is said, to see the fairies.

The Curse of Genius.

The somber, long haired, seedy looking man was speaking in a voice of rolling thunder.

"A million times a million fateful curses sit balefully athwart his hateful head of tow! Through the gloomy eons may his black soul flit homeless for ever!"

"Off his balance, I suppose?" observed the stranger.

"Oh, no," said Smith; "that's Rimer, the well known poet, swearing at the editor who rejected his verses."—Puck

No Practical Difference.

"I made a mistake," said young Mrs. Torkins, "and picked up my locket instead of the little gold watch you gave me."

"Never mind," replied her husband. "The only difference is that the watch doesn't tell time and the locket doesn't even pretend to."—Washington Star.

Foiling a Fakir.

A story used to be told at Cairo of Sir Richard Owen during one of his sojourns in Egypt. The great naturalist was seated in the shade on the veranda at Sheppeard's hotel when the inevitable snake charmer came to him and produced from his bag a lively specimen of the horned asp—the dead ly cerastes. The professor gazed and, nothing daunted, stopped and plucked the horns from the head of the reptile wriggling at his feet, remarking to a bystander that the man would probably think twice before trying to palm off upon any one else a harmless snake as a cerastes by the aid of a couple of fish bones. With anybody else the charmer would probably have succeeded. He had tried it on the wrong man.

An Antiseptic Child.

Little Walter was always carefully guarded against germs. The telephone was sprayed, the drinking utensils sterilized and public conveyances and places were forbidden him.

"Father," he said one night in a tone of desperation, "do you know what I am going to do when I grow up?"

"What?" asked his father, preparing himself for the worst.

"I'm going to eat a germ."—Success Magazine.

A Wooden Head.

Certain members of the house party were describing the accidents that had happened to them during their various careers. Adventures by flood, fire and field had all been well received, and De Sappleby, eager for fame, thought it was his turn.

"D'you know," he said, "I had a very painful experience once. I ran a confounded splinter quite half an inch long right under my finger nail, don't you know."

"Really, Mr. de Sappleby," said a maiden of the party, "How did you do it?"

"Well," he said, "it happened like this." As he spoke he unconsciously raised his hand and scratched his forehead.

"Oh, I see," she interrupted sweetly. "How very careless of you!"—St. Paul Dispatch.

Carpets and Rugs.

Carpets and rugs were originally employed by oriental nations for sitting, reclining and kneeling purposes during devotion. When introduced among the western peoples they were for a long time used for purely ornamental purposes, covers for tables or couches and for laying before altars or chairs of state upon great occasions. Carpets were brought to Europe by the Moors, but it was well into the eighteenth century before they came into anything like general use.

Every Little Movement.

A visitor to the cobbler's shop noticed one day a barrel half full of tiny brass cogwheels.

"Why," he said, "what are all those for?"

"Goodness knows," answered the cobbler, with a careless laugh. "I get about a cupful out of every clock I mend."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

THE LOCAL NEWS.

Applications to make final proof written free at this office.

Walt McAndress drove down to Thief River Falls yesterday with a load of grain to market.

We have been devoting more time to talking politics this week, than to business, as can be seen by our paper.

The price of hay has been started in at $6, a ton, and it will depend on the weather for higher or lower prices.

We are having very fine Indian summer weather now and if it will continue for three week it will help to shorten up the long winter.

The proposition to divide the county received a majority of the votes at the last Tuesdays election, but we have not heard how large the majority was.

Now is the time of the year to pay up your subscription to THE SUNBEAM. Attend to this before you forget it.

Governor Ebehart was elected by about 70,000 plurality. The old line democrats did not take kindly to Grays county option ideas, and voted for Ebehart.

Read the new add of George Singer, the Rhoda merchant in an other colum, and profit there by. It will not cost you anything to call on him and get prices.

The Town of Deer Park put 63 no's against county division, and only 10 yeses. You did well boys, and if we was defeated, we let them know that they was in a race.

There was 88 votes cast in the town of Highlanding at last Tuesdays election, with 74 for and 12 against county division, while two did not care a darn if the county was divided or not.

Andrew Trovaton, of Thief River Falls was up this way on Tuesday working for county division. We have been in two county division campaigns with him in Polk county and have always found him on the square.

K Stone, a cattle buyer from St. Paul has been buying cattle in this locality the past week. We sold him two steers for $90, and we have about concluded that it pays better to raise steers than dabble in politicts. Who says we are not a farmer?

Peter Korstad and P.C. Wold had a runaway accident on Tuesday, in which Mr. Wold got a searious shaking up, and P. P. Palmers horse got badly cut on a barbed wire fence, but both [illegible] and man are on the road to recovery, and the accident might have been worse.

We regret to state that there was a large number of farmers on the south side of the division line that voted for division, for the reason that they considerd the people of Thief River Falls "undesireable citizins," and wanted to get rid of them. One farmer made the remark, that he, hoped that Martain Evenson would not move over into Red Lake and start anymore lawsuits.

We have no complaint against the majority of the Thief River Falls boys who was working for division, as they were working for their own interest, but there was some of them that made personal attacks on us and our business, in public speeches, because we opposed division. To them we want to say, that you and I, and THE SUNBEAM will be in the same county, whether you get division, or not, and while you only get out to speak in a country school house once in a while, we speak from Sunbeam every Friday.

DIDN'T WASTE WORDS.

The Stoical Mountaineer Simply Answered the Question.

"For stoical indifference and taciturnity," said a young man from Knoxville, Tenn., who was visiting in Louisville a few days ago, "I never saw any one that could equal the Kentucky mountaineer.

"Two years ago I was camping during the summer with a party of young men and women in the mountains. During our stay there we became acquainted with an old mountaineer whom we called Sam. He always referred to his wife as Maria, and we fell into the same habit.

"Last year we returned to the same place to camp. As we were going up the mountain path on our first day out we met Sam walking along apparently in a deep study.

"'Hello, Sam!' we all called. 'Where's Maria?'

"'She's comin' back there,' he said, directing his thumb backward over his shoulder.

"We went on up the mountain path and a short distance farther came upon a party of mountaineers transporting a dead body in a rickety wagon. It was a funeral party. Imagine our surprise when we were informed that the deceased was Maria. Sam had not thought it worth his pains to inform us that Maria was dead when he stated she was 'comin' back there.'"—Louisville Times.

THE ENGAGEMENT RING.

Advice the Jeweler Gave the Young Man Who Was Investing.

"Some of these jewelers are an accommodating lot," remarked the young man in the light suit. "I went in the other day to buy a diamond ring.

"'For a lady?' the clerk asked me. I told him it was.

"'An engagement ring?' he asked me further.

"'Yes,' I told him, getting a little bit peeved, 'but I don't see what business it is of yours what I intend to do with the ring after I've paid for it out of my own private funds.'

"'Don't be offended,' says the clerk in a conciliatory tone. 'I was just going to suggest that if it was simply a present, with no engagement going with it, you go in for size rather than for quality, and when the girl comes in to inquire about its value we'll lie $50 or $75 worth for you. But if it's an engagement ring I would advise you to get the best quality you can find, even if it does mean a smaller stone. Just as a matter of sentiment you'll want to know that it is right, and then if you ever get in hard luck you can pawn the good ring for two-thirds of its value.'"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Toad's Tongue.

The skillful manner in which a pet toad used its wonderfully formed tongue entitled it to be ranked as an expert. For one thing, it showed wonderful skill in judging distances. The tongue was never darted out until the insect came within a certain range. The accuracy of the creature's aim was another matter for surprise. The insects were generally in motion when the tongue was darted out against them, but the arrow never failed to hit. The rapidity with which the tongue was shot forth excited much wonder. The operation is a complex one. The tongue is doubled or folded up when in the mouth. Therefore a twofold action is required, an uncoiling of the weapon and then the darting of it forth. The withdrawing of the tongue with the captured insect on the tip was not less remarkable. Notwithstanding the rapid motion, the fineness of the tongue tip and the struggles of the prey the victim was never dropped.—Exchange.

Graves In China.

There are various kinds of graves in China. The graves are dug generally from twelve feet to thirteen feet below the ground, while, according to an old custom, the mounds of the graves of emperors were thirty feet in height, those of territorial lords fifteen feet and those of barons without territories and of lord stewards eight feet, while for inferior officials and common people mounds only four feet in height were erected. Pines were planted on the tombs of emperors, a species of oak on those of territorial lords, a species of willow on those of barons and lord stewards and elm trees on those of inferior officials. Although there are no territorial lords and lord stewards now in China, men of high rank still have their tombs constructed in accordance with this old custom.

He Loved His Enemies.

James MacNeill Whistler looked upon life as upon a kind of warfare and was never so happy as when he was quarreling with somebody. He is quoted as having said when asked if he did not have many friends: "Yes, I have many friends, and I am grateful to them, but those whom most I love are my enemies, not in a Biblical sense. Oh, no, but because they keep one always busy, always up to the mark, either fighting them or proving them idiots."

Then He Sulked.

"Mrs. Guschley remarked to me that it must be pleasant to be married to a clever man," said Proudley's wife.

"And what did you say?" queried Proudley.

"I told her, of course, that I didn't know; that I had only been married once."

Suffering becomes beautiful when one bears great calamities with cheerfulness, not through insensibility, but through greatness of mind.—Lavater.

QUAINT EPITAPHS.

Gems From Ancient Graveyards In Suffolk, England.

The Suffolk (England) Institute of Archaeology has been collecting epitaphs from the ancient graveyards throughout the shire, and several of the most curious are here printed. One shows traces of a pessimistic philosophy surprising when we consider the strong orthodoxy of the day when the epitaph was written:

Beneath this stone lies Catherine Gray,
Changed to a lifeless lump of clay.
By earth and clay she got her pelf,
And now she's turned to clay herself.
Who knows but in the course of years
In some tall pitcher or brown pan
She in her shop may stand again.

Another from Suffolk reads as follows:

Here lies Robert Wallas,
The King of Good Fellows,
Clerk of All Hallows
And maker of bellows.

These which follow could scarcely be lines chosen by the reverend occupant of the tomb himself, a clergyman named Chest:

Here lies at rest, I do protest,
One Chest within another.
The chest of wood was very good.
Who says so of the other?

And, to conclude, here is a bit of philosophy that cannot be improved by any of the great thinkers of all time:

Here I lie outside the chancel door;
Here I lie because I'm poor.
The further in the more they pay,
But here I lie as warm as they.

Nibbles the Wood.

The Pillory.

The pillory in England was abolished as a punishment, except for perjury, in 1815 and was totally abolished in 1837. The last person to suffer at the Old Bailey was one Peter Bossy, for perjury, June 22, 1830. Notwithstanding the fact that this mode of punishment was supposed to be only for the lighter offenses, it often happened that the pillory meant death to those placed in it, the culprit frequently being stoned to death by the heartless mob.—New York American.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

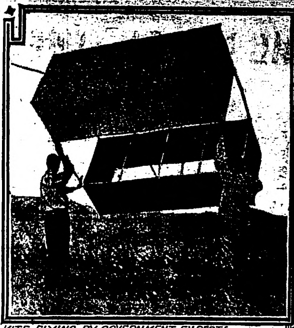
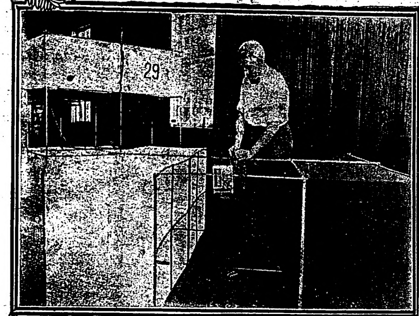
UNCLE SAM AS A KITE FLYER



KITE FLYING BY GOVERNMENT EXPERTS

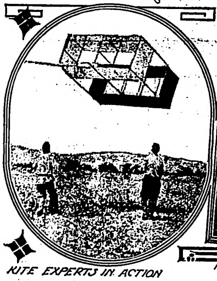
"KNOCKED DOWN" FOR TRANSPORTATION



ATTACHING AUTOMATIC RECORDING INSTRUMENTS TO A KITE

WITH the present world-wide interest in aviation has come a a corresponding stimulus of interest in kite flying—not the ordinary sort of kite flying that we all indulged in when we were boys, although that has many devotees—but scientific kite flying. Both in England and America daring experimenters have accomplished wonders with man-lifting kites, which when sent up tandem have demonstrated their ability to lift human beings to the clouds quite as neatly as do motor-driven airships. Then, too, Alexander Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, has these past few years performed some wonderful experiments with a new type of kite made up of triagular cells and hopes yet to solve the problem of aerial navigation with a sky craft developed along this line.

While the man-lifting kites have thus been developing to the point of undreamed-of possibilities another branch of scientific kite flying has been making like progress. This embrances the use of kites for studying the conditions of the upper air and obtaining data to be used in forecasting the weather. Various institutions all over the world have been using kites in this way, but the lead has been taken by the United States government, thanks to the facilities which it enjoys at its unique new weather observatory in northern Virginia, not far from the West Virginia line. The Mount Weather observatory, as this new kite station is officially designated, is designed especially for the exploration of the upper air by means of kites and balloons and it is located on top of a peak nearly 2,000 feet high in an isolated part of the Blue Ridge mountains—that which no better location could be imagined for this class of work.



KITE EXPERTS IN ACTION

RECOVERING KITE AFTER IT HAD BROKEN AWAY

There are not many buildings at this kite-flying outpost, but a substantial stone structure has been provided for use as a kite house. This is the headquarters for a corps of five men who devote all their time to this branch of aerial work. More than two dozen kites are constantly kept on hand and in readiness for use and included in this equipment are samples of all the different kinds of kites which have been used by any of the foreign governments that have engaged in scientific kite flying. However, Uncle Sam's experts have developed some designs of kites that are superior to anything known abroad, and particularly have they evolved a wonderful new type of kite that can be sent aloft in the fierce gales that sweep over the Virginia mountains. The ordinary kite will fly in any wind with a velocity of ten miles per hour or more, but is not adapted to use when the wind exceeds 25 miles per hour. However, this new style kite, which weighs but eight pounds and has a lifting surface of 58 feet, has made successful flights more than a mile in height when the wind was blowing a gale of 46 miles an hour.

The government experts have sent up kites at Mount Weather as high as 23,000 feet, which means, of course, several miles. Of course no rope or string can be used for such kite flying, but wire must be employed. The wire is wound upon an immense reel of forged steel and the kite flying is in reality done by machinery, this reel being operated by a three-horsepower electric motor. When it is desired to haul down or draw in a kite this reel is set in motion at any speed desired. The steel drum has capacity for carrying 50,000 feet of piano wire, which is much more than would be required for any kite flight that will ever be attempted. The object of Uncle Sam's kite flying is of course to explore the upper air and to that end automatically operated recording instruments are attached to every kite sent up. These bring down records not only of the altitude attained by the kite but of the temperature at various altitudes and other information of the greatest value to the scientists in their study of the atmosphere that envelops the earth.

The remarkable development of the aeroplane is the greatest wonder of the century. Yet the airman is impatient and his cry now is for greater speed. In speed he sees the solution of his greatest problems. Gradually it has dawned upon him that the air is the ideal element for high-speed traffic—that through the air, before very long, speeds will be attained which are possible with vehicles on land or ships on the sea. To the makers of engines the airman says, "Give me more power, which spells speed." To the builders of aeroplanes he cries, "Construct me planes capable of the maximum of speed."

And the speed of aeroplanes has been creeping up. At first it was 25 miles an hour. Then came 40. Soon this was left behind. Round prepared aerodromes a pace of 45 and 50 miles an hour was attained. Nor did the seeking of speed end here. With racing monoplanes a rate of 55 and 60 miles an hour was possible. Not satisfied with this, pilots have added mile by mile, until the latest record is 66 miles an hour.

In response to an inquiry along this line an expert recently said: "Personally I believe that this is only the beginning of the speeds that aeroplanes will be able to attain. Some one was discussing this vitally interesting aspect of airmanship with me only the other day. He asked the question, 'At what rate will aeroplanes be flying through the air in a comparatively short space of time?' My answer was, 'In six months I fully expect that a monoplane will be registering speeds of 100 miles an hour.' Friends of mine who are experts upon the scientific aspects of airmanship predict that eventually speeds of 200 and even 300 miles an hour will be possible. At this one's imagination is apt to reel. But this much is certain: If the flying machine is to become of real importance and not remain a sporting toy it will need to be speedier than any method of transit on land."

"The aeroplane engine is the crux of the situation. Upon its development—rapid or slow—depends also the development of airmanship. Fortunately for the new science in which we are all so interested, the flying machine motor is already making quite extraordinary strides. As a well-known maker remarked to me the other day, 'Each motor which we turn out nowadays marks a step up a ladder of progress.' And the engines for aircraft are not only being made more reliable, but they also weigh less than they did, at first for each horsepower of energy produced.

"This is all-important. In this respect alone engineers have been achieving results of late which would have been declared absolutely impossible by experts a few years ago. From my point of view, as a pilot of aeroplanes, the improvement in engines has been astonishing. Last year, although long flights were occasionally made, the undertaking of a cross-country journey was a matter of considerable uncertainty. Now, however, although our engines are still admittedly imperfect, one can fly from point to point with a growing confidence.

"Although much of the future of airmanship is still in doubt, the establishment of regular air stations, in the vicinity of large towns is an innovation which will soon be an accomplished fact. The idea of the 'air station' is simple. It will, roughly, correspond to the garage for the motor car. There will be a large, smooth open space for machines to start from and also to alight upon. There will be a number of sheds in which air craft will be housed. There will be repair shops; also depots in which oil and petrol will be stored. The airman, studying a special map before he starts upon a long cross-country flight, will locate the position of the various air stations en route and halt at some of them—filling up his tanks, having his engine overhauled, and perhaps garaging his machine for the night in one of the sheds provided.

"Already—a convincing proof of the development of flight—international authorities are discussing seriously the immediate laying down of regular 'airways.' Simply described, an airway will direct the passage of air craft over a given tract of land when in flight from city to city or from one country to another. These airways—several have already been provisionally mapped out in England—will make it incumbent upon pilots to fly their craft over sparsely populated tracts of country whenever possible, and will also obviate flying over towns.

"We do not want to hamper airmanship with too many rules, but danger to the people on the earth must be obviated, and the risk of involuntary descents in crowded districts must be avoided. The rights of private property must be considered also; it is clear that machines cannot be allowed to descend haphazard just where they like.

"So far the whole attitude toward flying has been to encourage it, a striking contrast to the condemnation of the railway train when it was introduced. This toleration the airmen must do nothing to undermine. Motoring would not have been discredited in many people's eyes had it not been for the 'road hog.' We must have no 'air hogs.' As aeroplane owners increase many perplexing problems will arise. What is wanted is a sensible code of rules, framed in the public interest by practical authorities and tactfully enforced before there is possibility of any outcry against the new sport.

"For rapid transit generally, for fast mail traffic, for express services, for naval and military reconnoitering work, as instruments of destruction—although this phase may be far distant—these are some of the possibilities of the aeroplane. What we now want is a machine which will fly reliably in any wind short of a gale."

Terrible Kidney Trouble Cured After Doctors Gave Up Hope.

Mrs. F. M. Hill, 188 W. 10th St., Waterloo, Iowa, says: "It makes me shudder to think of my awful suffering. I was languid and weak and never free from dull pain in my back. My hands puffed and my feet became so swollen I could not wear my shoes. The kidney secretions were painful and frequent in passage. I gradually grew weaker until the doctors gave up hope. It was then I began with Doan's Kidney Pills and soon improved. Continued use cured me."

A Lover's Lobster

By DONALD ALLEN

Copyrighted, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

Miss Kitty Henderson bought all her shoes at Smith & Brown's. She didn't do so because she had any wish to keep the firm out of bankruptcy, but because Horace Walpole White was one of the clerks, because he complimented her on her instep, because she was a stenographer, because Horace was a fine young man, and because, in time, they became good friends—and more.

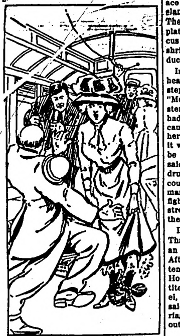
Mr. Walpole was no villain. He was earning a fair salary and lived with his widowed mother. He had thoughts of matrimony. When Miss Kitty came along with her number two-and-a-half feet, with a high and dainty instep, he quite lost his heart. He had paid more attention to the instep than to the face, but Miss Kitty had a fair-looking face and figure.

Miss Kitty also lived with her widowed mother. She also earned a salary of $12 per week. She never even glanced at the young man's feet, and cared not a cent whether he had a high or low instep, but she also had thoughts of matrimony. Why not? Like a sensible girl, she was not waiting for a young lord or prince, or for an old dotard with his millions. A good looking shoe clerk on a fair salary looked good to her.

All the young woman had to do was to keep buying her shoes from Smith & Brown—high shoes, low shoes and slippers, and all Mr. White had to do was to stand ready to wait on her. Cupid did the rest. He gets in his work in a shoe store as well as in a palace. In time there came a call at the house; then more calls. Then the theater and little dinners. Then moonlight, sentiment, engagement and bliss!

It was just at this happy period that the good mother of the filial son lost her appetite. Something must be had to liven it up again. Horace thought of pickles, clam broth, jellies, malts and other things, but finally decided on a lobster—a live, active, aggressive lobster—a fighting-mad lobster, would be taken home and boiled alive and afterwards served to the ailing mother. It would either kill or cure her.

What more natural than a clerk in a shoe store at $12 per who wanted to take home a live lobster should select one of the hundreds of pasteboard boxes around him? It was done.



"Horace, the Man Here—He Has Pinched Me!"

The fish market man brought out the victim. The lobster, who had bitten him three times that day was trying for the fourth bite.

Mr. White had to take the Elm street car line to reach home. So did Miss Henderson. They didn't meet on the car by accident. He walked down the street one block to find her waiting, and they got on together.

It is surprising how easy it is to talk love on a street car. On one side of the happy pair is a deaf old man, and on the other is an old woman who is thinking of the pork roast in the market basket at her feet, and the two opposite have their noses in newspapers. The pair can go right ahead and plan bridal tours, costly flats and bank accounts. It's almost the same as sitting in the parlor, and there is a constant change of scenery. This had been going on for weeks when the event took place to try the to-be-bride's soul.

On this particular evening she was waiting on the corner, as usual. Not a thought of danger entered her mind. Not one horror appeared on her horizon. She was happy. She was watching for the appearance of the shoe clerk she adored. He came. He hastened. He had that shoe box under his arm. A young man in Miss Henderson's place would have saluted with: "Hello, old man!" and asked about the box later on. She, of course, asked about it the first thing. Heretofore, there had been no weak points in the armor of Horace Walpole White. But now, one was to be disclosed.

Mr. White was sensitive about carrying packages on the street or car, and especially so when his lady love was with him. To have stated in reply that he was carrying home a live lobster was beyond him. He would perish first. He would lie first. He did lie. He said it was a pair of shoes for his mother. The falsehood was believed. It even gave Miss Kitty a warmer feeling at the heart to know that she was soon to wed a man who cared whether his old mother went around barefooted in the nipping frosts or had shoes to her feet.

Once aboard the car, they sat down together as usual. They were chatty and happy. She was going that evening to learn how to trim her own hats, and he was going to revive his mother's lost appetite. Then, of a sudden, the dull thud came. Cupid flew out and the live lobster crawled in.

Shoe store boxes get a great deal of handling. When business is dull the clerks throw them across the store at each other in sportive mood. The one in which Mr. White was carrying home the champion fighting lobster had been sported with and more or less wrecked. One end had been busted and weakened. The lobster hadn't been in the coop ten minutes before he caught on. It was escape or boiling death for him. He didn't want to boil. He went at that weak corner and clawed and bit and tore, with the result that ten minutes after the lovers were seated in the car, with the box between them, he emerged into the sunshine of liberty.

It is not necessary to read natural history to learn that the first idea of a lobster on getting his freedom is to make for the salty sea; the next is to nip any one in the way. This lobster dropped to the floor with a thud and clawed the happy Miss Kitty on the ankle belonging to one of those aristocratic insteps. He clawed in earnest. She sprang to her feet with a scream, and then shouted:

"Horace, the man here—he has pinched me!"

Horace didn't lose time swearing by the beard of his father. The man was undersized and thin and unhappy. He had lost a dollar on the street the day before, and was thinking of it when the gallant Horace knocked him to the floor.

Miss Henderson got another bite, screamed another scream, and Horace picked up a drug store clerk and slammed him around without mercy. Then the lobster started for the rear platform, and that car became a circus for the next five minutes. Women shrieked and men swore, and the conductor called for a shotgun.

In the midst of the uproar one could hear the voice of the girl with the instep. She had solved the riddle. "Mother's shoes" were a monster lobster! Horace had lied to her! He had caused her to be clawed. He had caused an uproar that must disgrace her for life. He sought to explain, but it was no use. How could such a thing be explained? The undersized man said it couldn't possibly be, and the drug clerk said he'd be hanged if it could. The conductor also said that a man who would deliberately permit a fighting lobster to get away on a street car was no gentleman, to say the least.

Did Cupid come again? Oh, yes. That match was made in heaven, and an earthly lobster couldn't spoil it. After weeks and weeks, with a written confession and apology daily from Horace—after the mother's lost appetite had been restored by salt mackerel, there was a making up. The papers said that there was a marriage—marriage and a dinner—with lobster left out!

FOUND FOUR-LEAF CLOVER

Little Woman Sees Leaf, and All the Passengers on the Train Think That She Is Lucky.

A northbound Frisco passenger train stood on the siding in the Ozarks. Many of the passengers were at late breakfast in the diner.

Just as a waiter began to pour coffee for a quick-eyed little woman, she said: "Oh, wait; I must get out. Just there by that tie," motioning, "I see a big four-leaf clover." The waiter brought it, and the passengers exclaimed, "How lucky," and the little woman said, "It will bring good luck all the day."

Now you know, and we know, that it wouldn't do any such thing. Clover leaves, rabbit feet, buckeyes, and ill-made pennies, or any other inanimate thing, do not bring either good or bad fortune. But when a fellow, or a girl for that matter, finds a four-leaf clover, he is exhilarated. It stimulates, by reason of giving additional heart-beats; he tries harder, he walks faster, he looks happier, he speaks cheerier; he is therefore more attractive to others, and he hits the old world harder, and makes it give down its milk.

Did you ever see a calf getting its dinner? You know how it butts: if the cow doesn't give down the milk? Well, the stronger the calf, the harder the "butt," the more milk. So the leaf makes us butt harder and we win; hence, we call it lucky. Maybe it is.

USE SANITARY MILK PAILS

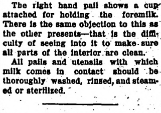
Have Small Opening and Some Provided With Strainer to Keep Out All Dirt.

There are a great many different styles of sanitary pails used in the production of certified milk, any of which are an improvement over the old open pail which has no provision for keeping out dirt and which should not be used in any dairy.

Generally speaking, the sanitary pails have a small opening. Some are provided with a strainer through which the milk passes in entering the pail. This strainer consists in some cases of metal wire, but is not so satisfactory as a cheese cloth strainer.

Aside from the strainer used in the pails absorbent cotton is generally preferred. This is usually inclosed between two thickness of cheese cloth, a method found to be very practical.

The pail shown on the left in the illustration is a good, sanitary milk pail. The height is convenient and as the opening is on the side there is but little chance for dirt to fall in. The seams are all well flushed with solder. The objection to this pail, if any, is the difficulty of seeing that all parts are clean.



Sanitary Milk Pails.

The right hand pail shows a cup attached for holding the foremilk. There is the same objection to this as the other presents—that is the difficulty of seeing into it to make sure all parts of the interior are clean.

All pails and utensils with which milk comes in contact should be thoroughly washed, rinsed, and steamed or sterilized.

HOW SEPARATOR IS WORKED

Pulls Milk Away From Cream as It Is Whirled Around Bowl—Speed Is Big Aid.

Cream rises from milk by gravity. The fat in the milk is lighter and rises to the surface, but it takes a long time to do it.

The separator pulls the milk away from the cream as it is whirled around the bowl. It acts just as a stone tied to a string and swung around the head. The faster it is swung the harder the pull.

When the milk is placed in the bowl and the latter is whirled around at a tremendous speed the heavier portions of the milk are drawn to the bottom and the fat and lighter portions to the top. The whole volume in the bowl becomes arranged in layers, the pure milk separated from the fat goes to the very bottom, that not perfectly separated rising toward the top and the fat or cream slipping off the surface.

Now, the faster the bowl is revolved the cleaner the milk will be "skimmed" because the centrifugal force is greater. The slower the bowl is revolved the more fat there will be left in the milk. Simple, isn't it?

Pasteurized Cream.

During recent years the pasteurization of cream for butter making seems to be gaining favor in our best creameries. In fact this practise has become almost a necessity in those localities where cream of all kinds is gathered from various sources. The butter maker has come to realize that if he is to have control over his finished product, so that he shall have some assurance of the constant and uniform quality of the output, he must resort to means by which he can eliminate the variable factors in his cream, namely, those undesirable bacteria and disagreeable flavors which will develop later on and make their presence manifest in the finished article. By heating the cream from 170 degrees to 180 degrees F. and cooling it at once nearly all of the bacteria are destroyed and many of the objectionable odors are driven off.

The Paying Cows.

The Ohio experiment station has found a man in that state who is a thrifty farmer of the smaller class, owning but a small bit of land, who commenced 20 years ago with a single cow. Even now he has but ten cows, but they individually produce from 10,000 to 14,000 pounds of milk per year. The gross income from his cows varies from $160 to $219 per cow per year. Average feed bill is about $55 per cow per year. This dairyman kept a record of what his cows and their ancestors had done for the whole 20 years of his experience as a dairyman. He bred his best cows to the very best sires he could secure, and looked more to this performance at the pail than to dairy type or conformation.

DON'T BOARD COWS AT LOSS

One Sure Way to Tell Whether Animal Is Earning Keep Is by Babcock Tester.

The only way to tell whether or not every cow in the dairy is earning her keep is to buy a Babcock tester. The illustration shows a complete outfit. The description of the various parts is as follows:

No. 1, scales for weighing; No. 2, milk pail; No. 3, galvanized iron box for keeping samples of milk; No. 4, sulphuric acid; No. 5, Babcock hand tester; No. 6, composite sample jar; No. 7, beaker for adding acid; No. 8, test bottles; No. 9, acid measure; Nos. 10 and 11, pipette; No. 12, clinical thermometer for determining strength of sulphuric acid.

ONE WAY OF COOLING CREAM

Minnesota Dairyman Gives His Method as an Improvement on That Given Before.

Mr. W. Barney's system of cooling milk is pretty good but I think it can be improved, so I will try to explain how I did it a few years ago when we ran short of ice in the month of August, writes George H. Miller of Minnesota in Hoard's Dairyman.

I took a barrel, bored a hole about two inches from the bottom, inserted a galvanized pipe with an elbow and ran the pipe up a little higher than cream cans would be in the barrel and on top of it I screwed a wooden jelly pail and pumped the water into the pail. As we all know, the warmest water always rises to the top so I had another pipe on the opposite side of the barrel, a little lower than the top of the cream cans for the water to run into the watering trough. I pumped the cold water from the well into the bottom of the barrel with the coolest water and did not mix it in with the warm water at the top of the barrel but let that run off undisturbed.

DAIRY NOTES

When feeding the calf by hand, feed often and in small amounts.

On many dairy farms the production of meat can be made a profitable side line.

The heifer carrying her first calf should be well fed and otherwise well cared for.

The dairy heifer may, and should be, bred sooner than the heifer of a beef breed.

When the calf is about four weeks old offer it shelled corn, and new corn if you have it.

Where milk or butter is produced there is decided advantage in raising the calf by hand.

The dairyman of necessity must produce calves in order to have his cows freshen every year.

One of the chief causes of trouble in growing calves by hand is feeding them from unclean pails.

There is less cost in marketing a veal calf than in marketing the milk that it takes to produce it.

During the third week of the normal calf's life it will begin to nibble at hay, if any is in its reach.

The beef calf, in order to make quick and profitable growth, must receive an abundance of nourishment.

The calf, or any small animal running with its mother, takes nourishment many times a day, each time in small amounts.

Butter or cream and meats of all kinds are concentrated finished products, hence they are easy to market and bring the highest prices.

The flesh of chickens fattened and finished on skim milk as the principal diet, in connection with crushed grains, is very light, tender and juicy.

Combining meat production with general dairying is a good combination, and one which will leave the largest proportion of fertility upon the farm.

A True Story of the Secret Service

By

COL. H. C. WHITLEY

Former Chief U. S. Secret Service

DURING the sixties and and the early seventies of the last century, counterfeiting blossomed into one of the fine arts, and to such perfection was it brought that, in many instances, it was exceedingly difficult to detect the bogus stuff from the genuine.

As insidious enemies of the people in every walk of life, counterfeiters may well be classed among the most subtle and dangerous persons with whom officers of the law have to cope. Ever wide awake and on the alert for treachery in their own ranks, these crafty rogues can only be captured and convicted by means of carefully baited traps, or by what is generally known as the stool-pigeon system.

Counterfeiters are divided into six distinct classes: First, the capitalist or procurer; second, the engraver; third, the printer; fourth, the wholesale dealer; fifth, the retailer, and sixth, the shover or circulator. The capitalist is the most difficult man to reach as he seldom handles any of the plates or spurious money. Hence the chief offender in this line may walk calmly about, defying the detective, each tacitly understanding the other in his relative position; one suspecting and watching, the other patiently and tirelessly picking up, crumb by crumb, convicting evidence.

The methods pursued by detectives to entrap counterfeiters are rarely better illustrated than in the following account of the capture of William M. Gurney, alias "Big Bill" the Koniacker, one of the foremost wholesale dealers in "queer" of his day. He was born of respectable parentage, reared in the quietude incident to country life, educated and supplied with a sufficient amount of money wherewith to live like a gentleman and, strangely enough, he chose a path that led to his ultimate ruin.

In the excitement of those tumultuous days the city of New York was well stocked with men possessed of a genius for conceiving and concealing crime. Perhaps no other city in the civilized world has ever afforded a better opportunity for fleecing the public. Gurney had been handling counterfeit money for several years but had managed to escape punishment. He was one of the chief distributors for Joshua D. Miner, who was the head and front of a powerful octopus whose tentacles were stretched out in almost every section of the country.

Gurney was by no means unattractive in appearance, and there were few men walking Broadway in his day whose physique could compare favorably with his. He stood six feet two inches in height and was correspondingly well proportioned, while his expansive chest and well-developed limbs gave him the appearance of a man possessing the muscular strength of a giant. His black eyes were sharp and severe, or mild and pleasant, to suit occasions. In conversation he was easy and interesting and, among strangers, would readily have passed for a gentleman of marked ability. To be a leader among the counterfeiting fraternity seemed to have been the crowning glory of his highest ambition.

In the spring of 1869 I was appointed chief of the government secret service and, though I had had experience with General Butler in New Orleans, and later in the internal revenue service, I was unknown among the counterfeiters.

Shortly after my appointment I received information, at my headquarters in Washington, regarding a rather unique affair that had taken place at one of the drinking resorts on Houston street, in New York city. William Gurney, with his characteristic push and daring, had invited a party of "queersmen" to partake of a banquet at this place. There were 24 persons present at this function, three ex-detectives being among the number.

On the following day I was furnished with the particulars of this remarkable assembly, and the ex-detective who reported it also provided a list of the banqueters. Among other things I learned that my appointment as chief of the secret service was discussed at the affair, and pronounced a good joke upon the government. Gurney addressed his guests, boastfully declaring that "the new chief might do for a preacher or an internal revenue clerk, but that he could never cope with shrewd men like the queersmen."

"Now is our opportunity," he said, "to reap a rich harvest." At the same time he advised his friends that he was going to take the new chief into his confidence and keep him well stuffed with fictitious information. "In the meantime," he continued, "I will draw out from him his plans and keep myself posted as to his proposed movements."

This plan pleased the fancy of the scoundrels, and they agreed that Gurney was a great man. They were seated at the tables imbibing wine, and they drank to Gurney's health while the ex-detectives and counterfeiters jostled elbows and bandied jokes good-naturedly as they contemplated the easy times in store for them. When sufficiently filled with wine and enthusiasm, they capped the climax by hurrahing for his satanic majesty. The feast of Belshazzar was a tame affair in comparison with the indulgence of these men. If there were any letters of warning upon the walls, all were too drunk to read them, or they lacked a sober Daniel to interpret them.

Under the circumstances it seemed advisable to allow these merry plotters to pursue their way unmolested until sufficiently off their guard to permit the successful carrying out of a plan to entrap and apprehend the entire party.

Much of my time was now spent at my New York office in Bleeker street where, in due time, Gurney called upon me for the purpose "of paying his respects and tendering some information in regard to counterfeiters." The artless appearing fellow said that when quite young he had been foolish enough to engage in counterfeiting, but had long since abandoned it and was now ready to render the government such assistance as he could. I affected to receive him with open arms, and apparently gulped down as truth everything he had to offer. Gurney was well fitted to deceive with a plausible story, for he seemed candid in manner and well equipped in every way to impose upon the most incredulous.

The officers of the secret service all considered him a dangerous person and none was anxious to encounter a man of such gigantic proportions and apparently desperate character.

My first move against Gurney was to send Mike Bower, a newly-fledged government detective, to form his acquaintance. Bower was selected because his appearance was anything but that of a detective. Bower drifted into Gurney's "boozing-den" on East Bleeker street where, after loitering around drinking and smoking for a week or two, he one day called Gurney aside and told him he was broke and must have a little money. He drew from his inside pocket a gold watch with a short piece of chain hanging from it, giving it the appearance of having been nipped from the pocket of some unfortunate citizen.

Gurney snapped at the bait at once and intimated, with a sly wink, that the watch had been stolen. When Bower finally admitted as much Gurney seemed pleased and bought the watch at about one-third its value, remarking: "You're all right, my boy. When you want anything, come to me."

After a few days Bower again approached Gurney, this time with a diamond stud that had been slipped from its fastenings. "I need some more money," said Bower.

Gurney inspected the gem with an appreciative eye, and finally said: "You are a good one. Did you ever handle any of the 'queer?'"

"I took a little hand in it once," replied Bower cautiously, "but I do not like to take the chances any more."

"Oh, h—l," replied Gurney. "We've got everything our own way now. The government detectives are all green men and there's no danger of getting caught unless a fellow goes and gives himself up." Taking from his wallet a $20 counterfeit note on the National Shoe and Leather bank of New York city, he added: "Here's something good enough to deceive the disciples."

After some parleying Bower accepted $300 of the "queer" for the diamond, and I now instructed Bower to stay away from Gurney for a couple of weeks.

While Bower had been working Gurney, that worthy had been coming to my office every few days to work me. He imagined that I fully believed what he said, and that he was regarded as a valuable ally. I always received him kindly, and assured him that I had no desire to make arrests unless forced to do so, and that I did not believe in using harsh measures unnecessarily. Gurney fairly chuckled at this simplicity and was thrown completely off his guard.

He assumed an air of great mystery and spoke of the possible existence of counterfeit plates that might be reached for a reward. He would not, he declared, accept a dollar for his personal services but, because of his great fancy for me, was ready to assist in every way possible. He was permitted to blarney along and play the game to his own liking, secure in the belief that he was completely deceiving the government officials.

In the meantime the services of an old counterfeiter, fresh from the penitentiary, had been secured. Many of his old confederates were now operating with the Gurney gang and, through him, Bill Butts, a fresh-looking detective from one of the western states, was introduced to several of the men who made their headquarters at a saloon on the Bowery. Butts informed the barkeeper of the saloon that he had just served a term for "shoving the queer."

At first the counterfeiters and thieves hanging around the place appeared to be suspicious of Butts. One day, however, when these villians were drinking beer in the back room of the place, a fight arose. The detective went in with the rest and stretched out several of the fellows, though he was badly beaten up in the end, and in addition was robbed of his pocketbook and watch.

The ethics of the criminal profession are peculiar. When a crowd of crooks fight they frequently rob one another, and if the victim calls in the police to recover his property, he loses the confidence of the rogues who took part in the fray. But if he keeps silent it is conclusive evidence in their minds that he cannot stand investigation, and this establishes his character beyond doubt. It is accepted by them as sufficient voucher that he is a member in good standing in the brotherhood of crooks, and he is then admitted into full fellowship.

Shortly after the melee one of the crowd suggested to Butts that he call in the police. He promptly replied: "No police for me," and the detective was thereupon received without hesitation or mental reservation. During the next seven or eight months Butts worked with this gang of counterfeiters as a shover of queer.

"Counterfeit shovers," as they are called, usually travel in pairs. One fellow carries the bogus money and remains outside, while the other takes one bill, enters a place of business, purchases some trifle, tenders the counterfeit note in payment, and receives change in good money. If this precaution were not observed, the possession of other counterfeit money, in case of detection and arrest, would indicate guilt and lead almost inevitably to conviction.

Detective Butts, however, did not pass any counterfeit money but used instead a good bill in the place of the one he received from the carrier. That was kept for evidence, and in this way he deceived the queersmen for months, and secured evidence to convict about twenty of the Gurney party.

While Butts had been busy with the gang of shovers, Bower had been devoting his time to Gurney and the other leaders. On one occasion Bower purchased $500 of counterfeit money from Gurney, and this he handed to me as I was on my way to dinner at the St. Clair house. As I entered the restaurant I met Gurney looking as cheerful and innocent as a Raphael cherub. The rascal appeared with a bland smile and informed me that he had come there especially to see me about counterfeiting transatcions out west. I took him by the hand, thanked him, and invited him to dine.

We selected a table where Gurney could talk without being overheard. His information, as usual, was indefinite, hearsay, with no particular point to it. He told me that my policy of being easy with the counterfeiters was working like a charm—that there was no counterfeit money in circulation in the east—in fact, he had not seen a bad dollar in six months. At that very moment my hand was resting on the package of counterfeit money that had just been purchased from him by Bower.

A few days later Gurney told Bower, in a boasting way, of this interview and, in a burst of enthusiasm, declared that everything about the government detective headquarters was known to him before it transpired. He asserted that he was one of my assistants, and was so puffed up over his imaginary success that he really believed he knew what was going on in my office.

The time now seemed ripe for the arrest of the entire party who had discussed my qualifications over their wine at the banquet on Houston street. Bower had completely won Gurney's confidence. Telling him that he was about to take a trip to Texas, he inquired if he could buy $3,000 in counterfeit money at a wholesale figure.

"Of course; any amount of it," answered Gurney.

A deal was arranged for its delivery on the New York side of Fulton Ferry. Bower was to be at a designated spot at a certain time, and Gurney was to pass along, hand over the spurious and receive good money in payment.

At the appointed time there was a large crowd standing around the ferry landing waiting for the boat. Bower was there, and a few paces from him stood a seemingly honest tinsmith with a joint of stove-pipe under his arm and a pair of snippers in his hand. His clothes and the soot upon his hands and face bore unmistakable witness to his calling. Near by, looking in another direction, stood a stoutly-built business man of ample girth. In one hand he carried a hat box, in the other a valise. In the immediate vicinity was a tall, reverential appearing gentleman, with neat side whiskers, whose white tie and the ministerial cut of his coat were in keeping with the sanctimonious expression of his face.

When the ferry boat struck the dock Gurney stepped off, peered cautiously and carefully around, scanning the faces of those who were standing near. Being satisfied that there were no suspicious persons about, he drew a package from under his coat and stepped toward Bower to deliver it.

At this instant the ministerial-looking man raised his hand. The fat man dropped his luggage and the tinsmith his tools. Both seized Gurney by the arms and held him while the tall brother, with a quick movement, snapped handcuffs on his wrists. Everything was done so quickly that Gurney did not have time to catch his breath before he was securely ironed.

The prisoner was taken to the secret service office. I removed my side whiskers and made some change in my clothing, then entered the office and shook hands with the crestfallen criminal.

During that day and evening the government officers were engaged in arresting the shovers of the gang, against whom Butts had secured evidence. Two of the ex-detectives, guests at Gurney's banquet, had already been arrested for passing counterfeit money—one at Pittsburg and the other at Cincinnati. By 11 o'clock that night the officers had arrested 20 of the gang. They were arranged in a circle at the office, and the right hand of one was handcuffed to the left hand of the next. Gurney, appropriately, happened to be the center-piece.

I could not help a feeling of pity for the unfortunates, but they had voluntarily preyed upon society and transgressed the laws of their land, and the common weal required that they be punished. They were all tried and convicted, most of them entering a plea of guilty.

The boastful Gurney now fully realized the trap into which he had fallen. He had been hoisted by his own petard, a circumstance that seemed to humiliate him almost beyond measure. With little or no pressure he weakened and confessed that he had received his counterfeit money from Joshua D. Miner, who was the capitalist that owned the plates upon which the National Shoe and Leather twenties were printed.

Among the secret service officers Miner was known to be a counterfeiter, but on account of his great wealth and political standing, he was considered a difficult man to grapple with. He was a large city contractor at this time, and employed about one hundred men opening up a new road at the end of Ninth avenue.

Gurney was altogether too timid to make a deal with Miner in order to give the officers an opportunity to capture him red-handed, but he finally agreed to go with me to see Miner who, he believed, would surrender the $20 counterfeit plates for the purpose of shortening his sentence.

Leaving a carriage on the boulevard, I walked with Gurney a short distance on Sixty-ninth street toward Miner's house. We met Miner on the sidewalk and I was introduced by Gurney, who then explained the trouble he had gotten himself into. Miner said he could do nothing for him and, as a last resort, I requested Miner to step aside with me, where I told him that I was convinced that he was the owner of the counterfeit plates of the National Shoe and Leather bank. This he firmly denied, but I insisted and threatened to arrest him. He finally said that he would make an effort to secure the plates. I knew what this meant and, upon his promise to meet me the following day, I left him.

Miner appeared on time, but was still doubtful in regard to his ability to make the surrender demanded. He was a hard nut to crack but, before we parted, I succeeded in convincing him, by the use of language not less threatening than it was forcible, that it was for his interest to surrender the plates. This he now promised to do and, shortly after another interview at his home, I received a check for a piece of baggage at the Grand Central depot. A detective went to the baggage room at this depot and obtained an old hair trunk in which were found the plates.

According to promise, Gurney, through my intercession and explanation, was given a sentence of seven years instead of the maximum sentence of fifteen.

RED CROSS SEALS

Novel Way of Conducting War on the White Plague.

How the Anti-Tuberculosis Campaign Is Financed and a Relief Fund Raised by the Aid of Little Christmas Stickers.

New York.—Wars always produce a new supply of emergency measures for the relief of the sick and wounded. It is not surprising, then, that the Civil war, with its hundreds of thousands of maimed and wounded soldiers, coupled with Yankee ingenuity, should have brought into existence the stamp as a means of raising money for the soldiers' relief funds. The scheme was first instituted in Boston in 1862 at the United States Sanitary fair, but so successful was the idea that other fairs in Brooklyn, Stamford and Springfield, Mass., at once adopted it. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were raised in this way.

So popular, however, did the stamp become, that the public became satiated, and soon after the war the sale of stamps for charitable purposes fell into disuse in this country. In Europe the charity stamp was adopted in Portugal for the first time in 1892, and has been imitated with varying success in almost every country on the continent, and even in Australia and the Orient.

It was a war that again brought the stamp into national prominence in the United States, but not a war of guns and of fields of carnage. It was a war of enlightenment against ignorance; a war of cleanliness on filth; a war of health against disease—the great American war against tuberculosis. While the Civil war, with its slaughter and death, killed about 200,000 government troops in four years, and maimed perhaps twice that number, every year that silent, subtle foe, tuberculosis, slays 200,000, and lays low three to five times that number. A war, therefore, against such an enemy demanded and still demands ammunition and varied resources. To furnish these necessary supplies for war, the Red Cross stamp was first launched on a national basis by the American Red Cross in 1908.

The year before, in 1907, the first sale of stamps for charitable purposes for more than a generation had taken place in Delaware, centering in and around Wilmington. A little group of women in that city, headed by Miss Emily P. Bissell, who was allied both with the Red Cross and the Anti-Tuberculosis society, instituted the plan of selling Christmas stamps, the funds to be devoted to the local fight against consumption. The idea had come from Denmark. How the pennies accumulated in that first sale! And how the dollars grew!

MERRY CHRISTMAS · HAPPY NEW YEAR
1910

Red Cross "Seal" Enlarged.

That experiment started the American Red Cross to thinking, and they reasoned that here was a war against a more devastating disease than any war or pestilence that had ever been known. Why not have an emergency relief fund for use in this war in all parts of the United States, since the enemy was everywhere? The idea of a national stamp was therefore launched in 1908, and with little or no organization, over $135,000 was raised for the fight against tuberculosis.

In 1909 a more systematic attempt to organize the sale was made. A percentage of 20 per cent. was charged by the American Red cross to each local agent selling stamps, the sales aggregating fully $250,000. What is even greater, this sale was the means of interesting in the war on consumption thousands of people who had never before given this subject their attention.

The outlook for 1910 is extremely bright. The sale will be organized before Christmas to a greater or less degree in almost every state in the Union. "A Million for Tuberculosis" is the slogan of the campaign. Already 25,000,000 stamps have been issued and every indication points to the sale of four times that number.

The United States postoffice authorities have requested that the stickers be called "seals" this year, and have ordered that they be placed on the back of letters and packages instead of on the face. These seals will not carry any mail, but every kind of mail will carry them.

Every man, woman and child in the United States can help in this war. It is not a war that demands much sacrifice. Surely, anyone can give a cent, a nickel or a dime for a few Red Cross seals. Each seal placed on a letter or a package helps the one who sends it, it helps the one who receives it, and also the unknown one for whom it helps to provide a chance for life and death. Every seal will become a bullet directed at the enemy whose conquest is desired, and all the money is used in the place where the seals are sold.

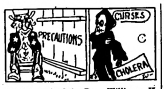
WASHINGTON GOSSIP

States Aid in Cholera Precautions



WASHINGTON.—Dr. William K. Rucker of the public health and marine hospital service, recently left Ellis island for Boston to confer with Commissioner of Immigration George B. Billings, the port medical staff and officials of the state board of health regarding the new and comprehensive plan for guarding the United States against possible danger from cholera suspects coming from Russia and Italy. This plan contemplates a surveillance of immigrants from the infected districts to their final destination in the United States, even though it be in a remote settlement of the west. Surgeon General Walter Wyman and his officers have worked days and nights perfecting the details and now believe that with the co-operation of state and municipal health authorities which they request, a cholera epidemic in the United States would be practically impossible.

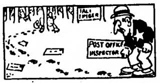
The new system, which is supplementary to the rigorous medical examinations now made provides for a registry of immigrants from Russia and Italy by the immigrant inspectors at each port on the Atlantic coast. The bureau has prepared a blank for the use of the inspectors whereby a simple system of checking and the writing in of the name of the immigrant and the town, street and number to which he is going will make a complete record of his origin and destination.

At the close of the day these "destination cards" will be collected by the chief medical officer and immediately mailed to state boards of health.

The state health official in return will be requested to mail the cards to the local boards of health. The theory is that should a case of cholera break out the local officials would immediately be able to identify it and take prompt measures, should the records show that the place harbored persons coming from a cholera infested district.

The treasury department and the department of commerce and labor have formally approved Doctor Wyman's plan, hence it goes into operation with all the force of the government behind it as far as United States officials are concerned.

Ask Honest Postal Law Enforcement



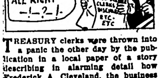
ANNOUNCEMENT is made at the post office department that under instructions from Postmaster General Hitchcock the inspectors "must get the crooks." Whereupon every sleuth has put his nose to the ground and sought an opening to land those who are trying to "get something for nothing" from the people. But it is also said that "they are going after every individual or concern whose business smacks of fraud regardless of its size or the influence which may be behind it."

Several days ago there came out of the same department a story to the effect that the inspectors were informed that they were not to "go it blind" and simply make cases, but that he would have to be able to "produce the goods" so as to have reasonable grounds for convictions in court.

No honest man wants to prevent the prosecution of frauds and crooks. On the contrary, there is a strong desire that all such persons should be apprehended and punished, but there have been examples of great injustice and wrong on the part of too eager post office inspectors who wanted to make a record and devoted much time to working up cases. There are also many people who, for revenge, or other cause, seek out post office inspectors and try to secure fraud orders against persons they dislike or whose business rivalry they fear.

If fraud orders could be reviewed in the courts it would not matter so much whether legitimate concerns were attacked by over-zealous men who are told "get the crooks," and went out to make records. But there are many little frauds who advertise a business and have a little room with a deal table and one chair; reap a small harvest and make a quick get-away, who should be pursued by the men who are trying to prevent the use of mails for fraudulent purposes

Government Clerks Were Well Scared



I CAN SEE MYSELF LOOKING FOR ANOTHER JOB ALL RIGHT —!—?—!—
CLEVELAND RECOMMENDS CLERKS DISCHARGED ETC. ETC

TREASURY clerks were thrown into a panic the other day by the publication in a local paper of a story describing in alarming detail how Frederick A. Cleveland, the business expert, has been whizzing through the department of late, discovering inefficiency right and left and recommending discharges and salary reductions at a wholesale rate. Not only on their own account, but on that of their relatives and friends throughout the country.

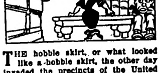
As a matter of fact, the story apparently was made out of whole cloth. It has attracted attention at the White House, which has given orders that its origin be traced.

The actual work of reorganizing the treasury department is being done very slowly and quietly and without serious disturbance to any one. Six months ago the department entered into a contract with Arthur Young, who has made a thorough examination of the antique accounting system and of general business methods.

Mr. Young put eight men to work and the treasury department placed alongside of every one of them a check of its own, selected especially because of his known efficiency and enterprise. As a result the department now has in hand a staff of trained investigators of its own educated by the hired experts.

The treasury department hesitates to make sweeping changes in personnel until congress shall have passed some kind of civil service retirement act.

Hobble Invades Nation's High Court



THE hobble skirt, or what looked like a hobble skirt, the other day invaded the precincts of the United States Supreme court, where flowing robes are worn by the justices and where the lawyers who appear to argue cases generally wear the somber black of the bar.

Of course, hobble skirt wearers have hobbled behind the railing where the public is admitted, because among the visitors to the courtroom are women dressed in the latest styles. But not until the day mentioned a woman barrister, entitled to practise before the highest court in the land, appeared in a dress which suggested the latest fad.

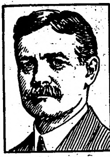
The person who has precipitated all this discussion is Adelma H. Burd of New York. When she appeared in the courtroom and proceeded to take her seat within the inclosure reserved for members of the bar there was a hasty investigation. It did not seem likely that a woman lawyer who had attained the dignity of the right to practise before the Supreme court would be so swayed by feminine emotions as to don a skirt that showed tendencies toward the hobble idea. Some of the court officers, as a matter of fact, were not certain in their own minds that the hobble feature was there. That question has not yet been answered satisfactorily.

Anyway, Miss Burd was not molested. She is likely to go down in history as the first woman who by her appearance before the Supreme court proved that her sex can attain the greatest distinction in store for attorneys without putting behind it what is regarded as the feminine devotion to the dictates of fashion.

Love really is blind, and this accounts for the neckties some woman buy their husbands

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

ROSE FROM TELEGRAPH KEY



William A. Gardner, who 38 years ago struggled with the Morse code in a little railway telegraph office at Lemont, Ill., the other night rode out of the Chicago and Northwestern station on the president's special to inspect the 12,000 miles of tracks which sprawl over the great northwest as far as the Wyoming mountains. Two hours before that the directors of the road had made him president to succeed Marvin Hughitt, who was given the newly created position of chairman of the board of directors.

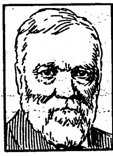
The story of Mr. Gardner's rise to the place as chief executive of the Chicago and Northwestern is the consummation in reality of one of the business romances of which every youthful telegrapher dreams.

All the money which Mr. Gardner could control 38 years ago was contained in a pay envelope which the present-day union telegraphers would scorn to accept. Now he exercises control over the $53,000,000 annual expenditure for the operation of the Northwestern lines.

W. A. Gardner's "railroading" began with his work for the Chicago and Alton in 1872 at Lemont, where he learned to use the telegrapher's key. He was then in his teens, having been born at Gardner, Ill., November 8, 1859. He began his first work for the Chicago and Northwestern in 1878 and added to his duties as telegrapher those of division superintendent's clerk. From this place he rose to the position of trainmaster at Boone, Iowa, and remained there until 1883, when he went to a similar place with the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe.

The next promotion that came his way made him assistant superintendent of the Wisconsin division of the Chicago and Northwestern in 1885. Five years later he became superintendent of this division and then rose successively to assistant general superintendent, general manager, and, in 1896, to the place as vice-president of the Northwestern lines. Mr. Gardner has a wife and four daughters.

CROSSES OCEAN 100 TIMES

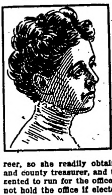


Andrew Carnegie, now seventy-five years old, is not quite up to his usual form, according to those who saw him walking down the gangplank of the Baltic at her dock in New York recently. It was the end of his one hundredth voyage across the ocean. The ironmaster had greatly aged since he went abroad last May. Leaning heavily on the arm of his secretary, he stepped slowly and hesitatingly on his way from the steamer to the dock, showing less vigor than formerly on his annual return from spending the summer in Skibo castle, Scotland.

Passengers in the Baltic who have been on other voyages with Carnegie commented freely on how little he was seen on deck this trip. He kept to his cabin most of the time and the few appearances he made except in the dining saloon were in the smoking room, where he democratically drew no lines in making everyone his friend. A touching feature of the trip, they said, was the devotion of the millionaire to his daughter. He followed her around continuously whenever he was on deck and was so devoted and attentive the other passengers described it as almost pathetic.

Mr. Carnegie said it was his one hundredth trip across the Atlantic and his eighth voyage as a passenger on board the Baltic. "When I came to America forty-odd years ago it was on board a sailing ship," said the ironmaster, "a great contrast to the fast and luxurious steamships of today. There has been a change in the people here, too. They have been so sociable and friendly. The proudest thing in my life is that I am an American citizen."

WOMAN A COUNTY TREASURER

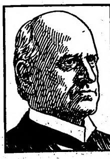


Valentine, Neb., is proud of the woman whom Cherry county elected county treasurer. Gertrude Jordan had served as deputy treasurer eight years and thus came in close touch with not only the politicians but the rank and file, winning popularity and later votes.

Miss Jordan is a native of Marshalltown, Iowa, and her parents (now dead) were of foreign birth, a mixture of Scotch, Irish and English. When very young she was taken to Dodge City, Kan., and there completed her schooling as a graduate of the local high school. Then she faced the world as a wage earner, beginning as a teacher in the public schools of that city, going later to Valentine in 1901, where she continued to teach.

Miss Jordan, being a progressive woman, early felt the call to a more wideawake and public career, so she readily obtained a position in the offices of the county clerk and county treasurer, and there made the best of her opportunities. She consented to run for the office, but many of her friends contended that she could not hold the office if elected. When the votes were counted she won out by 242 votes against two nominees. Then came a snag, says Human Life, for when she attempted to assume her duties one of the defeated candidates refused to turn over the office. Suit was entered by Miss Jordan in the Supreme court of the state, seven judges heard it, six concurred in an opinion favorable to Miss Jordan. The contest excited considerable comment from newspapers all over the country because of its unusual features.

NOW ACTING CHIEF JUSTICE



The most conspicuous figure on the bench of the United States Supreme court and one of the most distinguished men in the nation is Justice John Marshall Harlan, now acting chief justice. He holds the record for length of service, having been appointed in November, 1877. He is now seventy-seven years of age. Many men of half his age might well envy him his massive physique and the alertness and vigor of his mind. He is an ardent golfer and ascribes his wonderful health to this game and his life in the open air.

Justice Harlan is a Kentuckian and began practising law when he was only twenty years of age. During the civil war he saw service for three years as colonel of the Tenth Kentucky regiment. President Hayes made him a justice of the Supreme court and President Cleveland appointed him a member of the commission which settled the long-standing dispute between the United States and Great Britain over the Bering sea imbroglio.

In 1895 the Supreme court was divided on the question of the constitutionality of an income tax. The tax was pronounced unconstitutional by the close vote of five to four, thus reversing a previous decision of the court. Justice Harlan was one of the four dissenting members and when he gave his opinion he did it with a vivacity of manner and a pungency of phrase which rather startled the dignified tribunal. In spite of his advanced age, he has no idea of retiring from the bench and those who know his mental and physical vigor can discover no good reason why he should.

Odd News From Big Cities

Stories of Strange Happenings in the Metropolitan Towns.

Little "Cowboy" Meets Tragic Death

"CAPTAIN JACK"

CHICAGO.—It was a game of "Indian." In the fertile imagination of four-year-old "Captain Jack" Sexton, the alley was peopled with hawk-eyed savages and the red-skinned scouts looked down menacingly from the tops of the neighboring buildings. A war bonnet showed above an adjoining fence, but a well aimed shot from a wooden rifle laid its wearer in the dust.

To the little band led by "Captain Jack" the scene was not in the rear of the Sexton home at 6455 Ingleside avenue, but was instead in the vague plains of the west, where once the Apache left his bones beside those of his pale-faced enemy. To them the fire around which they romped was a camp fire, and beyond the circle of its light lay all the dangers of a trackless wilderness.

Clad in a yellow "cowboy" suit with a gaudy fringe of scarlet tassels, "Captain Jack" crouched with ready rifle, his face flushed with enthusiasm as he scanned the landscape for a hostile face.

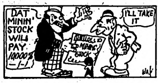
But the enemy was nearer and more subtle than even his childish imagination had pictured, and fanned by a fatal gust of wind the "camp fire" stretched out a flaming tongue and touched the flimsy garment of the little Indian hunter.

There was a shout of warning from the other children, and a scream of pain from "Captain Jack." As the flames spread over him he started running for his mother, but was caught by James Bennet, who was passing the house, and who smothered the fire with his coat.

But rescue came too late, though the child was hurried to the hospital and tender hands cut the charred cowboy suit from the senseless form and dressed the seared flesh.

And while his broken hearted mother knelt weeping at his beside "Captain Jack" entered that uncharted land more vast than all the plains beneath the sun.

Mine Fraud Gang Gets Many Millions



DAT MININ' STOCK WILL PAY 1000% —!—!
I'LL TAKE IT
MINING STOCK

NEW YORK.—Three hundred thousand dollars of easy money pour into the offices of fraudulent mining stock brokers of New York every day, according to conservative estimates made by Post Office Inspector Warren W. Dickson, in charge of the New York division. In the last three years $100,000,000 has been filched from the pockets of small investors and women. Thirty million dollars went into the coffers of one concern alone. A hundred million went to all of them during the three years preceding the panic of 1907.

The estimate is that the fraudulent operations this year will be $73,000,000, and the figures are on the increase.

A so-called "suckers' list," bearing the names of 250,000 who have "bit" and will probably bite again, is the most-prized asset of the big concerns that do the business. Under a working "understanding" they all have access to the same list of victims.

The magnitude of the fraudulent operations has caused the postal authorities to concentrate a strong force in opposition to the bogus mining concerns. Inspector Dickson, formerly stationed at St. Louis, who was the first man to put a check on the "green goods" game, has been placed in charge of the New York department. As a warning to the "suckers" he has told about the "Suckers' Directory."

"Down in Pine street," he says, "there is today a well furnished office, most conservative in appearance, the 'Suckers' Directory' of the fraud gang. The man in charge of the office has never been suspected of his calling, and none of his associates believes that it is anything but legitimate. I am informed that the list of names is now nearing the quarter million mark, and growing daily. As soon as the concern puts out more literature, they consult the directory in order to get quick returns. Whenever a new victim bites his name is added to the list.

Censorship for the Moving Pictures

ST. LOUIS.—Very few of the many thousands of persons who nightly attend the moving picture shows and see the words, "Licensed by the National Board of Censorship," flashed on the screen at the end of a film know what the sentence means. They have a vague idea that the film has undergone some sort of scrutiny. They do not know whether the work has been well or indifferently done, except as they judge from the film

The line flashed on the screen is in reality a seal of respectability, for the films that receive the approbation of the board are supposed to have had all objectionable features removed, if there were any that needed removal.

Twice a week, on Mondays and Fridays, the censorship committee meets to pass on the films. Before a film is shown printed cards are passed around to the censors. On them may be registered either absolute approval or disapproval, or any features that might be considered doubtful or objectionable noted.

If there are all approvals, the film is, of course, passed without further ado. If there are all rejections, it is, with as little ado, thrown out. But if only certain parts come in for either absolute disapproval or doubt such portions as they object to must either be stricken out entirely or modified according to their suggestions.

In practise the manufacturers find that the best means of avoiding trouble is to secure the ideas of the censors before the film is produced.

Women Carry Dolls Instead of Dogs

WHAT NEXT ?
FER—!—? SHE IS IN HER SECOND CHILDHOOD

PARIS.—The very latest is to carry a doll instead of a dog. The foolish craze began in Paris a month ago. The idea originated in the cracked brain of that same King of Fashion who is guilty of originating the hobble skirt. Babies? Such things must be left at home in charge of the nurse.

These dolls that have ended the day of the pet dog are wondrous affairs. They have a very decorative effect and are the most expensive toys that the woman of fashion has had to play with. The dolls themselves are worth only a few dollars. They have bisque features, human hair and reversible joints, and are about thirty inches high. But they are gowned complete by the most celebrated modists in Paris. Here the cheapest sell for $80. From there they run up to $200 each. Add the $50 duties and transportation to New York and they will sell there at from $150 to $250. Their originator argues that they will give an incentive to women to spend more money in dress—it will raise the standard of sartorial taste. As if wealthy women needed to spend any more on dress than they do today!

The only drawback about the new fad is the weight and size of the dolls. They weigh about twenty pounds and a toy Pom weighs six, but the doll keeps still and the dog doesn't. Those of the 400 who lack muscle will take their dolls about in their motor cars, only carrying them when they alight for a languid shopping expedition.

Those women who set the fashions in Paris, the favorites of visiting kings and lesser potentates, first appeared at the swagger restaurants with the dolls. Immediately the "high world" had to imitate the "half world." Proprietors of New York shops returned home with the bedecked dolls and the fad is on. London has already taken up the craze.

SARTORIAL SNOBBERY.

That elusive individual to whom the New York tailors owe a large debt of gratitude—which may be more than balanced by the amount he owes the tailors—has tendered the public another profound statement. He says that a man "who doesn't go out much" can dress decently on $5,000 a year, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Observe the subtle malignity of that qualifying phrase. The man who goes out much, the fellow who romps through routs and dinners and teas and al fresco twaddlefests, must pay his tailor—no matter what he does for the piper. While the poor chappie who is hampered by a measly $5,000 will cut his pleasures carefully according to his cloth, being so closely menaced by that deadly line of decency. Just now this distinction will be regarded by the possessor of two coat hangers, with only one in active use, can easily be imagined. He will smile at the ukase and snap his fingers at a code of decency that is based on 20 coats and countless trousers. Nevertheless, if you are ambitious to be of the patricians you must do as the patricians do—provided your income exceeds the paltry $5,000—and it will be an exhibition of extremely bad form if you regard this sartorial declaration of the man who knows in any other save the most serious light.

There is beginning to be comment on the growing respectability of trade in Germany. Time was when a man of title was believed to soil his hands by making money. The tradition can hardly be insisted on, however, when the kaiser himself has a business interest in the manufacture of terra cotta. From the old American standpoint it is much more honorable to get money in trade or industry than to acquire it by marriage; but it may be a long time before European aristocracy of any description sees the mercenary marriage problem in its true light.

Within the next three years the Malay states will export $50,000,000 worth of rubber. This goes far toward putting the rubber plant on a plane with the ice plant as a source of revenue.

A man in Massachusetts turning to look after a hobble skirt fell and broke his leg. He would not be a true son of Adam if he does not put all the blame on the hobble skirt.

A Paris dentist who tinkered with the teeth of the royalty of Europe at about $500 a tinker, has just died, leaving an estate worth only a little over a million.

A New Jersey pastor says that women who wear hobble skirts should be spanked. True, but in that skirt there's no chance of getting them in the proper position for spanking.

When people discover that it is cheaper to buy at home than to smuggle from abroad, smuggling will cease. The pocket nerve is a powerful moral agent.

Another man in the big woods has been shot, being mistaken for a deer. In order to be reasonably safe the hunter might disguise himself as game.

There is a school in Dubuque which is trying to teach boys to love farm work. One course should be on the abolition of the corn-husk mattress.

A Pittsburg man has received a legacy of $850,000 because he didn't marry. Not being married we can't see that he needs the money.

A Washington man dropped dead while using his lawn mower, and we presume his neighbors rolled over and enjoyed a little morning sleep.

It is about this time that the summer girls at the shores begins to get busy with her letters to the winter stand-by in the city.

STONE U. S. CONSUL

MEXICAN MOB AT CIUDAD PORFIRIO DIAZ ATTACK AMERICANS' HOMES.

LYNCH INQUIRY IS BEGUN

Governor of Texas, at Request of Secretary Knox, Starts Probe Into the Execution of Rodriguez—Bull Fights Prohibited.

San Antonio, Tex.—A dispatch from Eagle Pass, Tex., says that rioting by Mexicans took place across the river at Ciudad Porfirio Diaz Friday. The residences of several Americans were stoned, including that of United States Consul Luther Ellsworth. No one was injured.

Washington.—Complying with a request made by Secretary of State Knox, an inquiry was begun Friday by Governor Campbell of Texas into the lynching of Antonio Rodrigues at Rock Springs November 3.

Word to this effect was received at the state department, and until the result of the inquiry is learned definite reply will not be given to the request of the Mexican government by Ambassador De La Barra that official explanation be made of the incident. It is believed here that the Mexican government will be content with this course and will do its utmost to prevent further hostile demonstrations against Americans.

Fifty-one men are in jail in Mexico City for acts of vandalism during the riots, according to information received by the state department from United States Ambassador Wilson. The ambassador says the streets are being patroled and he does not expect further acts of violence. The Mexican authorities have furnished ample protection for the American embassy.

Mexico City, Mex.—To guard against a possible repetition of the anti-American riots, the government Friday issued orders forbidding bull fights next Sunday. Quiet prevails in this city.

Special dispatches from Gaudalajara confirm reports of violence by a mob, actuated by the same unfriendliness toward Americans responsible for the demonstrations here. At Guadalajara a mob of students and others started for the American consulate, crying "Death to the 'gringos!'"

The police prevented the rioters from reaching the consulate building, but after listening to inflammatory speeches the crowd vented its wrath on American-owned property. It smashed the windows of the American bank, the Masonic hall and the quarters of the American Candy company. the American Drug company, the West End Realty company and the offices of two American dentists.

Many of the rioters were arrested, and American Consul McGill was assured by the authorities that precautions would be taken to protect the property of Americans.

Washington.—The relations between Mexico and the United States are dangerously strained by reason of the demands made on the United States by Mexico for reparation for the lynching of Rodriguez by American citizens and the demand made on the Mexican government by Ambassador Wilson, backed up by the state department for apology and reparation for the insult to the United States flag and damage to its citizens in the riots in the City of Mexico.

One of the matters to be inquired into, especially by Secretary Knox, is whether the Mexican government had any advance information looking to impending riots and whether it failed to take proper precautionary measures. It is alleged informally that the Mexican government had such information. The other view is that events subsequent to the rioting and especially the charging of the mob and killing of some of the rioters by the police will go far to make the matter easy of settlement by Mexico.

CONVICT STABS OFFICIALS

Son of Senator Gallinger Is One of Victims—Deputy Warden May Die.

Concorn, N. H.—Armed with a knife which he had wrested from a "trusty," John Doe, a life convict in the state prison here, Friday attacked two prison officials, wounding one probably fatally and the other slightly.

The victims are Deputy Warden Frank R. Bailey, whose condition is critical, and Dr. Ralph E. Gallinger, prison physician and son of Senator Jacob H. Gallinger.

After wounding the two men Doe attempted to fight his way to liberty, but was overpowered by guards and trusties and lockeed in a solitary cell.

RENEW WAR ON HOUSE RULES

MANY SUPPORT MOVE TO CURB SPEAKER'S POWER.

Harmony Is in Peril if Senior Members of Committees Do Not Get Chairmanships.

Washington.—It is anticipated that when the house of representatives meets next month that the question of taking away the speaker's power to appoint the committees will be taken up and the matter fought to a finish.

This time it is not unlikely that the movement will receive the support of Speaker Cannon and his allies, inasmuch as the next assignments will be made by the Democrats.

Interviews with Representatives Murdock of Kansas and Norris of Nebraska indicate that they intend to lose no time in reopening the fight waged by insurgent Republicans last session which reformed the rules and deposed Speaker Cannon.

Some members of the house believe that if the power to appoint committees is taken away from the Democratic speaker and handed over to the house membership all hope of harmony in the Democratic ranks may be abandoned.

On the other hand it is pointed out that harmony also would suffer from a maintenance of the seniority rule, as that rule would give to the south the chairmanships of all of the great committees and leave unrecognized the new Democratic membership from northern and western states. Under the seniority rule the chairmanship of the committee on ways and means, the most important of all, would go to Underwood of Alabama, unless Champ Clark of Missouri, who is now the ranking minority leader, should fail to capture the speakership.

GIVES HIS LIFE FOR OTHERS

Engineer Turns Over His Oxygen Helmet That Mine Victims May Reach Surface.

Delagua, Col.—The bodies of 35 men were found Wednesday in the north entry of the Victor American Fuel company, where the explosion originated. They were brought out slowly over the debris, but not all were identified.

Willis Evans, engineer of the Colorado Fuel and Iron company at Primero, gave his life in the rescue of four miners taken out alive. He came to Delagua with the rescue car of the Colorado Fuel and Iron company.

The rescuers worked their way along the entry and heard the faint tapping of a pick on solid rock, the wireless call of the miner. They attacked the fallen mass of rock that blocked the entry with renewed hope. When they tore through the cave they found four Slav miners alive and unhurt. They were 2,600 feet from the surface, and the passages were filled with afterdamp. The rescuers feared to take the imprisoned men to the surface without helmets, and without a moment's hesitation Evans and one of the other rescuers took off their helmets and gave them to two of the rescued men and waited for the return of the rescue party.

When the rescuers returned Evans had disappeared. The rescue party supposed he had followed them out without a helmet and went out without searching for him. They discovered he had not reached the surface and another party was sent in after him.

SAYS COOK FAR FROM PEAK

New York.—Prof. Herschel Parker of Columbia university, who returned recently from an exploration trip to Mount McKinley, made public Thursday a series of photographs taken near the Alaskan mountains which he asserts are indisputable evidence that Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the Brooklyn traveler, never reached the top of the highest peak in America.

Professor Parker says that he found the mountain peak which Doctor Cook photographed and called Mount McKinley, "the top of the continent," and in support of his statement showed a photograph of a peak taken by his expedition last summer and pointed out that a comparison of the photographs shows in detail identical outlines of rock formation, proving that they are pictures of the same mountain.

"The mountain which I photographed," said Professor Parker, "was twenty miles from Mount McKinley and 15,000 feet below its summit. This is the same peak that Cook photographed and called the 'top of the continent.'"

Professor Parker corroborates the confession made a year ago by Edward Barrill, guide of Doctor Cook, that the latter's party never reached the top of Mount McKinley.

BLOWS UP WARSHIP

AVIATOR HURLS BOMBS AT VESSEL AND SOON WRECKS IT.

WAR EXPERTS ON THE SCENE

Thrilling Demonstration Is Given at Baltimore of What May Be Expected From Air Craft in Time of War.

Baltimore, Md.—An aviator dropped bombs upon the deck of a battleship, as he circled in the air far above it and blew the water craft almost to pieces.

One bomb went down the aft funnel exploding in the boiler-room and completely wrecking the machinery of the ship, beside ripping a hole in the bottom. Another bomb struck the deck near the forward turret and dismantled two 12-inch guns and killed every man in their crew. A third landed near the conning tower and put the ship's steering gear out of commission.

All this happened "constructively" and at the aviation meet where a thrilling demonstration of what airships may be expected to do in time of war was given by several of the aviators.

Latham was the most successful, scoring several hits on the "battleship," which was outlined on the grass. He fired six shots in all and scored 15 points.

Drexel in his Bleriot followed Latham in the bomb-throwing contest. His first shot hit the deck. He was flying fast. Drexel's second shot was a fine hit. His sixth bomb struck the deck. His official score was given as 6. He made no bull's eyes.

What the crew of the battleship could have done to the aviator while he hovered 200 feet above them was not demonstrated.

DEITZ GIVES $40,000 BAIL

He Is Released But Rearrested on Charge of Attempting to Shoot Man in 1904.

Hayward, Wis.—Attorneys Zabel and Schultz, head of the Deitz defense committee, arrived here Monday from Eau Claire, where they received Judge Wickham's approval of the bonds of $40,000.

The bond was approved and recorded after which procedure Deitz was notified that for a time at least he was again a free man. His wife and Clarence were overjoyed and quickly bringing his overcoat, Clarence assisted his father to put it on and stepped out on the porch of the jail. However, his period of freedom was very short. Barely had the overcoat been placed on him, when Sheriff Madden read a warrant to him for the alleged attempted shooting of Patrick McGin on May 8, 1904, and once more the famous Cameron Dam defender was placed behind the bars.

BLAST IN MINE KILLS FIVE

Eighteen Are Hurt in Explosion at Panama (Ill.) Colliery—Fifty Workers Are Rescued.

Hillsboro, Ill.—Five miners were killed and 18 were injured in an explosion in the Shoal Creek Coal company's mine at Panama, a mining town in the southern part of Montgomery county Friday.

Fifty men who were working in the section of the mine in which the explosion occurred were rescued, according to the mine managers. Altogether, 350 men were underground at the time, but 300 of them were in no danger.

The cause of the explosion is not known. The dead and injured were burned by the flames of the explosion. The mine was not set on fire.

G. A. Murray, chief clerk in the mine offices, denied the report that 50 men still were in the mine. Owing to the mutilation of the bodies, the dead have not been identified.

SIR VESEY STRONG TAKES OATH IN LONDON.

Civic Pageant Through City Streets Includes Presentation of Four Scenes From Shakespeare.

London.—The first prohibition mayor of London was installed in office when Sir Vesey Strong took the oath of office amidst much ceremony and pomp.

The procession from the Guild hall through the streets of the city to the law courts, where the oath was administered and thence back to the mansion house, was devoted to the representation of four scenes from Shakespeare connected with independent incidents in the history of the city of London.

Episodes pictured were: First, the return of Henry V. and his army after the battle of Agincourt; second, Sir John Falstaff and his companions leaving the Boar's Head, East Cheap; third, Richard, duke of Gloucester, conducting King Edward V. and the young duke of York to the tower; fourth, King Henry VIII. and Cardinal Wolsey going to the papal inquiry concerning Queen Katherine at Blackfriars.

EXPLOSION SEALS 60 MINERS

Force of Blast Felt Four Miles Away—Rescue Parties Are Rushed to Scene.

Trinidad, Col.—Sixty or more miners were entombed and may be dead as a result of an explosion Tuesday in Mine No. 3 of the Victor American Fuel company at Delagua, 20 miles northeast of Trinidad. Three men were killed at the mine's mouth.

Fifty of the men in the wrecked mine are reported to have escaped through entry No. 2. Two of the men who were in the mine at the time of the accident have been taken out. They were unable to tell anything that would lead to the belief that their comrades are still alive.

The force of the explosion was felt at Hastings, four miles down the canyon, and the news of the disaster spread rapidly. Rescue car of the Colorado Fuel and Iron company was manned with a force of 75 trained rescuers and taken by special engine to the scene.

W. S. Getchel, general manager of the Colorado division, was at Gray Creek when notified of the disaster and left at once in an automobile and is in personal charge of the rescue work. The mouth of the main slope is badly caved and recuers are directing their efforts to reaching the entombed men through the rear of No. 2 mine.

New York.—A huge galvanized tank, containing 40,000 barrels of kerosene exploded and ripped itself to pieces like a gigantic firecracker in the yards of the Tidewater Oil company at Bayonne, N. J. The explosion was felt in this city. Staten Island, from Mariner's Harbor to Tottenville, trembled for a full minute. One man is known to be dead.

CHINESE MOB BURNS CHURCH

Gentry Foils Rioters in Attempt to Slay Presbyterian Missionaries Who Flee.

Hongkong.—Mail advices from Linchou, in Kwang-Su province, report that rioters have burned and demolished numerous buildings there, including the American Presbyterian church, hospital and college, and proceeded to Tsoi Yuen Po, intending to slay the missionaries. The gentry, however, assisted the latter to escape in boats to Canton.

Three battalions have left Canton to quell the disturbances. The British gunboat Sandpiper is also proceeding thither. The mob was enraged at officials numbering their houses, believing this was an excuse to impose taxation.

DEMOCRATIC LANDSLIDE IS GENERAL

DIX ELECTED IN NEW YORK BY OVER ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND.—WILSON IN NEW JERSEY BY 36,000.

BEVERIDGE DEFEATED BY JOHN W. KERN

Gray Makes Poor Showing Against Eberhart, Which Day Atributes to Anti-Option Sentiment.—Foss Defeated Gov. of Massachusetts.—Harmon Wins in Ohio.

GOVERNORS ELECTED.

Democratic.
New York—Dix	66,000
New Jersey—Wilson	30,000
Connecticut—Baldwin	3,500
Massachusetts—Foss	33,000
Ohio—Harmon	60,000
Oklahoma—Cruce	.....
Oregon—West	.....
Wyoming—Carey	.....
Alabama—O'Neal	50,000
South Carolina—Blease	60,000
Texas—Colquitt	.....

Republican.

The Republican governors elected, with approximate pluralities:

Republican.
Pennsylvania—Tener	30,000
New Hampshire—Bass	7,000
Rhode Island—Pothier	900
Kansas—Stubbs	5,000
Iowa—Carroll	15,000
Michigan—Osborn	40,000
Minnesota—Eberhart	70,000
Nebraska—Aldrich	5,000
South Dakota—Vessey	20,000
Wisconsin—McGovern	.....
California—Johnson	25,000
Nevada—Oddie	.....
Tennessee—Hooper (fusion)	12,000

The governorships in two states are not yet reported as being beyond doubt, namely Colorado and Idaho.

New York, N. Y. — John Dix, a business man, and the first Democratic nominee elected in 16 years, will be the next governor of New York. He was chosen by the people over Henry L. Stimson, Republican, for whom Theodore Roosevelt stumped the state, by a plurality based on complete returns of 62,487. New York city gave him a plurality of more than 100,000, while Stimson came down to the Bronx with about 40,000, leaving a substantial lead for the Democratic nominee.

The change in the legislature will insure a Democratic senator to succeed Senator Chauncey M. Depew. The new congressional delegation will have 22 Democrats and 15 Republicans, as against 25 Republicans and 12 Democrats in the present congress.

Aside from Dix, the entire Democratic ticket was elected by pluralities of about 50,000.

William W. Cocks, Roosevelt's home congressman, was defeated by Martin W. Littleton. Dix also carried Roosevelt's district.

The United States senate will have a reduced Republican majority as a result of legislative elections held in many states.

In New Jersey Woodrow Wilson, Democrat, is elected governor over Vivian M. Lewis, Republican, by 36,800, reversing the Republican plurality of 8,000 in 1907. The legislature of New Jersey is Democratic and will elect a Democratic United States senator to succeed John A. Kean.

In Massachusetts Foss, Democrat, defeated Governor Eben S. Draper, Republican, for re-election by about 22,000 plurality, reversing Governor Draper's former plurality of 8,000.

In Connecticut Judge Simeon E. Baldwin is elected governor over Charles A. Goodwin, Republican, by about 2,600 plurality, reversing the previous Republican plurality of 16-000.

In Ohio Governor Judson Harmon, Democrat, candidate for re-election, is elected by an estimated plurality of 40,000.

In New Hampshire Robert P. Bass, Republican candidate for governor, is elected by about 5,000 plurality.

In Pennsylvania the election of John K. Tener, Republican candidate for governor, is claimed, but the later returns indicate a largely reduced plurality.

Gov. W. R. Stubbs was re-elected in Kansas by a majority of 9,433, state ticket is elected. The election of eight Republican congressmen is conceded.

In Rhode Island Governor Pothier, Republican candidate for re-election, is elected governor by a reduction of about 900 in the previous plurality.

In Tennessee the fusion candidate, W. Hooper, is elected by 5,000 plurality.

In Michigan, Chase S. Osborn, Republican, is elected governor by a plurality estimated at 50,000.

In Wisconsin, Francis E. McGovern, Republican, is elected by a reduced majority of 60,000 and the return of Senator La Follette is assured.

Democratic governors were elected in Alabama and South Carolina.

Lee Cruce, democratic candidate for governor, and the entire democratic state ticket, has been elected by at least 20,000 majority, according to incomplete returns. It appears the democrats will control the legislature. Bird S. McGuire (rep.), in the first district, claims his election over N. E. McNeil (dem.). In the second district both E. L. Fulton (dem.) and Dick T. Morgan (rep.) are claiming the election. Late returns confirm the defeat of the constitutional amendment to substitute local option for statewide prohibition. The amendment to grant women the right of suffrage is in doubt.

The Minnesota Results.

Governor Eberhart's election will be by a majority of about 80,000. It was a landslide for the Republican candidate for governor.

The entire Republican state ticket is elected with Governor Eberhart.

Minnesota will send its usual delegation to congress with the one exception of Sydney Anderson of the First district.

Probably one of the most notable fights was that of the First district, where Sydney Anderson, the man who defeated James A. Tawney, was pitted against H. L. Buck, the Democratic candidate. Anderson appears to have won by a majority ranging from 3,500 to 5,000. In the Second district, where a strenuous fight was on between Congressman W. S. Hammond and F. F. Elsworth, Hammond seems to have won by a small majority, but the result is in doubt and will remain so until the final results are obtained.

Beveridge Is Defeated.

houses of the legislature. Albert J. Beveridge will be succeeded in the Senate by John W. Kern. The Democrats made a clean sweep of Marion county (Indianapolis), electing the entire legislative ticket. Vanderburg county (Evansville), is also carried by the Democrats, where they gained three members of the legislature.

Of the 13 Indiana members in the national house of representatives, 12 will be Democrats, Edgar Dean Crum-

Indianapolis, Ind. — The Democratic state ticket is elected, including both packer, of the tenth district, being the only Republican elected.

Democrats Control House.

Complete Democratic control of the next house of representatives is a certainty.

In order to secure control of the house it was necessary for the Democrats to secure 24 new members. With a net increase of 43 they appear to have gained 19 members in excess of the number necessary to control. At the same time the Republican strength had been reduced by the election of a Socialist in Wisconsin district normally Republican.

The greatest gain in any one state was in New York, where the present delegation of 12 Democrats was increased by 10, making the division as to New York in the next house 22 Democrats, 15 Republicans. The representation from New York in the sixty-first congress is 25 Republicans, 12 Democrats.

The next largest increase was in Illinois, where the Democrats on the face of the returns made six gains.

In Pennsylvania the Democratic gains were 5, New Jersey 5, Ohio 4, North Carolina 2, West Virginia 2, Missouri 2, Maryland 2, Maine 2, previously elected, and one each in Connecticut, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Oklahoma and Rhode Island.

85 New Congressmen.

The crop of "lame ducks" is the greatest in the recent history of congress. According to the officials at Republican congressional headquarters here, there will not be less than 85 new faces, both Democratic and Republican, in the 62nd congress.

Carroll Is Re-elected.

The Republicans have elected nine congressmen and the entire state ticket headed by Gov. Carroll. The latter's plurality probably will reach 15,000.

The Republican state ticket is elected, for Carroll was cut badly by the progressives. The legislature will be Republican and probably the progressive wing will control. Yet this does not insure the election of progressive Republican to succeed the late J. P. Dolliver, for the best estimates show the stand-patters to have balance of power and in a bitter fight they might go the Democrats and elect a Democratic senator.

T. R.'s Man Beaten.

In the first district, Kennedy, Rep., has won by 1,500 over Pollard, Dem., for congress. In the second district I. S. Pepper, Dem., has defeated Chas. Grilk, the man Roosevelt came here to assist. In the third district Pickett, Rep., has an easy victory and in the fourth it is any one's race. In the fifth Good, Rep., is victorious and in the sixth it is a toss-up between Kendall, Rep., and Hamilton, Dem. In the seventh, Prouty, Rep., defeated Price, Dem. In the eighth, Judge Towner, stand-pat Republican, wins, and in the ninth Smith has about 500 over Cleveland, although the Democrats will not concede Smith's election. In the tenth Wood, Rep., is elected and Hubbard, Rep., carries the eleventh district.

Surprise in Wisconsin.

The Socialist party will be represented in the next house of representatives by Victor L. Berger of the Fifth Wisconsin district, his election being conceded by the Republican committee. Incomplete returns show Berger to be leading his opponent, Henry C. Cochems, insurgent Republican, by an apparently safe margin.

The Social Democrats elect their Milwaukee county ticket by between 2,000 and 5,000, according to the latest returns.

Democrats Control West Virginia.

The Democratic victory in the First congressional district assumed the proportions of a landslide. John W. Davis, Dem., has been elected by a majority of more than 1,000 to succeed William P. Hubbard.

Legislative gains throughout the state seem to indicate that the legislature will be Democratic on joint ballot, insuring the defeat of N. B. Scott of this city for re-election to the United States senate.

Montana Is Republican.

Both the republicans and the democrats claim control of the legislature which is to elect a successor to United States Senator Thomas H. Carter, the democrats claiming 61 votes on joint ballot and the republicans 58. Fifty-two are necessary for a choice. Complete returns are not available.

Congressmen Pray (rep.) has been re-elected by from 3,500 to 5,000 plurality, as have Railroad Commissioner A. E. Morley and Clerk Athey of the supreme court.

Out of 752 precincts in the state, 359 give the following vote on congressman: Pray (rep.) 23,651; Hartman (dem.), 19,522; majority for Pray, 4,129.

South Dakota.

Returns indicate the re-election of Governor Vessey and the entire state Republican ticket by 20,000. The Republican congressional nominees have swept the state. Congressmen Burke and Martin have majorities of about 25,000 each. In the South Dakota legislature the Republicans will have 36 senators to nine for the Democrats. In the house there will be fewer Democrats than at the last session.

E. R. Diedrich, in charge of the anti-county option fight, estimates that county option has been defeated by from 12,000 to 15,000. The woman's suffrage amendment seems to have lost by a large majority.

North Dakota In Doubt.

Bismarck, Nov. 10.—The result of the gubernatorial election is still very much in doubt, and no one is making predictions except party headquarters, where both Republican and Democratic officials are claiming the election by 2,000.

The legislature is strongly Republican and will elect McCumber and Gronna to the senate.

A sleet storm in the northwestern part of the state made returns slow in coming in.

Morton county Republicans claim Johnson has a majority of 1,000 there, and if that estimate is sustained, it means the election of Johnson, the Republican candidate.

Caleb Powers in Congress.

Caleb Powers, of Kentucky, a conspicuous figure in the prosecutions following the shooting of Governor Goebel, will be one of the interesting figures of the next congress.

Florida Optionists Win.

Jacksonville, Fla.—S. M. optionists carried the state by from 3,000 to 5,000.

Denver to Have Aviation Meet.

Denver, Col.—Denver is to have a five days "high altitude" aviation meet. A contract was closed with a representative of the Wright Brothers, for the appearance of Ralph Johnstone, Arch Hoxsey and Walter Brookins in exhibition flights at Overland park Nov. 17 to 22. A guarantee of $22,500 was made.

The above design, submitted by Andrew O'Connor, the American sculptor, of Paris, was rejected by the memorial commission, because it does not resemble Governor Johnson. Mr. O'Connor has been invited to come to St. Paul and meet with the commission.

OPTION CAUSE LOSES

SENATE CONCEDED HOSTILE AND HOUSE SENTIMENT FAR FROM PRONOUNCED.

REPUBLICANS WILL RULE 3 TO 1

Have 131 Members to Democrats' 45; Populists and Socialists One Each and Prohibitionists 5.

Parties in the Legislature.

	Rep.	Dem.	Pro.	P.O.	Pop
Senate	42	19	1	..	1
House	89	26	4	1	..
Totals	131	45	5	1	1

St. Paul.—The 1911 Minnesota legislature shows a slight gain for the minority parties over the last session, but the Republicans will have 131 members out of 183 on joint ballot for election of a United States senator, assuring the re-election of Moses E. Clapp. The Republicans also retain a two-thirds majority in each house.

County optionists have lost their fight for the new legislature. They still claim control of the house by a narrow margin, but admit that the senate is against them. The Anti-Saloon league now announces its intention to ask the legislature to submit a county option law to vote of the people in 1912.

County Option Senators.

Senators-elect claimed for county option are: Nelson of Fillmore, Cook of Mower, Thoe of Dodge, Cashman of Steele, Moonan of Waseca, Putnam of Faribault, Haycraft of Watonwan, Bedford of Nobles, Lende of Lyon, Dale of Lac qui Parle, Benson of Nicollet, Peterson of Meeker, Johnson of Chisago, Hackney of Ramsey, Elwell, Dwinnell, Wilson, Fosseen and Wallace of Hennepin, Odell of Kandiyohi, Froshaug of Swift, Rustad of Traverse, Gunderson of Douglas, Sageng of Otter Tail, Hanson of Norman, Saugstad of Polk and Sundberg of Kittson, twenty-seven in all, but one or two more are claimed by the county optionists as sure to stand by them when the vote is taken.

Lower House Optionists.

House members elected who are claimed for county option are: Farley of Houston, Conley of Olmsted, Rustad and Frankson of Fillmore, Crane of Mower, McMartin of Dodge, Harding of Faribault, Davies of Watonwan, Warner of Cottonwood, Whitting of Lyon, Skartum of Lincoln, Johnson of Yellow Medicine, Peterson of Lac qui Parle, Holmberg of Renville, Simpson of Meeker, Klemmer of Rice, Boothroyd, Anderson and Voxland of Goodhue, Webb of Pine, Rines of Kanabec, Burnquist and Orr of Ramsey, Kunze, Palmer, Fisher, Kneeland, Washburn, Campbell and Nolan of Hennepin, Dunn of Mille Lacs, Davis of Sherburne, Lee of Wright, Warner of Aitkin, Ferguson of Carlton, Stone of Hubbard, Johnson of Kandiyohi, Knutson of Swift, Spooner of Stevens, Peterson of Grant, Lee of Pope and Anderson of Douglas. Johnson, Putnam, Lindberg and Nelson of Otter Tail, Converse of Becker, Sulerud of Norman, O'Neill of Red Lake, Holten of Polk, Robertson of Marshall, and Mattson of Roseau. This makes fifty-two.

Saugstad's Great Race.

Most notable of the county option successes in the state was the election of John Saugstad to the state senate in Polk county. His defeat of Senator A. D. Stephens is a remarkable feat in politics, as it was performed by the use of stickers, pasted on the ballot by each voter.

Senator Stephens is one of the best known men in the state, a leading banker and the chief sponsor for the branch agricultural school at Crookston. Though sentiment in Polk county is for county option, he had great personal strength. Mr. Saugstad is a farmer and school teacher, and has served creditably in the house at the last two sessions.

Schaller Again in Senate.

Senator Albert Schaller of Hastings, the dean of the legislative bodies, will break all records for continuous service. He wins the election in Dakota county over Magnus W. Brown, republican, and if he serves out the term will have twenty years in the state senate without a break.

Ole O. Sageng won re-election to the senate in Otter Tail county easily, but his side partner, Elmer E. Adams, was defeated in his independent run for the house.

Some Election Surprises.

County optionists were more surprised over the result in Freeborn county than anywhere else. That county was covered more thoroughly with county option arguments than any in the state. It was the theater of John Lind's speech, and P. J. Youngdahl spoke twice to Albert Lee meetings. Two years ago the prohibitionists elected T. E. Noble to the house. This year they expected to land him and his running mate, but both were defeated by several hundred. H. C. Nelson, county option democrat, was also badly beaten for the senate by B. N. Anderson.

Four probable aspirants for speaker were elected. The list includes J. A. A. Burnquist, St. Paul, John G. Lennon, Minneapolis, H. H. Dunn, Albert Lea, and George MacKenzie, Gaylord.

There will be a close contest in the house Republican caucus between the county option element and the anti-option men. As matters stand it looks to be about a tie.

Negroes Seize Polling Booth.

Muskogee, Oklahoma.—A telephone message to the Times-Democrat from Coweta, Okla., states that negroes took possession of a voting booth in a schoolhouse in a negro settlement four miles from Coweta. The white election officers were thrown out of the polling place, the negroes declaring they would vote despite the "grandfather clause." A messenger was sent to Coweta asking for help and two automobiles with fifteen white men armed with shotguns left for the scene.

NO COUNTY DIVISION.

There will be no division of Red Lake County for the next two years.

There is a special provision of the statutes for the organization of new counties which has not been complied with in the attempt to organize Pennington county, as the proposition was not submitted to the voters, to vote on the question of the organization of Pennington county.

The law on the method of submiting the proposition to the voters reads as follows:

"And the ballots for such general election shall, for each pending proposition of the kind, have printed thereon the words: "For the creation and organization of the proposed new county of (here insert name of proposed county), yes-no;" and each elector voting on such propositi on or propositions to create and establish such new county shall mark a cross opposite the "yes" or "no" as provided in section thirty-four of general laws of 1891."

The above is the law on how you should have voted on county division, and every intelligent voter knows how you did vote.

Now there is no use for the people of Thief River Falls to tare their hair and try to blame Red Lake Falls or John Duffy, or anyone else for this fatal mistake, as they are the ones that made it themselves. They campaigned all summer for Pennington county and did not give it a single vote on election day.

There will be no lawsuits, and can be no illfeeling regarding the matter as the people that favord county division did not vote to establish any new county, so governor Eberhart could not issue any procolamation declaring Pennington county established for it was not.

Did you ever kick over an old rotten stump, and then look at ants, as they all pick up an egg apiece and all start to run. If you have just go to Thief River Falls next week and it will remind you of a turnd over ant hill. Let him laugh best who gets the last laugh.

Thief River cast 988 votes for the new county idea. Red Lake Falls cast 458 votes against it. Granting that the "thing" carried by a majority of 141 votes, is it not a fact that the proposition was defeated by a majority of 389 votes outside the cities. Who was representing the wishes and interests of the farmers Mr. Lattimore?

LOST; A new county. It was last seen near the farm residence of P. P. Palmer in the town of Higlanding, going in a north east direction. He will respond to the name of "Pennington." Anybody knowing his whereabouts should notify John Lattimore, publisher of the Eleven Towns, at Erie, or, Attorney Halvorson, Thief River Falls, or P. O. Wold Kuehnel, County Commissioner, and owner of a court house to put the animal in. If you see him just coax him and call him Pennington, and he will wag his tail and come right up to you. He is not dangerous, and was never known to hurt anyone, but the poor little fellow got lost on November 8th.

A LIVING SNUFFBOX.

Peculiar Role Mme. du Cayla Played For Louis XVIII.

There have been snuffboxes of gold studded with jewels, of delicately carved tortoise shell, filigree silver, porcelain, ivory, mother-of-pearl, humble horn, wood and tin, but there is only one living snuffbox on record, and that was the particular luxury of Louis XVIII. of France.

"His majesty's snuffbox," as she was known throughout Europe, was Mme. du Cayla, a fascinating favorite at the Bourbon court. Her place at table was always at the monarch's left hand, and when during the course of the meal he signified his desire for a pinch of brown powder to titillate his fat nose she took a diamond crusted box from her pocket, dusted just the right quantity of perfumed snuff on her snowy right shoulder and presented it to the king, who partook of it with profound pleasure.

As Louis was the greatest snuff taker at a court where everybody snuffed constantly, Mme. du Cayla's position was no sinecure, but the human snuffbox was well paid for indulging the king in his little fad. He presented her with a copy of Roymont's Illustrated Bible, and each one of the 150 engravings was covered with a thousand franc note. It was followed with the gift of Massillon's Sermons, interleaved with the same valuable paper from cover to cover.—New York Press.

ANTIQUITY OF CHEESE.

Homer and the Book of Job Allude to the Product.

Cheese and curdling of the milk are mentioned in the book of Job. David was sent by his father, Jesse, to carry ten cheeses to the camp and to look how his brother fared. "Cheese of kine" formed part of the supplies of David's army at Mahanaim during the rebellion of Absalom.

Homer says that cheese formed part of the ample stores found by Ulysses in the cave of the Cyclop Polyphemus. Euripides, Theocritus and other early poets mention cheese. Ludolphus says that excellent cheese and butter were made by the ancient Ethiopians, and Strabo states that some of the ancient Britons were so ignorant that, though they had abundance of milk, they did not understand the art of making cheese.

There is no evidence that any of these ancient nations had discovered the use of rennet in making cheese. They appear to have merely allowed the milk to sour and subsequently to have formed the cheese from the caseous part of the milk after expelling the serum or whey.

As David when too young to carry arms was able to run to the camp with ten cheeses, ten loaves and an ephah of parched corn, the cheeses must have been very small.

Marvels of the Telephone.

The Electrical Review thus describes the minute electric current required in transmitting speech:

"The peculiar electric telephone current is perhaps the quickest, feeblest and most elusive force in the world. It is so amazing a thing that any description of it seems irrational. It is as gentle as the touch of a baby sunbeam and as swift as the lightning flash. It is so small that the electric current of a single incandescent lamp is greater—500,000,000 times. Cool a spoonful of hot water just one degree and the energy set free by the cooling will operate a telephone for 10,000 years. Catch the falling teardrop of a child and there will be sufficient water power to carry a spoken message from one city to another. Such is the tiny genie of the wire that had to be protected and trained into obedience."

The News by Windmill.

In certain parts of Holland births, marriages and deaths are frequently announced by the windmills instead of in the newspapers. When a miller gets married he stops his mill with the arms of the wheel in an oblique position and with the sails unfurled. His friends and guests often do likewise with their mills in token of the ceremony. To indicate a birth the wheel is stopped with the arms in a slanting position, but at a more acute angle than for a marriage and with the two upper sails unfurled. Should a miller die the sails of his mill are all furled and the wheel is turned round until the arms assume an upright cross, in which position they are left until after the funeral has taken place.—Harper's Weekly.

A Comparison.

Two friends met one day after a long absence. One of them had a very ruddy complexion, and his nose was carmine. The other looked into his face and said:

"Ah, John, I doot"—

But John said he was not to judge by appearances, as he only drank one glass of beer in a day.

"Oh, weel," said the other, "yer face, perhaps, is like our gas meter—it registers mair than it consumes."—London Answers.

Where They Belong.

"Have you any men serving sentences for bigamy?" asked the prison visitor.

"Lots of them," replied the keeper, "but we confine them all in the insane ward."—Philadelphia Record.

Naturally.

"Pop, flowers shoot, don't they?"

"Certainly, my son."

"Well, pop, do they shoot with their pistils?"—Baltimore American.

The "Sun Drawing Water."

The phenomenon commonly known as the "sun drawing water" is due to rays of sunlight between the shadows of clouds. It is seen to best advantage when the atmosphere is somewhat hazy and when the sun is wholly or partly behind a cloud and is not in the higher part of the sky. Patchy stratocumulus clouds are most favorable for the formation of these rays, and they are probably most distinct when seen in the part of the sky below the sun, when they appear to extend either directly or somewhat obliquely downward. It is in this form that the effect is most commonly called the "sun drawing water." But such rays may extend in any direction, so that they diverge from the sun as a center. No rain need be falling anywhere near the observer, though it is not impossible for the rays to be visible at a time when rain streaks also are visible in part of the sky. The rain streaks, however, do not diverge from the sun, but are in lines of the falling rain.—St. Nicholas.

The Sclerescope.

This little American invention has been described as a kind of mechanical finger intended to discriminate by delicacy of touch between various substances submitted to it. The ready detection of the degree of hardness and elasticity of various surfaces is its special function. It consists essentially of a light weight, like the hammer of a pile driver, which is allowed to fall inside a tube placed upright on the surface to be tested. The bottom of the hammer, which weighs only a few grams, is finished with a blunted diamond, intended to give it the requisite hardness. After a fall it rebounds, and a carefully graduated scale on the tube, indicating the height of the rebound, shows the degree of hardness of the surface experimented with. On a piece of ordinary steel the hammer rebounds nine-tenths of the height of its fall.—Youth's Companion.

The Tale of a Key.

There is a roll top desk in an office near Wall street which can be bought cheap. The owner is a commuter and has desk room in a large office. He came late the other day and discovered that he had forgotten his keys. No key at hand would unlock the desk. The maker could not give aid for an hour or more, and some papers had to be reached before noon. The desk was forcibly opened, and two inner compartments were smashed. Warm and tired from the exertion of wrecking his property, the man took off his coat and slipped into an office coat, in the pocket of which his keys jingled. Tableau! Before going home he confided to the office boy that he woudn't care if he hadn't told.—New York Tribune.

Do not forget the big ball at the Kratka hall Nov. 24th,

T. S Jacobson made a business trip to Thief River Falls yesterday.

There will be a ball, at the Kolski hall in Deer Park tomorrow night.

We understand that ditch No. 47 has been sub-let to a floating dredge Company.

James O'Brien has been hving a hard tug geting his big ferry out of the river.

We now have a good bridge bridge across Red Lake river that will last until March,

It is an ill wind that blows no good, so don't cry John, as you got a new office out of county division.

Mrs. Andrew Ellingson returned home last night from a weeks visit with friends and relation in Polk county.

We had a couple of inches of snow Tuesday night, which caused some of the farmers to get their sleighs out.

John Homme has taken a big contract of baleing hay up near Brunkeberg and wants to employ some pitchers.

S. L. Holm, who bought the Dan Sullivan farm moved up from Dakota this week and will start building on the farm soon,

Edward Singer will move his gasoline wood sawing rig up in this neighborehood tomorrow, and will cut up your winters supply of wood in a hurry.

It is reported that wages will be high in the pinery this winter, owing to the large amount of timber being killed by the forest fires that must be cut to save it.

If you take a good look at the Eleven Towns "crowing" rooster of last week, you will notice that his head comes to a peak on top. We will bet that is the fellow that looked up the county division law,

John Lattimore told a farmer this week that the county division was legal, as he was a lawyer and had looked it up. That's business John, stick to it, but we do not think the Thief River Falls attorneys will try to rob you of the credit.

We put in a local two weeks ago to please one of our subscribers, and an other one of our subscribers got mad about it and stopped his paper. Surely the country editor has a hard, road to travel But we publised on Friday "just the same."

P. O. Wold was more seariously hurt in the runaway accident on election day than it was at first supposed, and he has been laid up ever since. We are glad to hear that he is on the road to recovery for we would not like to have Peat killed, even if we can not agree with him in politicts.

We don't know who made the "arrangements" with the Thief River Falls leaders to have that county division proposition submitted wrong, but we have our suspisions, and the poor fellows that paid out their money, and run around the country night and day working for a "lost cause" have our sympathy.

There was a large crowd attended the basket social and ball, at the Kratka hall last Saturday evening, and they all report a very fine time. Over sixty dollars was taken in from the sale of baskets for the bennifit of the school district. There will be an other grand ball at this popular hall Thanksgiveing night Nov. 24th, All are invited.

After The Battle.

Go tell our friend Trovaton; him of County division fame, that he fought the battle nobly, but was not in the game.

* * * * *

The soft moon rose up slowly, and calmly she looked down, on the battle field at Ere, with bed bug corses strewn.

John sat there a weeping, his eyes were in the brine; as he thought of his poor little lost Pennington, "Pennington from the Rhine."

We are not much of a lawyer, but we had ought to know a little about county division law, as J T. Knight, as the representative of Red Lake Falls and W. G. Hunt, as the representative of McIntosh employed and paid Judge McDonald of St. Paul to draft the bill in January 1898., and both of us staid in St. Paul all winter "lobbing" it through the legislature, and we had a hard fight of it, as we were fought by both Thief River Falls and Crookston. There has been some amendments to some of the sections, but there has been no change made in the manner of submission to the voters. We see the mistake as soon as we looked at your sample ballots, which is the reason the opposition stopped campaigning"

Women and the Commune.

"The mad fury which seemed to have taken possession of the mob in Paris found its most enthusiastic exponents in the women, who were anxious to proceed to the extreme measures which the men deprecated," writes Lady St. Helier in her book "Memories of Fifty Years." "The organized corps de petroleuses were a savage crew, who had no feeling of pity or mercy in their hearts and would have sacrificed even those they loved most dearly to the cause which they had espoused. They co-operated actively with the commune, deluging what public buildings they could with petroleum and then setting light to them, and most of the fires that broke out in Paris on the entry of the troops originated through their action. They went down into the streets and fought at the barricades, showing superhuman courage, and when one of the great fights took place at the barricade in the Rue de la Paix, which was defended by the communists, the first person to mount it and to hoist the red flag of the revolution was a woman."

Cutting Off Noses.

Rameses II. of Egypt cut off the nose of any person convicted of treason or arson. Actisanes, another Egyptian ruler, punished robbers in the same way. After each nose had been amputated back even with the bridge the culprit was sent to a colony of noseless felons, the place of banishment being known as Rhinocomum, from the nature of the punishment its colonists had undergone.

In England in 1671 Lord Coventry, then "great keeper of the British seal," had his nose cut off by order of the king because he had dared to ask some questions about an actress then playing at Drury Lane theater.

A conscript who protested openly that he had been enrolled in the army of Frederick the Great in a fraudulent manner had his nose amputated by order of that sovereign, who spoke of the punishment as an "indelible mark on the front side of the face."

The Ameer Was Thorough.

There were some interesting episodes in the life of Sir Charles Euan-Smith. Once in the market place of an Afghanistan town he was fired at by a native. He lodged a complaint with the ameer, who appeared to take no notice of the incident, merely remarking, "That's all right." Sir Charles complained again and met with the same reply. He still thought that the ameer was treating a serious matter with less consideration than it deserved, but thought it advisable to say no more on the subject. About a week afterward he was invited by the ameer to ride with him. They rode for some distance outside the town, and they passed gibbet after gibbet. At length Sir Charles said, "Your highness has been busy of late." "Oh, no," replied the ameer; "they are your little lot." He had seized all the members of the would be assassin's family and hanged every one of them.

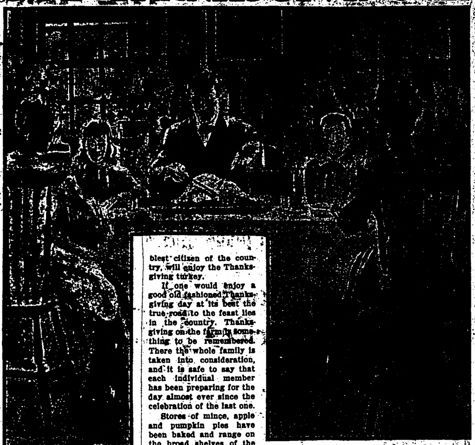
ALL ABOUT THANKSGIVING DAY



WHEN Captain Miles Standish, with his little company of 16 hardy pilgrims, discovered the first fresh water encountered by the Mayflower explorers after landing at what is believed to be East Harbor creek, on the shores of Cape Cod, the party sat down and drank, and as Mount records in his journal or story:

"We were heartily glad and drunke our first New England water with as much delight as ever we drunke drink in all our lives."

Thus was, with "Bisket and Holland Cheese, and a bottle of aquavite," the first New England Thanksgiving dinner eaten on the noon of November 26, 1620, around "a fire of sassafras, juniper and pine, which smelled both sweet and strong."

Later these hardy adventurers were able to feast on wild fowl and venison in plenty, as have those who came after them even unto the present day, for the forests of the cape abound with game, and the waters with fishes very much as in the days of the little Pilgrim band who in the Mayflower's cabin signed the first New England charter.

Although not set down in the laws, the reunion feast became an informal annual function, and there can be but little doubt that Thanksgiving day as known to us of the present had its origin in and was inspired by the ability of the pilgrim band to soften the strong waters of the hospitable Dutch with the spring waters of the new world, by chance shall we say? Or, to what cause shall we credit the selection of the last week of November for the day of feasting and prayer now so eagerly looked for and as carefully observed as Christmas, the New Year or Independence Day? The day of thanks is more typically a national holiday than is any other. It is American and unique. Every country has one or more days set apart to commemorate independence or the granting of some great boon to its people that may be considered a step on the stairway to liberty, but the Thanksgiving day of the United States is without a close comparison in any land. Thanksgiving day begins the winter season.

Wherever you find an American you will, as the month of November wanes, find one who thinks more of being at home or at the home of intimate friends for Thanksgiving day. Clubs, hotels, public institutions, all see to it that their patrons, members or inmates are provided with a sumptuous repast for the one great feast day, and whenever and wherever possible a great, fat turkey graces the board.

The turkey should be our national bird, as it is or, rather, was everywhere in a wild state, and helped the original colonists to provide for their families. It has for 300 years been the chief feature at all important strictly American banquets, and may be safely called our greatest national food delicacy. The Spaniards in Florida, French in Louisiana, Pilgrims in Cape Cod and founders of the Virginia company all found the wild turkey ready for the sport and table in this their new home, and the American of today, from the president of the United States to the humblest citizen of the country, will enjoy the Thanksgiving turkey.

If one would enjoy a good old fashioned Thanksgiving day at its best the true road to the feast lies in the country. Thanksgiving on the farm is something to be remembered. There the whole family is taken into consideration, and it is safe to say that each individual member has been preparing for the day almost ever since the celebration of the last one.

Stores of mince, apple and pumpkin pies have been baked and range on the broad shelves of the store room; apple sauce, preserves, with home-made pickles, "put down" months before required for use; stores of grapes, apples, pears and nuts, carefully looked over; a goodly ham, freshened in cold water 24 hours, then carefully wiped dry and placed in a pot of cider to boil 15 minutes to the pound; a loin of pork, roasted to a rich, golden brown, to be served with apple sauce, and the feature of the feast—a turkey, fattened to about the 20-pound mark, the pride of the farmer and the joy of his wife.

The turkey, hatched on the farm and as carefully watched as any member of the family, fattened on grain and meal with a mixture of chopped nut meats to give it the proper flavor, killed one week before the feast and hung in an outhouse, where it is kept cold, but will not be injured by the frost, is brought in the night before for final treatment before being consigned to the oven.

The great bird is carefully picked and drawn, the interior wiped out, not washed, which would destroy the flavor, and filled with what is known in the country as "the stuffin'," a thick mixture of sausage meat, bread crumbs and eggs, with just a faint touch of sage and onion. When prepared and placed in the huge oven to roast it becomes the duty of one cook to watch the oven and baste the roast until it is evident to the practised eye of the heroine of many such conflicts that the turkey is ready to be served with fresh made cranberry sauce and a rich gravy, in which all the giblets have been stirred with some well-balanced chestnuts. Now, everything being ready, the family and guests (and there are sure to be guests in country at a country Thanksgiving dinner) troop into the long dining room, to find the repast not only ready, but served with all the pomp and state the feast deserves.

The turkey is placed before the host, while the roast loin of young pig graces the opposite end of the table, with the boiled ham in the center, flanked with mashed white and baked sweet potatoes, turnips and cauliflower, with boats of gravy and bowls of sauce within easy reach of all. "Now pass up your plates," is requested from each end of the table, and the oftener this repeated advice is followed the more the face of the good matron glows with satisfaction. The great pitchers of foaming cider pass along the board and the diner at a farm Thanksgiving feast finds it all so novel and good that the vision comes up before him frequently while struggling with a complicated menu at his club or some hotel or, mincing through the series of problems presented at a French or Italian table d'hote dinner.

On every Yankee warship in the hot lands of the far away Malay islands, Cuba, Guam, Panama, the Sandwich islands and under the flag that floats over every American consul's home or office Thanksgiving day will be celebrated, and, like another stitch in the great bed quilt of liberty and independence will knit the fabric closer together.

We do well to have a Thanksgiving feast. We thank the great Creator for our being, our sturdy forefathers for our great country, our Burly British ancestors for our love of country and good things to eat, our bustling energy for rapid progress, our wives and mothers for domestic atmosphere that makes life enjoyable and success certain and the rulers we have placed in power for unparalleled prosperity.

THE REUNION

A Story of a Thanksgiving in a Tourist Car

By MINNIE E. OLIPHANT.

Genevieve and I were riding in a tourist car, headed away from Los Angeles, and slowly creeping across Death valley. Our thoughts were with the folks at home, who were getting ready for the Thanksgiving dinner, but we were talking of other things. Words are slow unless thoughts are producing them, and, therefore, the conversation lagged.

Finally, Genevieve turned to me with the smile she always wore when a good plain plan had just struck her.

"Let's make believe," she suggested, 'that the passengers in this coach are all relatives, and let's have a family reunion and Thanksgiving dinner."

"How can we?" I asked.

"I'll go around and tell them that this is Thanksgiving, and we are all relations, and they are invited to our section for a family reunion, and that they are to furnish their own share of the dinner."

I looked around the car to see what our "relations" appeared to be like. Just back of our section was a young man with a fretful baby, and little three-year-old girl. He seemed so tired, but patient, though awkward, with the children. I had heard him tell the young man who wore a striped sweater, and sat across the aisle, that he had just lost his wife and was taking the children back to their grandmother in Ohio. The young man in the sweater lolled around in his section, dividing his time between a magazine, the Los Angeles papers and the desert scenery outside. Back of him sat a middle-aged Jew, who talked to no one, and looked at nothing in particular, as if he had forgotten where he was. Just before us was a young lady, and all we knew about her was that she had golden hair puffed out in the back, and that she tucked her scolding locks up every few minutes with a slender, ringless hand.

And these were to form our family party.

While I was studying the people, Genevieve was taking an inventory of our supplies.

"Go on with your invitations," I advised, "and, if they are accepted, I will look after the table."

She stepped back down the aisle and stood with her hand on the seat in front of our Jewish "friend to be." "I beg your pardon," she began, "but I want to invite you to come to our Thanksgiving dinner, and to furnish your share of it."

"Thank you," he looked up and smiled, as he lifted his hat, "but where is your dinner to be?"

"Down there where my sister is sitting." She nodded her head in my direction. "We are going to have a family reunion."

"Where is your family?" His smile broadened.

"All in this coach who will come."

Here the young man in the sweater turned round, and she addressed him. "Will you come, too? And—?"

"With pleasure, if I can be of any assistance."

"You can assist by furnishing something toward the dinner."

He pushed his hand down into his pocket. "I have a piece of chocolate and two sticks of chewing gum, which are at your disposal." The frank smile on the young man's face revealed no tendency toward freshness, but the older man, not being able to see his face, feared that he was inclined to make sport of my sister. Therefore, he leaned forward and said: "There is a diner on, and I think we could go in—"

"No, no," interrupted Genevieve; "we don't want to go into the diner. We want a 'make believe' family reunion here in our 'private' car." Then turning to the young man, "Chocolate and chewing gum are acceptable, if they are the best you have."

The man with the children had been down to the end of the car, giving each of them a drink, and returned to his seat, just as Genevieve was ready to put the matter before him.

"We are to have a family reunion," she began, but seeing a shadow pass over his face, hastened to add: "This is Thanksgiving, and we are all away from home, so my sister and I decided to play that you, and everybody else in this car, belong to our family, and to invite you home to our section, for a Thanksgiving dinner."

He saw what she meant, and the baby reached out toward her, as if it understood, too. Genevieve took the little one in her arms. "You see that the baby is willing, and a little child should lead you."

"Oh, of course, we will be glad to accept your kind invitation. If my children won't disturb the party."

"No, indeed," she assured him, "we need children to make a Thanksgiving dinner complete," and, with the baby in her arms, she walked down to the golden-haired lady.

"Will you join us in our dinner party?"

"Thank you," returned the girl, "but I have my dinner with me."

"Very good! We want you to put your dinner in with ours, and from the size of your basket, I should imagine you have more than all the rest of us put together."

"But I am going to Chicago," the young lady protested, "and I must make my lunch do for all the way."

"Oh, I see, you are afraid we will eat too much of it." She laughed, sitting down beside the girl, and still holding the baby in her arms. "If you will eat with us, you won't need to open your basket. It is not your food we want, but you."

The girl still hesitated. "My mother told me not to get acquainted with people on the train, for fear something might happen, because I have never been out of California before, and she is afraid for me to take such a long trip alone."

"Are you afraid of me and this baby?" asked Genevieve.

"Oh, no, I'm not afraid of ladies, but mustn't speak to gentlemen, unless I am introduced to them."

"Well, my dear girl, we won't enjoy our dinner party just behind you here, knowing that you are eating all alone."

The young man in the sweater told of his last Thanksgiving in Alaska, and our Jewish "relative" brought out the best jokes he had in stock. We laughed in the proper places, and asked for more. Then we agreed to name over some of the things we were glad about.

I saw the young man in the sweater give the golden-haired girl a look that made me wonder if he had noticed her dainty appetite and silence, or whether he was glad to have her present at our reunion. "I am getting back to Chicago," he said, "to attend my sister's wedding, and I suppose that I ought to add that I am thankful I am going to have a new brother next week."

"I'm going to a wedding, too." The golden-haired girl had forgotten that she was not to speak to a gentleman without an introduction. But she remembered in time to lean round behind me.

"Whose?" In coming to her rescue I had forgotten that no questions were to be asked.

"My brother's," she replied, somewhere back of my shoulder.

"Perhaps her brother is to marry my sister." The young man had heard her answer. "She is to marry a California chap that I have never seen. I barely know that his name is Harmon."

"Will Harmon?" Again the girl was startled out of her corner. "My brother Will is to marry Miss Jenkins."

"Sure enough!" The young man reached across me. "Shake hands, for we are almost relatives."

Genevieve rose with as much dignity as she could command under the circumstances. "Miss Harmon, allow me to introduce to you Mr. Jenkins."

Our dinner was over, as everything eatable was gone. The porter carried the cups and saucers back to the dining car, and cleared away the paper sacks and crumbs.

The golden-haired girl sat alone no more on that train, and the young man with the sweater read no more magazines. They may have been talking about the coming wedding, but as we were about to leave the train at Salt Lake City, our Israelite "relative" said over the back of our seat:

"There may be more than one wedding."

"That is the romance of our Thanksgiving dinner," suggested the father of the children, whose baby was at last asleep, and he had time to enter into a conversation.

"Now, her mother can't blame us," put in Genevieve, "for they would have met in a few days, anyway."

BABY WASTED TO SKELETON

"My little son, when about a year and a half old, began to have sores come out on his face. I had a physician treat him, but the sores grew worse. Then they began to come out on his arms, then on other parts of his body, and then one came on his chest, worse than the others. Then I called another physician. Still he grew worse. At the end of about a year and a half of suffering he grew so bad that I had to tie his hands in cloths at night to keep him from scratching the sores and tearing the flesh. He got to be a mere skeleton, and was hardly able to walk.

"My aunt advised me to try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I sent to a drug store and got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of the Ointment and followed directions. At the end of two months the sores were all well. He has never had any sores of any kind since. I can sincerely say that only for Cuticura my child would have died. I used only one cake of Cuticura Soap and about three boxes of Ointment.

"I am a nurse and my profession brings me into many different families and it is always a pleasure for me to tell my story and recommend Cuticura Remedies. Mrs. Egbert Sheldon, Litchfield, Conn., Oct. 23, 1909."

DRINK WATER TO CURE KIDNEYS AND RHEUMATISM

The People Do Not Drink Enough Water to Keep Healthy, Says Well-Known Authority.

"The numerous cases of kidney and bladder diseases and rheumatism are mainly due to the fact that the drinking of water, nature's greatest medicine, has been neglected.

Stop loading your system with medicines and cure-alls; but get on the water wagon. If you are really sick, why, of course, take the proper medicines—plain, common vegetable treatment, which will not shatter the nerves or ruin the stomach."

To cure Rheumatism you must make the kidneys do their work; they are the filters of the blood. They must be made to strain out of the blood the waste matter and acids that cause rheumatism; the urine must be neutralized so it will no longer be a source of irritation to the bladder, and, most of all, you must keep these acids from forming in the stomach. This is the cause of stomach trouble and poor digestion. For these conditions you can do no better than take the following prescription: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime, but don't forget the water. Drink plenty and often.

This valuable information and simple prescription should be posted up in each household and used at the first sign of an attack of rheumatism, backache or urinary trouble, no matter how slight.

Sunless Hours.

Again the night is wild with rain;
Again, distracted, with the gale;
Upon the hills I hear a wail
Of lamentation and of pain,
As when, on some high burial place,
Moaning among the windy graves,
The Indian squaws lament the braves,
Who fell in battle for their race.

Another day of storm shall dawn
Within the east; and, darkly lit,
Its brows of stern abstraction knit,
Absorbed in moody thoughts pass on.
Bear not too hard, is all I ask,
Upon the hearts that toil and yearn!
O despotism of days that spurn
All gladness, with your frowning mask!

The Skeleton in His Closet

By STACY E. BAKER

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

The soul-racking tale poured into the ears of little Ethel Murray could result only in one thing—a missive promptly penned to the profligate Emery Jarvis, assuring him that she had learned all, and asking to be released from the engagement.

"I know of the skeleton in your closet, wrote Ethel (here she applied a dainty bit of cambric to streaming eyes ordinarily as sunshiny and blue as the sky of a June morning). "I am surprised at you! Had you come to me and told me all, I feel that I could have forgiven you—but never, now that I find the truth through other people. I return herewith your ring."

The rest of the letter was a rambling plaint, save on one subject—the engagement existing between these two must be considered past history. That was plain.

For more than a year the daughter of Burgess Murray, the biggest man politically in the community, and Emery Jarvis, a clerk in Gisson's drug store, had been making plans for a future that would embrace them both. Jarvis was an ambitious young fellow, well liked by every one, and seemingly having the best of habits.

Ethel had believed in him thoroughly until the gossiping tongue of old Mrs. Pollet had disclosed certain things that no girl of spirit could tolerate in her fiance. Therefore the return of the handsome solitaire that she had so proudly worn and the letter to her betrothed asking for her release.

Jarvis read the lines in the seclusion of the little prescription room in the rear of the drug shop and his dark eyes clouded as he vainly strove to solve the cause of the maiden's anger.

"I know of the Skeleton In Your Closet," Wrote Ethel.

"She couldn't be cross about a little thing like this," he ruminated. "I wonder how she found it out, anyway?"

That evening Jarvis called up the girl. She was not at home. During the ensuing week he made several other fruitless attempts to see her.

It was after this that the ire of the youth assumed significant proportions.

"My dear Ethel," wrote Jarvis, "I know, and you have not been at home. Patience has ceased to be the proverbial virtue, and I shall not try to see you again. I am done. I release you from the engagement, as you ask. I also acknowledge the skeleton in my closet, but why a normal-minded maid should take this amiss is beyond me. If anything, my dear, I am rather proud of it."

Ethel positively stormed when she read this communication. She clinched her fists until the nails bit cruelly into the tender flesh and angrily tossed her little blonde head.

"I shall never, never have anything more to do with men," she complained bitterly. "The very brazenness of that Emery Jarvis—to say that a 'normal-minded' girl shouldn't take such things amiss. I'm sure no girl with common sense would allow her fiance to act in that scandalous manner. Anyway, I'm glad it's all over." To prove this, Ethel burst into convulsive sobs and hid a flushed and tear-wet face in a convenient pillow.

Weeks passed, but the two erstwhile lovers seemed hopelessly estranged. Ethel made no attempt to [illegible] caused by her letter, nor did Jarvis try to explain away the misunderstanding.

Gradually the gossips in the little town—and there were many—grew accustomed to the new order of things, and everybody ceased to interest themselves in the affairs of the young couple.

It was a month after this that old Pollit (he was a portly butcher, owning the meat shop next to the drug emporium) ventured to incorporate something of a remark that caught the youth's puzzled interest.

"What was that?" demanded Jarvis, ears metaphorically a-cock. "Just repeat that last sentence."

"I said," came from the butcher, "that that there book I've been reading—'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde'—reminds me of your doings." He poked a pudgy forefinger playfully into the ribs of the youth.

"You'll have to be more explicit," snapped the drug clerk. "I can't understand. What are you driving at?"

"Can't understand, eh?" commented the other, sourly. He was angry at the tone of the lad. "Well, I guess I can put it plainer, all right. I mean that you tried to play double just like that Jekyll-Hyde feller did. Every evening after you called on the girl you was engaged to, you went straight to the house of old Doc. Blyly to see his daughter. My wife she seen you do it time and again, she did."

The dull red stained the face of the angry butcher. "She's the one that put a crimp in you, too. Ethel Murray is too fine a girl to be galavanting around with a young fellow that she thinks thinks a heap of her, and all the while he don't, but is making her out a fool by sneaking away from her house to call on another girl."

"So it was your wife that caused this trouble between Ethel and me, was it? Pity she can't learn to attend to her own affairs, isn't it?"

The butcher, his mind relieved, stamped heavily out of the drug store, but he left a knowing youth behind him. Mrs. Pollit was a gossip monger of some notoriety in the community. She resided just opposite the Blyly home, and now that the irate meat man had given him his cue, Jarvis could understand many things.

That evening, his heavy jaws set firmly and his broad shoulders thrown defiantly back, the drug clerk mounted the steps to the Murray home and rang the bell.

Ethel answered the summons. An angry flush dotted her cheeks when she saw who her visitor was, but Emory ignored these trouble signs, and pushed by her and into the familiar parlor.

"I am here to explain," began Jarvis. "Mrs. Pollet's loquacious husband has just told things, and I think I understand."

"I don't care for explanation," interrupted little Miss Murray formally.

"Nevertheless," persisted Jarvis, patiently, "you are about to receive them. "Listen, dear, I have never called on Millie Blyly in my life—let alone after I left here. When you referred to the skeleton in my closet, I took the phrase literally. There is a skeleton in my closet—a six-foot skeleton of a man that Dr. Blyly loaned me to aid me in my studies, because—well, I'm studying medicine with him, you see. I don't want to be a drug clerk all my life. I—"

But here his late fiancee, face asmile, interrupted his sentence in a very pleasing way.

Financier by Inheritance.

Joseph Morgan, J. P. Morgan's paternal grandfather, fought in Washington's army until the Revolution closed, and then settled down to farming near the village of Hartford. He made money enough to invest it in stage lines and eventually rose to the control of the chief roads of transportation in the state. Hartford, during the first quarter of the nineteenth century, had a great prosperity as the center of long-distance traffic, the main line of stage from New York to Boston passing through the city. Hartford also held the key to the trade of the Connecticut River valley, northward nearly, or quite, to the border of Canada. Innumerable taverns were sprinkled along the countryside, and Joseph Morgan also dipped into this thriving business. Later he opened a large hotel in Hartford, the City hotel, and soon afterward began to figure as a capitalist in connection with the Aetna Fire Insurance company of that city.—From the Life Story of J. Pierpont Morgan in the Metropolitan Magazine.

POULTRY

SELECTION OF GOOD LAYERS

Not Unusual for Well-Conducted Farm to Secure Average of 200 Eggs Per Hen Per Year.

After the incubator the next most important development in this industry has been the breeding by careful selection of races of hens that are exceptional layers, says an exchange. It is not unusual for a well-conducted farm to average nearly 200 eggs per hen per year, and the tendency is to improve upon this figure. Several years ago in Australia an egg-laying contest was held extending over an entire year, a great number of breeds being pitted against each other, and the average of the winning pen of six pullets, averaging from seven to twelve months old, was 218 eggs per hen for the year. At many of the experiment stations in this country similar tests are conducted from time to time, and it is not unusual for one pen of selected fowls to produce an average of 250 eggs apiece, while the record for individual hens, a much disputed honor, is considerably above that figure. The Orpingtons appear to be quite as good layers as any other breed. The Brown Leghorns, while not quite so prolific layers, require relatively small rations and therefore are considered very economical egg producers. A good layer will produce five or six times her weight each year.

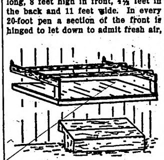
GOOD FARM POULTRY HOUSE

Minnesota Woman Gives Description of Open-Front Style of Structure for Chickens.

Our main henhouse is built of hemlock boards. The open-front style of house is liked best, and the one shown in the illustration cost about 60 cents per running foot, writes Mrs. D. E. Grover of Freeborn County, Minn., in Homestead. This house is 50 feet long, 8 feet high in front, 4½ feet in the back and 11 feet wide. In every 20-foot pen a section of the front is hinged to let down to admit fresh air, the inside covered with netting to keep the hens in. The cut shows only 20 feet of this house.



Section of Cheap Poultry House.

A heavy prepared roofing paper is more economical than shingles on these rather flat roofs. The shingles rot quickly, and leak quicker than they decay. The sides are covered with a cheaper grade of roofing. The sun gets into these narrower houses better in winter than would be possible with wider ones, and we find the more sun the more eggs and healthier fowls. Every day, unless stormy, the front is let down, and planty of fresh, pure air is obtained without draft.

Practical Egg Farming.

I raise poultry chiefly for the profit in the sale of eggs for commercial purposes. My stock is all single-comb white leghorns, and I have not tried to make a breed, says a writer in Baltimore American. I started four years ago by getting eggs from a man who had raised White Leghorns on a large scale for 27 years on the same farm. I started with four 360-egg machines, and now have eight, and shall increase to ten next spring. I have learned something about hen raising. I find that you cannot get your hen knowledge from books, papers or other people, but must knock it out of your own experience.

Keep Poultry House Dry.

It has been said that a dry hen cannot be frozen to death. Her coat of warm feathers protects her. For this reason it is more important to have a dry poultry house than a warm one. Keep out the rain and dampness and the hens will fare well.

Cull Before Winter.

One thing the poultry keeper should not neglect to do before putting the flock into winter quarters, and that is to cull.

Somewhat Indignant.

"Undoubtedly!" assented specialist No. 2.

"But would he be able to stand an operation?" pondered No. 1.

"Ah, would he?" echoed No. 2.

They dug him in the ribs again, and he squealed.

"Ah," remarked No. 1, "I think we ought to let him get a bit stronger before we cut into him."

"Confound your palaver!" gasped the patient, starting up. "What do you take me for—a cheese?"

This harmless preparation will digest a heavy meal without the slightest fuss or discomfort, and relieve the sourest, acid stomach in five minutes, besides overcoming all foul, nauseous odors from the breath.

If your stomach is sour and full of gas, or your food doesn't digest, and your meal don't seem to fit, why not get a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from any druggist here in town, and make life worth living. Absolute relief from Stomach misery and perfect digestion of anything you eat is sure to follow five minutes after, and besides, one fifty-cent case is sufficient to cure a whole family of such trouble.

Surely, a harmless, inexpensive preparation like Pape's Diapepsin, which will always either at daytime or during night, relieve your sick, sour, gassy, upset stomach and digest your meals, is about as handy and valuable a thing as you could have in the house.

Back to the Wild.

There was a time when all dogs were wild and when what we call wolves were different from other dogs only as a collie now is different from a Newfoundland, for instance. From time to time you will hear of dogs that have returned to the life of their ancestors and have run wild with the wolves of the prairie or of the woods. In the town of Sandy in Oregon a greyhound one night made the acquaintance of a coyote, which is a kind of wolf, and ever since he has lived away from the town, running with the coyotes and approaching human dwelling-places only to steal a hen or two when he has been more than usually hungry.

Have You Tried?

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? We can furnish positive proof that it has made many remarkable cures after all other means had failed.

Women who are suffering with some form of female illness should consider this.

As such evidence read these two unsolicited testimonial letters. We guarantee they are genuine and honest statements of facts.

Cresson, Pa.—"Five years ago I had a bad fall, and hurt myself inwardly. I was under a doctor's care for nine weeks, and when I stopped I grew worse again. I sent for a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, took it as directed, and now I am a stout, hearty woman."—Mrs. Ella E. Aikey, Cresson, Pa.

Baird, Wash.—"A year ago I was sick with kidney and bladder troubles and female weakness. The doctors gave me up. All they could do was to just let me go as easily as possible. I was advised by friends to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier. I am completely cured of my ills, and I am nearly sixty years old."—Mrs. Sarah Leighton, Baird, Wash.

Evidence like the above is abundant showing that the derangements of the female organism which breed all kinds of miserable feelings and which ordinary practice does not cure, are the very disorders that give way to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Women who are afflicted with similar troubles, after reading two such letters as the above, should be encouraged to try this wonderfully helpful remedy.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

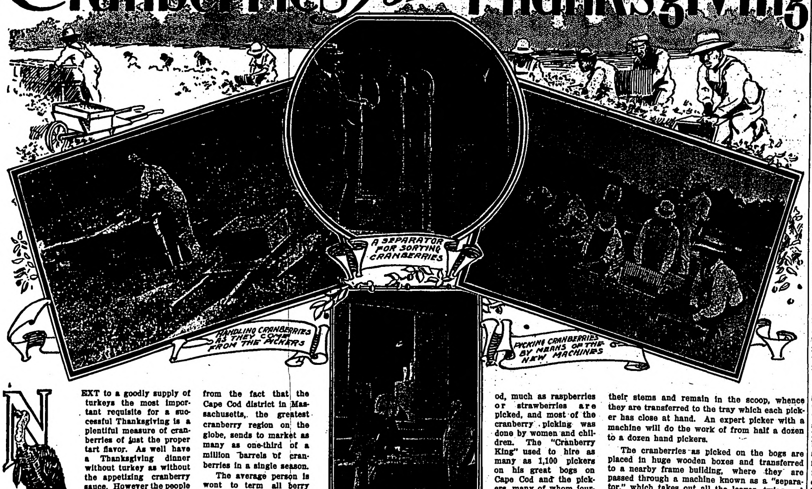
Cranberries for Thanksgiving



A SEPARATOR FOR SORTING CRANBERRIES

HANDLING CRANBERRIES AS THEY COME FROM THE PICKERS

PICKING CRANBERRIES BY MEANS OF THE NEW MACHINES

LOADING BARRELS OF CRANBERRIES IN A REFRIGERATOR CAR

NEXT to a goodly supply of turkeys the most important requisite for a successful Thanksgiving is a plentiful measure of cranberries of just the proper tart flavor. As well have a Thanksgiving dinner without turkey as without the appetizing cranberry sauce. However the people of the United States have scant cause to worry because of this feature of their holiday menu. It has been years since a failure of the cranberry crop was reported and cranberry growers have been so increasing their productive areas that despite the increase in demand, due to the country's increase in population and other influences, there continues to be year by year a pretty lavish supply of the crimson berries, and most seasons find them available at very reasonable prices.

Cranberries, like so many of the other good things of life, are distinctively American delicacies. To be sure, cranberries grow wild in some other quarters of the globe—for instance in Europe, but it is only in the United States that they have been cultivated as an article of food. Even here the growing of cranberries is confined largely to three states—Massachusetts, New Jersey and Wisconsin. How important an industry it is may be surmised, however, from the fact that the Cape Cod district in Massachusetts, the greatest cranberry region on the globe, sends to market as many as one-third of a million barrels of cranberries in a single season.

The average person is wont to term all berry areas "patches," but cranberries do not grow in patches but in bogs and, as may be surmised from the name, most of these tracts are located adjacent to rivers or lakes or ponds, so that they can be flooded in the late autumn and kept under water until spring. The berries grow on a vine which nestles close to the ground in a perfect tangle, and save for keeping out the weeds and battling with the insect pests, which are numerous, the cranberries do not require very much cultivation or attention until harvest time approaches in the autumn. Then the cranberry grower must look forward to a period of anxiety, a careful, serious scrutiny of the weather. He must keep close watch on the weather, for if a frost comes ere the crop is harvested it will work sad havoc unless the grower has been forewarned and flooded his bog or built great bonfires to keep up the temperature.

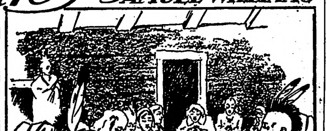
In years gone by the harvesting of cranberries was done solely by the hand picking method, much as raspberries or strawberries are picked, and most of the cranberry picking was done by women and children. The "Cranberry King" used to hire as many as 1,100 pickers on his great bogs on Cape Cod and the pickers, many of whom journeyed long distances, "camped out" on the bogs during the picking season. The past few years, however, has witnessed a revolution. Now almost all cranberries are picked by the aid of machines, and because it is tiresome work manipulating these machines it has come about that most of the women and children have been forced out of the industry and the task is largely in the hands of men, the more skillful of whom receive from $3 to $5 per day.

The picking machine most extensively used has the appearance of a huge wooden scoop, the bottom of which is made up of a row of metal bars, tipped with sharp prongs and set close together. In operation this scoop is shoved with some considerable force into the tangle of cranberry vines and then is drawn upward and backward with the result that the vines which have been caught slip between the metal bars but leave the berries, which are too large to pass through the openings, as do the vines, and in consequence are stripped from their stems and remain in the scoop, whence they are transferred to the tray which each picker has close at hand. An expert picker with a machine will do the work of from half a dozen to a dozen hand pickers.

The cranberries as picked on the bogs are placed in huge wooden boxes and transferred to a nearby frame building, where they are passed through a machine known as a "separator," which takes out all the leaves, twigs and other foreign matter. Then they are sorted for the elimination of any bad or worm-eaten berries and finally are placed in barrels, which are hauled away to railroad yards to be loaded into cars to the tune of from 220 to 240 barrels to the car, refrigerator cars being used exclusively. Up to the present time cranberries have been sold in bulk, but this year sees an innovation in the appearance of evaporated cranberries, for which are claimed all the advantages of evaporated peaches or apples, and in the introduction of cranberries put up in pasteboard cartons. Bearing cranberry bogs of the most desirable kind cost from $600 to $1,200 per acre, but in a bumper year a grower may get his money back the first year, and during the worst year the industry has known in a decade most of the growers made from 10 to 15 per cent. on their investment, and that, too, in spite of the fact that cranberries were so plentiful that they brought only $2 a barrel, whereas $5 to $7 a barrel is accounted an average price, and there have been years when a famine of cranberries sent the price up to $10 per barrel.

Origin of Thanksgiving Festivities

By SAMUEL WILLIAMS



"THE GUESTS REMAINED THIRTY DAYS

THE autumn of 1621 waned on a prosperous community. Plymouth, Mass., was both healthy and wealthy. Sickness, though it had destroyed one-half the company of pilgrims, had ceased, and the crops, as a whole, had been good, the peas alone failing. All the houses in the settlement had been put into condition and a goodly stock of furs and prepared lumber had been made ready for export to England by the next ship. The waters swarmed with fish and sea fowl were abundant. The call of the wild turkey was heard in the woods and the patter of the fleeting deer was nothing strange.

The summer was past; the harvest ended. The pilgrims decided upon a period of recreation. The governor sent out four huntsmen, who in one day secured game to last the colony a week. Hospitality was extended to Massasoit, of the neighboring settlement, who brought 90 people with him. The guests remained 30 days. The company engaged in rounds of amusements, in which military drills and religious services formed a part. Thus, heartily and loyally, was inaugurated the great New England festival of Thanksgiving. For two centuries it has continued to be observed, at first mostly in the eastern states, but it has now become national, its annual return finding a welcome from boundary to boundary, both at top and bottom and either extremity of the nation.

Thanksgiving day is peculiarly an American custom, though there are some writers who claim that it is not possible to determine the date of the first observance. John A. Goodwin, in his historical review, "The Pilgrim Republic," is positive, however, that the first celebration occurred in the fall of 1621, this being followed in 1623 by the first Thanksgiving proclamation, by the governor of Massachusetts. In 1630 there arrived at Plymouth 14 vessels, bringing with them 880 colonists, making the number nearly 1,200 instead of a mere 300. On July 8, 1630, another Thanksgiving was held in acknowledgment for this accession to the ranks of the colonists. The Dutch governors of the New Netherlands also appointed different dates for public thanksgiving, from time to time, and in some historical works there is record of a dispute as to which of these colonies deserved the credit for having first inaugurated the day. Most of the best founded historians, however, give the credit to the New England states.

The Dutch governors of New Netherlands appointed occasional days of thanksgiving in 1644, 1645, 1655 and 1664, and the English governors followed their example in 1755 and 1760, and the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States in its prayer book, ratified in 1789, recommends for Thanksgiving day the first Thursday in November, unless some other day be appointed by the civil authorities. There were also occasional recommendations by other religious bodies, but no regular annual recommendation by the governor of New York before 1817.

The struggle of the colonies for independence marks the beginning of general observances of days of thanksgiving in this country. The congress of 1777, the one which prepared the articles of confederation for adoption by the colonies, adopted a resolution setting apart the eighteenth day of December, 1777, to be observed as a day of solemn thanksgiving and praise throughout the United States.

Washington, during his administration, issued two thanksgiving proclamations, one in 1789 and the other in 1795, just after the suppression of the "Whisky rebellion," which had threatened the peace of the country, and President Madison issued one upon the declaration of peace in 1815. However, in the early years of the nation the rule was for the colonial custom to be followed and the proclamation made emanated from the governors. The western states, largely people from New England or New York, early followed the lead of these portions of the country. As we have seen, the annual recommendation by the governors of New York began in 1817. From that time the observance gradually crept southward and westward, and in 1885 Governor Johnson of Virginia adopted it, and though in 1857 Governor Wise of Virginia declined to make the proclamation on the ground that he was unauthorized to interfere in religious matters, in 1858 a Thanksgiving day was proclaimed in eight of the southern states.

The day had thus naturally grown to be a national institution of almost universal observance, when the Civil war brought to sudden ripeness this along with many other tendencies, and President Lincoln put upon it the seal of his official proclamation. President Lincoln's first proclamation was in 1862, on account of the first important victory of the national arms. He issued a similar recommendation in 1863.

Decorative Conceits and Favors For the Thanksgiving Festivities

The pious, hard-driven, worn-out, but thankful Puritans who sat down at their tables one November, a few centuries ago, and made the first Thanksgiving Day, never knew to what lengths they were to drive the ingenuity of their poor descendants. But it wasn't their fault after all, that the preparer of the Thanksgiving feast today has to attend just as much to the turkey's surroundings as to the turkey itself: It was good enough for them to have a well-stocked larder from which could come the turkey, the celery, the pumpkin pie, the cranberries and all the other goodies which history puts down to their credit. Even the comparatively recent New Englanders were content with all these as long as they looked tempting and tasted good. But today, even the important fowl itself is hardly more important than the ribbons, the candies, the favors, the adornments of all kinds, which must appear on the Thanksgiving table.

"Don't bother about having too much to eat," an up-to-date daughter was heard to say to her New England mother the other day. "I want plenty of room for the ribbons and the candy boxes."

It's the same way with other daughters of an esthetic turn of mind, rather than a practical one, and it looks as if their ambitions to "make things look pretty" may be realized this year, for there is a goodly array of Thanksgiving favors and table decorations of all kinds.

Of course the turkey reigns supreme, even if it is in paper, and is seen in all sizes, all kinds, roasted to a beautiful dark brown as the cookbook says, or standing important and majestic with its big fan-shaped feather tail high in the air. In most cases the favor turkey is meant for candy, but certain new china turkeys are mustard cups.

The pumpkin is next in importance and is seen in many of the novelties. There are large paper pumpkins for centerpieces and all sorts of small ones in papier mache or tissue paper which are candy boxes. Fruits and vegetables of all kinds seem to be suggestive of the season of feasting, and many good imitations are found among the candy box collections. Goblinesque little men are made of paper fruits and fixed up to have a very grotesque appearance, and funny little figures are made of peanuts, and mounted on cards. Nuts are tied up in ribbons and are found to be prize-packages for the receiver, for in them are neatly packed little stick-pins, whistles, etc., all carefully concealed within the paper shells.

The place cards allow of a great many new designs, and an especially new feature among these is some small mirrors. The chrysanthemum is the leading flower among the paper bowers, and those in yellow or orange seem to be the most desired shades. Other imitations which are especially "life-like" are the painted piece of the pumpkin pie, the tin of Boston baked beans, the plum pudding and the ear of corn.

LENT INSPIRATION.

"I am gratified," said the first prominent citizen, "to observe the undercurrent of joy in the Thanksgiving proclamation of the governor. Hitherto the proclamations have been along the old cut and dried, stilted forms, but in this instance there is a certain tone of joyousness, of thankfulness, of pure gratefulness that is really inspiring."

"Yes," agrees the second prominent citizen, "but it's no wonder the governor felt good when he wrote that proclamation."

"No. He has started on what seems destined to be a good administration, already there is talk of promoting him to some higher office in the gift of the peo——"

"And besides," interrupts the second man, "the governor owns one of the largest turkey farms in the state.

A LOVABLE WOMAN

Queen Amelie of Portugal Most Unfairly Treated.

Woman of Many Sorrows and Tragedies Who Devoted Herself to the People—Charities Were Her Only Extravagance.

Lisbon.—Perhaps there is not in all Europe today a more pathetic figure than Queen Amelie. Brave she has proved herself to be often, but there is something about the calm intrepid spirit with which she has faced this latest trouble, which calls forth the deep sympathy of womankind the world over.

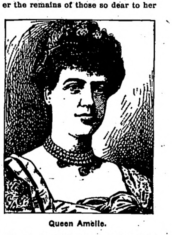
After having had her husband and her eldest son slain by her side, in the most shocking fashion, nearly three years ago, and her own remaining boy wounded, she has now been compelled to submit to the loss of her son's throne (that was also her own), and has been driven with him to seek refuge abroad—leaving all their belongings, all their personal treasures, in the hands of the revolutionists.

Born in England at Turkinham on the banks of the Thames—her father, the late Comte de Paris, being banished at the time from France—Amelie will doubtless add one more to that Parisian group of throneless royalties who furnished the inspiration of one of Alphonse Daudet's famous novels.

What Amelie Fears.

Perhaps Queen Amelie's greatest grief in connection with the recent tragic events will be the shattered future of her only remaining son. For all hopes for the future are practically at an end for a monarch who has been deposed by his people. Another source of profound sorrow will be the fact that she will be barred henceforth from that Church of St. Vincent at Lisbon where her murdered husband and eldest son sleep their last sleep.

She will be in doubt, indeed, whether the remains of those so dear to her will not be subjected to some such frightful indignities as those which characterized the last revolutionary outbreak in Barcelona, when the mob having sacked the convents and monasteries, tore the dead monks and nuns from their tombs, paraded them about the city, either whole or piecemeal, exposed them to every sort of outrage, and ended by setting them up in grotesque positions at the ruined entrances of the sacred buildings from which they had been taken.



Queen Amelie.

Ever since Amelie's husband and eldest son were assassinated she had lived in utter terror lest her only remaining son, Manuel II., should share their fate. For herself, her own safety and welfare, she cared little. Those who know Amelie realize that when a cruel death claimed her husband on that terrible afternoon in February, 1906, her heart was quite broken, and the only interest left for her in life lay in her son, Manuel. The domestic life of King Carlos and Amelie was utterly unclouded and the queen was the happiest of wives and mothers.

Tried to Help the People.

Amelie has been obliged to submit to seeing the instigators of the murder of King Carlos and the crown prince not only unpunished, but even occupying positions of influence and rank. Indeed, she was brought face to face with them almost daily and had to remain silent for the sake of the young king.

She was debarred from rewarding those who had endeavored to defend her husband on the day of his assassination and could not open a Portuguese paper without finding its columns filled with calumniations of her dead husband, which she was powerless to officially or publicly deny.

Since Amelie, then a slender young woman renowned for her exquisite beauty, came to Portgual a little over 24 years ago, she has done nothing but good. Out of her own personal fortune she has had built and endowed homes for crippled children, orphan asylums, homes for the blind and public dispensaries.

Marie Amelie is possessed of a sufficiently large fortune of her own to have rendered her wholly independent of the Portuguese treasury. Her own extravagances consisted of her many charities, and that from her own purse she returned to the Portuguese government money which it was asserted had been advanced to her husband, the late king, but which he did not in reality owe, it will be realized that Portugal has driven from her soil a wise, good and energetic princess, who spent her entire married life in working for the welfare of her people—a woman toward whom they should be filled with feelings of gratitude.

American Gibraltar in Manila Bay

WASHINGTON.—About two years hence if passengers on steamers entering Manila harbor and passing between the several small islands that guard the principal port of the Philippines should inquire with indifferent interest as to the name and use of a small dun-colored rock, hardly discernible any distance away and looking much like an irregular shaped houseboat floating on the ocean, they will be told that they are looking at El Fraile island. Perhaps, also, they will be told that the little island, scarce two hundred feet square, is the most diabolically effective fortification of its size in the world.

For eighteen months army engineers have been directing the work of fortifying what is intended as the backbone or keystone of the strong defenses in Manila harbor. They have resorted to a plan suggested by a young engineer officer after their superiors had thrown up their hands in despair at the prospects of attempting to fortify the rock which showed its head above the water for so small an area. It involves the leveling of the island almost to the surface of the sea and erecting a structure in the form of a battleship deck stripped for action. The artificial fortifying will be of steel and cement.

The defenses of Manila bay entrance present the most picturesque as well as the most complete set of fortifications Uncle Sam possesses. Stretching across the mouth of the harbor are a series of islands. The largest of these islands and the one which will be used as a base of supplies for the others is Corregidor, from which the first hostile gun was directed against Admiral Dewey's fleet in 1898. On Corregidor the army is installing a 24 company post.

But the most interesting of all the islands is the El Fraile, at present a tiny rock rising in a pinnacle 180 feet above the bay. The shape of the island will, as stated, be changed by means of steel and concrete walls which will extend below the water line, to resemble the hull of a battleship. No section of the island ground will be exposed to fire. It will be surrounded and covered over by steel and concrete walls, about fifty feet thick on the sides and almost solid steel on the top. On the surface of this "deck" two turrets will be placed, each turret containing two 14-inch guns. Besides the four large guns, four six-inch rapid-fire rifles will be placed in embrasures at the seaward end, and like batteries of small guns will be placed at other points of advantage. Quarters will be provided for only a sufficient number of men to work the guns and machinery.

Treasury Building Is Overcrowded

PUT 'ER THERE

WHEN the small army of architects and artisans has finished the work now in progress on the United States treasury building, the beautiful old structure will show the first material change since 1869. Architecturally it still will represent a pagan temple, indicating, many folk say, the American people's worship of money. But visitors to the nation's capital who have not seen the treasury in 40 years will find some changes for efficiency and economy.

The nucleus of the present building, located where President Jackson, irritated by the procrastination of congress in choosing a site, put his hickory stick down with a thump and exclaimed, "Put 'er there, on that spot," will remain unchanged, but the double-stone staircase leading up to the colonnade on the Fifteenth street side has been torn away. Architects said it spoiled the beauty of that side of the building, plans for which were drawn by William T. Elliott, a surveyor, who came to Washington in 1813.

The 30 granite monoliths, each of which cost $5,500 and weighs 30 tons, now stand in an unbroken row. They are said to be the finest example of their kind of the stonecutter's art. It required ten men, working 60 days, to produce each of them, and a solid train of 30 flat cars brought them to Washington from the quarries in Massachusetts.

To make more space inside the building all the files of letters and documents will be stored in the old coal vaults under the lawn on the Pennsylvania avenue side, and new coal vaults are being built on the side opposite the White House.

Big Job to Fill the Supreme Bench

HUGHES LURTON
THIS IS NO EASY JOB
LIST

THE seven justices of the Supreme court of the United States, led by the venerable Justice Harlan, called on President Taft the other day to pay their respects. This annual call of courtesy reminded the president of a duty which is uppermost in his mind and occupying it almost to the exclusion of any other consideration, for the president is called upon to remodel the highest tribunal in the land.

The president has appointed two justices already—Hughes in place of Brewer, who died, and Lurton in place of Peckham of New York, also dead. These deaths removed a Republican and a Democrat, and their successors were of the same political faith. Since then Chief Justice Fuller, a Democrat, appointed from Illinois, has died, and Justice Moody, a Republican, of Massachusetts, has resigned because of ill-health, and President Taft will have to fill these two vacancies.

In addition to judicial fitness, politics and geographical qualifications must be considered. Moreover, the president is brought face to face with a task which will be of tremendous importance to the United States for the next generation. With political beliefs changing over night and greater zeal in governmental supervision being urged by the dominant party, the court which President Taft must reconstruct will pass on all the changes in the organic laws of the United States which may be made by congress.

Society Soldier Out at Fort Myer

ALBERT J. MYER, the American army's gentleman soldier, is no longer wearing the uniform of an enlisted man. He has left Fort Myer, the army reservation named for his illustrious grandfather, and has gone back to Boston.

Not only was the passing of the dandy soldier sudden and unexpected, but the manner of his going sensational. Mr. Myer, who was a corporal in the signal corps, has been in the guardhouse since August. A recent verdict of a court-martial which tried him sentenced Corporal Myer to be reduced to the ranks, to be confined at hard labor for three months and to forfeit $50 of his pay.

The court-martial was a little slow and Myer escaped its imprisonment penalty, having been discharged in the meantime. He was given an honorable discharge and the army knows him no more.

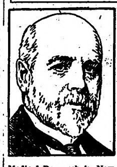
Myer created the biggest sensation the army has had for a long time. He tried to get into West Point, but was barred by age, and from the naval academy because of his size. Then he enlisted in the cavalry, but that did not suit his liking and he transferred into the signal corps, where he was promoted to be a corporal.

At Fort Myer the dude soldier was the envy of his comrades and a particular bore to his officers. After a hard day's drill, or the attendance on some other military duty, Corporal Myer would go to his bachelor apartments, have his valet rub him down and then don the habiliments of a society man. That night, perhaps, his commanding officers would find him in the same ballroom with themselves.

The youngster rode and walked with the fairest of Washington's belles, and had money to burn.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

GOVERNMENT HEALTH ADVISER

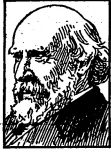


When Theodore Roosevelt discovered some years ago that the Panama Canal could never be built until the yellow fever plague was conquered, he appointed a commission of medical men to discover the cause of the scourge and the means of preventing it. The splendid work of that commission everybody knows; but not everyone is aware that the members of the commission were named by a private citizen, Dr. William H. Welch, of Baltimore. Dr. Welch has occupied for years the unique position of unofficial adviser to the United States government in all large matters relating to the public health. There is hardly a single body that has to do with the national health which does not include Dr. Welch among its members.

As president of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research in New York, Human Life says, he has helped to inspire many of the great discoveries which have come out of that laboratory from Dr. Simon Flexner and others. Not long ago the Carnegie Institution in Washington needed a chairman for its executive committee, which has general oversight of all the Institution's manifold scientific activities. Dr. Welch was elected, and although the Carnegie research workers are busy with many other problems besides those of medicine, he takes almost as much interest in the institution's new non-magnetic yacht and its observatory in the Andes as in his own particular subject.

As a pathologist Dr. Welch has won a world-wide reputation. Occupying the professorship in this science at Johns Hopkins University since its foundation, he has made during the last twenty-five years many important contributions to our knowledge of diphtheria, typhoid fever, malaria, Asiatic cholera, kidney troubles, and other diseases.

J. J. HILL 72 YEARS OLD

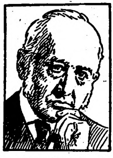


James J. Hill, of St. Paul, celebrated his 72d birthday anniversary a few days ago. The heading reads, "J. J. Hill 72 Years Old." Perhaps it would have been nearer correct if it read, "James J. Hill, 72 Years Young." If there is another man in the United States who has passed the allotted time of three score years and ten, and, having done as much work in his lifetime as James J. Hill, "Empire Builder of the Northwest," still retains as keen an intellect and can yet do as much important work in a day, St. Paul would like to know who he is.

Mr. Hill's son, Louis W. Hill, as president of the Great Northern railroad, has relieved his father of much work, but in the office of president of the board, James J. Hill finds enough to do to keep him busy every day. His hand is still on the helm and nothing escapes his notice. Evidence of Mr. Hill's keenness of mind was amply given in the address he delivered before the National Conservation Congress in St. Paul. Some of the epigrams contained in that address will be quoted in years to come.

Mr. Hill's St. Paul home is on Summit avenue, a residence street equaling in beauty any in the world. From the rear of his house Mr. Hill has a view of the Mississippi river and the beautiful bluffs beyond that provides a picture no artist could truthfully portray. In his home are priceless collections of art.

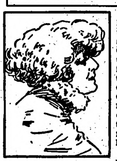
JUDGE WHO TRIED CRIPPEN



Lord Alverstone, chief justice of England, is the judge before whom Dr. Harvey H. Crippen was tried for the murder of his wife, and it was he who sentenced the American dentist to be hanged. Lord Alverstone is regarded in England as having exceptional judicial ability. He was born in December, 1842, the second son of Thomas Webster, Q. C., and Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Richard Calthrop, Swineshead Abbey, Lincolnshire. He was educated at King's College School; at Charterhouse, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was Scholar, thirty-fifth Wrangler, and third-class Classic. He became a barrister in 1868; joined the South-Eastern Service circuit; later, was appointed Tubman, and, after that, Postman, of the Court of Exchequer. He took silk ten years after he was called. In 1880 he contested Bewdley, and five years later he became M. P. for Launceston. From the same year until 1900, when he was appointed Lord Chief Justice of England, he was M. P. (Conservative) for the Isle of Wight. He was attorney-general from 1885 to 1886, from 1886 to 1892, and from 1895 to 1900. In the last-named year he became Master of the Rolls. In 1872 he married Louisa, only daughter of William Calthrop, of Withern, Lincolnshire.

The first part of the lord chief justice's summing up in the celebrated case consisted of an analysis of Crippen's own story. After telling the jurors they must be satisfied upon the evidence the crown had made out, or otherwise the prisoner was entitled to acquittal, Lord Alverstone said the jury would agree that Crippen, if guilty, was an extraordinary man, who had committed a ghastly crime and had covered it up in most brutal and callous manner. If Crippen was innocent, the judge declared, it was impossible to fathom his mind.

BERNHARDT STILL YOUTHFUL



The emotional, fervid and ever youthful Bernhardt is once again in our midst. With a repertoire of 24 plays, she will tour this country for six months and will then visit Cuba and Mexico. Of course, "the Divine Sarah"—how many million times has she been called that?—has made the inevitable statement that this is her farewell tour, but American theater-goers are hardened, disillusioned. The most trusting patron of the drama, whose wide-eyed belief in the truth of many stage legends is almost pathetic, becomes cynical and peevish when the term "farewell tour" is used in connection with any celebrity, most of all Sarah of the burnished tresses. Sarah has "farewelled" too often.

But when you get right down to it, who wants her to retire, anyway? When a woman of 67 can play the part of a lithesome lad of 19—play it wonderfully, with all the grace and vivacity which the role demands—why should she retire? Why shouldn't she go right on playing until she's 100 if she wants to? If Sarah has this idea in mind—and certainly it seems that she has—she can count on Americans backing her up for many a long year to come.

It has been said, in fact one reads it in every account of Mme. Bernhardt's career, that she looks barely half her age. That, of course, isn't so; to say that the world-famous French actress appears to be only about 34 off the stage "in real life" is an exaggeration. But that her figure is as slender and straight as any girl's, her eyes bright and her complexion clear and healthy, cannot be denied.

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Forging the Big Panama Canal Gates

60,000 TONS
IT WOULD TAKE A HUSKY KID TER STEAL A GATE LIKE DAT—GEE!

PITTSBURG, PA.—Mischievous boys dreaming of gates to be carried away and future Hallowe'en trophies would not in the wildest nightmares imagine such enormous gates as are being made in Pittsburg for the Panama canal.

They will be the largest gates in the world. Any one of the 92 of them will be about as high as a six-story building, as wide as many city buildings are (65 feet), and seven feet deep or thick.

The structural steel that will go to make them will weigh 66,000 tons, or more than eight times as much as was used to build the Eiffel tower in Paris.

The mighty portals, designed to admit a world's commerce from one ocean to another, must withstand a tide of criticism as well as a tremendous pressure of water and possible convulsions of earth. For years the controversy over gates or no gates, locks or sea level, has been the dividing issue of the canal problem.

In the face of fear in some quarters that the foundations on the isthmus are not sure enough for locks, that earthquakes or water pressure would dislodge them, and that an enemy's mines or accidental explosion might easily destroy them, the government has begun to build the gates. The cost will be $5,500,000.

Of the 60,000 tons of steel required, the heaviest single pieces will weigh about eighteen tons. The thousands of individual pieces, numbered and fitted to go together as easily as children's blocks, will be shipped by steamer via Baltimore and with them will go more than four hundred skilled structural steel builders from Pittsburg to set them. The advance guard of experts will leave here in December and the first work probably will begin early in 1911.

There are no locks approaching these in size. The famous Suez canal is a sea level affair and the few great lock canals would have to combine their gates to equal the size and strength of the great doors of Panama.

Tragic Fate Long Pursues a Family

NEW YORK.—Another is likely to be added to the list of tragic deaths in the family of Miss Adelaide Cumming of this city. She is now in Boston, summoned there by a peculiar accident to her sister who, on her thirty-second birthday put on a new dress of the hobble-skirt variety, and as she was going downstairs, tripped and fell. Her hip bone was broken and various complications have set in which may cause her death.

Miss Cumming is still a young woman, but misfortune has been with her all her life. Her grandfather was wrecked and drowned at sea; her father killed in a boiler explosion; one sister crushed by a trunk, another killed by a snowball and a third by gangrene; a nephew went down in the Maine, another was killed in the San Francisco earthquake, and their mother is now insane.

James G. Cumming, grandfather of the present Cumming generation, was a sailor of Salem, Mass., and went down with his ship when Miss Cumming was a young girl. Her father was blown to death in a boiler explosion in Salem. He was a merchant and simply happened along when the boiler let loose. Only parts of his body were recovered. One sister was breaking wood over her knee when she fractured her kneecap. The leg was amputated but gangrene caused her death. Another was killed by a snowball in which a stone was imbedded and a third was caught while packing a trunk. The lid crushed her head.

The unhappy fate of the family seemed to descend to the branches, for one of Miss Cumming's nephews was lost in the San Francisco earthquake in one of the collapsed buildings which took fire. A brother of this lad, Ensign Matthews, had perished on the Maine in Havana harbor

Everybody Helps to Make City Clean

KANSAS CITY, KAN.—The Armourdale district has set the pace and now this city is going to be a spotless town. An idea, a circular letter and a few postage stamps did the work in Armourdale.

Mr. Dean, commissioner of parks, selected the town-cleaning day and then mailed the letters to all of the business and professional men in that part of town, inviting them to meet, properly equipped with implements, at Shawnee park.

As early as 7:30 the Shawnee park district looked like a brickyard district when a mad-dog alarm has been sounded. There were men of all sizes and wearing all sorts of working apparel and carrying many descriptions of implements. When all hands had gathered around the bandstand, it was found that the group included lawyers, doctors, ministers and business men, and that they meant business.

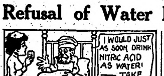
The party was divided into three sections. Wagons furnished by the city and by business firms were on hand to follow the workers and collect the results of their labor.

Up one side of the street and down the other they worked, cleaning the street and parkings of weeds and papers and piling them for the wagons to collect and cart away. And school boys who had not been detained at home to clean yards followed the shovel and hoe brigade with brooms, sweeping up the dirt the shovelers had missed.

It is the intention before long to have the 14,000 school children of the city organized into juvenile leagues for the purpose of assisting in this work.

"This is only a starter," Mr. Dean explained. "All of Kansas City, Kan., will be cleaned the same way."

Refusal of Water May Cost His Life



I WOULD JUST AS SOON DRINK NITRIC ACID AS WATER!—TAKE IT AWAY

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Lying in the Garretson hospital in a critical condition from a badly lacerated scalp, which he sustained when hit by a street car, Albert Maxwell, fifty-one years of age, steadfastly refuses to drink water in any form because he doesn't like it. He declares he has been a total abstainer from nature's beverage for the last thirty years, and is willing to take a chance of giving up his life rather than touch water again.

When Maxwell was taken to the hospital he was placed on the operating table while the physicians sewed up his scalp, which had been almost completely torn off the skull. Maxwell stood the operation well. As he straightened up ready to be assigned a bed Doctors Ross and Silk offered him a glass of water.

"I never use it," was Maxwell's response to the proffered drink. The physicians and the nurses regarded the statement as a joke. Next morning the nurse offered Maxwell medicine in the form of pills. A glass of water was offered him to take with the medicine, but Maxwell refused it. He swallowed the pills without water.

The white of an egg was prescribed in the evening, but after inspecting the food Maxwell declared he thought there was water in it and refused to take it.

Hospital attaches are in a quandary as to what to feed the man. Mrs. Maxwell says it is useless to coax her husband to drink water.

Valuable Advice.

SPIRIT OF ROMANCE.

To the spirit of chivalry and love of adventure that characterized the wonderful days of long ago the average writer turns for his romantic tales of love and war, but it seems somehow as though enough of romance can be found in the world at every period of its existence, even in its present most practical and, perhaps, its most unpoetical stage, to make volumes of absorbing interest, but the mystery of the past appeals to the ordinary mind with more persistence than the wonders of the present; perhaps, because the intervening periods of time have endowed the occurrences of other days with something of the charm of their own uncertainty. The influence of poetry, of music, of art, of the drama, of literature, helps to mold a world of loveliness, and contributes in no small way to the happiness of living, says the Charleston News and Courier. Into each profession some of the spirit of romance has crept, much of which has been handed down from generation to generation as a priceless heritage. The artistic temperament best understands the making of those rose-sweet romances which breathe their fragrance far and wide and make the world a better place in which to live, but even those of us who are not blessed with poetic natures cannot, indeed must not, fail to trace along our daily paths the romance of the world itself with all its throbbing beauty—a romance of life and color, of effort and achievement, and above all of joy and happiness.

Sometimes the question is asked, "What becomes of all the gold?" It is a well-known fact that the total of the precious metal mined is not fully accounted for by the amount of gold coins in use or the quantity of gold employed in the arts. A good deal of it "gets away" in some fashion and hides from the sight of the statisticians and the economists. Perhaps a little light may be thrown on the mystery by the experience of a woman in South Bend, Ind., who while digging in her flower garden found $1,145 in gold pieces. It is believed the money was buried by the woman's father, who died some years ago. How much more has been disposed of in like fashion or stored away in miser's hoards and in secret places by those who wish to keep the coin against a time of need?

The remarkable instance of a cure of tetanus after the jaws were locked, effected in Milwaukee not long ago, has been paralleled in New York, the patient being a seven-year-old boy. He lacerated his right hand and left knee, which were cauterized by a physician. Ten days later, however, he became violently ill, showing symptoms of tetanus, and being removed to a hospital, where for four days his jaws were locked and for eight days he was subject to frequent spasms. At the first injection of the improved serum from the New York board of health 5,000 units were used. After 30,000 units had been administered the lad showed improvement and gradually grew better, until a week ago he was discharged from the hospital completely cured.

One of the precious things that escaped destruction in the fire that wrought such havoc at the Brussels exhibition was the priceless collection of lace loaned by the former queen of Italy. As all the world interested in lace-making is aware, Queen Dowager Margherita has revived the lace industry in Italy, and her endowed lace factory at Venice is visited by many travelers. Brussels as well as Venice in old times was famous for its lace, and no doubt the Belgians inspected the Italian collection like connoisseurs. The collection is now again in the the possession of the queen dowager.

Women arriving at the port of New York from abroad, who wore their furs to escape paying duty on the wraps, had it made even more warm for them by the explanation that their excuse of nonpayment for duty wouldn't wear.

CHOLERA IN GOTHAM

DREADED DISEASE MENACES NEW YORK; TWO DIE, NINE ARE ILL.

SHIPS HELD IN QUARANTINE

Victims of the Plague Are Buried at Mouth of Port, While Vessel From Italy Is Held by Government Inspectors—Precautions Taken.

New York—While two deaths on board the steamship San Giorgio, which arrived here Wednesday, and the nine sick cases are reported to be due to gastro-enteritis, it is felt that the real disease is cholera.

The bodies of the two victims, one a child of two years and the other the child's mother, who died, were buried at sea, the woman just before the steamer entered port.

The two fatalities were reported on the vessel as due to acute gastroenteritis, but there seems to be no doubt that they were cholera victims, although Health Officer Doty declined to make an official announcement, preferring to wait the results of the bacteriological examination. All the cases were in the steerage.

The San Giorgio left Naples with 22 cabin and 221 steerage passengers. Of these last 53 were from infected districts and were held in quarantine at Naples on the steamer Marsala for five days, while 68 passed through the city from the interior and were isolated in a building near the water.

ROBIN J. COOPER IS FREED

Alleged Slayer of Senator Carmack Is Acquitted on the Advice of Attorney General.

Nashville, Tenn.—Robin J. Cooper, charged with the murder of Senator Edward Ward Carmack November 9, 1908, was Tuesday acquitted in the criminal court on recommendation of Attorney General A. B. Anderson. Thus was brought to a close the final chapter in one of the most celebrated cases in the court annals of Tennessee.

There was complete silence as Attorney General Anderson arose to address the court.

"Your honor is probably familiar with this case," he said. "This defendant, his father, Col. Duncan B. Cooper, and John Sharp were indicted jointly for the murder of Senator Carmack. The case came up for trial and resulted in the acquittal of Sharp. Colonel Cooper and this defendant were found guilty of murder in the first degree. The supreme court affirmed the case of Colonel Cooper, but as to this defendant there was a reversal."

Judge A. B. Neil then stated to the jury that, in view of the statement of the attorney general, the sworn officer of the state, and in view of the further fact that there is no further effort made to prosecute the case, the jury would return a verdict of not guilty, which was accordingly done.

BLOCKS RAIL RATE ADVANCE

SUSPENSION ORDER ISSUED AGAINST FOURTEEN LINES.

Interstate Commerce Commission Prevents Restoration of Old Tariffs—Decision Vitally Important.

Washington. — The interstate commerce commission have blocked the attempt of fourteen railroad lines to resume advance of rates between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, which had already been condemned, by a suspension order in what is known as the Burnham-Hanna-Munger case of Kansas City, Mo.

The decision will be of vital importance as a precedent as to rate-making by basic points. The commission ordered the class rates on shipments moving from points east of St. Louis to Kansas City and beyond. The principle involved is that rates from the east to Kansas City should be lower than the aggregate of rates from the east to St. Louis and St. Louis to Kansas City.

Railroads appealed to the courts and the Supreme court of the United States sustained the commission. Recently the roads gave notice of the contemplated restoration of the old rates. The roads which filed these schedules include the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe; Chicago & Alton; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy; Chicago Great Western; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul; Chicago & Northwestern; Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific; Illinois Central; Iowa Central; Missouri, Pacific, and Wabash.

TAFT REPLIES TO PINCHOT

President Gives Ex-Forester Permission to File Briefs in Connection With Alaska Claims.

Washington.—President Taft, responding to the request of Gifford Pinchot, former forester of the United States, and his brother, Amos Pinchot, for permission to submit a brief on the question of issuing patents in the Cunningham Alaskan coal land claims, has informed Mr. Pinchot that he may submit such a brief and advised him to send it to the executive office before December 1.

Mr. Pinchot is thus informed in a letter authorized by President Taft and written by the secretary to the president, Charles D. Norton, which was made public Tuesday. The letter is in reply to a recent communication to the president from Mr. Pinchot and his brother, expressing fear that the interior department will recommend the patenting of the Cunningham claims.

San Juan del Sur, Nicaragua.—More than 75 persons were killed or wounded in a street battle between the government troops and the Liberals at Leon Monday.

The Liberals, disregarding the government's orders prohibiting their holding public meeting on the streets, gathered in a park and their leaders began delivering speeches against the government.

The police attempted to disperse the crowd, but were quickly overcome. The troops were then called out and were compelled to fire many rounds into the mob before the crowd could be dispersed. The situation is critical and further trouble is anticipated.

AVIATOR IS KILLED

RALPH JOHNSTONE MEETS HORRIBLE DEATH IN FLIGHT AT DENVER, COL.

EVERY BONE IN BODY BROKEN

Aeroplane Wing Crumples at Height of 800 Feet and Airman Is Dashed to Ground in Presence of Thousands—Struggled to Save Life.

Denver, Col.—From ten to fifteen thousand persons saw Ralph Johnstone, the holder of the world's aviation altitude record, plunge, in his Wright biplane, at Overland Park Thursday, from a height of 800 feet to a terrible death, nearly every bone in his body being fractured.

His tragic flight was not without a thrilling struggle with the grim messenger, for when the daring birdman realized that the earthward dive might mean the loss of his life, he tried to climb swiftly to the top of his aeroplane, lest the heavy machinery crush out his life. But he could not manage it.

The tragedy was apparently due in great measure to an accident on Tuesday, when on alighting in front of the grand stand, a screw gave way and his biplane crashed into a fence and stopped with a crushed wing. It was this wing, probably not properly repaired, that gave way and sent the machine and its driver to the ground.

Johnstone got away perfectly when he started his last flight. Once or twice he circled above the admiring throng, then rose to a height of 900 feet. Johnstone gave some exhibitions of aerial rough riding, making his plane dip and rise, dip and rise, as though it were borne by some huge, invisible wave.

After seventeen minutes of flight, Johnstone decided to come down. He was making a fancy descent, known to aviators as the aerial spin. When at a distance of about 800 feet from the ground his machine was noticed to wobble several times. Suddenly it swerved and the right wing crumpled. The part that had been injured gave way entirely and like a huge bird crippled by a shot, it began to flutter to the ground. Apparently Johnstone realized instantly that death was reaching out for him, for he hurled off his heavy headgear and seizing the rods sought to clamber to the top of the aeroplane, evidently trying to escape being caught under the heavy machinery.

The machine fell outside Overland Park at the corner of Iowa and South Delaware streets, where a crowd had gathered on a knoll overlooking the park. All scampered to safety save one man, who seemed not to realize the weight of the machine that was coming down upon him, but stood with uplifted arms as if to catch the bird-like monster. Suddenly he darted from under and Johnstone crashed to the ground, the machinery all above him, parts of it, however, driven clear through his body, in which no bone remained unbroken. His face was crushed in and the bones of all his limbs protruded through the flesh.

A gruesome detail of the accident was the morbid desire of souvenir hunters, who, almost before Johnstone's body was removed, had carried away all available portions of the aviator's aeroplane.

Johnstone was for years identified with the vaudeville stage as a trick bike rider. He held the world's record in altitude aviation, having attained a height of 9,475 feet at Belmont Park this year. He was thirty years old, married and lived in Kansas City. He leaves a widow and two children, who are in New York at the present time.

STANDARD OIL WINS CASE

Indiana Concern Is Declared Not Guilty by Jury Through Instruction of Judge.

Jackson, Tenn.—Judge John E. McCall of the United States district court Thursday instructed the jury in the case of the government against the Standard Oil company of Indiana to return a verdict of not guilty.

Judge McCall sustained the contention of counsel for the defandant that the United States had failed to prove the allegations set forth in the indictment. The oil company has been on trial for a week charged with receiving freight rate concessions in violation of the so-called Elkins law.

The Tennessee suit against the Standard Oil company of Indiana was one of a number of federal attacks based on anti-rebate laws to be inaugurated by the department of justice under the Roosevelt administration, and the line of prosecution followed in a number of significant details the case in which a $29,000,000 fine was imposed by Judge Kenesaw M. Landis in Chicago, only to be set aside by the federal court of appeals.

CANAL COMPLETED IN 1913

PRESIDENT IS SO INFORMED AT PANAMA.

Official Opening, However, Remains January 1, 1915—Taft Gratified at Progress.

Panama.—President Taft, wearing a white flannel suit and flapping Panama hat, spent several hours watching the work on the famous Gatun dam and was informed that the canal would be completed December 1, 1913.

The official date of the opening remains January 1, 1915, Lieutenant Colonel Goethals desiring one year in which to train the canal tenders and to get the machinery working smoothly. Ships meantime will be granted the privilege of the canal, but at their own risk of delay incident to inexperienced operation.

In addition, it was announced by the colonel that the report that President Taft's visit was the forerunner of a request of another $100,000,000 from congress was unfounded. The canal will be completed in 1913, he said, within the $375,000,000 already authorized.

Colonel Goethals has recommended to President Taft that the canal be fortified by the military government of the Canal zone, the army and navy to be represented on the fortifications board, each branch of the service to have control of matter appertaining to it.

The president was pleased at the outlook for the early completion of the great work, and congratulated Colonel Goethals. He expressed amazement at the amount of work accomplished since his visit to the isthmus in February, 1909.

President Taft is gratified over the results of his three days' inspection. Wednesday he went deep down in the Culebra cut, giving especial attention to this, the most difficult part of the construction.

The president heard delegations of mechanics and laborers, who are asking increased wages based on increases in the United States.

Conditions here differ from those in the United States, as government commissary has been successful in preventing the increased cost in living that has been general elsewhere. It is doubtful that larger wages will be paid in the zone.

AMERICAN FLEET IN ENGLAND

British Warships Salute United States Battleships and Latter Reply in Kind.

Portland, England.—The first division of the American battleship cruising fleet, which includes Rear Admiral Schroeder's flagship, the Connecticut, arrived here Wednesday. While coming from Tor bay the American warships passed the second division of the British home fleet which was passing out. Salutes were exchanged. The visiting vessels also made the customary salutes when they entered Portland harbor.

Vice-Admiral Sir William Henry May, commander of the home fleet, entertained the American admiral and captains on his flagship, the Dreadnought, Wednesday evening. The mayor and the corporation will give a banquet to the American officers, while a fancy ball and other entertainments for the American and British bluejackets have been arranged.

The men of the visiting fleet will have all the privileges of the naval canteen at Portland and of the sailors' home in Weymouth harbor. This is a courtesy never before granted to men of foreign ships. The naval recreation grounds have been placed at the disposal of the Americans and rowing and sailing matches between crews of American and British seamen have been planned.

FLIES FROM SHIP TO LAND

Aviator Ely Makes Successful Flight From Deck of War Vessel at Sea.

Norfolk, Va.—Eugene Ely flew from the deck of the U. S. scout cruiser Birmingham to land Monday, making a new epoch in the progress of aeronautics. His was the first flight attempted from a ship at sea.

Ely's trip nearly ended in disaster, however, for when his machine cleared the cruiser's deck it dipped so that one wing struck the water. The shock broke a propeller blade, but Ely succeeded in getting clear and continued his flight.

The crippled condition of his biplane made a long trip impossible and the aviator headed for the nearest point of land, Willoughby Spit, a narrow, sandy point reaching out into Chesapeake bay. He alighted on the beach only a few feet above the water line.

Ely started his daring attempt when the Birmingham was in Chesapeake Bay about twelve miles from the Norfolk navy yard, which was his objective point.

Want the Tariff Revised.

Washington.—The Knights of Labor of America at the close of its thirty-fourth annual convention here Thursday decided to go to congress at the coming session with a sweeping demand for tariff revision. The blame for the high cost of living is placed by the organization solely upon the tariff. Several of the delegates declared that if the Democratic party did not revise the tariff the high cost of living would lead to the formation of a new party which would give its chief attention to this feature.

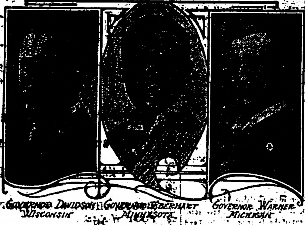
THREE GOVERNORS TO ATTEND FOREST FIRE CONFERENCE.



FIRE CONFERENCE

WILL BE HELD IN THE CITY OF ST. PAUL ON DECEMBER 6 AND 7.

THREE GOVERNORS TO BE THERE.

Minnesota Forestry Association Hopes to Bring About Concerted Action to Forestall Future Conflagrations.

St. Paul, Nov. 17.—Officials of the government, the state of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan, the railroads and lumber companies are to deliver addresses at the Lake States Forest Fire Conference in St. Paul, December 6 and 7, and from the suggestions they make a well defined plan for the prevention of future destruction of life and property is expected to result.

Governor Eberhart of Minnesota, Governor Warner of Michigan and Governor Davidson of Wisconsin will take part in the conference.

The program for the conference has just been completed by J. E. Rhodes, president of the Minnesota Forestry Association. Mr. Rhodes has succeeded in inducing many prominent men to agree to come to St. Paul to discuss the causes and prevention of forest fires, which, including the great Hinckley disaster in 1894, have cost hundreds of lives and millions of dollars in property.

The cause of these fires, it is believed, will cause one of the most important discussions. Investigations always follow the disasters and there always is a hot argument concerning the cause. Recently it was charged that that blaze which destroyed Spooner and Baudette, Minn., and laid in waste thousands of acres of land, was caused by sparks from a locomotive on a Canadian railroad. This was vehemently denied by officials of the railroad, who in turn claimed the settlers themselves were to blame. It is expected that this most recent of fires will be thoroughly probed at the coming conference and there is a chance that the responsibility for it will be fixed.

Governor Eberhart, of Minnesota; Governor Davidson, of Wisconsin, and Governor Warner, of Michigan, are to speak on the opening day. Governor Eberhart will talk on "The State's Duty in the Preservation of Its Forests; Governor Warner's subject is, "Michigan's Forestry Policy," and Governor Davidson is on the program to discuss, "What the Forests Mean to the People."

The remainder of the first day's program follows:

Opening address, Z. D. Scott, president of the Minnesota State Forestry Board, presiding officer; address of welcome, Herbert P. Keller, mayor of St. Paul; "What the Forest Service Does to Prevent Fires," H. S. Graves, Chief Forester of the United States; "The Forest Fire Patrol System of the Western States," E. T. Allen, forester Western Forestry and Conservation Association; "Forest Protection in Canada," R. H. Campbell, forester, Dominion of Canada; "Why Our Forests Burn," Filbert E. Roth, professor of Forestry, University of Michigan; "Forest Protective Legislation Proposed by the State of Wisconsin," E. M. Griffith, state forester, Wisconsin; "Minnesota's Forest Fire Warden System," C. C. Andrews, Forestry Commissioner, Minnesota.

Sessions of December 7.

"The Interest of the Railroads in Protecting the Forests," R. H. Aishton, vice president, Chicago & Northwestern railroad; "The Interest of the Lumbermen in Forest Fire Protection," Thornton A. Green, Ontonagon, Mich.; "Legal Questions Involved in Forest Fire Laws," W. B. Douglas of the Minnesota Forestry Board; "Fire Protection on the Minnesota State Reservations," Prof. E. G. Cheyney, Minnesota Forestry School; Discussion of the Michigan forest fire laws, led by Charles W. Garfield, president of the Michigan Forestry Association. Discussion of Wisconsin's proposed forest fire warden system, William M. Bray, chairman committee of forestry, Assembly, Wisconsin legislature. Discussion of the forest fire protective laws proposed by the Minnesota Forestry Board, John Lind, member Minnesota's forestry school.

W. B. Douglas, former attorney general of Minnesota, has outlined amendments to the state forestry laws for the prevention of fires. He says many fires have been caused by the neglect of railroads to clear their right of way, that spark arresters should be placed on locomotives and that there should be a law against the building of camp fires between the dates of April 1 and November 10. These suggestions, it is believed, will call for a protest from the railroads and it is expected that the conference will be "hot" in keeping with the subjection under discussion.

NOTED JURIST DEAD.

Judge Crosby of Hastings Ends Useful Career.

Hastings. — Judge F. M. Crosby presiding over the first judical district for thirty-eight years, a record without parallel in Minnesota, died suddenly at his home here at the age of 80 years.

While he had been indisposed several days, his illness was not considered serious and his death was entirely unexpected and came as a shock to the community.

At the fall election in 1871 Mr. Crosby was elected judge of the first judicial district and entered upon his duties in January, 1872. He was reelected to the office in 1878, 1884, 1890, 1896, 1902, and 1908. Prior to the beginning of this long term of service he was judge of probate for two years, of Dakota county.

Judge Crosby was born in Wilmington, Vt., Nov. 13, 1830, and was brought up on a farm in that town. He was the son of Eliel Crosby and Thankful Allen, who were of Massachusetts ancestry. He was educated in the public schools of Wilmington and at Mount Cesar seminary at Swansey, N. H. He taught school and represented Wilmington in the Vermont legislature in 1855 and 1856.

He studied law in the offices of Oscar L. Shafter at Wilmington, and Daniel Roberts at Manchester, Vt., and was admitted to the bar at Bennington, Vt., in December, 1855. He removed to Hastings in 1858.

Descendant of Men of '76.

Judge Crosby was a lineal descendant of Stephen Forbes and Ebenezer Allen, Massachusetts revolutionary soldiers, and was a former president of the Minnesota society of the Sons of the American Revolution. He was also a member of the Society of Colonial Wars.

Judge Crosby's cast of mind and clearness of apprehension were strikingly displayed in his conduct of cases tried to a jury. His aim in these cases was to dispense with everything that might befog the jurors or distract their attention from the issues which they were called upon to try.

His charge to the jury was generally brief, concise and at the same time exhaustive. A jury in Judge Crosby's court seldom failed to understand the charge or to re-enter the court for further instructions.

Long and Rare Experience.

Judge Crosby was an upright and impartial judge and an eminent and patriotic citizen. His ideals were ever high, his influence with the bar and laity of his district always toward the upright, honest and impartial administration of the law. He was a firm believer in the participation of the citizen in the administration of the law, both as a grand and as a petit juryman, and this conviction he fortified by an experience at the bench and bar not equaled in length of time by any judge now living in the state.

BOY OF 8 SAVES BROTHER.

Drags Him Out of Twenty Feet of Water at Lake George.

St. Cloud.—Marcellus, 6-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Boerger, was saved from drowning by his brother Lawrence, 8 years old. The boys were crossing Lake George. A hole had been cut in the ice and the younger one slipped in feet first. He threw out his arms and caught himself on the edge of the ice while his brother pulled him out, [illegible]

ANTON SCHAEFER MUST GO.

Gov. Eberhart Announces Public Examiner Will Not Be Rappointed.

St. Paul. — The strenuous efforts of the friends of Anton Schaefer to secure his reappointment as public examiner will be of no avail. Governor Eberhart, before he left on his vacation, made the positive statement that Schaefer will not be retained after his term expires in January. Schaefer is the only state officer who has been an active candidate for reappointment. The state officers of the U. C. T., of which Schaefer is a member, have sent letters to the governor trying to persuade him to reappoint Schaefer.

Anton Schaefer.

With Schaefer's elimination from the race, Andrew E. Fritz, of St. Cloud, looms up as the probable man for the place.

CLOSE FIGHT FOR JUDGE.

Wins Seat By Only 81 Votes When 25,000 Were Polled.

Fergus Falls.—One of the most interesting election contests in this part of the state was that for the district judgeship for the Seventh judicial district, which is composed of Otter Tail, Stearns, Benton, Clay, Wadena, Todd, Becker, Mille Lacs, Douglas and Morrison counties. Six years ago J. W. Mason ran against Judge Baxter and was defeated by 125 votes. This year Mr. Mason, who lives in this city, was again a candidate against C. M. Johnston of Detroit for the Republican nomination. The earlier reports indicated Mr. Mason's nomination, but a few scattering precincts that came in at the close changed the outcome and gave the nomination to Mr. Johnston.

C. A. Nye of Moorhead secured the Democratic nomination without a contest, Judge Baxter having decided to retire on account of advanced age, and the contest at the general election was between Mr. Nye and Mr. Johnston. The earlier reports indicated Mr. Nye's election by from 800 to 1,000. At noon Saturday a report was received that the official count in Todd county gave Johnston a majority of 699, whereas the earlier reports had been that he had carried the county by only 400. Then the news was received that Nye's majority in Stearns was 2,014 instead of 2,114, as had been reported. Late in the afternoon official returns were received from all except one county, and in this one the auditor had carefully added the votes. The result was that Nye's majority is whittled down to 81 in a contest in which over 25,000 votes were cast on the judgeship.

DAIRYMEN PLAN MEETING.

Big Convention Will Be Held in Litchfield January 17 to 20.

Litchfield.—W. F. Schilling of Northfield, president, and F. D. Currier of Nicollet, secretary, of the Minnesota State Dairymen's association, were in this city making preliminary arrangements for the anual convention to be held here Jan. 17, 18, 19 and 20.

They stated that this meeting will be the largest in the history of the association. The state membership now exceeds over one thousand enthusiastic dairymen who are greatly interested in the future development of the dairy industry.

The program at this meeting will include some of the best speakers and practical workers in the business. A new feature will be a livestock exhibition, public judging and educational contests.

BEMIDJI BREWERY CLOSED.

Federal Agents Threaten to Dump Liquor Shipments Into Street.

Duluth. — Owing to the recent federal order prohibiting liquor in territory covered by Indian treaty the brewery at Bemidji has been closed, according to August Fitger, president of the Fitger Brewing Company, of this city.

There are three other breweries in the sixteen counties affected which, Mr. Fitger says, will be closed soon. Shipments of liquor to that territory are being refused by railroads and express companies.

CLOQUET HUNTERS LUCKY.

Many Deer Bagged and No Accidents Reported.

Cloquet.—Within the last week about 150 deer were brought in over the Duluth & Northeastern, a logging road which passes through the heart of the hunting grounds north of here. Local nimrods say there are more deer in the woods this year than for many seasons past, due probably to the forest fires farther north. As yet no accidents have been reported.

The DAIRY

DEVICE FOR MILKING COWS

Apparatus Arranged to Give as Near Perfect Imitation of Suckling Calf as Is Possible.

The illustration shows a pulsating device that has been devised to give as perfect an imitation of the suckling operations of a calf as possible. The pulsator is connected between the service and pump pipes of the milking apparatus, and is provided with a valve subject to the drawing force or partial vacuum of the system. A controller, provided with connections for effecting the movement of this valve, cuts off and opens the air communication, thus providing pulsations.

TO MAKE SUPERIOR BUTTER

Several Essential Suggestions for Dairymen That Insure Success in Quality and Flavor.

(By BESSIE L. PUTNAM.)

Butter of the best quality is obtained only when the cream is churned twice a week, though a product of fair quality may be secured from a weekly churning if extra care is taken of the cream during the gathering process.

It must be kept in a well ventilated cellar or room free from objectionable odor. If vegetables are kept in the same compartment see to it that there are no decaying members among them. Cabbage is especially prone to affect the flavor of milk or butter.

If you use ensilage never feed the silage until after the milking is done and the milk cared for. Milk readily absorbs odors and the butter will be of inferior quality as a result.

Always scald pails, strainers and separators in fall and winter, with as much care as in midsummer. Because the milk does not quickly sour is no reason why vigilance in this direction should be relaxed. The bitter odor is bound to creep in unless this detail is carefully attended to.

If the butter is hard to come keep the cream in a warm room 12 hours before churning. This is much more satisfactory than putting in hot water to raise the temperature of the cream.

When packing butter away, scald all the crocks and pails thoroughly. One that has had rancid butter in can seldom be cleansed sufficiently to keep butter well afterward; though if it is necesary to use such a crock, perhaps the best method of sweetening it is to fill it with clay for a short time. This soil has the power to draw out objectionable flavors as nothing else can do.

When packing butter for the winter months always use the best of salt, and cover with a cloth well sprinkled with salt. Avoid coloring material.

Strive to keep the cream at the proper temperature before and during the process of churning and artificial tints will not be required.

More butter is spoiled by being over, rather than under-worked.

Don't churn when you are cooking onions and then be surprised if the butter is "off." If the process is carried on in any part of the kitchen it is necessary to have the air freed from other odors at the time.

The Size of the Silo.

The size of the silo should, of course, depend upon the number of cattle to be kept. The diameter should be such that a layer of at least one and one-half inches will be taken off the top daily, in feeding, to insure fresh silage, as it spoils if left exposed to the air more than 24 hours.

A cow will eat about one cubic foot or about 40 pounds a day. At this rate, to feed cattle six months, the diameter of a 30-foot silo should be such as to allow about five square feet of surface for each cow. Two small silos are better than one large one, because the silage will always be in better condition as it is used off the top faster.

Forage Figures in the Profits.

In the production of milk and cream on the farm the farmer seldom stops to consider that there should be placed a value on the forage which the cows consume when on pasture, or that the labor necessary to feed, milk and properly care for the cows, and the milk should be considered as an expense. On this account, too often the farmer fails to fully understand the actual cost of his butter when ready for market.

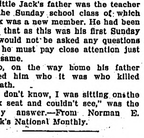
PUT 'EM TO SLEEP.



Novelist—When I'm writing a novel, I lose considerable sleep over it.

Critic—Oh! well, what's your loss is your readers' gain.

He Couldn't See.

Little Jack's father was the teacher of the Sunday school class of which Jack was a new member. He had been told that as this was his first Sunday he would not be asked any questions but he must pay close attention just the same.

So, on the way home his father asked him who it was who killed Goliath.

"I don't know, I was sitting on the back seat and couldn't see," was the ready answer.—From Norman E. Mack's National Monthly.

The Winning Candidate.

Two candidates for the same office came into a certain town one day. The one called at a house where a little girl came to the door. Said he: "Sissie, will you please bring me a glass of water?" Having brought the water, he gave her some candy and asked: "Did the man ahead of me give you candy?" "Yes, sir." Then he gave her a nickel and said: "Did he give you money?" "Yes, sir; he gave me ten cents." Then, picking her up, he kissed her and said: "Did he kiss you?" "Yes, sir, and he kissed mamma, too!"

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

John W. Eastman's sudden death on November 16th, came as a surprise to the newspaper fraternity, with whom he stood very high, both as a writer and a good fellow. His death will be a searious loss to the city of Thief River Falls, as we do not know that we ever met a newspaper man that was so loyal and devoted to the interests of his home city as John W. Eastman. Although fate seemed to decree since our residence in Red Lake county that Bro. Eastman and us have been of opposite views on a number of public questions, yet we were personal friends and about the first place we called at when we visited Thief River Falls was his office, and it is hard for us to realize that we shall meet him no more.

Senator LaFollett says, that the people were only rebukeing the republican party at the last election, but it looks to us like a democrat land slide.

There is no question of doubt that the democratic party will elect the next president. The floating voters have decided for a change.

Always Answered.

Children often are highly logical, though not quite in the adult manner. They attain conclusions by those processes of "pure reason" which, being quite unbiased by the opinions of others, sometimes result in startling truths.

Almost everybody, for instance, has heard of the little lad who, listening to the questions of an irreligious friend of the family as to what would happen supposing that one good Christian should pray for an east and another for a west wind at sea, innocently answered that of course there'd be an awful tempest, but not every one has heard of the equally pertinent and naive solution recently offered by a thoughtful youngster for the ever perplexing problem of "Are prayers answered?"

The child was talking with another, who asked the vexed and puzzling question, explaining at the same time that he didn't believe that prayers were answered, because he never got anything he asked for.

"You don't pray for the right things," answered little Mr. Wiseman. "Of course all prayers are answered, but sometimes the answer is 'Yes' and sometimes it's 'No.'"—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Greatest Historian.

By common consent the greatest of all historians in Thucydides, the Greek contemporary of Pericles and author of the history of the Peloponnesian war. One of the greatest tributes that can be paid to him is that, according to the estimate of a very able critic, we have a more exact account of a long and eventful period by Thucydides than we have of any period in modern history, equally long and eventful, and yet all this is compressed into a single volume. For concise, vigorous and yet intense presentation Thucydides has never been equaled. He is easily the king of historians.—New York American.

It Did.

"Do you know anything, doctor," said Mrs. Finnikin, "that will put a little color into my cheeks? I am so dreadfully pale."

"Well, madam," replied Dr. Blunt, "perhaps if I tell you that you have a hole in your stocking about the size of a quarter it may have the desired effect."

Table All Right.

"Do they have a good table?" asks the prospective guest.

"It is first rate," answers the man who has just returned, "solid oak, with heavy legs and a polished top."—Judge.

A Question of Time.

"Why did you deliberately make an enemy of your old friend Jinks?"

"Because he is to be married next month."—Lippincott's.

First Minister—You look tired. Have you been working hard?

Second Minister—Yes. My congregation says my sermons are too long, and I'm busy trying to write shorter [illegible]

Played Them Both Ways.

The French comedian Perlet was extraordinarily thin. A physician recommended him to try some bath in the Pyrenees, so he betook himself to the mineral springs, where he bathed unremittingly, but all in vain; he did not increase in size. "Patience," urged the doctor. "There is nothing like our baths for making people fat." One day while Perlet was waiting philosophically in his bath for an embonpoint which never came he heard a conversation in the next room, from which his own was divided by only a thin partition and which was occupied by an enormous woman, fat as the Hottentot Venus. "Doctor," said she, "I am getting tired of this." "Why?" asked the Aesculapius. "I have been here two months." "Well?" "Well, I am as enormous as I was when I came." "A little patience, madame," urged the doctor. "There is nothing like our baths for making people thin." Perlet, hearing these words, sprang out of his bath, dressed, rushed home to his hotel, ordered his bill and left for Paris by the next train.—Argonaut.

A Simple Life.

"And what," inquired the visitor, who was "being nice" to little Bobbie, "are you going to do when you grow up?"

"Be a business man," responded Robert, "like father. He took me down to his office last week, and I'm going to work like him and have a good time."

"And what are you going to do in business?" pursued the visitor.

"Going to do just like dad," repeated the youngster—"catch the train every morning and when I get to the office light a big cigar and sit down at my desk and say there's so much work to do it's no use beginning till after lunch, and then go out with another big man and eat and eat till I can't eat any more, and then go back to business and ask everybody else why the work ain't done, and then get so mad because nobody does anything that I'll go home early and be so tired I can't do a thing except read the paper and smoke more big cigars and swear."—Pearson's.

Florists' Jargon.

The florists have a trade jargon of their own. When a man who grows flowers for a living rattles off something like "paper whites, valleys and Romans" the confused layman has to stop to think what the jumble of words means. It is only the trade way of saying paper white narcissus, lily of the valley and Roman hyacinth. Likewise "mum" is their word for chrysanthemum, and time and space are likewise saved by saying "cyp" instead of cypripedium. So bridesmaid roses are "maids." American Beauties are "beauties." Perle du Jardin becomes "perle" and is pronounced pearl, while Souvenir du President Carnot is reduced to its last word, just as those other illustrious French rose names, General Jacqueminot and Marechal Niel, where shortened to "Jack" and "Niel" in the heyday of their glory.—New York Press.

A Locomotive's Breathing.

The "breathing" of a locomotive—that is to say, the number of puffs given during a journey depends upon the circumstances of its driving wheels and their speed. No matter what the rate of speed may be, for every one round of the driving wheels a locomotive will give four puffs—two out of each cylinder, the cylinders being double. If the average circumference of the driving wheel is twenty feet and the speed per hour fifty miles, a locomotive will give, going at express speed, 880 puffs per minute, 52,800 puffs per hour and 1,056 puffs per mile.—London Standard.

Why He Applauded.

"Are you fond of music?" asked a stranger of the young man at the concert who was applauding vigorously after a pretty girl had sung a song in a very painful way.

"Not particularly," replied the young man, frankly, "but I am extremely fond of the musician."

The Helmet That Fell.

Roquelaure, the deformed jester of Louis XIV., contrived to get out of many a scrape by his ready wit. One day he went to the king to ask his pardon for having struck off the helmet of one of his sentinels, who had failed to give him the military salute. Louis, who knew his man, wondered that Roquelaure should crave his pardon for so venial an offense and said to him, "This is a serious matter, Roquelaure, but I will pardon you this time."

It afterward turned out that the soldier's head was in the helmet and fell with it to the ground.—Argonaut.

The Astonishing Part.

Lord Townshend at the battle of Dettingen was standing quite near a drummer boy whose brains were dashed out by a cannon ball. His lordship gazed on the horrible spectacle for some moments in silence.

At last an old officer spoke up and said: "Why is your lordship surprised? Such things must happen in war."

"I know it," was the reply, "but what astonishes me is that a boy with so much brains should be here at all."

A Bright Outlook.

"Do you—er—do you—think, Miss Dolly, that you will be—er—engaged next Thursday evening?" asked Tommy very bashfully.

"Well, really, Mr. Tommy," replied Dolly, "I don't know, but if you can get up spunk enough between now and then to do your share I think there's a fair prospect that I shall be [illegible]

HORSE SWAPPING

In the Good Old Days It Was Sport, Not Commercialism.

A MAN TOOK A CHANCE THEN.

He Didn't Ask For a Written Guarantee That the Animal Was Sound, and if He Got Stuck He Bided His Time to Pass Along the Prize.

"I have been reading that David Harum story," said the ancient livery man when his cronies were comfortably seated in his little office. "A friend told me that story was the last word on horse trading, but the man who wrote it didn't understand the spirit of the game at all. David Harum would have been skinned out of his teeth if he had blown into any western town in the palmy days of horse trading twenty-five or thirty years ago.

"I tell you, my friends, all the dead game sports are asleep with their fathers. Nobody is willing to take a chance nowadays. If a man buys a cigar he wants a bill of sale with it. The other day a cheap skate pestered me a whole afternoon talking about buying a horse. He tried out all the nags in the barn and finally decided that the glass eyed bay would suit him. And he actually wanted a written guarantee that the horse was sound! A written guarantee! No, gentlemen, I am not joking. That bald headed travesty on a man actually asked for such a document. I regarded it as an insult, and after I had rebuked him they had to pour four buckets of water over him before he recovered.

"In the good old days horse trading was a game, not a commercial transaction. If a man wasn't willing to take the chances when he went trading he was advised to try some other line of business. Many and many a time I had the harpoon administered to me. One day Major Charlie Slaughter drove to my barn.

"'I have quite a neat package of horseflesh here,' said the major, 'and I have a sort of presentiment that he can travel a few lines when the wind is blowing in the right direction.'

"His horse was a handsome roan, a regular peacock for style, with his head away up in the air so you'd need a stepladder to see if he had a star on his forehead. And the way he hit the road was a sin. Talk about gaited horses! That roan handled his legs as though he had taken sparring lessons. Now, my weak point in the horse business is that when I want a certain nag the worst way I can't conceal the fact. I just can't sleep or eat my victuals until that horse is in my barn with a new halter on him. The major was wise to my weakness.

"'It's no use, Jake,' said the major. 'This horse isn't on my swapping list. Every roan hair on him just suits me, and I'd be a chump to let him go.'

"Well, of course I got the roan all right. The major was just stalling. And I gave him the biggest trade you ever heard of—gave him a matched team and several bills for that galloping roan. And when I took the roan to the water trough for a drink I found that he couldn't lower his head. He had to carry it about ten feet in the air all the time, owing to some injury in his neck. He had to eat his baked [illegible] off a shelf and drink from a garden hose, and a man needed an aeroplane to put a bridle on him.

"Did I raise a fuss with the major? What sort of skate do you take me for? Next time I met him I told him I liked the roan better than any horse I ever saw. 'He isn't always rooting in the ground like a pig,' said I, 'and if you had told me about his patent dirigible neck I'd have given you $10 more.' We were sports in those days.

"One time the veterinary surgeon told me about a fine trotting horse in a town some distance away which had been deprived of its tail by a surgical operation. I went and looked at the horse. He was a perfect beauty and could trot like an avalanche. But he had just a stump of a tail, and the owner was ashamed to drive him, so I bought the critter for a song. I went to a lot of trouble having a tail made for him. It was a beautiful, flowing tail, a credit to the hairdresser's art. It was fixed to slip over the horse's stub tail and was then fastened to the crupper of the harness, and a man needed good eyes to see that it wasn't the real thing.

"The major had poor eyes, and when I took him for a drive behind that black trotter he simply had to be tied down to the seat he was so excited. He said he'd always wanted a horse with a tail like that. He had his own weakness. He couldn't pretend indifference when he wanted a thing the worst way, and he wanted that horse so bad that his hair was falling out. After a great deal of deliberation I issued my ultimatum.

"'I'll give you the horse, harness and buggy just as they stand,' said I, 'for your sorrel three-year-olds and $50.' Either of the sorrels was worth a herd of horses like the black.

"'It's a trade,' cried the major.

"Next morning the major came around to my barn all smiles. 'Ever since I was a child and quit playing with a rattle,' says he, 'I have wanted a horse with a detachable tail—a tail that a man could take off and use as a fly whisk or at a masked ball. I just wanted to pay you another 50 cents, so that when I meet you after this you can't say I took advantage of you in our trade yesterday.'

"Yes, there were real sports in those days."—Wall Street [illegible]

An Early Wall Paper.

On preparing a room in Bradbourne Hall, Derbyshire, in 1882, I found, partly covered by an old oak cupboard, considerable remains of quite early eighteenth century wall paper, of pale green tint, with a flowing pattern in darker color on it. This paper was made in squares of about twenty inches, and I was able to rescue two or more complete pieces. It had been printed on rather thick paper from woodcut blocks, and each square was nailed up with coarse iron tacks about one and a half inches apart, each tack being run through squares or washers of brown leather, so that both tack heads and washers showed all around each square of paper. It is possible that this wall paper was of late seventeenth century date. Bradbourne Hall, in the lower peak, is a picturesque house, almost unaltered, of the time of James I., having been then fashioned from the canonical house of the Augustins of Dunstable. It was just the place—"far from the madding crowd"—where curious details of domestic decorations would survive.—London Notes and Queries.

The Cynic's Point of View.

Of course we all like to know that our enemies are vulnerable, but it is only the cynical elect who can appreciate with fine epicurean fastidiousness the glorious revelation that their friends are human after all. And it is not only the weakness of those near and dear to us, but their misfortunes and annoyances, which give a thrill of illicit joy to those honest confessionists who can look in their own hearts. I once heard a young mother say that there was only one thing which gave her greater pleasure than hearing that the children of her friends were sick and that was to hear that they were bad. No one but a brom-idiot (to borrow the excellent root with which Mr Gelett Burgess has enriched us) would think of condemning this young woman for being malicious or unkind. Misery is not the only human quality that loves company. Some of her distant relatives—Anxiety, Discouragement, Annoyance—are equally sociable.—Atlantic.

The Forbidden City.

Peking has been a city for something like 3,000 years, first as the capital of a small state, then destroyed, again rebuilt and finally molded into the form in which we now know it, with its Chinese, Tartar, Imperial and Forbidden cities, each with its inclosing wall. Nobody has ever yet attempted to tell the full tale of its intrigues, its cabals, plots and counterplots. Few know anything about them. No one person knows them all. If only the bricks that form the walls could find a tongue, if only the pavilions on the Coal Hill could produce the sights and sounds that have fallen to their lot to see and hear, there would doubtless be a tale to tell which might vie in interest and dramatic force with anything that ancient Rome or Babylon has given, even through the medium of fiction.—Shanghai Mercury.

Pensions From Napoleon.

Paris has a dozen old soldiers who draw pensions that come to them from the great Emperor Napoleon I. These are not heroes of his epoch, for the last of those died long years ago. But Napoleon by his will devised several millions of francs to his companions in arms, and this capital in default of heirs of the grand army was deposited in the public treasury. Today the revenue this fund produces is paid out in the form of pensions of 200 francs each to old soldiers in French territory, and Paris has twelve of these beneficiaries to whom at the first of the year these little pensions are remitted.—Paris Figaro.

A Wise Woman.

Mr. Snaggle (snappishly)—Don't be correcting that boy always, Sarah. Let nature take its course, won't you? Mrs. Snaggle (laying aside the shingle)—I'll do nothing of the sort, Mr. Snaggle. I don't intend that any woman shall have such a husband as I've got if I can prevent it.

A Paradoxical Reply.

"Doctor, do you think eyeglasses will alter my appearance?" inquired Mrs. Gunson anxiously.

"I shall at least expect them to improve your looks," replied the physician.—Lippincott's.

The Boy's Bit.

"You seem to have got your boys interested in mythology very nicely."

"Yes; I explained to them that Hercules held a championship."—Washington Herald.

Sure Test.

She—They held a mirror over her face to see if she was alive. I don't understand that. He—Why, you see if she was alive she'd open her eyes and look in it.

The Long Silence.

"Yes, we are pretty comfortably fixed here," admitted a veteran employee in the reading room of the Congressional library when a visitor envied him his soft berth and comfortable surroundings. "But there's one thing we long for—yes, thirst for with a burning thirst. That's noise—a real, nerve racking, ear splitting noise. The long hours of soft silence, the dead stillness of everything about, grows so oppressive that at times we could shriek out. We get into a sort of sickroom tiptoeing and a low tone of voice that finally degenerates into a whisper even at the [illegible]. Give us an occasional [illegible] falling [illegible]. Even a squalling baby would help some."—Washington Star.

Killing a Bull Without a Weapon.

Cayetano, a famous Spanish toreador, once was strolling across a meadow with a couple of friends when his attention was attracted by an old and infuriated bull which was galloping toward them with lowered head and erect tail. Cayetano had no weapon, not even a cane, but he seized a dust coat which one of his friends was carrying over his arm. As soon as the bull got close to them Cayetano bade his companions make their escape while he engaged the animal's attention. Using the coat as a capa, he drove the bull crazy with fury, stepping aside with the deftest agility at each of the animal's charges. In this manner he caused the bull to turn sharply in the midst of its onward rushes until finally an ominous crack was heard, and the bull fell in a heap, with its backbone broken by the sudden wrench given by the animal's abrupt swerve.

The Mississippi of Streets.

A street is like a river, with its human current carrying all manner of drift between its banks of residences or shops on either side. And if this simile be appropriate then New York's Broadway is the Mississippi of streets. Probably no other avenue in the world presents so many contrasts in the flotsam and jetsam it carries from Harlem to the Battery. Every type of humanity, uprooted saplings from farms and orchards, proud dolled craft in silks and satins, may be described in the surging mass. Banker and bootblack, the swaggering swell and the draggled derelict, walk shoulder to shoulder rush rather, for Broadway is a maelstrom, the embodiment of New York's bustle and hurry, the place where nothing [illegible] still. Richard Harding Davis once said that everybody [illegible] be trying to reach the bank to have a check cashed before [illegible].—George Bethel in Pittsburg Gazette Times.

At a fire recently a brave fireman came gasping and panting from the burning building with his beard and eyebrows singed in the flames. On opening the box it was found to contain six bottles of a new patent fire extinguisher.—Argonaut.

The Exclusiveness of Caste.

An English officer who some years ago was wounded in a battle in India and left lying all night among the native dead and wounded tells this story: "Next morning we spied a man and an old woman, who came to us with a basket and a pot of water, and to every wounded man she gave a piece of jowaree bread from the basket and a drink from her water pot. To us she gave the same, and I thanked heaven and her. But the Soobahdar was a high caste Rajput, and, as this woman was a Chumar, or of the lowest caste, he would receive neither water nor bread from her. I tried to persuade him to take it that he might live, but he said that in our state, with but a few hours more to linger, what was a little more or less suffering to us—why should he give up his caste for such an object? No; he preferred to die unpolluted."

THE WOMEN OF THE DIPLOMATIC CORPS

COUNT DE BUISSERET AND HIS WIFE

COUNT VON BERNSTORFF, HIS WIFE AND ONLY DAUGHTER

MADAME JUSSERAND

BARONESS HENGELMULLER AND HER HUSBAND

THE OPENING of the "official season" at our national capital finds in evidence a most interesting group of women as the mistresses of the principal homes in the official "foreign colony." The foreign colony is made up, it will be understood, of the families of those alien officials who are sent to this country to represent their respective sovereigns or governments. Time was when very few of these foreign ambassadors, ministers and secretaries of embassies and legations brought their wives and families to the United States when they were delegated to act as diplomatic agents on this side of the Atlantic, but with the increasing importance of the republic as a world power there has come a change, and now it is very unusual for one of these foreign statesmen to take up his abode here without bringing his entire household with him.

This season the diplomatic corps has a new dean or leader, and this brings a new occupant to the coveted post of foremost woman of the foreign contingent. The new dean is Baron Hengelmuller, the ambassador of Austria-Hungary. A diplomat must inevitably remain in the United States for some years ere he can advance to the position of dean, but the Hengelmullers have had an especially long tenure in the land of the free having been here for more than a dozen years. Consequently Baroness Hengelmuller is well known not only in most of our large cities, but in fashionable resorts such as Bar Harbor, Lenox and Hot Springs. She is a Polish woman and has become known for some of her fads, such as unique automobiles, fancy stationery and pet dogs.

The second most prominent place in the feminine roster of the diplomatic corps is held by an American woman, who is married to J. J. Jusserand, the ambassador of France to the United States. Mme. Jusserand, who is a very handsome woman, spent most of her early life in Paris, where her father was a banker, and in looks and dress she is much like the French women. Two interesting Russian women are to be found at the czar's branch office in Washington. They are Baroness Rosen and Baroness Elizabeth Rosen, the wife and daughter of Baron Rosen, the Russian ambassador. Two women also share the honors at the German embassy. Count von Bernstorff, alike to his fellow-envoy from France, has an American wife, and the daughter of the house, Countess Luise-Alexandra von Bernstorff, is as attractive as any American girl one could find in a day's journey, although withal possessed of the splendid complexion that is the common heritage of so many of the girls of the fatherland.

Yet another one of Miss Columbia's daughters who has a place of honor in this foreign community set down on American soil is the Countess de Buisseret, wife of the minister from Belgium, and Senora Dona Alicia Ward de Riano, the wife of the Spanish minister was Miss Alice Ward, a beautiful American girl, ere she wedded her Spanish lover after a long courtship, during which the course of true love did not always run smooth.

To many persons the greatest degree of interest and curiosity aroused by the women of the diplomatic corps attaches to the members of the fair sex who have accompanied to this western capital the statesmen from the Orient. Baroness Uchida, the wife of the Japanese ambassador, is a very attractive woman of her type and it is easy to believe that were she garbed in her native costume instead of in the clothing prescribed by American fashion, she would look for all the world like one of the fancy pictures of Japanese belles. The Chinese minister, Chang Yin Tang, has a wife, two daughters and a daughter-in-law in his household, and as Chang is a very wealthy man they are enabled to surround themselves with every luxury, including toilettes in accordance with the latest mode in the far east. Many people may be surprised to learn that there is an American woman in China's headquarters at Washington. She is Mrs. Yung Kwai, the wife of Yung Kwai, the secretary of the legation. She is a native of Springfield, Mass., and her husband has spent practically all the time since his marriage at the Chinese legation at Washington, so that she and her children have seen very little of the Celestial empire.

There are dozens of Spanish-speaking women in the diplomatic colony at Washington, because each of the Pan-American nations has its embassy or legation at Uncle Sam's base of operations. Senora Calvo, wife of the minister from Costa Rica, and their daughters have been residents of the United States for more than eleven years now, and some of the other women from Central and South America have been here for almost as long. Of the lesser European countries there are many fair representatives in the diplomatic circle, but in this sphere also the American woman has won her way by her beauty and cleverness, for Countess Moltke, the wife of the minister from Denmark, and Mme. Coromilias, the beautiful bride of the minister from Greece, are both natives of the United States. Even the secretary of the Persian legation, Mirza Ali Kuli Khan, has an American wife, who, like the Yankee woman at the Chinese legation, hails from New England.

A Point For Patricians

"I rented the first floor of a palace in Naples last year," said a globe trotter," and the owner of the palace, a Neapolitan count, lived on the top floor with his family. Every day I used to see one of this man's servants trotting up the grand stairway with a pair of carriage doors on his shoulders.

"Yankee-like, the carriage doors made me curious. I did some detective work, and what do you suppose I discovered? Well, sir, I discovered that the count shared a carriage with three other noblemen, and each owner, when he went driving, used his own doors, so as to sport his crest on the panels.

"The Neapolitan nobility are great for show. Every evening, in their handsome turnouts, with two men on the box, they glide elegantly through the steep and crooked streets of Naples. These turnouts used to impress me, but now, when I see them I smile and ask myself how many pairs of detached doors each carriage in the procession has."

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

For a Friend and One Other

By ANTOINETTE PATTERSON

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

Nichols pulled his hat well down to hide the worried look his face wore.

"It's a pretty piece of business," he said to himself. "I'm convinced the woman's an adventuress, but how am I to find out, and Cyril getting every day more bewitched? If only she claimed some civilized country—but Poland, where I haven't a friend—or even an enemy!"

John Nichols and Cyril Thornton were close friends. Nichols, much the elder, and Cyril's sister were to have been married, but she died.

Nichols was a lawyer from New York, and in the interest of a client was now in Los Angeles. Cyril, recovering from typhoid, had come with him for a quicker convalescence. Everything had been going on smoothly when their train met with an accident.

They had escaped injury and saved the life of a beautiful woman. The woman, whom Cyril thought the most charming he had ever seen, was very grateful, apparently very frank. Her name, she said, was Marie Laska; she had been a widow two years. Her father—and she said this with lowered voice—was deep in Polish politics. He had sent her away fearing she might come under suspicion. She never would have left him, but illness had made another northern winter dangerous, and she had taken a small house near Pasadena. She intended to live in retirement and have a complete rest before returning to Poland. But these two friends, they must come to see her whenever they could spare the time.

It was surprising how much time had been spared by both, for Nichols, unwilling that Cyril should spend days and evenings alone with the charming foreigner, found himself in Pasadena whenever his business would permit. This had been going on for a fortnight.

Walked Forlornly Home.

As a further complication, Cyril, just of age, would shortly be in possession of $25,000.

Nichols walked forlornly home and went to bed.

Next morning he showed Cyril a business letter requesting his presence in San Francisco on Wednesday. His friend, though decidedly adverse to any move, consented to go with him.

Cyril had promised to take Mme. Laska a song that morning, but while dressing to the whistled accompaniment of a Polish air, word came that she had a headache, so would he—and Mr. Nichols, too—come in the evening?

Mme. Laska was tying up a spray of white rose-tree when they arrived. She gave them each a hand in her pretty foreign way.

On a porch table was a half-burned cigarette. Nichols felt sure he detected the faintest aroma of a very fine cigar also.

The professional instinct was aroused. Mme. Laska had repeatedly said she knew no one in California but themselves. The cigar seemed to tell a different story.

Nichols threw his coat in a corner of the porch. In the pocket there was an important letter. If he forgot his coat he would have to come back for it—tonight—on account of leaving the next day.

Cyril pressed a guitar into Marie Laska's hands, seating himself where he could watch the singer's face. The boy was of a poetic nature, and here was everything to speak to it—the flowers, the music, that lovely face.

"Cyril," Nichols said after a time, "as we have a journey before us tomorrow we must say goodby."

"It will be lonely for a few days," he heard Marie Laska say to Cyril.

After bidding Cyril good night, Nichols took the car back to Pasadena. Later he walked toward Mme. Laska's house, and then, hearing Cyril's name, stopped.

A man was talking in English, presumably that the servants might not understand.

"Twenty-five thousand dollars will see our project through and help Poland to her own again. Young Thornton will have the money and you must get it—somehow. You are beautiful and still young, and can make a boy like that do anything."

Nichols knew he was listening to an unscrupulous fanatic. As for Marie, if a tool, she was a willing one.

Even as a lightning flash reveals in an instant miles of country and throws into relief the most prominent features until they are seen more clearly than ever before, so things revealed themselves to Nichols at this moment. Cyril should not marry Mme. Laska, or give up his money. One word from Nichols could fix all that. But if he spoke that word just now, while the boy was still dreaming dreams, would that nature ever be the same again? A sudden rude awakening has been the making of many a man, but it was borne in upon Nichols that it would not do for Cyril.

Nichols had deliberately listened. He now as deliberately went up the steps of the porch and faced the man and the woman sitting there.

"I have heard everything," he said quietly.

Marie's companion put his hand to his hip pocket.

"Don't do that," Nichols said with a little deprecating gesture. "I am worth more to you just now alive." Then he went to the end of the porch and picked up his coat.

"I came back for this," he said. "It has papers in the pockets which I shall want in San Francisco tomorrow."

The man and woman watched him curiously. He put on his coat; then he turned to the Pole.

"I will give you $5,000," he said, "for what in return I know you will do. My lawyer, Mr. Henry Stanton, in Los Angeles, will arrange all matters. In consideration of this money you will both leave Pasadena within two days—and the country in the shortest possible time. I will write this down," taking a pen and paper from his pocket, "so there can be no misunderstanding. If there should be I might feel bound to inform the Polish government that I have knowledge of a suspect."

Nichols stepped inside and drew up the document in legal form. The man and woman both signed. Then he turned to Marie.

"Write," he said, "what I tell you." She obeyed silently.

He then told them that this note should be mailed the following night to Cyril at the hotel in Los Angeles.

He turned to go. "You believe that I will keep my end of the contract," he said, "and I that you will keep yours. Good-by." He raised his hat to Marie Laska.

"A little while," he said musingly on the way back to his hotel, "and the boy will have learned discrimination instead of distrust, and the fine edge which is so a part of him will still be there. Ah, Nellie, Nellie, it was something I could do for you, too, dear!"

On their return to Los Angeles they went first to Cyril's rooms. There was a note in Mme. Laska's handwriting.

Nichols walked toward the window. He was feeling keenly for the boy as he went over in memory each word he had dictated.

"When you return," it ran, "I shall have left California. I have only time to write you a few lines, for word has come which takes me immediately to Poland. My country has need of me, and still more a man of whom you have often made me think, and with whose fate it now seems best I should unite my own. For my father's sake I shall travel under an assumed name. I shall always think of you, and Mr. Nichols with the greatest kindness and gratitude. Farewell. MARIE LASKA."

Cyril read the letter twice and then, after a moment's silence, handed it to Nichols.

Nichols saw there had been no shock that would be serious.

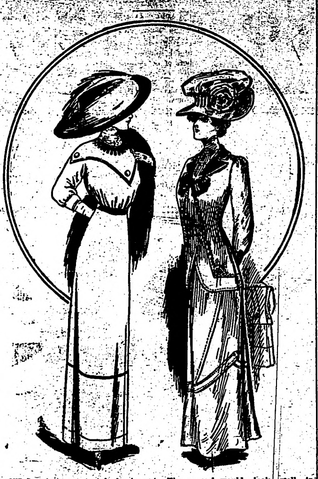
"Jack," he said, "it's all over—my dream. She was a star too high for me to hope to reach, but I want you to see this letter, for you never rightly understood her. She was so fine and noble and would risk even her life for her country and for her love. I had thought at times she cared for me, but it was just that I reminded her of that other man."

Cyril's eyes had the trusting look of Eleanor's—his dead sister—at that moment and John Nichols turned away his head.

Dickens Read in All Countries.

Dickens' public passes beyond the bounds of our empire. There is America—with its 85,300,000 of people and its widespread, its fervent regard for Dickens. There is France, where Daudet could write: "Little Nell and Paul Dombey came to me as a revelation of purity and innocence." There is Germany, where, as Bunson said: "Dickens compels tears and laughter amongst Germans as amongst his own people." There is Russia, where Tolstoy relates that he found the "Christmas Carol" in the cabins of the humblest serfs, and where "Oliver Twist" and "Nicholas Nickleby" are read in seven different translations in the realms of the czar.—The Dickensian.

Dress and Costume



THE first is a smart style for in or outdoor wear; it is made up in terra-cotta face cloth and has a plain skirt trimmed with two rows of Russia braid at about the knees and one at the top of hem.

Silk is used for the yoke which is cut in points on shoulders and at front and back; this is edged with braid and has a button sewn in each point. The chemisette is of ninon. The sleeves are cut in one with bodice; they are set to a band below elbow.

Hat of black velvet trimmed with large white wings, in the prevailing mode.

Materials required: 5 yards cloth 46 inches wide, 4 buttons, 1 dozen yards Russia braid.

The second would look well in serge; the skirt is made with a slanting wrapped seam down front on upper part; the lower is quite plain and is joined to the upper under a material strap.

The semi-fitting coat has the fronts arranged in two parts; the inner or side front is braided at the edge, the center fronts then wrap over one another in a slant and are continued to panel at back, this forming the lower edge of sides. Satin forms collar and revers; a bow is worn where fastening comes.

Hat of silk with a large rose at the side.

Materials required: 6 yards serge 46 inches wide, 3 buttons, ½ dozen yards braid, ½ yard satin.

TABLE LINEN FOR A BRIDE

Some Few Things Worth Remembering in Connection With the Dower Chest.

The girl who is starting a dower chest will be particularly interested in her table linen.

She may well choose either Dresden or Irish linen or both, as both are said to wear indefinitely. Where one buys the napery in sets, these include cloths of two yards wide by two and a half and three yards long, and napkins of breakfast and dinner size.

If possible, buy these sets in their natural color, and bleach them in the sun. Chemicals used for whitening are likely to destroy the texture of the linen. Luncheon sets come in both Irish and Dresden woven napery in all white.

The newest luncheon sets, however, are made from Austrian linen, and consist of a round cloth and 12 napkins. Each piece carries a damask thistle design in pale green, maize, blue or rose on a white ground.

Short Trains for Dinner Gowns.

While skirts continue to be very short in almost all day dresses, the couturieres have had to lend ear to the cry of the women who absolutely refuse to give up trains in their evening gowns. I have seen several very smart dinner dresses lately cut with short, slightly pointed trains, and I have no doubt that there will be others before the winter is over. One that was worn recently was of ochre-colored satin, but the rather vivid yellow was very much subdued by an overdress of dark aluminium-gray net. The satin underskirt had the short train I spoke of, but the tunic, of course, was short. It was gathered in a little at the top and its waist line was raised somewhat above its natural position. The bottom of the tunic dropped into points at the sides and was hemmed with a deep band of the yellow satin, which drew it in a trifle without giving it any appearance of awkwardness or constraint.—The Delineator.

A Muff Holder.

Reverse the wires of a coat hanger, making them curve upward instead of downward. (One can get wire and press it into shape if no hanger is available.) Make a long casing of satin ribbon and slip it over the wires until it is gathered neatly, then fasten with ribbons.

This will conveniently hold the muff and keep it in shape, and the fur collar can be thrown over the other side.

Newest Letter Paper.

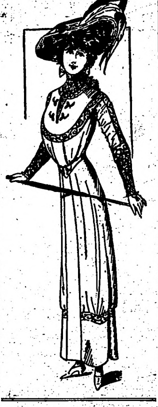
Some of the prettiest note paper has a very narrow border of blue, pink, gray, lavender or red, and one initial at the top set in a ring of color the exact shade as the border. Correspondence cards also are thus bordered and are very pretty.

SMART FOR THE AFTERNOON

Blue Eolinne the Best Material for This Exceedingly Effective Dress.

A very smart little afternoon dress in nattier blue eolinne is shown here. The skirt has a panel front and a plain piece round the lower part of sides and back; this is headed by a band of embroidery, the slight fullness of the upper part being gathered to it.

The bodice is cut round at the neck, the opening continued with a deep point in front to show a yoke of lace embroidery, and buttons with cord loops form the trimming.



The under sleeves are of lace to match the yoke.

Tagal hat to match the dress, trimmed with velvet and feathers.

Materials required for the dress: six yards 46 inches wide, one and one-half yard lace, about four and one-half yards trimming.

For Paper Patterns.

Get a large Japanese lantern, hang it in the sewing room or any other convenient place and use it to hold light paper patterns. A lantern is durable and will hold a great many patterns.

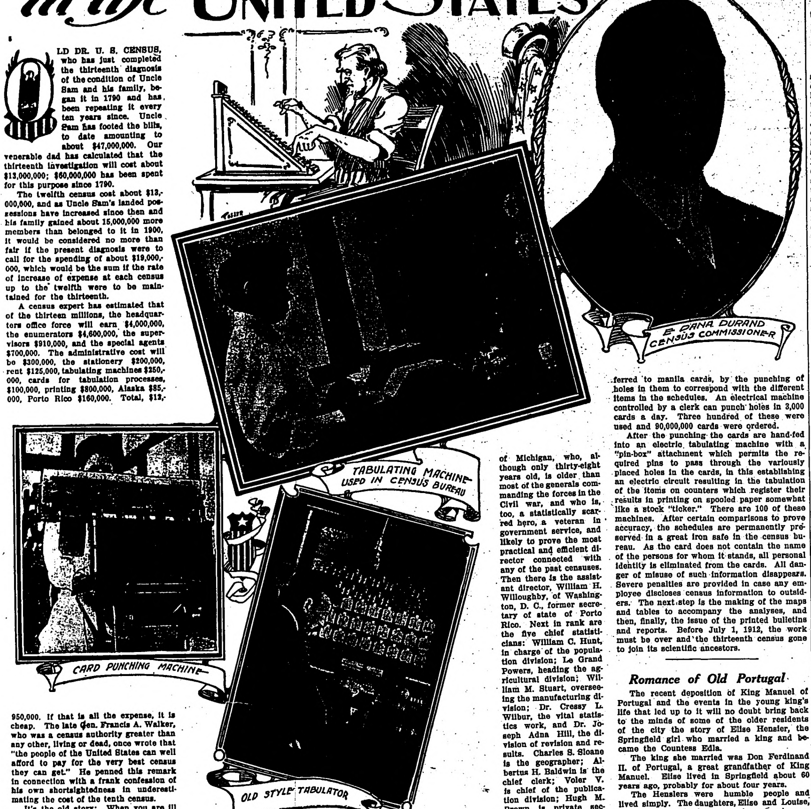
COUNTING NOSES in the UNITED STATES



TABULATING MACHINE USED IN CENSUS BUREAU

CARD PUNCHING MACHINE

OLD STYLE TABULATOR

E. DANA DURAND CENSUS COMMISSIONER

OLD DR. U. S. CENSUS, who has just completed the thirteenth diagnosis of the condition of Uncle Sam and his family, began it in 1790 and has been repeating it every ten years since. Uncle Sam has footed the bills, to date amounting to about $47,000,000. Our venerable dad has calculated that the thirteenth investigation will cost about $13,000,000; $60,000,000 has been spent for this purpose since 1790.

The twelfth census cost about $13,000,000, and as Uncle Sam's landed possessions have increased since then and his family gained about 15,000,000 more members than belonged to it in 1900, it would be considered no more than fair if the present diagnosis were to call for the spending of about $19,000,000, which would be the sum if the rate of increase of expense at each census up to the twelfth were to be maintained for the thirteenth.

A census expert has estimated that of the thirteen millions, the headquarters office force will earn $4,000,000, the enumerators $4,600,000, the supervisors $910,000, and the special agents $700,000. The administrative cost will be $300,000, the stationery $200,000, rent $125,000, tabulating machines $250,000, cards for tabulation processes, $100,000, printing $800,000, Alaska $85,000, Porto Rico $160,000. Total, $12,950,000. If that is all the expense, it is cheap. The late Gen. Francis A. Walker, who was a census authority greater than any other, living or dead, once wrote that "the people of the United States can well afford to pay for the very best census they can get." He penned this remark in connection with a frank confession of his own shortsightedness in underestimating the cost of the tenth census.

It's the old story: When you are ill get the best doctor you can afford.

The comparative cheapness with which the thirteenth census has been taken was largely due to Director E. Dana Durand's economical methods, to the introduction of semi-automatic electrical card-punching, tabulating and sorting machines, and to the inheritance of wisdom from the experience gained by the permanent census bureau. During the term of the latter the methods of inquiry, tabulation and compilation have been greatly improved, both in accuracy and in economy. Millions will be saved.

Mr. Durand is responsible for many of the new methods to increase statistical accuracy at every step of the census taking and to decrease the per capita cost of the enumeration. The card-punching, tabulating, and sorting machinery is the invention of a census mechanical expert and the patent rights belong to Uncle Sam. The machines are novel in plan and design, are of greater speed and efficiency than those they superseded, and can be built and operated at a large saving of money as compared with previous expenditures for this purpose.

Other money-saving features are the elimination of the vital-statistics inquiry from the work of the decennial census, as it belongs to the permanent branch of the United States census; the reduction in the number of schedules, the piece-price method of paying for machine work, the omission of the hand, household and neighborhood industries from the manufactures branch of the census, and the reduction of the size and number of copies of the final report.

Congress limited the thirteenth census to four general subjects—population, agriculture, manufactures, and mines and quarries. The director is authorized to determine the form and subdivision of inquiries. The inquiry as to population relates to the date April 15, 1910; that as to agriculture concerns the farm operations during 1909 and calls for an inventory of farm equipment April 15, 1910; that relative to manufactures and quarries is for 1909.

The enumeration carried only the population and agriculture schedules April 15, 1910. Special agents were sent out with the schedules for the manufactures, mines and quarries data. There were fully 65,000 enumerators, of whom about 45,000 carried both the population and agriculture schedules, as it is estimated that there are now fully 7,000,000 separate farms in America, with farmers numbering well up into a score of millions. In 1910 there were many more billions of dollars of fixed capital invested in agriculture than there were in manufactures, strange as it may seem. And the farmer is getting better off all the time; his mortgage indebtedness is decreasing fast; his taxation is small as compared with the urbanite's burden, and he has taken to automobile riding on a large scale.

Census taking every ten years is a tremendous task. It is the greatest single operation undertaken by Uncle Sam, with the exception of the Panama canal work and the assembling of an army in time of war. The American census is the largest, costliest and most accurate of any taken by the civilized nations. Its methods are the most modern and its equipment the most complete. The census bureau force comprises, first, Director E. Dana Durand of Michigan, who, although only thirty-eight years old, is older than most of the generals commanding the forces in the Civil war, and who is, too, a statistically scarred hero, a veteran in government service, and likely to prove the most practical and efficient director connected with any of the past censuses. Then there is the assistant director, William H. Willoughby, of Washington, D. C., former secretary of state of Porto Rico. Next in rank are the five chief statisticians: William C. Hunt, in charge of the population division; Le Grand Powers, heading the agricultural division; William M. Stuart, overseeing the manufacturing division; Dr. Cressy L. Wilbur, the vital statistics work, and Dr. Joseph Adna Hill, the division of revision and results. Charles S. Sloane is the geographer; Albertus H. Baldwin is the chief clerk; Voler V. is chief of the publication division; Hugh M. Brown is private secretary to the director; Robert M. Pindell, is the appointment Clerk; George Johnnes is the disbursing officer, and C. W. Spicer is the mechanical expert. In addition to these are the chiefs of the divisions under the chief statistician.

There are about 750 permanent clerks and 3,000 temporary clerks, etc. The supervisors numbered 330 and they employed and directed the 65,000 enumerators. About 1,000 chief special agents and assistant special agents. The supervisors also employed 1,000 clerks, 500 special agents and 4,000 interpreters to assist them in the direction of the enumerators.

The data relating to population is transferred to manila cards, by the punching of holes in them to correspond with the different items in the schedules. An electrical machine controlled by a clerk can punch holes in 3,000 cards a day. Three hundred of these were used and 90,000,000 cards were ordered.

After the punching the cards are hand-fed into an electric tabulating machine with a "pin-box" attachment which permits the required pins to pass through the variously placed holes in the cards, in this establishing an electric circuit resulting in the tabulation of the items on counters which register their results in printing on spooled paper somewhat like a stock "ticker." There are 100 of these machines. After certain comparisons to prove accuracy, the schedules are permanently preserved in a great iron safe in the census bureau. As the card does not contain the name of the persons for whom it stands, all personal identity is eliminated from the cards. All danger of misuse of such information disappears. Severe penalties are provided in case any employee discloses census information to outsiders. The next step is the making of the maps and tables to accompany the analyses, and then, finally, the issue of the printed bulletins and reports. Before July 1, 1912, the work must be over and the thirteenth census gone to join its scientific ancestors.

Masterpiece of Glass Work

In the British museum, in London, on exhibition, is the Portland vase, the masterpiece of ancient glasswork. A chance discovery led to the rescue of this magnificent urn from the grave, where it had lain for hundreds of years, hidden and unknown. The vase was found early in the seventeenth century by some laborers, who, digging on a hillock in the neighborhood of Rome, broke into a small vault.

On further examination it revealed a suite of three sepulchral chambers. In the largest room they found a finely sculptured sarcophagus, which contained the beautiful vase. It was full of ashes, but it bore no inscription as to the remains it held, nor has the mystery ever been solved which shrouds its origin.

The vase was deposited in the Barberini palace, where it remained until 1770, when the representative of the Barberini family, a Roman princess, was forced to part with it to pay her gambling debts. The vase changed hands twice, then it was disposed of to the duchess of Portland, but with such secrecy that her own family was not aware of the transaction until after her death.

At the sale of the duchess of Portland's collection it was purchased by her son, the third duke of Portland, for the sum of $5,145, and it was deposited in the museum by his successor. The vase was wantonly smashed in pieces by a drunken visitor, but the fragments were, however, joined together, but the bottom, with its mysterious figure in Phrygian cap, was not replaced.

The material of this vase was long almost as great a puzzle as the story it illustrates. Breval refers to it as "the famous vase of chaledony;" Misson calls it an agate; Bartoli a sardonyx; while Caylus and others correctly decided that it was made of glass. The blue body was first formed, and while still red hot, coated over as far as the bas reliefs were intended to reach with semiopaque white glass, the delicate figure being afterwards cut down to the blue ground in the same manner as with real cameos.

"No Openings Nowheres"

She is fortunate in having girl chums who draw roses from their friends now and then. The other afternoon one of her rosy friends pinned a bright red one on her and she sallied forth into the street to make other women envious. She had not gone far when she felt a tug at the shoulder and turned to see a strange woman.

"Where'd you git that rose?" asked the stranger covetously.

"A friend of mine gave it to me," was the answer, produced with some chill.

"A friend of yours? In a store?"

"No, not in a store."

"Well, hain't there no openings nowheres?"

"Not that I know of."

"Humph! Just my luck. I'm just crazy for a rose, and when I saw you I just knowed there was a fall opening somewhere."

Romance of Old Portugal

The recent deposition of King Manuel of Portugal and the events in the young king's life that led up to it will no doubt bring back to the minds of some of the older residents of the city the story of Elise Hensler, the Springfield girl who married a king and became the Countess Edla.

The king she married was Don Ferdinand II. of Portugal, a great grandfather of King Manuel. Elise lived in Springfield about 60 years ago, probably for about four years.

The Henslers were humble people and lived simply. The daughters, Elise and Louise, were well received here and were given a good musical education, especially Elise, who had quite a remarkable voice. Signor Guidi, an Italian, at the time a well known teacher of the voice, took an interest in Elise and it was when Signor Guidi went to Boston that the Henslers went there, largely through his influence. He believed that Elise had a future as a singer and wished her to be where he could continue teaching her.

Elise Hensler after her removal with her family to Boston continued her studies. She was perseverant in her work and progressed so well that she not only appeared in concerts in the large cities in this country, but also in Europe, where she sang before royalty. It was while singing in Lisbon several years after the death of Queen Maria that King Ferdinand heard her voice and felt the attraction that led him to marry her.

Ferdinand was the titular king of Portugal, having been the second husband of Queen Maria II. of Portugal. Ferdinand married Maria in 1836, when he was 20. The queen died in 1853, and he was regent during the minority of his son, Pedro V., who was the father of the assassinated King Carlos, the grandfather of the deposed King Manuel. The regency ended in 1855, and on June 10, 1869, he married Miss Hensler.

When the European powers decided the time had come to restore Spain to a monarchy, following the overthrow of the short republic, which existed from 1873 to 1875, considerable pressure was brought to bear upon Ferdinand to induce him to accept the vacant throne. But his wife could never be queen of Spain, and it is possible that this fact alone induced him to refuse.

This absolute refusal on his part to accept the throne of Spain, with all the pomp and splendor of royalty in exchange for the romantic life that he was living with his morganatic wife, had far-reaching consequences. The complications and jealousies resultant on the attempt to find a king acceptable to all the powers helped to bring on the Franco-Prussian war, and Alsace and Lorraine went back to Germany, whence they had been wrested by Napoleon Bonaparte.

In consequence of these peculiar historical facts, which geographically practically changed all western Europe, Elise Hensler, Countess Edla, became famous throughout the world as "the woman who changed the map of Europe." During the life of the king they lived in the beautiful castle of Cintra. It is certain that their life was above reproach. In 1885 the king died, and after that the countess lived in retirement in a cottage near the castle.

MARKS HERO'S TOMB

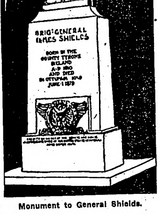
Monument Now at Gen. Shields' Long-Neglected Grave.

He Fought With Distinction in Two Wars, Served Three States as Senator and a Fourth as Governor.

Carrollton, Mo.—To have served as senator from three states and as governor of a fourth is a distinction that has come to only one man in the history of the United States. And yet for nearly 30 years that man, Gen. James H. Shields, whose military record was even more illustrious than his record as a statesman, lay in an almost forgotten and unmarked grave. He was the first territorial governor of Oregon, he served a full term as senator from Illinois, he was one of the first two senators from Minnesota and he served out an unexpired term as senator from Missouri. He went into the Mexican war a brigadier general and served with such distinction that his sword found ready acceptance and he was commissioned a brigadier general at the outbreak of the Civil war.

General Shields served four states and his adopted country (he was Irish born) both faithfully and well, and doubtless had public attention been called earlier to the neglect of his grave in St. Mary's cemetery here, Congress would have been quicker to show, by a monument, its appreciation of his services. However, when Representative Rucker, of Missouri, introduced a bill at the last session of congress to appropriate $3,000 for that purpose, it was quickly passed and the monument was recently unveiled.

General Shields was one of the many young Irishmen who came to America in the generation that preceded the Civil war and gave their adopted country cause to feel proud of them. He was born in County Tyrone, December 12, 1810. About the age of 16 young Shields emigrated to the United States and finished his education. He studied law and began practice at Kaskaskia, Ill., in 1832. He rapidly achieved professional distinction and having entered politics was elected to the legislature in 1836. In 1839 he was elected state auditor and in 1843 was appointed judge of the Supreme court of Illinois. He held the latter office two years and resigned to accept the appointment of commissioner of the general land office in Washington.



Monument to General Shields.

Served in Two Wars.

At the outbreak of the Mexican war Shields was given a brigadier's commission and commanded, first a brigade of Illinois troops, later commanding a brigade composed of marines and New York and South Carolina volunteers. He served under Gen. Zachary Taylor, Gen. Winfield Scott and General Wool and was wounded at Cerro Gordo and in the storming of Chapultepec. For gallantry in the latter action he was breveted a major general. General Shields was mustered out of service in 1848 and shortly afterwards was appointed the first territorial governor of Oregon.

While serving in that office he was elected senator from Illinois and served out his full term. After quitting the senate he moved to Minnesota, where he speedily became prominent in politics and, on the admission of that state, he was elected senator for the short term, serving two years, from 1857 to 1859. Quitting the senate again he went to California and engaged in mining, and was thus engaged when the Civil war broke out. Promptly he offered his sword and was commissioned a brigadier general. He commander a division under Gen. Nathaniel P. Banks in the Shenandoah Valley and directed the initial movement at the battle of Winchester, where he was severely wounded.

At his own request he was relieved of his command in the army and went to California, where he remained until the close of the war. He then chose Missouri as his home, settling in Carroll county, living on a farm a few miles east of Carrollton in peaceful retirement until 1874, when he was chosen to represent the county in the legislature. In January, 1879, he was chosen by the Missouri legislature to fill the unexpired term of Senator L. V. Bogy, which expired March 4, 1879. He died at Ottumwa in 1879.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

THE SUNBEAM.

VOL. X. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 2, 1910. NO. 36.

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Will Scrutinize the Bank Borrowers

CROOKED BORRIWER
THAT MURRAY IS ENTIRELY TOO FRESH — PRETTY SOON A MAN CAN'T DO ANYTHING -!.!

WASHINGTON.—Comptroller of the Currency Murray is now hard at work in making sharper and more searching the official supervision and control of the national banks. He requires the examiners to make their investigations more complete and exacting. He has changed examiners from one district to another, and if they thus lose something of knowledge about local conditions, they are set free from influences which breed partiality and prejudice. Official inquiry is in this way lifted above cliques and the mastery of one or two institutions in a city.

The latest step is to call on the examiners in the several districts to make out lists of the concerns which are largest borrowers at the banks. Such reports from the 11 districts are to be tabulated at the Washington office which will be so created a clearing house of commercial credits. The record is to be kept in confidence, and the names of banks carrying heavy lines of paper will not be exposed.

Individuals and corporations which strain their credit soon get beyond the resources of their home banks. They go abroad for loans. Note brokers derive their profit from this practise. When failures occur it often happens that the bankrupt is debtor to banks at points remote from each other. One lender does not know how many others have been buying the same sort of paper. Reliance on business statements becomes trust on broken reeds by changed conditions as well as by over-sanguine estimates.

The new policy of Comptroller Murray will tend to restrict credit at both ends of the transaction. Borrowers who expand unduly will take warning when they learn that record of all their loans is kept for review. They will discern the need of caution in putting out their obligations, and will do less business on other people's capital. They will feel some alarm at the broad semi-publicity of their affairs and will reduce their appeals to lenders. The weakest of the large borrowers will first be compelled to reduce their loans. All who rely too much on borrowing will see the veil lifted from their operations and will come to act knowing that they are doing business in the open.

Savings Made in the Naval Service

YOU'RE DOING FINE

WITH a navy increasing in size, the estimates for the expense of the naval establishment for the next fiscal year show a saving of over $4,000,000, as compared with the amount appropriated last year. For the present fiscal year the estimates were $10,000,000 less than the appropriations for the preceding year. The two years taken together show economy with increased efficiency.

Competition in the fleet has been encouraged and has resulted in better target practise, economy in coal consumption and in consumption of supplies. Full power trials of vessels under cruising conditions have been conducted. The fastest battleships on the recent full power trials were the only ones repaired at navy yards under the present system of navy-yard organization.

The greatest progress in the navy has been in target practise. It has been due to carefully conducted competitions, where ship has been pitted against ship, man against man and officer against officer. In this way every one has been put upon his mettle and results have closely measured the relative worth of the various ships and officers.

The cost of work at navy yards has fallen materially. Steel castings made at navy yards have been reduced from about 9 cents a pound to about 5 cents, and iron castings have been cut from about 4½ cents a pound to 2¼.

Although the navy has increased in size, the cost of the coal is expected to be about $1,000,000 less during the current fiscal year than during the previous one. The estimates for fuel for the coming year have been decreased by $1,000,000. Improvement has been made in the use of lubricating oil. The cost of supplies has been reduced by more than 20 per cent., and in freight and transportation of supplies there has been a saving of about $100,000.

Supreme Court May Unsquat 300,000

I WONDAH IF I WILL OWN THIS PLACE AFTER THE COURT GETS THROUGH

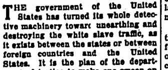
THE legal battle which has raged in Kentucky for several generations over the validity of so-called "blanket" grants of land by Virginia, the mother state, and even Kentucky itself during the earlier years of statehood, has come before the Supreme court of the United States for decision. Titles to lands now said to be worth at least $10,000,000 depend upon the decision of the court.

Arguments were made as to the constitutionality of the Kentucky statute under which it is claimed a forfeiture of the title to 40,000 acres of land, held by the Kentucky Union company, would be worked in favor of the occupants of the land. Immediately after this case, it is expected the suits involving the title of the eastern Kentucky lands will be taken up.

About 2,500,000 acres of land are said to lie under the doubtful title of these "blanket" grants. On the other hand, 300,000 citizens of Kentucky have entered these lands. Claimants under the "blanket" grants call them "squatters."

The attorney general of the commonwealth of Kentucky has appeared in the supreme court to assert in defense of their claim of title that they are the people who have built up the state, and erected a commonwealth, with its court houses and school houses, its municipalities and internal improvements.

Uncle Sam Goes After White Slavers



THE government of the United States has turned its whole detective machinery towarc unearthing and destroying the white slave traffic, as it exists between the states or between foreign countries and the United States. It is the plan of the department of justice to make one sweep on all the large cities at once, and strike, if possible, one staggering blow at the traffic.

The government's authority comes from the Mann act, imposing upon the interstate aspects of the crime penalties of five years' imprisonment or a fine of $5,000. According to information already received at Washington, Pittsburg is the center of the trade, though clues discovered in Chicago make that city an important substation. The firsts swoop, it is intended, will be started simultaneously in New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Chicago and San Francisco.

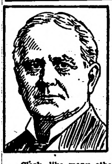
Officers at ports of entry have been asked to increase their vigilance and to inspect female immigrants with peculiar care. Meanwhile officers at inland cities will watch and report the movements of all suspects.

In New York some months ago District Attorney Whitman made an effort to trap some of the men back of the trade in that city, but they escaped. The only way to capture the offenders, according to the agents of the department of justice, is to have the authorities of all the large cities act together. The government agents will not try to "clean up" the various cities. They will simply go after the leaders of the syndicate.

In Chicago some arrests have been made, but these are only the beginning of the general crusade, it is said.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

SEEMS SLATED FOR SPEAKER



Although Speaker Cannon's term does not expire until March 4, 1911, the campaign as to who will be the next to occupy the speaker's chair is already being warmly contested. Many well-informed Democrats declare that Champ Clark of Missouri, leader of the late Democratic minority, seems slated for the speakership, although James Hay of Virginia and Robert L. Henry of Texas are active rivals for the place.

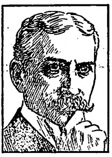
Born in Kentucky in 1850, Clark emigrated as a comparatively young man to Missouri and also had an early but brief experience in Kansas. In 1875 he located at Bowling Green, Mo., and began the practise of law and in 1893 he was first elected to congress. Since then he has represented his district continuously, with the exception of one term.

Clark, like many other men who have made good, gives full credit to his wife. Before she married Clark she was Miss Genevieve Bennett, a school teacher, with a local reputation as an elocutionist. Clark was a young lawyer without any marked promise of future greatness and mighty little chance ever to shine as a self-composed, fluent speaker. His wife took him in hand, drilled him in elocution, drilled him in Delsarte until his gestures became easy, and after each speech made by her husband while candidate for Prosecuting Attorney of Pike County, she made little suggestions as to how his speech might have been made more effective and pleasing.

The home life of the Clarks, it is said, is delightful—just one little domestic cloud being known to the neighbors. This is the untidy condition of the library. Reserving to himself this room, Mr. Clark issued General Domestic Order No. 1: "Nobody is allowed to touch the books and papers in the library or attempt to clean up the room." Distinguished visitors come to the Clark home often and are delightfully entertained, the hostess making but one request of her husband's friends: "Please don't go into Mr. Clark's library!"

His name isn't "Champ" at all—it's James Beauchamp, the latter being his mother's maiden name. Clark early made up his mind that this was too much of a name to carry into politics, so he shortened it to Champ, by which he has become known to fame.

OUR AMBASSADOR TO MEXICO

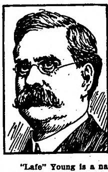


The life of Henry Lane Wilson, ambassador of the United States to Mexico, was reported to have been attempted by rioters at Mexico City during the recent embroglio. Many Americans went to the American embassy declaring to the ambassador, Mr. Wilson, that they intended to arm themselves as they considered the conduct of the chief of police, Felix Diaz, during the disorders unsatisfactory. Mr. Wilson declared he was satisfied with the attitude of the Mexican government, but that he deeply regretted that the chief of police had made no great effort to prevent disorder.

Mr. Wilson then had a long conference with Senor Creel, minister of foreign affairs, who assured him that Americans would not suffer any more and that the agitators would be punished. Senor Creel in an interview later said that the relations between Mexico and America were as cordial as ever. He denied reports of friction between the governments and gave assurance that all would be settled diplomatically.

Henry L. Wilson practised law and was a banker in Spokane, Wash., from 1885 to 1896 and considers that city his home. In 1889 he was appointed minister to Venezuela by President Harrison, but declined; from 1897 to 1905 he was minister to Chile, and from 1905 until the present year he served as minister to Belgium. Mr. Wilson was born at Crawfordsville, Ind., in 1857, and was graduated from Wabash college in 1879. From 1882 to 1885 he was editor of the Lafayette (Ind.) Journal.

"LAFE" YOUNG FOR SENATOR

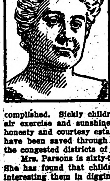


Lafayette Young, who has been appointed United States senator from Iowa to succeed the late Senator Dolliver, is a native Iowan. Most of his life has been devoted to the newspaper profession, and last spring he celebrated his twentieth year as owner and editor of the Des Moines Daily Capital.

Mr. Young was born in Monroe county in 1848. He learned to set type in the office of the Albia Union, finishing his trade with Mills & Co. of Des Moines. In 1870 he was city editor of the Des Moines Register. In 1871 he established a paper at Atlantic, Iowa, called the Telegraph, which he successfully published nineteen years. In 1890 he bought a well-nigh defunct daily newspaper at Des Moines and the paper is now a thoroughly modern daily with a building of its own.

"Lafe" Young is a national figure in Republican politics and is noted as an orator. In 1900 at the Philadelphia Republican convention he nominated Theodore Roosevelt for vice-president. He has been twice delegate at large to the Republican national convention from Iowa. He accompanied President Taft on his trip to the Philippines some years ago and is a personal friend of the president.

ORIGINATED GARDEN FARMS



The woman who is principally responsible for the formation of the International Children's School Farm league is Mrs. Henry Parsons of New York city. She has made a practical issue of the "back to the soil" idea, and has been a real mother to thousands of children during the past ten years. She managed to secure from the city the privilege of using an old dumping ground as a garden farm. So many children applied for admission that hundreds had to be turned away.

The system she followed was to award to each child a plot four by eight feet for three months. Seven vegetables were planted and twice a year crops were harvested. This was done under the direction of assistant teachers and the crops were given to the children.

It is said that wonderful results are being accomplished. Sickly children have become strong and happy from the open-air exercise and sunshine. Industry has been inculcated and principles of honesty and courtesy established, and the health and lives of many children have been saved through these charming breathing places in the center of the congested districts of our large cities.

Mrs. Parsons is sixty-two years of age, but bright, cheerful and energetic. She has found that children love farming. Not only has she succeeded in interesting them in digging and planting as a novel occupation, but she has led their minds into intellectual fields. She has even interested them in good roads problems, the saving of our forests, the uplifting of the farming community and giving to their minds a strengthening and healthy tone.

Odd News From Big Cities

Stories of Strange Happenings in the Metropolitan Towns

Huge Magnet Causes Workman's Death

PITTSBURG, PA.—Death played a grim joke on a Pittsburg workman the other day, appearing to the poor fellow in his most unfamiliar guise. John Warnack, thirty-five years old and a steel worker, came under the influence of a 30-ton magnet and was yanked upward, being so badly injured by the impact that he died in a local hospital two hours later. His head was caught between the steel billet he was carrying and the huge magnet and crushed.

These magnets, be it known, are one of the greatest labor-saving devices of man's many inventions. A huge piece of soft iron is swung about in the works where wanted through the action of a traveling crane or a big derrick. To this iron is connected wires through which a strong current of electricity can be sent at will. Soft iron has this peculiarity, that it becomes highly magnetized on the passage of an electric current through its mass, but on the current being shut off the magnetism ceases at once. This property makes such a piece of iron valuable for picking up bars of iron or steel, kegs of nails or bolts, scrap iron, or any substance susceptible to the magnetic influence.

It seems odd enough to the visitor at a big foundry or rolling mill when he sees such a clumsy-looking piece of iron swung along over a heap of several tons of scrap iron, or chunks of crude material known in trade parlance as pig iron, and the pieces begin to jump upward and hang on to the magnet through this invisible force while slowly carried to some other part of the works, where they quickly drop off as the magnet loses its power through the shutting off of the current of electricity. The thing looks ridiculous, yet the power that draws these heavy pieces of iron or steel upward would sustain a weight of many tons just as easily.

San Francisco Rises From Her Ashes

PANAMA EXPO

I BELIEVE I'LL BUY THAT THING' — I NEED IT

SAN FRANCISCO.—Nothing so clearly shows the vigor and recuperative power of San Francisco as the effort it is putting forth to secure the great exposition of 1915, designed to celebrate the building of the Panama canal.

A little over four years ago the city was crumbled to the dust by the earthquake and fire which swept 508 city blocks out of existence. Last April, just four years after the great cataclysm, the citizens of San Francisco, assembled in mass meeting, subscribed over $4,000,000 toward an international exposition to be held there, and since that time $3,000,000 more have been subscribed. Few cities in the world are capable of this great revival. Not only has San Francisco arisen from her ashes, but she now faces the monumental task of financing a great world exposition.

Since the work of rebuilding San Francisco was begun more than $300,000,000 has gone into reconstruction, while $100,000,000 has been expended on steel and concrete wharves, a municipal fire protection system, sewers, streets and other improvements. All told; 25,000 buildings have been erected in the city in four years and the work of construction goes on rapidly. Such is the city that asks the honor of building an exposition that will be worthy, before the world, of America.

Already her citizens have completed a task which ranks with the construction of the canal in magnitude, and represents, in capital expended, more money than the canal has cost to date, and almost as much as the "big ditch" will have cost when completed. By 1915, San Franciscans say, every trace of the fire will be erased and forgotten in the city's greater estate.

Of congress, these westerners will not ask one dollar of aid. Indeed, the Sunset City is a bit anxious to demonstrate that she can build a $50,000,000 exposition with money granted by her own state's citizens.

Sing Sing Prison Not Escape Proof

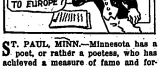
I WOULDN'T LEAVE DIS PLACE FER DE WOILD

NEW YORK.—Once more the barriers of stone and steel and the wit and watchfulness of selected guardians that make Sing Sing prison theoretically escape proof, have been flouted by the criminal wards of New York state. Since its construction the big institution has been regarded by criminals as the "easiest prison to beat," owing to its crowded condition and the necessity of allowing men to sleep in makeshift quarters. More than 200 men have eluded the guards since the '60s, but only a few have enjoyed their liberty. Nearly all have been recaptured and have lived to see the day they were sorry for their dash for liberty.

The escape of the last quintet of criminals was the most successful and startling in the long list of deliveries which run parallel with the history of Sing Sing. It was crude, direct and simple and the work of one man, "Big Bill" Green. The scene of the escape was in the Protestant chapel, where 195 men were sleeping, with two guards on duty.

During the night Isidore Blum, Green's sole accomplice, received permission from Keeper Drum to go into the retiring room. Green followed a few minutes later, and beckoned to Drum, saying Blum was ill. All unsuspecting the keeper entered the room, where he was felled by Green and bound and gagged. The other keeper was easily overpowered and gagged. When the two guards were safely gagged Green called to his fellow convicts. "Here's the chance for everybody," he said. "Who's coming?" Five men followed and all got away. Later they were captured.

Prize Poem Is Penned by a Lunatic



THAT'S A FINE POEM — BUT HOW AM I TO SEND HER TO EUROPE?
EDITOR

ST. PAUL, MINN.—Minnesota has a poet, or rather a poetess, who has achieved a measure of fame and fortune despite the fact that for 16 years she has been an inmate of a state hospital for the insane.

Some time ago a magazine offered a prize for the best literary contribution to be submitted within a certain time. The winner was to be presented with free transportation to Europe and return. Among those who entered the contest was a woman, a member of a well-known Minnesota family. So excellent was her effort considered that the prize was awarded to her. When the editors of the magazine learned who she was, and that because of environments, she would be unable to take advantage of the prize she had won, they sent her a check for $250.

The woman was placed first in the hospital at Rochester on May 9, 1894. In 1907 she was removed with other patients to Hastings, and on May 11, 1909, again was transferred, this time to Anoka, where she still is held. "She's bright—unusually bright in some ways," said A. D. Ware, assistant superintendent of the Hastings institution, "but she has delusions. Her insanity is hereditary. A sister, niece and uncle are inmates of Minnesota hospitals."

The woman is Miss Betty Clay, committed in 1894 from Ramsey county to the Rochester asylum. At times she is perfectly rational and has full possession of her faculties. Her dementia is of the spasmodic type, and is accompanied by weird delusions.

It is said that some of her best verse has been written while under the spell of these delusions. Her descriptions are weird and uncanny, although charming.

COUCH OF LUXURY.

The most perfect resting place ever devised for a human being is just beneath the roof, and then you must be able to see the shingle nails sticking through. If a gentle rain be falling, so much the better. Five minutes spent in that sweet retreat are enough to banish the memory of every trouble. Debt and death lose their terrors, and the peace that passes understanding comes upon you, says the Washington Post. You become a boy again and enter once more into the world that used to be. Soon the dark corners of the room are peopled with the images of childhood. Over where the old clothes are hanging you can see the outlines of a dismantled ship, while down the sandy shore come Robinson Crusoe and Man Friday. A swarthy face peeps from behind the big trunk. It is Faringhea, the strangler, creeping stealthily upon his victim. Faster and faster they come, some pleasing, some ferocious. You welcome them all and are not a bit afraid, and the rain drips, drips, with a steady, monotonous sound. Then comes a blank. Next morning the spell is broken, but the memory remains. You see the old clothes and the trunk, and find that the only gobelin tapestry in the room is a cluster of cobwebs over the little dormer window. But you had slept the sleep of the just, and found it most refreshing.

The passenger traffic between the United States and Europe continues to offer most alluring inducements. Many of the big companies are adding the newest, largest and swiftest vessels to their fleets. One of the latest launchings is that of a ship that is being built by a French line, to run to New York. This is one of the greatest craft yet completed, and when put in commission will be able to carry 2,020 passengers. The total cost will be about $5,000,000. That is what foreign concerns are doing to get American trade. And Americans permit them to monopolize a business that should be in American control and which should be a most important auxiliary in extending American commerce.

English owners of homing pigeons have lost so many of them this season that they believe there is an especial cause. This cause, many of them are inclined to suspect, is wireless telegraphy. Many will dismiss the indictment as fanciful, on account of the comparative weakness of the current which wireless telegraphy brings into play. The answer to this is that the current does not kill the birds, but only confuses them, causing them to miss their way. If the Marconi current affects pigeons, why not gulls? Indeed, it would seem not impossible that wireless telegraph stations may be the means of greater disaster to gulls than lighthouses.

From London comes the announcement of the death of the woman who claimed to be the original of "Little Dorrit," that famous character of Dickens. The lady was entitled to the benefit of the doubt, but it is a fact that similar claims have been made by others. It is also asserted that a brother of the woman who has just died was the original "Tiny Tim," and that he served in part as the model for "Paul Dombey." If all those assertions can be proved it would seem that the family formed a sort of trust for Dickens characters.

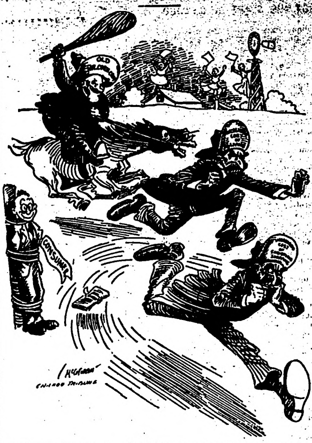
Perhaps if the truth were known a considerable proportion of the so-called automobile "accidents" would be found to have resulted from befuddled heads and unsteady nerves. The menace of a man under the influence of liquor and in an automobile is easily appreciated, and when it is demonstrated that crashes on the road are due to drunkenness the punishment should be severe. Those who insist upon running amuck on the highways should be made to pay a heavy penalty, whether they be sober or drunk.

The usual fate of get-rich-quick schemes is collapse at the end. And the "lambs" are fleeced as a preliminary. A speculative scheme of this kind in Connecticut has brought up in the bankruptcy court, with unsecured claims of $500,000 to be settled. And the further sequel no doubt will be the charging of the sum to the profit and loss account of those foolish enough to "invest."

A German musician says that our craze for ragtime is the great obstacle to creative work in American music. Ragtime? Sounds like a faint echo from our past. Our friend must have got his idea from old newspaper files.

Among airmen excessive avoirdupoise is at a discount, most of the successful atmosphere navigators being physical lightweights. In this as in some other matters good goods often come in small packages.

OLD MR. CORN CROP TO THE RESCUE



WANTS A BIG ARMY

GRANT FAVORS SYSTEM OF CONSCRIPTION TO RAISE MILITARY EFFICIENCY.

SEES BENEFIT TO NATION

General Declares Trained Reserve Force of 1,000,000 Men Is Needed —Cites Germany as Proof—Would Curb Mob Spirit.

New York.—In order to bring this country up to the military standard of the European powers Maj. Gen. Frederick D. Grant, commander of the department of the east, is in favor of inaugurating a system of conscription in the United States.

He thinks the plan would not increase the army expense more than 50 per cent., as there are sufficient barracks and equipment now on hand to accommodate the new forces, and he believes the respect engendered for law would put an end to mob outrages and lessen crime in America.

"By increasing our army to 250,000," General Grant said, "we could in a few years have among the people engaged in peaceful and gainful occupations 1,000,000 men trained to the military service. The present authorized strength of our army is 100,000, but we have actually in the service only about 85,000 men, because congress has refused to make the appropriations needed.

In the execution of his scheme, General Grant would divide the country into military districts and require each district to provide the enlarged army every year with a quota of recruits to be determined by the military authorities, based upon population.

"As I estimate it, such an increase in the size of the army would not increase its cost 50 per cent. In round figures the present cost of the army is $123,000,000. The addition of 150,000 men probably would not run the cost up to more than $200,000,000," he said.

NAB BRAINS OF STOCK FRAUDS

ALL MEMBERS BURR BROTHERS' CONCERN UNDER ARREST.

Fourth Man Is Found in Michigan and Fifth in Portland, Ore.— Hitchcock Elated.

New York.—All members of the stock brokerage firm of Burr Brothers, Inc., whose offices were raided by postoffice inspectors, are now in custody, C. Harry Tobey being placed under arrest at Bloomingdale, Mich.

Frank H. Tobey, the vice-president of Burr Brothers, is a brother of C. Harry Tobey. With Shelton C. Burr, the president, and Eugene H. Burr, the secretary and treasurer, he is still in the Tombs, charged with using the mails to defraud. The fifth prisoner, E. W. Preston, is under arrest at Portland, Ore.

None of the prisoners has been able to secure bail. Tobey and Preston will be brought here for trial.

C. Harry Tobey, it is alleged by the post office officials, is the head and brains of the Burr company. Every move made by the concern, they say, was by his direction. His interests here were looked after by his brother and between, it is said, they have invested over a million dollars of their profits in western lands.

Many pathetic scenes were witnessed in and around the offices of the Burrs. The publicity given to the raid brought some fifty dupes, many of them women, hurrying to the Flatiron building to see if they could save anything for themselves out of the wreck. Few of these were investors in Buick oil.

Postmaster General Hitchcock was greatly elated over the success of the raid and said that it was only the beginning of things.

CRIPPEN DIES ON GALLOWS

American Dentist Goes to His Death in London Prison Yard for Killing Wife.

London.—Doctor Hawley H. Crippen was hanged at 8:20 a. m. Wednesday for the murder of his wife, Belle Elmore Crippen. The execution took place in the court yard of the Pentonville prison. The official hangman of England pulled the trap that sent Crippen into eternity. The prisoner, to all outward appearances, seemed resigned to his fate and walked bravely to his doom. Eighteen minutes after the trap fell the jury of four physicians pronounced him dead. His neck had been broken. The death march started from his cell at 8:15 a. m. and proceeded through the prison corridors to the gallow, which had been erected. As Crippen was led upon the scaffold, the hangman's aids removed the prisoner's collar. Before the noose was adjusted the chaplain of the prison administered the last rites of the church, at the conclusion of which the attendants adjusted the black cap and dropped the noose over the prisoner's head.

An immense crowd gathered outside the prison courtyard early and eagerly awaited the news of Crippen's death. The news of his execution was received without demonstration.

TARS KILL OFFICERS

MUTINOUS BRAZILIAN SAILORS CONTROL FOUR WARSHIPS AT RIO JANEIRO.

DEMAND BETTER CONDITIONS

Train Guns on Loyal Ships and Shell City—Congress Meets to Consider Situation—Granting of Amnesty Will End Trouble.

Washington.—The state department Thursday received a cablegram from American Consul Slechte at Rio de Janeiro that the crews on several Brazilian war vessels had mutinied and were in control of the harbor.

The Brazilian embassy received a cable message from the Brazilian foreign office which stated that in the opinion of the government the mutiny of the sailors on the ships of war was due entirely to personal grievances and therefore had no political aspect.

The dispatch says the vessels in mutiny are the battleships Minas Geraes and Sao Paulo, the scout cruiser Bahia and the protected cruiser Floriano.

All of the officers on the ships in mutiny were killed. Captain Neves, one of the victims, was on the Minas Geraes. He was not long ago in Washington as one of the delegates to attend the body of the late ambassador to Brazil. He was in line for early promotion.

Rio Janeiro, Brazil.—Congress was summoned into special session to deal with the tense situation rising from the mutiny on board two Brazilian warships. The two vessels in charge of the mutinous crews are anchored outside the bar awaiting action by the government.

Additional details of the outbreak have been learned, though the censorship is strict. The men of two of the bigger warships turned on their superiors and in the fierce fight that ensued several officers were killed. The captain of the battleship Minas Gerner is reported among the dead. The guns were turned on the loyal ships and shells were turned into the city. When the fighting ceased the mutineers had gained complete control of the ships.

It is officially stated that the revolt is not against the administration of President Fonseca, but the last resort of the sailors in their attempt to secure better service conditions. They have demanded more pay and the abolition of corporal punishment.

It is believed that if the mutineers are granted amnesty and the changes they demand the trouble will end. If adverse action is taken by congress the subsequent attitude of the men is doubtful.

MADERO IS BADLY WOUNDED

Report Is Made by Diaz's Commander the Rebel Leader Was Shot at Guerrero.

Eagle Pass, Tex.—The Mexican commander in Ciudad Porfirio Diaz informed Customs Collector R. W. Down that Francisco I. Madero, claimant of the presidency of Mexico, was badly wounded in a fight Thursday at Guerrero between his forces and 200 rurales and cavalry commanded by Colonel Fuentes and Lieut. Nicanor Valdez.

The Mexican commander stated that his advices had come directly from a trustworthy citizen of Guerrero, who came in during the day.

According to the report to Mr. Dowe, Madero led his force when federal troops engaged them. The engagement was fierce for a time.

Madero was seen to fall from his horse, but was carried to the rear and his force fell back. The federal troops are reported to have followed up their advantage, scattering the rebels, who took to the hills. The nature of Madero's wounds are unknown.

Washington. — From Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson at Mexico City came the report Thursday that the Mexican government already has complete control of the revolution and from consular agents in the field come reports of fighting between the soldiers of Diaz and Madero.

Secretary Knox admits that much of the information received from the interior of Mexico, especially from Mexico City, is severely censored. He also conceded that much of the matter Ambassador Wilson is sending this government comes from the Mexican authorities and is not a true report.

A telegram received from the ambassador was to the effect that the situation is improving. He says he is informed by the foreign office that fighting continues at Parral and Ciudad Guerrero, that the revolutionists have lost 14 men and the government forces had four men killed and four wounded. The minister of foreign affairs declare that the remainder of the republic is quiet.

SAYS NEW RATES NOT NEEDED

EASTERN SHIPPERS PRESENT THEIR SIDE OF CONTROVERSY.

Brandeis Declares Roads Can Add to Their Income by Scientific Management.

Washington. — The shippers had their innings in the contest before the interstate commerce commission over the suspended proposed increases in freight rates on the eastern lines. Their contention is that the advances are not justified, and that the real solution of the problem lies in the introduction of scientific principles in management.

Louis Brandeis, counsel for the traffic committee of the commercial organization of the Atlantic Seaboard, opened for the shippers by asserting that the proposed increase were neither reasonable nor just. He declared that if the railroads need additional net income it should be secured through greater efficiency and economy of operation instead of resorting to the dangerous expedient of raising freight rates. In instances where such need may appear it resulted, he said, not because rates are too low, but that the management has by reckless expansion, waste and inefficiency impaired the financial condition of the roads.

Mr. Brandeis concluded by saying that burdens so arising should be borne by the stockholders and not by the shippers and consumers through increases in freight rates.

ASQUITH ASSAILED BY WOMEN

Premier Is Saved From Possible Injury at Hands of Suffragettes by Police.

London, England.—Premier Asquith has yielded to the importunities of the suffragettes and in the house of commons announced that if he was still in power at the next session of parliament the government would give facilities for the consideration of a woman's franchise bill so framed as to admit of free amendment. Premier Asquith was later assaulted by suffragettes in the precincts of the house of commons and was saved from rough handling only by the prompt arrival of a strong body of policemen. It seems that the premier's promise made in the house instead of placating, only inflamed the women.

Soon after the premier's announcement concerning woman suffrage a meeting of the suffragettes was held at Caxton hall, when Miss Christabel Pankhurst characterized the minister's statement as wholly unsatisfactory and "nothing more nor less than an insult to the cause." The women she shouted, considered the attitude of the premier a declaration of war and they would answer the challenge immediately.

With a rush several hundred of the women started for Downing street Here they encountered Mr. Asquith en route, and in a moment he was surrounded by the irate mob. Without any preliminaries Miss Henrietta Williams struck the premier in the face, at the same time screaming:

"You tax women as heavily as men yet women are not represented in parliament."

The women had just begun to close in on the premier when police whistles brought a squad of officers and the premier was hustled into a taxicab. Miss Williams made one more attempt to reach the premier and in so doing thrust her hand through the cab window.

Paris.—Premier Briand, while attending the ceremonies in the Tuilleries Sunday in connection with the dedication of a monument erected to the memory of Jules Ferry, the French statesman, was assaulted by a Royalist, who struck him twice in the face with his fists. The premier was not seriously hurt.

The large crowd which had gathered set upon the premier's assailant and only prompt intervention from the guards saved him from serious injury.

SUFFERED 30 YEARS.
But Chronic Kidney Trouble Was Finally Cured.

Charles Von Soehnen, 201 A St., Colfax, Wash., says: "For 30 years I suffered from kidney trouble and was laid up for days at a time. There was a dull ache through the small of my back and I had rheumatic pains in every joint. The kidney secretions passed too freely and I was annoyed by having to arise at night. I could not work without intense suffering. Through the use of Doan's Kidney Pills, I was practically given a new pair of kidneys. I cannot exaggerate their virtues."

She Covered Her Head.

Scene, a country church of Episcopalian denomination in process of being decorated for the Christmas season. The rector, who has a strong leaning towards forms of all kinds, is fastening a festoon of evergreen about the baptismal font, when, enter Miss Dymple, who unceremoniously flings her hat upon the seat of a pew and comes to his assistance. The rector suddenly observes that she is hatless and remarks severely:

"Miss Dymple, it is particularly forbidden that women shall come into the church with uncovered heads."

"Oh, bother, I forgot!" responded the young lady irreverently "Well," grabbing up the rector's derby and setting it jauntily on her pert little head, "will this do?"

BABY'S SCALP CRUSTED

"Our little daughter, when three months old, began to break out on the head and we had the best doctors to treat her, but they did not do her any good. They said she had eczema. Her scalp was a solid scale all over. The burning and itching was so severe that she could not rest, day or night. We had about given up all hopes when we read of the Cuticura Remedies. We at once got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and one bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, and followed directions carefully. After the first dose of the Cuticura Resolvent, we used the Cuticura Soap freely and applied the Cuticura Ointment. Then she began to improve rapidly and in two weeks the scale came off her head and new hair began to grow. In a very short time she was well. She is now sixteen years of age and a picture of health. We used the Cuticura Remedies about five weeks, regularly, and then we could not tell she had been affected by the disease. We used no other treatment after we found out what the Cuticura Remedies would do for her. J. Fish and Ella M. Fish, Mt. Vernon, Ky., Oct. 12, 1909."

MUST BAR WOMEN

SWEEPING ORDER, INCLUDING "NEAR CAFES," ISSUED BY THE CHIEF EXECUTIVE.

PENALTY, LICENSE WITHDRAWAL

Blame Taken Off Habitues and Put Up to Owners of Places—Mr. Haynes Himself to Judge Which Are Restaurants.

Minneapolis. — Any Minneapolis saloonkeeper who admits women to his saloon nor "near restaurant" run in connection with a saloon will be in danger of suffering the revocation of his license as the result of a sweeping order issued by Mayor J. C. Haynes. The edict is addressed to Superintendent of Police Corriston, and orders that official to place it in operation at once.

It is declared that the mayor's order, which signals his advent as the active leader in the crusade being waged against vice, means the immediate wiping out of every back room for women, wine room or "near cafe" operated as an adjunct to a saloon.

The mayor, without defining just what places his edict will affect, reserves the right of arbitrarily deciding which places come under the ban. In explanation of the order Chief Corriston says it will be best that the proprietors ascertain from the mayor at once whether they are on his list of places marked to be abolished.

Blame Taken Off Women.

Women frequenters of these resorts will not longer be arrested. Whether they are of evil or good repute their presence in a saloon, either alone or with men companions, will be the signal for the arrest of the proprietor of the place and proceedings for the revocation of the license. Serving of liquor to minors also is included as cause for revocation.

That there is a distinction between some of the restaurants and some of the so-called "cafes," which are operated in connection with or near saloons, and which have long been known as the redezvous of dissolute women of the street, is admitted by the authorities, but those to be spared are not designated in the order.

The General Order.

To Frank T. Corriston, Superintendent of Police:

For various causes there has been a marked influx of dissolute women and other undesirables into the business districts of the city within the past year. The presence of these women in saloons is expressly prohibited by law, but under the rules of evidence, it is difficult to convict any single offender, consequently they congregate in certain saloons. This practice is demoralizing in the extreme, and has reached a stage where it has become a positive menace to public morals. Thus we have an abuse which the due and regular administration of public and judicial authority fails to correct.

Ordinarily I am strongly opposed to any arbitrary exercise of executive power, but in this emergency it is the only means of affording immediate relief. I, therefore, promulgate the following order, namely:

That on and after the 21st day of November, 1910, any saloon or bar where intoxicating liquors are sold or dispensed, which permits any girl or woman, whether of good or evil remain therein, will subject the holder of the licenses thereof to revocation of his license by the mayor, coupled with a recommendation to the city council that no further license be granted at such place for the period of one year thereafter.

"Near Restaurants" Included.

This order does not apply to any well regulated restaurant or cafe, of whatever class, with a bar in connection, which is conducted in a decent and lawful manner, but it does apply to all saloons, to all "near restaurants" and lunching places in connection with a licensed bar, and where the sale of drinks is the principal feature, and also to all such restaurants and cafes which become disorderly or which serve or suffer to be used any intoxicating liquors during the hours prohibited by law.

I am well aware that considerable difficulty will arise in drawing the line in a manner to make a just application of the foregoing order, and that no matter how it is done, charges of favoritism will be made, I therefore hereby advise you that the mayor will take the entire responsibility of making a proper classification of the places involved, as occasion may require.

J. C. HAYNES,
Mayor.

IN NEW DORMITORY.

Girl Students at Agricultural School on the Move—Boy's Quarters Congested.

Minneapolis.—About seventy-five of the girl students at the state agricultural school have moved during the last week into the new dormitory at the school. The building, which cost approximately $50,000, was started last spring and has been completed so far that it can be occupied.

This relieves the congestion in the old girls' dormitory for the present school year, but still leaves the boys in as crowded a condition as they have been since the school year opened. The dormitories at the school are overcrowded and many of the boys have been forced to secure rooms in St. Anthony Park.

That a good-sized appropriation for buildings will be made by the next legislature seems certain, but just how much the regents will ask has not yet been determined.

COSTS MORE TO KEEP INSANE.

Per Capita Figure in Wisconsin Boosted by Prices.

New Richmond.—The fourteenth annual report of the St. Croix county asylum for the chronic insane for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, shows that the high cost of living has been felt at that institution. The weekly per capita cost of maintaining inmates last year was $1.69, as compared with $1.49 the year before.

The cost of maintaining the poorhouse, which is conducted on the same farm and in connection with the county asylum, was $1.51 per week per patient, clothing extra, as compared with $1.38 the year before. In spite of all these things the institutions last year earned a net profit of $10,308.04, and a total profit during their fourteen years' operation of $138,331.95.

BEMIDJI MAN HAS FANCY HERD.

A. P. Ritchie Gets Prize Cattle From Senator Stephenson's Farm.

Bemidji.—A. P. Ritchie, who last year was superintendent of the Bemidji schools and who resigned a few weeks ago as a member of the Bemidji board of education so that he might devote his entire attention to his farm two miles southwest of this city, has just added a drove of ten Holstein cows and a registered bull to the farm, the cattle coming from Senator Isaac Stephenson's farm in Wisconsin.

The cattle are some relation—just what Professor Ritchie doesn't know nor care—to the famous "bossie" which the senator presented to President Taft.

The bull—or, more properly speaking, Sir Hengervold—is the son of the famous Paul de Kol, the father of 200 cows, each giving a record amount of butter fat.

GOT HIS START IN CHICAGO

Johnny Kane, Star Utility Player of Champion Cubs, Tells of His Early Baseball Days.

By JOHNNY KANE.

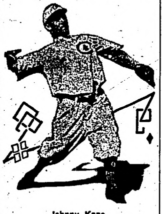
(Copyright, 1910, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

I got my start playing ball at school in Chicago and at Hyde Park High school, where I played both the infield and outfield. Up to the time I graduated from High school I had not thought of playing ball as a profession, although I was wild about the game. I remember once I played a game and put on evening clothes over the uniform so as to make sure I wouldn't miss a class dance or a ball game either.

When our class graduated, the class historian, in writing about me, predicted that I would be playing ball on the world's championship team in 1909—and I guess I decided when I read that to make good for the prophet. Anyhow, it put the idea of playing ball professionally into my mind. I wanted to try it because I had been trouble in making good. In fact I the time I was a boy and they were my heroes.

I got my trial out at Pittsburg, Kanwatching the Colts under Anson from sas, and because of my experience at High school and playing with prairie made so good that the people out there wouldn't let me go. Once I was traded off, and my friends raised such a row that within two days I was back. It is easier to play ball when a crowd takes that much interest in you. They kept me going. I was trying to play up to the idea they had of me, and I tell you there is more in that than one thinks. If a fellow feels that the crowd and everyone has faith in him and believes he can do something, it gives him faith and confidence in himself and he is far more likely to make good than if they were yelling at him.

My work attracted attention and I was wanted for my base running. After I got out of Pittsburg I shot up in the game and in a brief period was at Cincinnati. The crowd down there did not have much faith in me, although I had some friends, and I had a slump. Then Manager Chance traded for me and I made good the prediction of the class prophet—and was with the World's Champions, although I hadn't helped them win the championship.



Johnny Kane.

I think I succeeded as well as I have done by close study of the game and by closer watching of every move. Experience has taught me a lot.

I never have regretted going into baseball. It is a good clean game, and a clean way of earning one's livelihood. But don't tackle it if you are looking for something easy. It is hard and wearing work—and a player grows old faster than men in most other lines of business.

GARDNER AGAIN WINS TITLE

Chicago Boy Defeats Hugh Lee of Detroit, 1 Up, in Final 36-Hole Match at Yale.

Robert A. Gardner of the Hinsdale Golf club of Chicago won the golf championship at Yale the other day by defeating Hugh Lee, the Michigan champion, by 1 up in the 36-hole final match. This makes the second year Gardner has won the title.

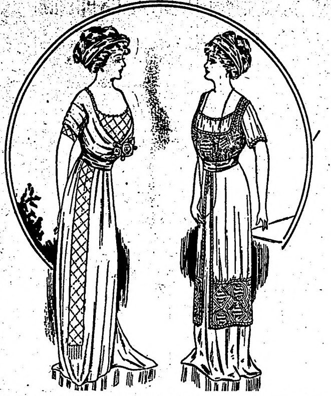
Gardner has been prominent in athletics at Yale, being considered one of the best pole vaulters in the east in addition to having twice won the golf championship of the school. He was also honored a few days ago by being elected captain of the Yale golf team for a second time.

The Chicago boy was golf champion of the United States last year, having won the title by defeating H. Chandler Egan of Exmoor in the final match at the Chicago Golf club. His playing this year has not been up to the standard he set in 1909, but he improved greatly toward the end of the season, although he failed to qualify for the national championship at Brookline. His most notable golf feat of the year was the defeat of Walter Travis in the final match of the open tournament at Glen View.

Beaurepaire Makes Clean Sweep.

Frank Beaurepaire, the Australian swimmer, who has made a clean sweep of the big events in England this season, is not through with his record-breaking feats, for his latest attempt was on the world's record for 500 meters. He was successful, for he swam the distance in seven minutes 2 1-5 seconds and this is 4 1-5 seconds better than the former world's record, made by Otto Scheff, of Austria in 1906. The swim took place at the Westminster baths, London, and as the pool is 44 yards long Beaurepaire had to make 12 lengths and 18 yards 3½ feet.

Evening Dresses



THE costume shown on the left is a combination of soft primrose satin and silver grey chiffon. The satin is used for the Princess underdress, the chiffon for the over-dress, which is slightly full at the waist, and at each side has a panel of dull silver and pearl trimming with fringed ends.

The front of bodice is veiled with the chiffon, over which trimming is laid, a narrow dull silver trimming edging the bodice; the chiffon is then draped on the bodice, the sleeves being cut in with it; the edge of sleeve is finished with the trimming.

Materials required: 7 yards double width satin, 8 yards chiffon, 42 inches wide, trimming according to width.

The other is in white satin charmeuse; the slightly trained skirt is trimmed with wide tarnished gold and pale blue embroidery, which draws the satin slightly in and gives the effect of a tunic, edged with handsome cord that is carried up to the waist each side front.

The over-bodice is of entirely the same embroidery, with underslip of white crepe-de-Chine, the whole edged with cord; waist-band of soft blue satin.

Materials required: Five yards double width satin, 1¾ yard embroidery for skirt, 1¼ yard embroidery for bodice, 1¼ yard crepe-de-Chine 40 inches wide.

SHOWING THE WINTER STYLES

Exhibits of London Dressmakers Give Fair Idea of What Is Going to Be Popular.

All the smart dressmakers in London have been exhibiting their new models. The coat and skirt costumes were chiefly of "ratine," the latest novelty in materials, which when at its best resembles chamois leather in appearance, but is as soft and warm as a good Harris tweed. Coats, of course, were short and rather like the reefer of several years ago, while skirts, if not actually hobbled, were tight to the hobbling point and much trimmed. House and evening gowns were almost all fashioned with tunic effect. Sometimes the tunic was very long. Sometimes it reached but a little below the hips.

Black was much used to soften vivid color effects. Thus, a frock of purple and green had a long tunic of black net bordered with Persian trimming, while black and blue and black and magenta were blended on various evening gowns. Oriental embroideries, dull silver and gold tissues and gem-studded braids were also in evidence. Garlands of flowers were used in trimming some of the dresses, and one dainty pink and cream gown was shackled with ropes of dainty little roses veiled with chiffon.

FANCIES OF FASHION.

There is a preference for white laces this season.

Light, filmy laces are trimmed with fur for winter gowns.

The popularity for the one piece gown does not abate.

Black velvet is paramount as trimming, while satin runs a close second.

Large colored wood buttons are seen on some of the new tailored suits.

There seems to be no cessation in the demand for allovers and baby Irish.

The style of the one piece afternoon gown depends upon the little French touches more than upon any special scheme of line.

Hints for the Table.

For a very delicious dish of deviled clams prepare a cupful of chopped clams and season them with cayenne, salt and the juice of a lemon. Mix them to a soft batter-like consistency with the yolks of two eggs and some powdered crackers. Put the mixture into little ramekins, broad scalloped shells or into tiny cups, spread the surface with soft butter and bake until well browned. For a change the mixture may be spread over crisp crackers and then browned in the oven.

Two Sewing Hints.

When silk pulls out of shape under a pattern, baste the edges of the silk evenly to a newspaper. Cut through silk and paper. To press tucks in crepe de chine put a sheet of white tissue paper over the right side. In this way the tucks may be seen and kept straight.

REVIVAL OF "GREEK BATH"

Beauty Doctors Are Recommending It—Said to Have Splendid Effect on the Skin.

If the skin happens to be dry and harsh, have you tried the soothing and smoothing effect of the so-called Greek bath? This was a favorite remedy of the ancients and has been revived by modern beauty doctors.

Mix seven tablespoonfuls of pure olive oil and one of lavender water and rub it well into the entire body. Apply a little at a time and rub in well with the palms of the hand, using a circular motion.

To get the best effects from this bath the body should be kept very warm during the rubbing. If hot cloths are applied first to open the pores more of the oil will be absorbed.

Take the baths three nights in succession, then stop for a week and take the series again as necessary. The skin quickly improves.

Foot Comfort.

A shoemaker who has had wide experience with making women's shoes gives as the secret of foot comfort the simple rule: "Never wear a shoe that will not permit the great toe to lie in a straight line."

This may mean the elimination of some of the most fashionable cuts and the annoyance to vanity of asking for big sizes, but it will save bills to the chiropodist and improve dispositions.

Tea Gowns.

A lovely little tea gown which contains an idea for the woman with a similar garment to make over is of pale turquoise satin, draped in empire style and veiled with gray crepe de chine, hemmed with a finger's width of gray squirrel fur. The veiling is held in place over the underbody by a fleur-de-lis of seed pearls at the waist.

A Great Injustice.

At the time these lands were offered for sale and homestead entry there was no explanation made to the farmer homesteader that he had no right to take the land, even if he had used his homestead right. It was the general talk among the buyers of this land that it did not make any difference about homestead rights, as they were buying the land, and the agents of the government never sent any word explaining the situation to them, but simply told them to sign right here ☞ ...... The farmer signed, the agent threw his cash into the big U.S. till, lit his cigar and both went on their way. The farmer moves on the land with his family and toils early and late for five long years until he owns with pride a home, all paid for. THEN gets a registered letter from the efficient American Executive notifying him to show cause why his homestead entry should not be canceled and him and his family thrown into the street. This is a condition that will have to be given prompt attention by our representatives in congress, and we believe that Hon. K[illegible] and Hon. Halvor S[illegible] will give it their prompt attention. Stay on your farms, continue to improve them and build up the country, [illegible] what the government wants, they will deal justly and fairly with you when the matter is brought to their attention.

MILITARY ACCURACY.

Exactness In Keeping Tab on the Movements of Soldiers.

We hear much of the perfection of military organization abroad, but it is doubtful whether any foreign war office follows with an accuracy greater than that displayed by our own war department the movements of its officers. The following is an interesting case in point:

A young army officer who has seen service in this country and in the east was once with a scouting party in Arizona. After two weeks in the desert his squad came to the railway near a small station. Within ten minutes a telegram from Washington was brought to him by the station agent. It asked if the officer wished to be transferred to one of the new artillery regiments then forming.

He answered by telegraph that he would be glad to enter either of them. Then with his squad he set off again across the desert.

It was six days later when the squad struck the railway, this time eighty miles from the point at which they had previously crossed it, but the officer's reply from the war department was awaiting him. It had been telegraphed to every station within 200 miles.

A more striking instance of accuracy occurred after the same officer's transfer to the east. He was traveling home on leave, and, as the regulations require, he had notified the department of the day, hour and probable route of his journey. After he had been on the train for eight hours at a small station the porter entered with a telegram, asking if any one of his name was present. On opening the telegram the officer found that it ordered him to detached duty.

Exactness of detail could not be carried much further. The war department knew the whereabouts of so insignificant [illegible] even when he was traveling on his [illegible] [illegible]—New York [illegible].

A FATHER'S DREAM

The Last Scheme Herr Bischoff Planned For His Son.

By HELEN COMFORT.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

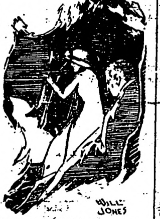
In the center of a large tract of land in Germany a hundred years ago stood a hunting lodge owned by Wilhelm Bischoff, a retired merchant of Berlin. Both Bischoff and his son Carl were sportsmen and used to go to this lodge in the proper season to hunt. The wild boar was at that time still to be found in certain parts of that country. When food was scarce the woods were infested with wolves.

The elder Bischoff was an optimist, often surprising his family by some visionary scheme. His son Carl, who inherited the traits of his mother rather than those of his father, was of a more equitable mental organization.

On one of Carl's visits to the lodge when his father remained at home he stopped one day while hunting at an ancient schloss occupied by one of those impoverished German noblemen whose ancestors were great men and whose descendants have had to pay for their progenitors' prominence. The schloss had always belonged to the Gehrensteins, whose living had been gained by plundering. But that part of the country did not fill up with the rest, and the laws gradually did away with the employment of the robber barons. He who occupied the schloss at the time the incident narrated in this story occurred had a pitiful income, which he supplemented by game.

Carl Bischoff was entertained by the baron, the only member of whose family living was Gretchen, a fair haired, blue eyed maiden of nineteen. Brought up in a wild region, a certain uncouthness marked her movements. Yet she had inherited the peculiar superiority of her ancestors. Carl followed her with his eyes wherever she went and saw in her the lady of the middle ages of which he had often read. Indeed, having lived in the same schloss, in the same wild country as they, she could not be anything else.

Instead of hunting the wild boar Carl Bischoff remained at the schloss till the time had arrived for his return to Berlin. He went away desperately in love with Gretchen Gehrenstein, and as he was the first young man of quality she had ever seen his love was returned. And, being returned, it was returned tenfold.



PICKED HIM OFF WITH UNERRING AIM.

When Carl reached his father's house the hunting season was drawing to a close. The elder Bischoff had been detained from his accustomed outing and a few days after his son's return started for the lodge. Before going he called Carl into his library and said:

"Carl, I have just completed negotiations for your marriage with the daughter of Herman von Hecker, who is in high favor with the king. I can settle upon you a fortune, and with this alliance you will be received at court. This will give you an opportunity to distinguish yourself either in the diplomatic service, the army or some department of the government."

"So?" said the young man, who was used to his father's schemes and thought it better to wait for him to replace the present one with another. "That will be fine indeed."

Bischoff was much pleased with his son's compliance and went off to the lodge in a very good humor. A few days after his arrival the Lady Gretchen was riding through the forest when she came upon a riderless horse nipping what grass remained after the frosts preliminary to winter. The trappings denoted that the rider was above the ordinary woodchopper and trapper, and it was evident that some gentleman had met with an accident. She rode about till she caught sight of a man sitting on the ground leaning against a tree. Riding up to him, she asked him what was his trouble. She did not know that he was the father of her lover, and he did not know that she was his son's sweetheart.

"I am much pleased to see you, my dear young lady," he said feebly. "In chasing a boar my horse stumbled and fell, his whole weight coming down on my leg, which I fear is broken. I beg of you to catch him that I may get back to my hunting lodge."

Gretchen dashed away after the horse and soon returned leading him by the bridle. Dismounting, she endeavored to assist the man to rise, but in the effort to do so the pain of a broken leg threw him into a faint. Gretchen waited till he had come back to consciousness, when the two consulted what should [illegible] were very [illegible] any move. Their only plan was to wait for some woodcutter to come and remove the injured man on his sledge.

An hour passed. It was coming dusk, and yet no one had come. The invalid was growing despondent and somewhat terrorized at the prospect of spending the night in the forest. Then the girl asked him if he would consent to stay alone while she went for assistance. He agreed to the plan. She mounted her horse and was about to ride away when a distant bark was heard. She waited, listening. The bark was answered by one near by.

"I cannot leave you," she said. "There are wolves near at hand."

Bischoff blanched. "But, my dear lady," he said, "if there are wolves you must go. I cannot consent that you should perish because I must perish."

She looked at him with a surprised expression, not seeming to understand him. Her ancestors had not been accustomed to fear any danger. It was a part of their lives. And as to leaving one of their companions to suffer death to insure their own safety, such a thing had not occurred to them. It did not occur to this faraway offspring that had never known any surroundings except those in which they had lived. She cast a quick glance at the horses, as much as to say, "They will suffice to feed the wolves if there are not too many of them." Then she took up Bischoff's rifle and examined it. It was no breechloader of the present day. Every charge had to be rammed home before another could be fired. A small rifle was hanging from the saddle of her horse. She unhooked it and laid it beside the man. Then she led her horse some fifty yards away, tied him to a tree and did the same with Herr Bischoff's horse, placing the animals on different sides of them. All these preparations she made as a general expecting an attack would dispose of his means of defense. The last preparation was the gathering of what wood she could find and the lighting of a fire.

It was quite dark before the first wolf was seen, and then only two eyes like coals of fire appeared. Frightful neighs were heard from both the horses as the brutes sprang upon them. The fire kept off the wolves, though Gretchen stood before it, her rifle in hand, and if one of them came too near she picked him off with unerring aim, reloading immediately. There was plenty of powder and ball at hand and so long as it was not necessary to fire rapidly the ammunition could be utilized. Bischoff sat with his rifle ready to shoot, while Gretchen reloaded, and with the two, the fire and the horses to satisfy the wolves' hunger the prospect was fair—that is, if not too far prolonged.

Herr Bischoff always referred to that period from the fall of darkness till daybreak as the "horrible night." For twelve hours the girl stood defending him, and then when a light began to permeate the forest the wolves were seen stealing away between the trunks of the trees. An hour later a [illegible] with a horse and an empty [illegible] came by on his way for wood [illegible] off was lifted on the sledge and taken to the schloss.

One morning Carl Bischoff, while attending lectures at the [illegible] received a letter from his father giving an account of his adventure and telling his son that he was at a tumbledown schloss not far from the lodge with a broken leg. He desired Carl to come to him and as soon as he was able to be moved to take him home. Carl first went to the lodge, where he communicated with Gretchen, telling her that she had saved and was nursing his father and asking her not to recognize him (Carl) when he appeared.

This matter having been arranged between the lovers, Carl appeared at the schloss. When he had embraced his father and they had rejoiced that he had been spared to his family the latter said:

"Carl, I have a new scheme for you."

"Oh, father," said Carl, "you are always having new schemes! What is this one?"

"You remember the marriage plan I had for you. Well, I have changed my mind. This girl who has saved me is in truth a wild looking thing"—

"Very."

"But she has descended from great people. I think it quite possible your mother can take her and make a lady of her. Now, I wish you—if I can get her for you—to marry her. It is quite likely that by repairing this venerable pile and your taking the additional name of Gehrenstein at her father's death you may assume the title. This will be a better platform from which to enter public life"—

"Father, say no more. I cannot consent one day to please you by falling in with your selection of a wife for me and another falling in with another scheme."

"I will double the amount to be settled on you."

"Desist."

"I will spend a hundred thousand marks on this schloss."

"Do not tempt me. I am in love."

The father sighed. "With whom?" he asked lugubriously.

The son put his arms about his father's neck.

"With this girl, my old poppy, whom you have called a wild thing and who has preserved you for me."

"You love this girl?"

"Yes."

"And yet only last week you agreed to marry another."

"I knew you would change your mind."

This was the last dream Herr Bischoff had for his son, and it turned out a reality. The schloss was renewed [illegible] its ancient splendor and [illegible]

A SNAKE STORY.

The Reptiles Were Frozen Stiff, but That Didn't Harm Them.

A naturalist once told how in a thicket on a mountain side he saw a man kill a rattlesnake. He beat the life out of it with a club and continued the pounding till it was mangled beyond recognition. When the naturalist remonstrated the man said. "Boss, you can't kill a rattlesnake too dead."

On one occasion a boat bound for the United States from Rio de Janeiro touched at Pernambuco, where the mate drove a bargain with a snake dealer for a half dozen reptiles of various sizes.

The mate had them in a cage on deck and charged a sailor with the duty of washing it out with sea water every evening. All went well as long as the weather was mild, but on the night before the gulf stream was crossed the sailor left a quantity of water in the cage, and about thirty hours from port a biting gale struck the ship.

All hands were busy with the storm, and the snakes were forgotten. When the mate thought of them and went to look after their condition he found them frozen stiff and apparently as dead as the proverbial doornail.

The dealer for whom the mate had brought them came on board the following day. He professed great disappointment over the loss of his intended purchase, but offered to take the snakes away as a kindness to the mate. He gathered them in his arms like so much firewood and carried them home. But a rival dealer afterward told the officer that plenty of warm water had resuscitated the snakes and that they had been sold to various museums not a bit the worse for their "death" by freezing.—Harper's Weekly.

Grand, Gloomy and Peculiar.

There was a marked contrast between Lincoln's manner, which was always pleasant and even genial, and that of Stanton. The latter's stern, spectacled visage commanded instant respect and in many cases inspired fear. In receiving visitors, and they were legion, Stanton seldom or never sat down, but stood before a high desk as the crowd passed before him and one by one presented their requests or complaints, which were rapidly disposed of. THE HIGH COST OF LIVING REDUCED

Much has been said about the high cost of living, its causes, and the possibilities of its reduction. But little has been said about the most costly leak: the false economy existing today in nearly every household.

Much foodstuffs are bought with but one point in view: "How cheap can I get it" without a thought of quality or "after cost." One of the most serious is baking powder.

By the use of perfect baking powder the housewife can derive as much economy as from any other article used in baking and cooking. In selecting the baking powder, therefore, care should be exercised to purchase one that retains its original strength and always remains the same, thus making the food sweet and wholesome and producing sufficient leavening gas to make the baking light.

Very little of this leavening gas is produced by the cheap baking powders, making it necessary to use double the quantity ordinarily required to secure good results.

You cannot experiment every time you make a cake or biscuits, or test the strength of your baking powder to find out how much of it you should use; yet with most baking powders you should do this for they are put together so carelessly they are never uniform, the quality and strength varying with each can purchased.

Calumet Baking Powder is made of chemically pure ingredients of tested strength. Experienced chemists put it up. The proportions of the different materials remain always the same. Sealed in air-tight cans, Calumet Baking Powder does not alter in strength and is not affected by atmospheric changes.

In using Calumet you are bound to have uniform bread, cake or biscuits, as Calumet does not contain any cheap, useless or adulterating ingredients so commonly used to increase the weight. Further, it produces pure, wholesome food, and is a baking powder of rare merit; therefore, is recommended by leading physicians and chemists. It complies with all pure food laws, both STATE and NATIONAL. The goods are moderate in price, and any lady purchasing Calumet from her grocer, if not satisfied with it, can return it and have her money refunded.

A Garden of Friends.

One of the prettiest corners of a certain girl's garden is that in which every plant has been the gift of some special friend. The sweet old-fashioned flowers that bloom there have thus a double significance, and their owner persuades herself that while they flourish she may be very sure that she is not forgotten. A fragrant clump of pinks was set in place by her dearest school friend, and now that this friend is living abroad she likes to think that every breath of perfume brings her a kindly thought of her old chum. A garden of friendship is a pretty fancy, and one that gives lasting pleasure.

It Revolted Him.

William Loeb, Jr., at a dinner in New York, referred with a smile to the harsher penalties, even to imprisonment, that are now to be inflicted upon smugglers.

"They take it hard, very hard, these smugglers," said Mr. Loeb. "Revolted at the size of their fines, they make me think of George White, the chicken thief.

"'What!' George shouted reproachfully on hearing his sentence. 'What! Ten dollars for stealin' that chicken? Why, judge, I could 'a' bought a smarter hen for 50 cents!'"

Metropolitan Dailies Giving Advice How to Check Rheumatism and Kidney Trouble.

This is a simple home recipe now being made known in all the larger cities through the newspapers. It is intended to check the many cases of Rheumatism and dread kidney trouble which have made so many cripples, invalids and weaklings of some of our brightest and strongest people.

The druggists everywhere, even in the smallest communities, have been notified to supply themselves with the ingredients, and the sufferer will have no trouble to obtain them. The prescription is as follows: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce, and Compound Syrup of Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in a bottle. The dose is one teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

Recent experiments in hospital cases prove this simple mixture effective in Rheumatism. Because of its positive action upon the eliminative tissues of the kidneys, it compels these most vital organs to filter from the blood and system the waste impurities and uric acid which are the cause of rheumatism. It cleanses the kidneys, strengthens them and removes quickly such symptoms as backache, blood disorders, bladder weakness, frequent urination, painful scalding and discolored urine. It acts as a gentle, thorough regulator to the entire kidney structure.

Those who suffer and are accustomed to purchase a bottle of medicine should not let a little inconvenience interfere with making this up, or have your druggist do it for you.

When Virginia Bought a Dog

By JANE OSBORN

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press

One cool autumn evening as Burton West was leaving the Comstocks, after his usual game of cribbage with his senior partner, Virginia was waiting for him on the porch.

"Hello, Jinny," said Burton, somewhat surprised. "Where have you been?"

"Haven't been anywhere," was Virginia's answer. "Just waiting for you."

Virginia started down the stone steps from the door and beckoned Burton to follow.

"I have something to tell you," she exclaimed. "I don't want him to know." She cast a furtive glance at the house to indicate her father, Mr. Caleb Comstock.

She drew close to Burton's side and spoke eagerly. "It's something I want you to do. It would be the most natural thing in the world and it won't cost you a penny. Say you'll do it!" She looked steadily at him. It struck Burton quite by force that her eyes were pretty and that the "child" Virginia had grown to be quite a woman.

"Go on, child," he said. "I won't promise till I know."

"There is a perfectly lovely terrier—one of those nice, little brindle Bostons with little round brown eyes that make you want to hug him—and he's going at $50. I saw him at the dealer's today and I want him dreadfully."

Virginia checked herself with a deep sigh. "He'd keep me from getting lonesome. I know I'd like him."

"You lonesome, Jinny!" exclaimed Burton with sudden sympathy. "Why didn't you ever let us know before?" He recalled guiltily that he and Mr. Comstock had never thought to invite the girl to join their game.

At First the Dog was the Chief Object of Interest.

"I could get him for fifty dollars," Virginia went on rapidly. "I am sure that is a great bargain. Now, there is my birthday money that father gave me, fifty dollars, and it is all mine to spend as I choose. Father would think I was silly to put it all on a dog. He thinks all dogs are alike. But if some one gave him to me he couldn't object, could he?"

"Go on," commanded Burton, unwilling to commit himself.

"I would pay for him and see about everything, and all you would have to do would be to give him to me. Won't you, please?"

"I wouldn't very likely give you a fifty dollar dog. Your father would surely see through the trick."

"I should think you would," pleaded Virginia. "You are in business with father and you spend so much time at our house. People always feel indebted to their hostesses, and I am your hostess. If you don't want father to think you bought the dog you could intimate that he was yours and you didn't want him and you thought I might. It wouldn't be a fib, because I can have him sent right to your rooms."

Something—caution or discretion—was at work within Burton West, but this new feeling of pity for the lonely girl and anxiety to make her happy, led him, with little further delay, to agree to his end of the bargain. He knew well enough how stern Mr. Comstock was in spite of his love for Virginia.

The next morning Virginia went to the pet store with $50 in neatly folded bills. "Please send him to Mr. Burton West," she told the dealer, giving the young man's address. "Be sure to have him there by five o'clock."

That night Mr. Comstock was somewhat surprised and distinctly pleased when his junior partner put in his appearance shortly after dinner for a game of cribbage. He never came more than two evenings a week and Mr. Comstock had sometimes feared that young West was growing weary of the older man's society.

"Don't mean you are ready for another game," said Mr. Comstock, warming up with pleasure. "Well, well, Burton, you can stand more cribbage than any other man I ever saw."

When they had settled down to their game and their cigars, Virginia slipped into the room.

"Want to watch my hand, daughter?" asked the father, who always thought of Virginia as a child in spite of her nineteen years.

Virginia drew a chair up to her father's side and cast an anxious look at Burton. Burton winked reassuringly when Mr. Comstock's eyes were on his cards, and when a suitable pause came he said slowly and deliberately:

"I say, Mr. Comstock, I brought a trifle for Virginia. It is in a basket in the passage under the front porch. Shall I get it, Virginia, or do you want to discover it for yourself?"

Virginia dashed out of the room, out the door, to embrace her pet. In the meantime, Burton with what tact he could command tried to explain and make light of the matter with Mr. Comstock. But Mr. Comstock was not to be appeased, and Burton was more than relieved when their usual number of hands were over and he was on his way home. In his hat on the hat rack in the hall Burton found a little slip of a note.

"I am so happy. Thank you a million times. Devotedly,

"Jinny."

"Poor little girl," said Burton to himself as he slipped the note into his pocket.

The next day Burton did not see Mr. Comstock, and when he returned from business he was surprised to find the dog whining in his rooms. There was no note accompanying him, and no explanation had been left by the Comstock servant who had delivered him.

The next day Mr. Comstock summoned the young man to his office.

He looked at him with an expression that was expected to carry with it utter scorn, but which, in spite of itself, showed a grain of amusement. Then he cleared his throat and rose.

"See here, young man," he began, solemnly. "Is this honest? Is it fair? When I have been entertaining you in my house as a gentleman, and have cared for you as a son!"

Burton actually turned pale with alarm, for he was in a difficult position and could think of no means of escape.

"If you cared for the girl—mere child like that—you should have told me."

"It was a mere trifle," stammered Burton. "I thought she might care for the dog."

"A mere trifle, indeed," broke in Mr. Comstock. "I guess I know the value of a dog as well as any one else. That dog is a thoroughbred, and I know it. Don't try to fool me!"

Mr. Comstock had worked himself into such a state of indignation that the grain of amusement had disappeared. Any explanation on Burton's part, had he had any to make, would have been useless, and the young man slipped out of the room to think over the unfortunate affair.

As Burton thought the matter over, it occured to him that really the most embarrassing problem he had to solve was concerned with Virginia and not with Mr. Comstock. The dog for which she had spent her hoarded birthday money was in his possession, and she was in the meantime without dog and without money.

As he could not return the dog, he could return the money, and it was with this conviction that he counted out five ten-dollar bills from his wallet and folded them into an envelope. He could get it to her somehow, though he wasn't sure how. Then a note came from Virginia. She thanked him again for his kindness.

"I have a great idea about the dog," she went on to say. "If you will keep him I can still manage to see him. Could you send some one out in the park with him in the morning before father is up? I will meet him there, and then perhaps I can think of some place to send him, where I can visit him."

This seemed to Burton a fairly good scheme, and as he put the fifty dollars back into his wallet he decided to conduct the dog to the park himself the next morning.

It was decided that for the present, at least, Burton should keep the dog and for two weeks Virginia and the young man arose early for a morning stroll in the park. At first the dog was the chief object of interest, but when on the fourteenth day Burton in his hurry forgot the dog entirely, Virginia did not notice the omission.

"Do you remember, Jinny," Burton asked her, "when you wanted me to give you that rascal of a terrier, do you remember how you went about it?"

Virgina denied any recollection with a pretty toss of her pretty head.

"You made me promise to do it before you told me what it was. Now I want you to say 'yes' to what I have to ask."

"Yes," said Virginia, promptly. "Now tell what it is."

"Jinny, I want you to marry me." Burton looked down laughing into Virginia's blushing face.

MAKE MONEY WITH LEGHORNS

New Jersey Plant Carries 5,000 of This Breed—Mammoth Incubator Holds 6,000 Eggs.

Some weeks ago I wrote that I visited a plant in New Jersey carrying 10,000 White Leghorns. While visiting this it was my good fortune to see also a plant adjoining which carried 5,000 White Leghorn hens. This plant was owned by one person, and comprised 240 acres, of which about 60 acres of the poorest land was devoted to chickens, for which the rest of the farm grew feed.

I was shown all over the plant in one building, which consisted of the same type of house that I saw on the neighboring farm, containing 500 of selected breeders which were being trap-nested; the rest of the hens were sheltered in the same style of house, writes F. A. Tiffany, in Country Gentleman. I also noticed about 3,000 as good-looking pullets as I ever saw. There were also about 2,000 cockerels, of which the owner intended to pick the best for breeding purposes, and dispose of the remainder as broilers.

Prize S. C. White Leghorn.

What appealed to me most was the cleanness of the houses and the mammoth incubator which held 6,000 eggs. Being used to oil-heated incubators myself, I was somewhat skeptical, so asked the owner several questions as to the regulation of the heat in the different chambers; I received the assurance that the machine did the work nicely and at a big saving in fuel. On leaving the station bound for home, I noticed a goodly number of crates of eggs and poultry, and found that this farm alone was shipping eight crates of eggs and four coops of broilers. These eggs were produced that day, as they were shipped every evening and the eggs arrived in New York and were sold before they were a day old.

Not only was this breeder successful as a poultryman, but as a farmer also, his fields of corn, alfalfa and mangel beets looking very well considering the dry weather. The corn was the best-looking field that I saw on my trip through that portion of the state. I was told that the owner would not have to buy any food for his fowls except meat scraps, this alone saving the greater part of his expenses. The appearance of the plant in general and the condition of the stock and the quantity of produce shipped showed without a doubt that the owner of this farm was deriving a profit from his plant.

CARE OF TURKEYS IN FALL

When Weather Begins to Turn Cold Grain Ration of Bird Should Be Increased.

As soon as the weather begins to turn cold and food becomes scarce the grain ration of growing turkeys should be increased. A mixture of wheat and corn is advisable, fed sparingly at first and gradually increased till they are getting all they will eat. The turkeys at this season should be fed regularly three times a day. They should on no account be kept in confinement, but should have free range to encourage the formation of a good frame on which to accumulate a large amount of flesh later when forced feeding commences. While free range conduces to vigor and growth, birds having grain feed will not run off all fat in a too strenuous search for sustenance.

Those designed for heavy feeding should be in the best condition after an abundance of exercise and plenty of grain feed throughout the early fall. As soon as they are well accustomed to grain feed they may be fed once or twice or even trice a day, as their condition indicates, on ground oats (with hulls removed) and corn meal mixed with milk. Feed only the amount of this they will eat up clean with a relish. This mash should be given in addition to a full feed of wheat and corn night and morning. The mash may either be given at noon or at two regular intervals between the morning and night meal. Plenty of grit and fresh water should be before them at all times.

Hen Is Finest Bird.

Farmers are more and more getting behind the old hen. They never will miss it. The hen is the finest bird in the world today.

GUINEA FOWL EGG PRODUCER

Cross Between Pearl and White Seems to Make Hardier and Larger Bird Than Full Blood.

Last spring I undertook to keep an account of the eggs laid by two Pearl guineas and one white guinea hen. I have 168 eggs to their credit already, says a writer in Country Gentleman. The two Pearl hens were broken up and some eggs were lost early in the season; though they laid a nestful of eggs and went to setting I did not find the nest and so did not get an account of them, but I feel safe in estimating 40 eggs lost for which I have no account. The hens got broken up and in about three weeks I found them with a nest of 30 eggs. Counting the ones lost at 40, this brings my account up to 208 eggs for three hens. I feel sure that the two Pearl hens laid four-fifths of the 208 eggs, which would make them 83 eggs each. The white hen did not lay many eggs. I expect to get at least 40 eggs yet before cold weather.

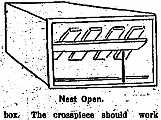
Guinea hens will usually lay from April until late in October and if kept broken up when they get broody, they will lay nearly every day. The white hens do not seem to be nearly as good egg producers as the Pearls, at least my white hens have not done as good a business as the Pearl hens. A cross between the two breeds seems to make a hardier and larger guinea than full blood of either.

SIMPLE TRAP NEST FOR HENS

Not Much Trouble to Arrange Box That Will Allow Breeder to Keep Tab on His Fowls.

It is not a great deal of trouble to make a trap-nest that will answer the purpose of keeping tab on biddy. Any box about 14 inches square and two feet long will be good enough.

A little study of the pictures herewith shown will show one how they should be made. Nail the slats to the cross piece about three-quarters of the distance from the bottom, hang in the crosspiece on a couple of nails driven through the sides of the box. The crosspiece should work easily.

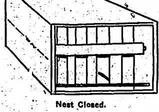


Nest Open.

Inside of the box, about half-way back, nail another piece of narrow board and arrange the nest back of that.

The trap is simply set by raising the slats inward from the bottom eight or nine inches and propping it up with a small stick.

When the hen goes poking along into the box her back raises the slats and allows the stick to fall down; and as she passes through, the trap drops behind her.



Nest Closed.

A similar door can be put in the back of the box, and in this way the hen can liberate herself.

POULTRY NOTES

Hens dread to get into dirty nest boxes.

Boiled onions are good for chickens and men.

The poultry house should be white washed before cold weather.

The experienced poultryman breeds only to his best winter layers.

Poorly bred stock of any kind is never a great source of profit.

Start the trap nests so that it can be known which are the best winter layers.

Work up a strain of hens that will lay. Save the eggs from the best layers and set them.

Rather than have the poultry house overcrowded you had better eat some of the less desirable birds.

Now is a very good time to save out the best pullets to take the place of the discarded hens this fall.

The fowls that are small for their age should go now. Their room is of more value than their company.

Owing to the difficulty of securing fresh eggs, most of the mining companies in Mexico have their own poultry yards.

Keep your hens from straying over on the land of your neighbor. Be particular about this if he has any crop growing there.

Before it is too late gather up a barrelful of dry earth, so that a box ful or two of dust may be given the fowls in their houses during the winter.

Remember to give your hens animal food in some form. It may be milk, meat, cut green bone, beef scrap and for a small flock the table waste may have meat enough.

The Significant Wink.

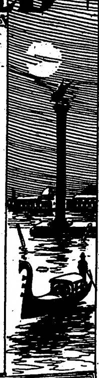
The GLORY of VENICE RESTORED

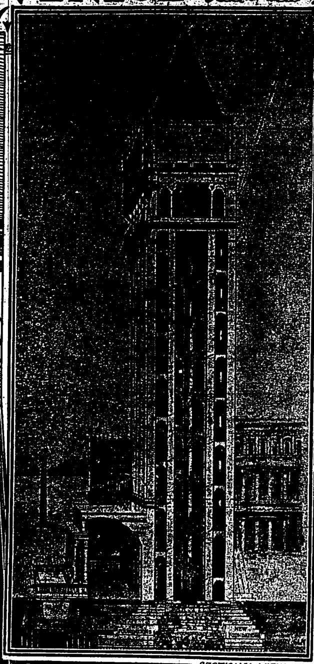


THE task of restoring the old campanile or bell tower of St. Mark's at Venice is nearing completion, and it is confidently expected that the bells of San Marco will break their nine years' silence and again ring out on St. Mark's day, April 25, 1911.

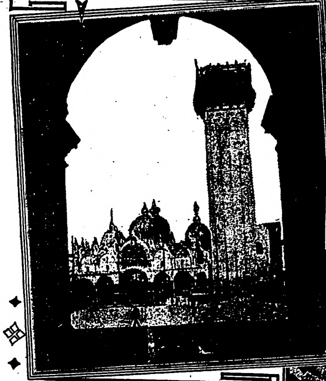
The restoration of this famous tower—which collapsed suddenly on July 14, 1902, after a proud existence of 1,014 years—has proved a greater undertaking than anticipated, some of the details presenting technical difficulties. The intention was to reproduce the old tower as faithfully as possible, and with that object in view the bricks, of which there are over a million, were specially selected and laid. The bricks are each 12 inches long, 6 inches wide and 3 inches deep, and the clay is twice mixed to secure homogeneity. These bricks, however, contained salt, which threatened to turn the tower white, and such an outcry was raised among the Venetians that the work was suspended while an inquiry was held. It was found that by prolonged soaking in water the salt was removed.

The tower is quadrangular, nearly 40 feet square at the base and 350 feet high, including the pinnacle in the shape of a pyramid, the summit being crowned by the figure of an angel with spread wings. The foundations of the ancient buildings were found to be good, but none too wide, so that considerable strengthening had to be effected. No scaffolding has been used, a sliding platform being contrived to rise with the progress of the building.

The shaft, which was completed last December, is composed of an inner and an outer shaft, between which mounts the inclined plane which leads to the bell chamber. The walls of the outer shaft are six feet thick and the inclined plane is lit by 36 windows. In the new tower the shafts are bound together by iron rods and the pilasters at the angles of the inner shaft are similarly united. This will cause any future fall of the tower to be as one mass instead of a gentle subsiding.



SECTIONAL VIEW OF THE NEW CAMPANILE OF VENICE



THE NEW CAMPANILE AS IT NOW IS

ONE OF THE FIVE FALLEN BELLS OF THE OLD CAMPANILE

Careful searching among the ruins of the old campanile resulted in the finding of nearly all the fragments of the beautiful bronze doors, statues and bas-reliefs of Sansovino's famous loggetta, which has been restored with wonderful care and devotion. The estimated cost of the present tower is over 2,000,000 francs, this sum having been raised by public subscription and a large grant from the state.

When the tower fell, of the five bells only the largest was not broken; the other four have been replaced and were presented to his beloved Venice by Pope Pius X. The lions of St. Mark, which originally occupied the centers of the north and south sides of the attic and were defaced during the French occupation, are to be replaced.

The tower has a strangely hard and new appearance against the soft, time-mellowed facade of the church of St. Mark with its wild horses and curious Oriental-looking domes, and seems almost as incongruous as the large steamboats and motor launches which have now challenged the supremacy of the graceful gondola on Venetian waterways. The Venetians were, however, wise to rebuild the campanile, for the long, low lines of the surrounding palaces need this sky-piercing shaft to complete the effect even as London needs the dome of St. Paul's to lift its sombre roofs in an upward effort.

The bells of the old campanile were shattered by the fall of the tower, but they have now, as stated above, been replaced by the generosity of the present pope. They were cast on St. Mark's day, April 25, and will again be solemnly rung from the tower on St. Mark's day of next year.

"By kind permission of Professor Giuseppe del Ficcolo, chief superintendent of the reconstruction of the loggetta, I was permitted," writes a correspondent, "to witness the remarkable work which has been accomplished within one of the arcades of the doge's palace. Here, within the shadow of the beautiful staircase which mounts to the upper story, and within sight of the window from which Silvio Pellico looked out during his many years of confinement, there has been pieced together with infinite pains the wonderful renaissance facade of Sansovino."

To give an example of the method which has been pursued one may take the case of three columns of breccia corallina which form part of the facade facing St. Mark's. One has been put together in 13 pieces, another in 32 pieces, while a third was so much damaged that it has had to be replaced by a block of Asiatic marble known as sette basi dorato, so called from a block of this marble having been found in a villa near Rome belonging to Settimio Passo, a Roman consul.

"By kind permission of Signor Edoardo Dott-Piacentini, chief superintendent of the reconstruction of the campanile, I was permitted," writes a correspondent, "to thoroughly inspect the new tower which is rising above the fairy city of Venice." Passing through the palisading which keeps out the ordinary public from the base of the campanile one first observes the pans in which each brick, after being brought down from Treviso to the Giudecca has been carefully washed in order to extract any destructive salts from its composition. In some cases the brick has been washed four or five times in order to thoroughly cleanse it. So careful has the committee been to secure the best materials, that the first portion of the reconstructed brick work was removed owing to suspicions as to the quality of the bricks supplied. The brick shaft now rises completely clear of all scaffolding and impedimenta, and from certain points of view the old effect of the piazza is again coming to life.

Entering the archway at the base of the tower one ascends by a series of sloping ways made of reinforced concrete. The interior brickwork is a marvel of fine setting, and when struck with the hand a portion of it will resound like a drum. Reaching the present summit, one is able to examine the progress with the stonework of the dado, which in turn will support the pyramid apex of the tower.

On the summit of all will be fixed a gilded figure of an angel, pivoted at the head of a pendulum, so that when wintry winds sweep over the Venetian lagoons the strain upon the tower on this figure will be reduced to a minimum. The view from the summit of the tower is a fascinating and in some respects a surprising one, for from this elevation none of the canals are visible, and the only one of the innumerable bridges which one can discern is the Ponte del Lovo—a Venetian corruption of the Italian word lupo, which signifies a wolf.

THE WELSH EISTEDDFOD

The National Eisteddfod of Wales, celebrated every autumn, is one of the most picturesque festivals remaining in this commercial age. The Gentlewoman remarks especially on the growing part taken by women.

Last year when the Gorsedd, or meeting to proclaim the bards, was held in Kensington Gardens in the early morning no one looked better than Lady St. Davids in her silken robes of emerald green, or more graceful than the countess Maitland, whose grace and charm one longs to see added to the Grecian folds of an Ovate's robes.

And now a word on the Gorsedd itself. On the Logan Stone the Arch-Druid Dyfed was attended by all his bards, some in white robes and others in blue, and the Ovates in green. The twelve chief bards stood by their sacred unhewn stones. Ancient prayers were recited. The huge Brythonic sword of peace was drawn and sheathed three times with the question by the Arch-Druid, "A bes Heddwch?" to which all present responded by a shout "Heddwch!" ("Peace.")

After each shout of "Heddwch!" the sword was sheathed and the draught of mead from the "Hirlas" horn was drunk by the Arch-Druid. Then followed the initiation of new members into the Gorsedd and short Englynion (alliterative stanzas) were recited in Welsh by the bards, who in turn stood on the Logan Stone and received the applause as well as the laughter of appreciation, for many of the Englynion are exceedingly witty as well as good poetry.

The chief harpist, Ap Eosy Birth, played, and Eos Dar sang his characteristically Welsh Pennillion, which in their monotonous but varied chanting on a very few notes remind one of the east and its primitive music.

Symbolic offerings of the fruits and flowers of the earth—the oak, leek, mistletoe, corn, heather and vervain—form the bouquet which every year is presented by some prominent woman; by the late Lady Llanover, for instance, who always appeared at the Gorsedd in national costume and insisted upon her servants wearing it on all occasions.

In Wales the Eisteddfod is naturally more characteristically Welsh than when it is held in London. The choirs and instrumental music are listened to with breathless attention, while again and again one hears "Da iawn" (Very good"), or sometimes "No good," as the case may be, while for the time being all is forgotten but the music.

The culminating interest of the Eisteddfod is centered in the chairing of the bard on Thursday—the award for the greatest alliterative poem of the year. The adjudicators read their decision, criticising the different poems sent in, and announcing at the close the nom de plume of the successful competitor. The whole building is galvanized with intense excitement. The winning author stands, and two bards are sent to conduct him amid strains of music to his chair of [illegible] in the bardic circle.

UNKIND JOLT FROM ADAM

As If Eve Hadn't Sorrow Enough, Her Partner Had to Add to the Affliction.

Adam had just received his notice of ejectment.

He stared at it a long time in silence, while Eve, crouched in a dusky corner, softly whimpered.

Presently the father of mankind looked around.

As Eve caught his angry eye her whimper changed to a gulping sob.

"Well," he sternly said, "you've certainly put us in a fine mess with your silly curiosity! And yet when I refused to have anything to do with your apple scheme you called me a poor fool. Do you remember that you called me a poor fool?"

"Ye-es," sobbed Eve.

"Well, there's but one question I want to ask you?" said Adam.

"What is it?" gasped the first mother.

"Who's looney now?" he harshly demanded.

Then he turned away abruptly and started to pick up the family gourds and the tent poles.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. A Shattered Romance

A True Story of the Secret Service

By COL. H. C. WHITLEY, Former Chief U. S. Secret Service

THE professional criminal's brain is a constantly working laboratory of the most ingenious plots for over-reaching the officers of the law. Ever awake, ever thoughtful and ever active—at glaring noontide as well as at black midnight—in the brown-stone front and lowly tenement—everywhere and at every hour is this insidious enemy of social order wideawake and on the alert.

It takes an acute mind and level head to contend against and bring the ingenious criminal to the bar of justice. During our civil war counterfeiting blossomed into a fine art. It became almost omnipresent in every channel of trade and the government detectives were impotent to totally eradicate the evil, expose the plots and defeat the operations of these criminals, until some time after peace had been restored.

To meet and destroy these vampires of society it was often necessary to resort to measures of seeming wrong, that good results might be obtained. One of the most ingenious criminals that fell into the hands of the secret service division during my official career was one Thomas Brownie, the son of a man of wealth, occupying a fine residence on an aristocratic street in New York City.

Young Brownie was possessed of a handsome, refined face, slight figure, polished address and the self poise of a man thoroughly trained in the best circles. Reared under the tuition of a good and tender mother and supplied with every luxury by a kind and indulgent father, it seems quite unaccountable that he should choose to enter the society of criminals. On account of his expertness in dodging the officers of the law he gained the confidence of many of the leading counterfeiters and forgers of the country. When I first learned of him he was leading the life of a man of inexhaustible means. His extravagance in dress and living was in keeping with the man of millions. Through various sources of information it was discovered that he was handling counterfeit money in a wholesale way and that he was connected with what was then known as the Miner gang of "Coniackers."

He had for some time been cute enough to deal in the bogus stuff in a manner to baffle the skill of the government officers. On more than one occasion when the officers thought him to be almost in their grasp, he would manage to elude them and disappear from their sight. The time came when neither the subtle ingenuity of his plans nor the wealth and respectability of his family served to shield him from the hands of the officers. He was a difficult man to capture, but notwithstanding his remarkable skill and adroitness he met his match at last.

It was while at the height of his criminal glory and while he was daily strutting Broadway with the air of a man of unimpeachable character and inexhaustible wealth that evidence sufficient for his conviction had been gathered and brought to my office. I at once directed his arrest and plans were laid for his capture.

At about the same time he suddenly disappeared from his usual haunts and the officers were unable to discover his hiding place.

Whenever the officers sought him in a place where his presence had been reported they were always just a little too late. The man they were seeking had changed his location.

When next heard of he would be in some other part of the city. In the course of time he was spoken of among the detectives as a will-o'the-wisp, as he was forever flitting about.

Two secret service officers were detailed to keep a careful watch upon his father's aristocratic mansion. For weeks, night and day, this was kept up without success. The man we were in quest of never put in an appearance there. The only persons seen to go out and in were an elderly gentleman and a young woman of fine appearance, presumably his daughter. There were also two servants, neither bearing the slightest resemblance to young Brownie.

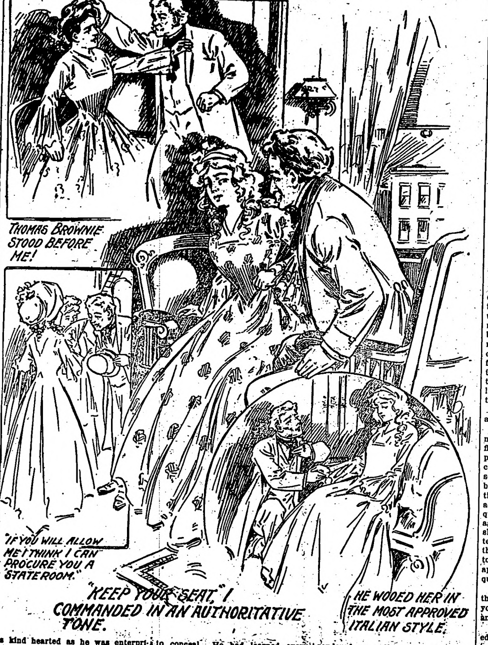
One of the detectives employed in watching the house was a prepossessing young Italian. I will name him Louis Merito. He was well educated and of fine address. Watchful and of a nervous, sanguine temperament, he was nearly always sure of being the lucky one when sent with others to make a capture.

Late one pleasant afternoon several days after the young Italian had taken a position near the Brownie mansion, an elegantly attired young lady was seen coming down the front steps of the house, carrying a traveling bag. She entered a carriage in waiting and it rolled away at a moderate pace. Merito followed on foot and was able to keep the carriage in view. When the young lady crossed the gang plank of the steamer "Providence," then plying between New York and Fall River, Merito was close at her heels. She stepped up into the grand salon and after moving about for a few moments, beckoned to a nut-brown chambermaid. When the servant came near the young lady opened a pearl inlaid portemonnaie, and taking from it a ten dollar bill, requested her to procure a stateroom and passage ticket to the city of Boston.

A few minutes afterwards the chambermaid returned and informed the young lady that the staterooms on the boat were all engaged.

The young lady seemed greatly disappointed and said it was a sorry predicament for her to be placed in; and if the deep drawn sigh she uttered was an index of her feelings at that moment, she was not only greatly disappointed, but at a loss to know what to do.

Merito, who was near at hand, was as kind hearted as he was enterprising, and upon the impulse of the moment he pushed himself to the front and with the politest of French bows, said: "Please excuse me, young lady, I am very much pained to witness your distress, and I should be glad to assist you. If you will allow me I think I can procure you a stateroom."



THOMAS BROWNIE STOOD BEFORE ME!
"IF YOU WILL ALLOW ME I THINK I CAN PROCURE YOU A STATEROOM."
"KEEP YOUR SEAT," I COMMANDED IN AN AUTHORITATIVE TONE.
HE WOOED HER IN THE MOST APPROVED ITALIAN STYLE.

In modest tones she thanked him for his kindness and confidingly offered him the ten dollar bill that had been returned to her by the chambermaid.

"Never mind the money until I know what I can do for you."

He thereupon went below. The sister, he thought, is not responsible for the sins of her brother; besides, the making of her acquaintance might give him a better opportunity for discovering the whereabouts of the man he was seeking. In his imagination he was sure that she was going to meet him.

This was his opportunity, thought he. He would ingratiate himself into the good graces of this young woman and if possible learn the whereabouts of her brother.

The oily-tongued detective had no great difficulty in securing the coveted prize. Steamboat clerks are always wise enough to reserve an extra ticket or two for special purposes.

When Merito returned to the grand salon and handed the young lady her tickets she was profuse in her thanks and expressed her deep obligation. As she held the tickets between her jeweled fingers she beamed a smile and displayed a set of pearly white teeth, encircled by a pair of ruby lips, and oh, such eyes! More sparkling even than the diamond solitaires that adorned her ears.

The detective's heart was throbbing wildly. He could scarcely contain himself. It was a case of love at first sight. The hot blood of the Italian was surging to his head. He was quite bewildered.

Collecting his scattered senses he was soon able to convince the young woman that he was a man of consequence, and that while their meeting was but casual, he was greatly delighted because of the opportunity offered to make her acquaintance.

It was late in the evening when they bade each other good night with a promise to meet again on the arrival of the steamer at Fall River in the early morning.

Merito had not only discovered that Miss Brownie was lovely and fascinating, but that she was frank, confiding and truthful. She had nothing to conceal. He had learned everything. She was a young and sensitive maiden who had courageously ventured from her father's home with the purpose of meeting a much loved but wayward brother. How, then, could he help sympathizing with her? Even though his representations in regard to himself were falsely made for the purpose of obtaining her confidence, he believed he was sufficiently shrewd to square himself with her at the proper time.

As deception is ofttimes a part of the detective's stock in trade, he thought there could be no great harm in it after all was understood. It seems that he told her the secret of his being the son of an Italian nobleman of great wealth and that he was traveling incog to gratify his curiosity.

While the story he told was wholly false, he was quite good looking enough and sufficiently genteel in appearance to bear out the statement. From what occurred it was apparent that the young woman herself was somewhat impressed and quite uncertain as to the true status of the detective.

Her story as told to Merito appeared straightforward and truthful. Her mother was dead. Her father, although in the enjoyment of a large income, the result of frugality and well-applied business transactions, was bowed down with grief and very much broken in health because of the wayward course of her darling brother. He had been led astray by evil associates and was being pursued by the government officers, who charged him with dealing in counterfeit money. To evade arrest he had forsaken home and fled to Canada, where she was expecting to meet him.

Learning this, the detective was deeply interested, not only in the brother, but in the sister as well. Indeed, she was the most attractive person he had ever before met. To his mind she was everything that a woman should be. Wealthy, educated and affectionate, she was brave and romantic enough to venture out alone and battle the cold world for the purpose of redeeming her wayward brother. So gentle and unassuming did she appear that he was sure she had a heart overflowing with love.

As these thoughts came meandering through his brain he saw in his eagerness the opportunity of his life. He would somehow be instrumental in saving the brother and thus win the fair girl's gratitude—perhaps her love. He felt sure that he could trust to her generous heart to forgive him for deceiving her by palming himself off as the son of a nobleman.

When the couple arrived in Boston they went at once to the United States hotel, where they took breakfast together. The detective now thought Miss Brownie more fascinating than ever and at the first opportunity he threw discretion to the winds and began wooing in the most approved Italian style. Pressing his suit with an ardor more impetuous than conventional, he begged her to become his wife.

It appears that her deep sorrow, her soft words, and above all, her tears, had quite bewildered him. Real beauty in distress was too much for the warm-blooded Latin, and he surrendered unconditionally. In impassioned terms he declared his love and offered her his heart and hand.

The young woman, although seemingly overcome, was altogether too modest to accept. Somewhat taken back by this premature declaration, she was sufficiently self-poised to assure him that he was pleasing to her and that she deeply appreciated his attention. But she could not take any decisive step in so important a matter without first consulting her father. She felt that it was her first duty to save her brother. To accomplish this she was ready to sacrifice life itself.

Merito, never at a loss for a subterfuge, proposed to interest himself and secure a condonement of her brother's offense through the assistance of the Italian consul at New York. This ray of light was presented in fine Italian style and must have sounded hopeful to the ears of Miss Brownie. Her face now fairly beamed with joy as she assured him she would willingly give all she possessed in the world to effect such a result. She promised to marry him should he succeed in saving her brother from prosecution for his past offenses.

The day following this I received at my New York office a letter marked "personal," which read as follows:

"United States Hotel, Boston, Mass.

"My Dear Chief:

"I write to inform you that I arrived here this morning in company with the sister of Brownie. Through cunning I made her acquaintance and learned everything. She is on the way to meet her brother Thomas. She tells me that he intends to remain outside of the United States unless a compromise can be affected. She says he has offered to furnish information and will assist to break up the Miner gang of counterfeiters. If you will send me special authority and a guarantee that he will not be arrested I will go with his sister and coax him to come to New York. Please forward the papers to me here at once.

"Yours respectfully,
"LOUIS MERITO."

The case was an important one and required my personal attention. If a compromise could be made that would result in the conviction of such men as Miner, I was anxious to make it. I chose to superintend it myself, and the next train that left for Boston took me with it. When I arrived there on the following morning I went directly to the United States hotel, where I met a thoroughly astonished Italian. He was much surprised at my unexpected appearance.

I soon learned enough to place me in possession of the facts in the case so far as the detective was concerned. I then demanded a personal interview with Miss Brownie, which was soon arranged. After introducing me to the lady, Merito retired from the room, as had been previously agreed upon. I found myself in the presence of a tall and stately young woman, tastefully and fashionably dressed. She held in her hand a large fan which she wielded with consummate grace. I found her fully posted on the nature of my business. Inviting me to be seated, she began the conversation and explained to me her proposed trip to Montreal, where she hoped to meet her brother, Thomas Brownie. She had learned through a friend that her brother was anxious to quit counterfeiting and that he could, if given an opportunity, put the government officers in a position to arrest a number of leading counterfeiters. She did not know the particulars, but was sure that her brother would, if permitted to return to New York, render the government important service. She said that her father had nearly lost his mind on account of the action of his son and that he was ready to undergo almost any sacrifice and pay any reasonable sum of money for the purpose of saving his boy.

What she said was quite reasonable, and after questioning her for some time I had about come to the conclusion that her offer, if carried out as promised, would be a good thing for the government.

There were a number of counterfeits then on the market and I was exceedingly anxious to break up the gang by arresting its leaders and securing the plates. The Miner gang had first and last cost the government a considerable sum of money. While talking over the details of the proposed surrender I stepped to a window and raised the shade, upon which the sun suddenly shone forth, lighting up the room and casting its bright rays fully upon the face of the lady before me. Drawing my chair a little nearer and more in front of her I was enabled to look her straight in the face. My eyes resting on hers seemed to disconcert her. She blinked and turned her head. I straightened up a little and stared at her. She started to rise.

"Keep your seat," I commanded, in an authoritative tone.

At this moment I saw defiance mingled with terror in her eyes. At first I had noticed nothing in her appearance or actions to create suspicion. As was quite natural, she now seemed excited. This might have been attributed to a disturbed condition of her mind on account of the actions of her brother—a natural sequence under the circumstances. She again turned towards me and the sun shone upon her face. I at once detected the work of an artist skilled in the use of shades of paint. I noticed, too, that her hair had not the glossy appearance of natural growth. I was quite sure she was in disguise.

"Before this business goes any further," I said, "I want you to remove your false hair and wipe the paint and powder from your face."

As I arose in front of her she started up with an indignant glare and attempted to push me away. In a flash I reached for her chignon. Giving it a quick jerk, its fastenings gave way and it rolled on the carpet. There was no longer any use for concealment. Thomas Brownie stood before me. The game was up. There was no more room for dodging. He began peeling off layer after layer of his feminine apparel. When he had fully disengaged himself from his dressmaker's outfit he opened his traveling bag and proceeded to clothe himself in masculine attire.

Merito, who had during this interview remained in the hall, was now requested to come into the room. I handed him a pair of handcuffs and Brownie immediately put up his hands to receive them. He was completely done for and offered no further resistance.

In taking the trip on the steamer "Providence" and playing the part of a fascinating woman, it was not surprising that Brownie was able to dupe the detective. As a gifted impersonator he could reproduce to a nicety the tones and modulations of the detective's voice. His description and imitation of the impassioned love scene that took place between himself and Merito was very entertaining. Brownie was too crafty and gifted a criminal to run at large. He was put on trial, convicted and sentenced to the Albany penitentiary for a term of fifteen years.

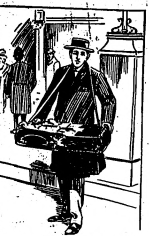
Merito was so chagrined and overcome on account of his escapade with Brownie that he lost his assurance and was unable to face his fellow officers. The last I heard of him he was on the Pacific coast.

STREET VENDER A SCHOLAR

Verses and Dramas Have Been Written by This London Seller of Chocolates.

London.—Outside office hours business men of London have a wonderful and cheap method of absorbing culture. There is stationed on Lothbury, a street just behind the Bank of England, a paragon of learning, with whom anyone desiring to improve his French, German, Spanish, Italian, Latin, Greek or English may converse by buying a penny worth of chocolate.

William Shepperly, a street seller of sweets, is a learned linguist. He was not always a hawker; that is obvious at a first encounter. His French he acquired as a part of the educational course at a Belgian college, where the English boys were fined, almost to the full amount of their pocket money, if they spoke their native tongue. From Belgium Shepperly passed to Spain, and there, in the town of San Juan de Luz, where he was engaged as a correspondence clerk, he acquired a knowledge of Spanish. Latin and Greek were a part of his school curriculum, and Italian came to him by study. From his Dutch wife he acquired some facility in the language of Holland.



Shepperly, the Scholar Hawker.

Seven years ago Shepperly found himself, no longer a young man, out of employment, at the end of his resources and with no prospect of obtaining work. His wife and three young children were dependent on him, and he purchased a large tray, stocked it with chocolates, and took up a corner in the city. He has remained in Lothbury ever since, and would not change his way of living except for something absolutely permanent.

Satisfied with an occupation that procures him a living, he has his books and his pen for intellectual companionship. Every morning he gets up at three o'clock in order to read and write for some hours before taking up his stand on the street. He has written four one-act and two four-act society plays, one of which has been highly praised by a London manager and a provincial manager.

His library is small, but select; it includes a fine copy of "Oedipus Tyrannus," in the original; an ancient copy of Horace is another treasure. At present Balzac is his delectation; he tells that he occasionally indulges in such "light literature." Among modern authors, Carlyle is his favorite and Meredith comes next.

IS A HAVEN FOR AMERICANS

Island of Porto Rico Prophesied as a Future Mecca for Our Wealthy Citizens.

Washington.—Within the next 50 years Porto Rico will be occupied exclusively by American millionaires, according to the opinion of Alfred Zeyas, a resident of San Juan, who says that Americans already are awakening to the picturesqueness of the island, its climatic inducements, and its generally healthy conditions.

"The wealthier people of America are gradually realizing what a great acquisition the island is to the United States. Americans are looking for places of beauty and rest. They are seeking places where they can get away from the ordinary, and for this reason I say," continued Mr. Zeyas, "Porto Rico will eventually be designated as the mecca of America's rich. Here they can motor through miles of mountains, where the scenery equals that of any part of Switzerland. The country is threaded with miles of good roads, the majority of which are macadamized.

"When the automobilist reaches certain altitudes in the center of Porto Rico he can look to all sides of him and view the sea. Not only is the scenery of the island ideal, but the climate is that of perpetual spring. Not once in the last decade have we experienced a storm which has caused material damage. This moderate temperature, coupled with the salt breezes, makes the climate exuberating. American tourists already are visiting Porto Rico in large numbers during the winter months."

HAPPENINGS IN THE CITIES

Costly New York Living Apartments

ONLY $25,000 A YEAR - I CALL THAT CHEAP

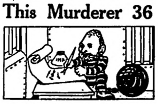
NEW YORK.—In the city of New York, where millionaires seem to thrive like mushrooms in a cellar, there is being constructed an apartment house in which a suite of rooms will rent for $25,000 a year. Probably this rental is the highest that has ever been asked for an apartment, even such as will be found in this house, a series of 18 rooms and so many baths that one would be able to use a different one every day in the week and two on Sunday without doubling on his trail. It is the apotheosis of luxury; the last word, so far as the human mind of today can imagine, in scandalous magnificence. In other words, the builders of this house have set a new pace for spendthrifts in the way of living. A yearly rental of $18,000 is the highest that has ever before been asked for unfurnished housekeeping apartments in New York city.

The new apartment house will have 17 apartments—one on each of the 17 floors—and five duplex apartments in addition. The eleventh and twelfth floors will be devoted to apartments which will occupy all the floor space, and these will rent for $25,000 a year. The apartments which share a floor with half of a duplex apartment will rent for $18,000.

The architects have arranged the suites so that each of these big floors shall have more and larger rooms than can be found in a private city dwelling occupying the regulation city lot, and the number of houses in New York that occupy more than one lot even in "Millionaires' Row" do not exceed a score. The four principal rooms of each apartment—the salon, dining-room, living room and gallery—cover 2,500 square feet, and they are so arranged that they can be turned into practically one immense room for entertaining. Each apartment will have at least three or four real fireplaces where real logs can be burned; an incinerating plant for the disposal of garbage; vacuum cleaning system extended to every room; the latest heating, ventilating and refrigerating systems, and both electric and gas ranges.

Those who have studied the conditions of Manhattan island, and who have been most emphatic in predicting the era of overcrowding, will take this sumptuous tenement as a real sign, of that ultimate time when they believe only business houses and the homes of the rich will be left in Manhattan. Other students of the city life will see in this effort a sign of that time often predicted when all city dwellers will live in co-operative apartments.

This Murderer 36 Years in One Cell



BOSTON.—Bent and marked with prison palor, Jesse H. Pomeroy, serving a life sentence in Charlestown, Mass., has written his own story of his crime and his efforts to better his conditions shut away from the freedom of the world. He is now 50 years of age and was convicted of a double murder when he was only fourteen years of age. All these years have been spent in solitary confinement and the prisoner declares he has never felt a touch of human sympathy or kindness and no effort has ever been made to better his condition. "I have no friends," he writes. "I cannot get a hearing from the governor. I have been left to my own devices in my cell all these years."

Pomeroy killed two children, a boy and a girl, after treating them with barbaric cruelty. He inveigled other small children into isolated sections, stripped them of their clothing, tied them to trees or upon boards and then beat them until they were unconscious, stuck pins into their tender flesh and stabbed and jabbed them with knives. When this boy with the demon heart was finally run down and forced to confess he barely escaped lynching. Only his youth saved him from the hangman's noose.

Pomeroy's letter to the public in general and to the governor of Massachusetts in particular is a lengthy document. He cites many reasons why he believes he should not have been convicted of murder and concludes with an appeal to the governor.

Chicago's Clubs for Working Girls

IT'S A FINE CLUB
YES, ONE DOES NOT HAVE TO PAY OUT MORE THAN THEY EARN

CHICAGO.—In Chicago there are what are called Eleanor clubs, where girls of all sorts and conditions find homes. Among them are office clerks of all descriptions, telephone operators, milliners, bookkeepers, department store and other clerks, music and art students. These latter are encouraged to live, a few at every club, since it helps the clubs and the club girls in general.

At these clubs the weekly board rate pays for two meals, breakfast and dinner. If a girl wishes to take her lunch with her she pays five cents for three sandwiches and either fruit or cake, for which downtown she would pay about fifteen cents. There is the laundry also, which saves money for the girls. For its use, with tubs, hot water, irons, starch and bluing, the girls pay five cents an hour. This does away with washing in the rooms and may save, if the girl is clever with shirtwaists, whatever her laundry bill would amount to, minus the nominal laundry fee to the house.

There is no dormitory system, although in a few large rooms there may be three or even four single beds. Most of the rooms, however, are for two, and there are a number of single rooms in every club. Maids do the chamber work and the general cleaning, for the housework there is no co-operation, some girls must be at their desks or their shops or their counters early. There is also a sewing machine in every club for the free use of the girls.

In these Eleanor clubs the young women have much of the freedom of home, perhaps all that would be possible in so large a family.

Women Sweep the Streets of Atlanta

IT TAKES A WOMAN TO MAKE THE DIRT FLY !-!

ATLANTA, Ga.—Atlanta's society leaders and club women put on white aprons one day recently and armed themselves with brooms to lead a militant crusade against dirt in the city's streets and back yards. They raised a prodigious dust, and found the experience no less interesting and no more strenuous than their accustomed bridge parties or dances. Incidentally, they accomplished a real good, for they obtained the assistance of five or six thousand housewives, each of whom agreed in advance to set apart the day for a general cleaning of their respective premises.

For this one day the municipal street cleaning and sanitary department turned over hundreds of men and its teams and wagons to the officers of the Federated Women's Clubs.

These women, with the assistance of able lieutenants, chosen from among the belles of the city, directed a 12-hour campaign, which had for its object the cleaning up of odd little corners and out-of-the way streets which had not always come in for their full share of attention under the routine dispensation of the forces.

Other officers and members of the federated clubs, brooms in hand, showed by their individual examples how much could be accomplished by individual effort, and when the sun set it was upon a brighter, cleaner city.

So effective was the onslaught that in the first few hours more dirt and trash was carted off to the city dump piles than had ever been carried there within 48 hours before.

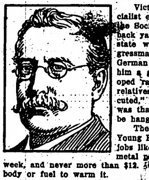
PROMINENT PEOPLE

NEW SOCIALIST CONGRESSMAN



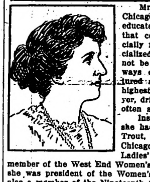
Victor L. Berger of Milwaukee, the first Socialist ever elected to Congress, is the father of the Socialist party in Wisconsin. It was in his back yard that the first Socialist meeting in the state was held. America's first Socialist congressman was born of well-to-do, middle-class German parents in Austria in 1860. They gave him a good college education. He early developed radical ideas and sympathies. "All my relatives believed I would be arrested and executed," said Berger, "and the worst part of it was that they believed that I would deserve to be hanged!"

The family emigrated to the United States. Young Berger became a cowpuncher; he did odd jobs like mending washboilers. He learned the metal polisher's trade, earning as little as $5 a week, and never more than $12. Often he did not have bread to feed his body or fuel to warm it.

He was appointed teacher of German in the Milwaukee high school, and held the position for several years. But it was as editor of the Milwaukee Wahrheit (German) and the Social-Democratic Herald (English) that Berger did his life work. He built up a powerful political organization which gradually crept up until, in April, 1910, it captured the city. Berger seems liked personally in Milwaukee, even among his political enemies. Election night, while the returns were coming in, he walked into the office of the newspaper that had fought him most bitterly and asked, "How does it stand?" "Here, Victor," answered the editor, "take these official returns, look them over and hand them back to me."

He married Miss Meta Schlichting, a pupil in his German class at the high school. They have three children. There is a romance of Socialism in Berger's love affair. When he fell in love with Miss Schlichting he did not propose at once. Instead, he carefully converted her to Socialism before he asked her to be his wife. After suffering from his relatives' bitter opposition to his views, Berger had vowed he would never marry a woman who did not agree with him.

LEADING SUFFRAGE CHAMPION

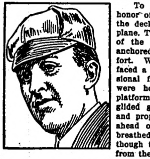


Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout, president of the Chicago Political Equality league, was born and educated in Maquoketa, Iowa. Discerning early that certain qualities of voice and mind especially fitted her for platform speaking, she specialized in that line of study. That she might not be spoiled by instruction, her work was always carefully superintended by a highly cultured and wise mother, who believed that the highest art is to be natural. Her father, a lawyer, drilled her on conciseness of expression and often said, "when you talk—say something."

Instead of entering the profession for which she had been prepared she married George W. Trout, and a few years later they moved to Chicago. She was at one time president of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Ashland club and was a member of the West End Women's club until she moved to Oak Park. Later she was president of the Women's Auxiliary of the Oak Park club, and is also a member of the Nineteenth Century club of Oak Park. She has been a member of the Chicago Woman's club for ten years and is a member of the Chicago Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

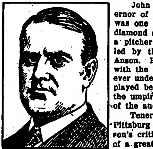
For a number of years Mrs. Trout has devoted herself almost exclusively to her family. She has brought up four boys, three sons and a nephew, the last two having graduated from high school. Mrs. Trout, says Human Life, is a delightful and convincing speaker, witty and sparkling in expression, scholarly and well-informed on the topics she discusses.

DID NOTABLE AVIATION FEAT



To Eugene Ely, the aviator, belongs the honor of making the first successful flight from the deck of a naval vessel to land in an aeroplane. The feat was accomplished from the deck of the scout cruiser Birmingham, which was anchored in Hampton Roads, off Old Point Comfort. When Ely climbed into his machine he faced a biting wind, driving cold rain and occasional flurries of hail. The blue-jackets who were holding the machine on the launching platform were ordered to let go, and the biplane glided gracefully downward, until the wheels and propeller touched the water about 100 feet ahead of the Birmingham. Every spectator breathed hard for a moment when it looked as though the machine would not be able to arise from the water, but Ely sent it upward by skillful handling of the planes. When the machine skimmed the water, it splashed the spray into the aviator's eyes, causing him to completely lose his bearings. When again he could see he espied the land of Willoughby Spit directly ahead and descended there without difficulty. He covered five miles in a little more than five minutes. The biplane which Ely used in his flight is the same in which Glenn Curtiss flew from Albany to New York. It was fitted with two pontoons under the main planes so as to make it float in case of accident. Ely also wore a life preserver. He won a prize of $500 by his flight.

TENER ONCE A DIAMOND STAR



John K. Tener, who has been elected governor of Pennsylvania on the Republican ticket, was one of the best known ball players on the diamond a score or more years ago. Tener was a pitcher on the old Chicago team which was led by that great baseball general, Adrian C. Anson. He went on the trip around the world with the Chicago club, the most notable journey ever undertaken by a team of ball players. They played before the crowned heads of Europe and the umpire's call awoke the echoes in the shade of the ancient pyramids of Egypt.

Tener was a clerk for a steel concern in Pittsburg in the early part of the 80's when Anson's critical eye discerned in him the makings of a great pitcher. Old Father Anse saw Tener, a giant in physique, twirl in a game and decided that he was good enough for a trial on the Chicago team, the greatest in the land at that time. Anson took Tener to Chicago and the latter became a fixture in the box for the Colts for some time. Later Tener joined the Pittsburg aggregation and pitched in the Smoky City until his arm went back on him and he had to give up the game.

After his retirement from the diamond Tener went into the banking business at Charleroi, Pa., and also became interested in real estate and other ventures. Today he is rated as a millionaire. He entered the political field as a Republican and after being elected to several minor offices was chosen as a congressman from the 24th Pennsylvania district. This year he was nominated by the Republicans of Pennsylvania for governor and in a three-cornered fight he won out by a greatly reduced Republican majority.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

High Court Decides Rights of Jurors

ONE MAY AS WELL BE IN JAIL AS BE A JUROR

WASHINGTON.—The Supreme court of the United States has decided a case which involved the proper treatment of jurors. Because jurors had been permitted to separate and to read newspapers during a trial the court was asked to set aside the verdict. The case was a conviction for murder at military barracks in the state of Washington, where the jury had been allowed to be present while counsel argued about the admission of alleged confessions as evidence. The Supreme court holds, in an opinion written by Justice Holmes, that the presence of the jury during the argument was not wrong, and that the members might rightly read newspapers and need not be kept together as a body.

The decision upsets the common practise of trial courts. In important cases, notably those for murder, jurors are kept under surveillance, almost as prisoners. In their selection their intelligence is questioned and knowledge of current events made ground for challenge. Then they are marched and from the court room after the fashion of a chain gang in custody of an officer, forbidden free converse with family and friends. In theory jurors are ministers of justice, a part of the court. They are chosen as honest men from the worthy citizens, and they serve not as suspects, but as honorable officials. They lose no privileges as members of the community when they are called to assist the judge by rendering a verdict. Experience shows the need of guarding jurors from tampering and sinister approach, but this must be done without sacrificing their liberty.

The tribunal of final resort decides that jurors do not cease to be free citizens and do not leave their consciences at home when they enter the box. If they are fit for their duties at all they can be trusted to read papers and listen to lawyers and they need not be herded all the while in a mass while a case is on.

Foreigners Help Enforce Food Laws

CROOKED IMPORTER
DURN THESE PURE FOOD LAWS ?-! ?-! CAN'T DO NOTHIN' ANY MORE

UNDER the pure-food laws of the United States it is as much a fraud on the public to give an incorrect impression regarding the origin or place of production of an article for human consumption as it is to give a wrong impression regarding the contents, nature or composition of such an article.

Foreign governments have been cooperating with the government of the United States to prevent the misbranding and incorrect labeling of food products originating in those countries. France has been very active in this respect, and it is now illegal in France to label as champagne any wine produced outside of certain well-defined boundaries. A sparkling wine produced elsewhere than in the legally defined champagne country cannot legally be sold as champagne, even though experts might declare that it possessed all the qualities of wine so grown and even was superior to them. The same thing holds as regards cognac, and it is probable that similar regulations will be adopted regarding certain popular brands of cheese and other things which the public associates with trade names.

The government is now taking up the question of requiring the numerous varieties of coffee imported into this country to be honestly labeled. A recent meeting of the pure-food board was held for the purpose of taking testimony regarding the labeling of Brazilian coffee. After hearing testimony from experts present showing that the practise has grown up of labeling coffee with the name of the port whence it is shipped regardless of the place of origin, Doctor Wiley stated that an effort would be made to reform this practise, which the importers admitted to be wrong, and that the matter would be properly taken up in due form with the government of Brazil through the state department, to the end that the Brazilian coffees, which form by far the greater part of the coffee used in the United States, should be sold under their proper designation.

The Bonding of Government Officials

IT'S WORTH A $1,000,000 TO INSURE THIS ONE
HONEST OFFICIALS

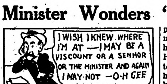
HOW many government officials are honest and what it is worth to insure their honesty are questions that will be answered on a scientific basis shortly. Experts in the service of the congress have passed much time recently attempting to reduce the answers to a few concrete figures. Their work is said to be drawing to a close. It will cost about $10,000.

The question arose in reference to the bonding of governmental officials. About a year ago several officials appealed to congress to raise their salaries because the bonding companies had increased the cost of their bonds to such an extent it made their salaries look like withered autumn leaves. For instance, one man's predecessor played the races and his surety paid the fiddler, whose bill amounted to about $10,000. The successor was compelled to pay about 15 per cent. of his salary in order to induce a surety or bonding company to run the risk of his following in the footsteps of the other man.

Chairman Tawney of the house committee on appropriations proposed to limit the amount to be paid for bonding government officials. That called down the wrath of the bonding companies. A hearing resulted. The government employes made more complaints about the increase in rates and the surety companies complained about the government officials being so stingy with statistics and other information concerning the departments.

The result was the appointment of a committee by the house and senate to investigate the subject.

Minister Wonders 'Where He Is At'



I WISH I KNEW WHERE I'M AT —I MAY BE A VISCOUNT OR A SENHOR OR THE MINISTER AND AGAIN I MAY NOT —O-H GEE I GIVE IT UP

WHEN the frollicky little monarch of Portugal had to flee before the uprising insurgents he left one of his most loyal subjects in Washington up in the air, and he has been wondering since where he is at. Senor de Alte, known as Viscount de Alte, is, or was, the regularly accredited minister to Washington from Portugal. He is a gentleman as well as a diplomat, one not always following the other, unfortunately, and has been very well liked, indeed, in Washington, but he would give something pretty right now to know whether he is a diplomat or just a plain gentleman of leisure.

Since fat little Manuel was deposed Viscount de Alte has comported himself in the safest, sanest and most conservative manner. It has not been possible to find a flaw in his comportment or deportment since he found himself a diplomat without a country. He does not know whether he is "mister," "senhor" or "viscount." Possibly he may be all three, as the pruning knife of the Republicans has not yet lopped off any of his titles.

Senhor de Alte has not resigned his post, for, as he has been perfectly acceptable to all parties concerned and as Portugal, republic or monarchy, wants a representative in the United States and has a very good man on the ground, thoroughly established and acquainted with the ins and outs, it would be right good diplomacy to leave him here. The Portuguese minister has been consistently "out" whenever newspaper people have called upon him. In fact, the policy of lying low or sitting tight, just as you care to put it, is the diplomatic one which Senhor de Alte has found to best fit the situation.

What was a martyrdom in medieval times would be called an advertisement today.

CANDY SALES FALLING OFF.

"This feminine craze for being slender has knocked the bottom out of our business," said the man in charge of a downtown branch of a big candy concern. "Some men who were good for at least $10 worth of candy each week never come inside the door now, and when I see them trudging past the store with a package of fruit I made up my mind their wives and daughters or sweethearts have taken a stand against candy. One man with a wife and four daughters, who used to be a splendid customer, told me the other day that he'd as soon come home with a viper as with a 5-pound box of candy, although a year ago he used to buy two 5-pound boxes each week, says the New York Sun. We notice the same difference in small sales to women employed in offices. There's not half the number of calls for half-pound boxes, though our sales of sweet chocolate are always big, as lots of business women nibble it instead of taking a regular luncheon. The continual running in of office boys to execute commissions for the stenographers and telephone operators is getting to be a thing of the past, and lemon drops are about the only sweets these business girls will eat. Every mother's daughter seems to be dead set against gaining an ounce of flesh, and until it's fashionable to be plump again I suppose we'll notice this difference in sales."

From Wisconsin has come a wail at the dense ignorance concerning geography with which high and preparatory school graduates come up to the university. Recent tests made by the department of geology in first year physiography classes have developed difference of opinion among the freshmen as to whether the Rhine is in Asia or South America, has developed an astounding lack of information as to the location of such cities as Vienna, Venice, Lisbon and Hongkong, and in trying to tell the whereabouts of the Pyrenees, Caucasus, Himalaya and Sierra Nevada mountains and Mount McKinley, almost half missed two or three out of the five, says the Chicago Evening Post. In fact, in the examination, which included only such questions as any fairly informed person should know, only one-sixth of the 103 freshmen tested were recorded as making a satisfactory showing.

A young woman of Brooklyn broke a promise to her father and tried to pass through the New York custom house seven dutiable gowns she had purchased abroad. Her very foolish action cost the father about four times what the gowns were worth and the young woman was lucky to escape severe punishment for her action. Collector Loeb, who has been making a most successful war on smuggling, has served notice on all, men and women alike, that more severe penalties than fines will be imposed for flagrant violations of the law. In spite of this warning women more than men are still taking a chance, and probably will not stop until some of them are compelled to go to prison.

The departure of the United States battleships which are to visit French and English ports is a reminder of the famous cruise around the world. When the fleet is assembled at sea it will consist of sixteen vessels, the same number that made the earlier trip. There can be no doubt of the welcome that awaits the visitors. The one regret in connection with the proceedings is that this showing of superb American warships will accentuate the lack of an American mercantile marine.

A thief who stole a gold spike used to fasten the first rail of a new railroad in Pennsylvania found it was only gold plated. Such base deception as this, resulting in painful mortification and disappointment to a man acting in good faith, is plainly reprehensible and comes under the same category as selling a goldbrick.

The difference of 33,000 between the first count of Tacoma's population and the second is a measure of the mistake of too much enthusiasm in padding census returns. Had Tacoma been satisfied with a modest ten or fifteen thousand inflation it might have succeeded, but this overdoing of things is generally disastrous.

The Washington chief of police believes that wife-beaters should be lashed. Theoretically, this punishment, which exactly fits the crime, is indorsed and recommended on all sides. Practically, it is ignored even where the law has put it on the statute books. Naturally, the wife beating goes on.

FEDERAL CENSUS OF 1910 SHOWS STATE GAINED 324,314 IN TEN YEARS.

GREATEST GAIN IN LARGE CITIES

St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth Gain 175,886.—Rest of State Shows Increase of 148,448 Inhabitants.

SOME OTHER STATES.

Population 1910.	Increase.
Maryland, 1,294,450	106,406
Nebraska, 1,192,214	125,914
Illinois, 5,638,591	817,041
Oklahoma, 1,657,155	242,978

New Hampshire, 430,572	18,984
Alabama, 2,138,093	309,396
Florida, 751,139	222,597

Washington, D. C. — The population of the state of Minnesota is 2,075,708, according to the thirteenth federal census figures. This is an increase of 324,314, or 18.5 per cent, over 1,751,394 in 1900. The increase from 1890 to 1900 was 449,568.

The returns place the state of Minnesota in the two million class. The major part of the gain is credited to the three largest cities—Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth—but the rural communities show a growth that is more than merely healthy.

An increase of more than 100,000 is shown for the farms and the small towns of the state and this immense army of workers is increasing every day. While the population of the three large cities had prepared the average Minnesotan for a large state increase, it was not hoped by any but the most optimistic that it would be more than 300,000.

Older States Are Beaten.

Older and larger states that showed indications of great progress have been left behind in the struggle for supremacy in population and few states in the union show as large an increase, and still fewer showed a larger percentage gain.

The steady stream of sturdy farmers from the old countries, the equally steady stream of skilled workers and mechanics and the flow of wealth to Minnesota has been continuing for years. Its wealth, climate and promises of bounteous crops have brought new citizens to Minnesota from all over the world.

Nearly every county in the state shows gains and some of them have almost doubled since 1900. Those counties containing the cities show an especially large increase. In 1880, only 30 years ago, when the first federal census was taken in the state, Minnesota had a population of only 780,773, and has gained 1,294,935 in that period.

Texas and Oregon and Washington have a larger percentage increase, but the railroads of the country have spent millions of dollars in advertising and land has been offered free to thousands who would take it. The growth in Minnesota has been a steady, natural increase and there is no danger of losing any of the gain.

Population by Counties.

Reapportionment Now Possible.

Final action in the way of shaping a bill for the reapportionment of the state into legislative districts can now be taken by the next legislature. The census announcement was the only thing that held back plans of those favorable to the measure. It is 13 years since the present system of legislative representation was drawn up and the apportionment then made was based on the state census of 1895.

The inequality of the present apportionment is shown in the accompanying table. The state senator in Dodge county is elected by a constituency numbering only 12,094 while the Fifty-second legislative district has nearly 63,000 people.

The representation of the various districts with the 1910 population of each follows:

Present Representation.

Ramsey county includes districts 33 to 37. The population is 223,675 and the county is resented by five senators and 11 members of the house. This is 44,735 for each senator.

Hennepin county includes districts 38 to 47. The population is 333,480 and the county is represented by seven senators and 16 members of the house. This is 49,640 for each senator.

Other Districts.

Other districts in order follow:

St. Louis, Cook and Lake counties are divided into three districts with three senators and six representatives. The Forty-ninth, Fiftieth and part of the Fifty-first are included in St. Louis county with a population of 163,274. The remainder of the Fifty-first district is made up by Cook and Lake counties. The population of Cook is 1,336 and Lake 8,011. St. Louis county has a senator for each 65,000 people and five house members for each 32,655 people. The remaining districts follow:

LIQUOR PEDDLER SENTENCED.

Fergus Falls Makes Short Work of Former Saloonkeeper's Case.

Fergus Falls.—The importation of liquor into Fergus Falls is an unhealthy business, notwithstanding the fact that the city is outside the territory covered by the Indian treaty of 1855. Paul Viger, who was in the saloon business here before the city went dry, arrived from Moorhead with a large grip, and began calling on friends. Five minutes later Viger was in court, and another half hour found him in jail with a sixty day's sentence before him.

Civic league officers say that if Moorhead continues to send down whisky they will appeal to the interior department to close the saloons there, as that city is in the territory covered by the treaty of 1851.

CHILD LABOR LAW VIOLATED.

State Truant Officer Warns Bemidji Employers.

Bemidji.—G. W. Pippey, the truant officer, working under the direction of the state labor bureau, has found a dozen truants, and also discovered that the child labor law is being violated in Bemidji.

"I have issued warning to several employers," he said. "If they get rid of their child help they will avoid further trouble. If they continue their violations I shall swear out warrants and have them prosecuted. I usually have to do that in a couple of cases before they realize that the state means business."

HOSPITAL FOR ALBERT LEA.

Systematic Canvass for $30,000 Structure Will Soon Begin.

Albert Lea.—The people of this city are about to begin securing subscriptions for the purpose of erecting a modern hospital and the plans anticipate a building to cost about $30,000. Two years ago Mrs. Naeve left as a bequest her residence and the plot of ground about it for a hospital, and until this time nothing has been done to utilize the gift, valued at $10,000.

Committees are being organized to thoroughly canvass the city and it is confidently believed the funds will be secured.

HIBBING NOT IN DRY ZONE.

People Assert Line Runs Three Miles East of Village.

Duluth.—Hibbing people claim the government has made an error in putting that town in the dry list by enforcing the treaty of 1855. It is claimed that the village of Hibbing is three miles outside the boundaries, and that the eastern boundary runs between Carson and Kelley lakes, to the west of the village.

Elmquist Inspects Soo.

Thief River Falls.—Charles Elmquist, state railway and warehouse commissioner, arrived in this city, having completed an official inspection of the new Thief River Falls-Duluth branch of the Soo line. He was accompanied by the secretary of the commission and Superintendent Michaels of the Soo road. The commissioner found the line in first-class condition, being better in equipment, solidity and construction than many large branch lines of the older roads.

RUSHING GIRLS' HOME.

Sauk Center.—Since the state board of visitors indorsed Mrs. Fannie French Morse's plan of work at Red Wing, the contractor of the state industrial school at Sauk Center has received rush orders to get the buildings ready as quickly as possible, so that the girls can be removed from Red Wing and Mrs. Morse have entire charge of them. The buildings will be finished in January.

quickly gives heat, and with one filling of the font burns steadily for nine hours, without smoke or smell. Has automatic-locking flame spreader which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back so the wick can be quickly cleaned.

It has a damper top and a cool handle. Indicator always shows the amount of oil in the font. The filler-cap does not need to be screwed down; it is put in like a cork in a bottle, and is attached to the font by a chain, and cannot get lost.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, because of a new device in construction, and consequently, it can always be easily unscrewed in an instant for rewicking. The Perfection is finished in japan or nickel, is strong, durable, well-made, built for service, and yet light and ornamental.

WORK OF YEAR REVIEWED BY THE PRESIDENT

Affairs of State Are Dealt With at Length in Annual Message.

BUT LITTLE ABOUT TARIFF

President Discusses Work of Tariff Board—Ship Subsidy Is Urged.

WORK ON PANAMA CANAL

Need of Legislation Anticipating Completion of the Ditch Is Pointed Out—Change in Postal Rates—Parcels Post and Postal Savings—Economy Urged.

Washington, Dec. 6.—President Taft's annual message to congress contained 40,000 words, and is said to be the longest document of its kind ever written. In it he reviews the work of each of the administrative departments beginning with the state department. He devotes considerable space to the satisfactory settlement of the fisheries dispute with England through the medium of the Hague Tribunal, and recounts both the history of the fisheries dispute and the establishment of the tribunal.

In connection with the state department he tells of the important political happenings of the past twelve months throughout the entire world, and the action of this country in connection with them.

Tariff Negotiations.

Referring to the negotiation of new tariff agreements President Taft says:

"The new tariff law, in Section 2, respecting the maximum and minimum tariffs of the United States, which provisions came into effect on April 1, 1910, imposed upon us responsibility of determining prior to that date whether any undue discrimination existed against the United States and its products in any country of the world with which we sustained commercial relations.

"In the case of several countries instances of apparent undue discrimination against American commerce were found to exist. These discriminations were removed by negotiation. Prior to April 1, 1910, when the maximum tariff was to come into operation with respect to importations from all those countries in whose favor no proclamation applying the minimum tariff should be issued by the president, one hundred and thirty-four such proclamations were issued.

"This series of proclamations embraced the entire commercial world and hence the minimum tariff of the United States has been given universal application, thus testifying to the satisfactory character of our trade relations with foreign countries.

"Marked advantages to the commerce of the United States were obtained through these tariff settlements.

"The policy of broader and closer trade relations with the Dominion of Canada which was initiated in the adjustment of the maximum and minimum provisions of the tariff act of August, 1909, has proved mutually beneficial. It justifies further efforts for the readjustment of the commercial relations of the two countries so that their commerce may follow the channels natural to contiguous countries and be commensurate with the steady expansion of trade and industry on both sides of the boundary line."

Ship Subsidy.

The president urges such action as he believes will increase American trade abroad, and says:

"Another instrumentality indispensable to the unhampered and natural development of American commerce is merchant marine. All maritime and commercial nations recognize the importance of this factor. The greatest commercial nations, our competitors, jealously foster their merchant marine. Perhaps nowhere is the need for rapid and direct mail, passenger and freight communication quite so urgent as between the United States and Latin America. We can secure in no other quarter of the world such immediate benefits in friendship and commerce as would flow from the establishment of direct lines of communication with the countries of Latin America adequate to meet the requirements of a rapidly increasing appreciation of the reciprocal dependence of the countries of the western hemisphere upon each other's products, sympathies and assistance.

"I alluded to this most important subject in my last annual message; it has often been before you and I need not recapitulate the reasons for its recommendation. Unless prompt action be taken the completion of the Panama canal will find this the only great commercial nation unable to avail in international maritime business of this great contribution to the means of the world's commercial intercourse."

Governmental Expense.

To no one subject does he devote more space than to the expense of conducting the various government departments and the urgent need for economy, and in this connection he says:

"Every effort has been made by each department chief to reduce the estimated cost of his department for the ensuing fiscal year ending June 30, 1912. I say this in order that congress may understand that these estimates thus made present the smallest sum which will maintain the departments, bureaus and offices of the government and meet its other obligations under existing law, and that a cut of these estimates would result in embarrassing the executive branch of the government in the performance of its duties. This remark does not apply to the river and harbor estimates, except to those for expenses of maintenance and the meeting of obligations under authorized contracts, nor does it apply to the public building bill nor to the navy building program. Of course, as to these congress could withhold any part or all of the estimates for them without interfering with the discharge of the ordinary obligations of these functions of its departments, bureaus and offices.

"The final estimates for the year ending June 30, 1912, as they have been sent to the treasury on November 29 of this year, for the ordinary expenses of the government, including those for public buildings, rivers and harbors, and the navy building program, amount to $630,494,013.12. This is $52,964,887.36 less than the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911. It is $16,883,153.44 less than the total estimates, including supplemental estimates submitted to congress by the treasury for the year 1911, and is $5,574,659.39 less than the original estimates submitted by the treasury for 1911.

"These figures do not include the appropriations for the Panama canal, the policy in respect to which ought to be, and is, to spend as much each year as can be economically and effectively expended in order to complete the canal as promptly as possible, and therefore, the ordinary motive for cutting down the expense of the government does not apply to appropriations for this purpose.

"Against the estimates of expenditures, $640,494,013.12, we have estimated receipts for next year $680,000,000, making a probable surplus of ordinary receipts over ordinary expenditures of about $50,000,000, or taking into account the estimates for the Panama canal, which are $56,920,847.69, and which will ultimately be paid in bonds, it will leave a deficit for the next year of about $7,000,000, if congress shall conclude to fortify the canal."

The Tariff.

The President devotes but little space to the subject of the tariff law, and of it he says:

"The schedules of the rates of duty in the Payne tariff act have been subjected to a great deal of criticism, some of it just, more of it unfounded, and to much misrepresentation. The act was adopted in pursuance of a declaration by the party which is responsible for it that customs bill should be a tariff for the protection of home industries, the measure of the protection to be the difference between the cost of producing the imported article abroad and the cost of producing it at home, together with such addition to that difference as might give a reasonable profit to the home producer. The basis for the criticism of this tariff is that in respect to a number of the schedules the declared measure was not followed, but a higher difference retained or inserted by way of undue discrimination in favor of certain industries and manufactures. Little, if any, of the criticism of the tariff has been directed against the protective principle above stated; but the main body of the criticism has been based on the attempt to conform to the measure of protection was not honestly and sincerely adhered to."

The Tariff Board.

The president refers to the appointment of a board of experts to investigate the cost of production of various articles included in the schedules of the tariff, and says:

"The tariff board thus appointed and authorized has been diligent in preparing itself for the necessary investigations. The hope of those who have advocated the use of this board for tariff purposes is that the question of the rate of a duty imposed shall become more of a business question and less of a political question, to be ascertained by experts of long training and accurate knowledge. The halt in business and the shock to business, due to the announcement that a new tariff bill is to be prepared and put in operation will be avoided by treating the schedules one by one as occasion shall arise for a change in the rates of each, and only after a report upon the schedule by the tariff board competent to make such report. It is not likely that the board will be able to make a report during the present session of congress on any of the schedules, because a proper examination involves an enormous amount of detail and a great deal of care; but I hope to be able at the opening of the new congress, or at least during the session of that congress, to bring to its attention the facts in regard to those schedules in the present tariff that may prove to need amendment."

Our Island Possessions.

"During the [illegible] summer, at my request, the secretary of war visited the Philippine islands and has described his trip in the report. He found the islands in a state of tranquility and growing prosperity, due largely to the change in the tariff laws, which has opened the markets of America to the products of the Philippines, and has opened the Philippine markets to American manufactures.

"The year has been one of prosperity and progress in Porto Rico.

Panama Canal.

"At the instance of Colonel Goethals, the army engineer officer in charge of the work on the Panama canal, I have just made a visit to the Isthmus to inspect the work done and to consult with him on the ground as to certain problems which are likely to arise in the near future. The progress of the work is most satisfactory. If no unexpected obstacle presents itself, the canal will be completed well within the time fixed by Colonel Goethals, to-wit, January 1, 1915, and within the estimate of cost, $375,000,000.

"Among questions arising for present solution is the decision whether the canal shall be fortified. I have already stated to the congress that I strongly favor fortification and I now reiterate this opinion and ask your consideration of the subject in the light of the report already before you made by a competent board.

"Another question which arises for consideration and possible legislation is the question of tolls in the canal. This question is necessarily affected by the probable tonnage which will go through the canal.

"In determining what the tolls should be we certainly ought not to insist that for a good many years to come they should amount to enough to pay the interest on the investment of $400,000,000 which the United States has made in the construction of the canal. We ought not to do this, first, because the benefits to be derived by the United States from this expenditure is not to be measured solely by a return upon the investment. If it were then the construction might well have been left to private enterprise.

"My own impression is that the tolls ought not to exceed $1 per net ton, and I should recommend that within certain limits the president be authorized to fix the tolls of the canal and adjust them to what seems to be commercial necessity.

"I cannot close this reference to the canal without suggesting, as a wise amendment to the interstate commerce law a provision prohibiting interstate commerce railroads from owning or controlling ships engaged in the trade through the Panama canal. I believe such a provision may be needed to save to the people of the United States the benefits of the competition in trade between the eastern and western seaboards which this canal was constructed to secure."

Department of Justice.

Discussing the affairs of the department of justice, the president says:

"I invite especial attention to the prosecutions under the federal law of the so-called 'bucket shops,' and of those schemes to defraud in which the use of the mail is an essential part of the fraudulent conspiracy, prosecutions which have saved ignorant and weak members of the public and are saving them hundreds of millions of dollars. The violations of the anti-trust law present perhaps the most important litigation before the department, and the number of cases filed shows the activity of the government in enforcing that statute.

"In a special message last year I brought to the attention of congress the propriety and wisdom of enacting a general law providing for the incorporation of industrial and other companies engaged in interstate commerce, and I renew my recommendation in that behalf."

The crying need in the United States of cheapening the cost of litigation by simplifying judicial procedure and expediting final judgment is pointed out and action looking to correction of these evils is urged.

The president recommends an increase in the salaries of federal judges.

Postal Savings Banks.

"At its last session congress made provision for the establishment of savings banks by the postoffice department of this government by which under general control of trustees, consisting of the postmaster general, the secretary of the treasury and the attorney general, the system could be begun in a few cities and towns, and enlarged to cover within its operations as many cities and towns and as large a part of the country as seemed wise. The initiation and establishment of such a system has required a great deal of study on the part of the experts in the postoffice and treasury departments, but a system has now been devised which is believed to be more economical and simpler in its operation than any similar system abroad. Arrangements have been perfected so that savings banks will be opened in some cities and towns on the 1st of January, and there will be a gradual extension of the benefits of the plan to the rest of the country."

"It is gratifying," says the president, "that the reduction in the postal deficit has been accomplished without any curtailment of postal facilities. On the contrary, the service has been greatly extended during the year in all its branches."

Second-Class Mail.

"In my last annual message I invited the attention of congress to the inadequacy of the postal rate imposed upon second-class mail matter in so far as that includes magazines, and showed by figures prepared by experts of the postoffice department that the government was rendering a service to the magazines, costing many millions in excess of the compensation paid. An answer was attempted to this by the representatives of the magazines, and a reply was filed to this answer by the postoffice department. The utter inadequacy of the answer, considered in the light of the reply of the postoffice department, I think must must appeal to any fair-minded person. Whether the answer was all that could be said in behalf of the magazines is another question. I agree that the question is one of fact; but I insist that if the fact is as the experts of the postoffice department show, that we are furnishing to the owners of magazines a service worth millions more than they pay for it, then justice requires that the rate should be increased. The increase in the receipts of the department resulting from this change may be devoted to increasing the usefulness of the department in establishing a parcels post and in reducing the cost of first-class postage to one cent. It has been said by the postmaster general that a fair adjustment might be made under which the advertising part of the magazine should be charged for at a different and higher rate from that of the reading matter. This would relieve many useful magazines that are not circulated at a profit, and would not shut them out from the use of the mails by a prohibitory rate.

"With respect to the parcels post, I respectfully recommend its adoption on all rural delivery routes, and that 11 pounds—the international limit—be made the limit of carriage in such post."

Abolish Navy Yards.

The president calls attention to certain reforms urged by the secretary of the navy which he recommends for adoption, and continues:

"The estimates of the navy department are $5,000,000 less than the appropriations for the same purpose last year, and included in this is the building program of the same amount as that submitted for your consideration last year. It is merely carrying out the plan of building two battleships a year, with a few needed auxiliary vessels. I earnestly hope that this program will be adopted.

"The secretary of the navy has given personal examination to every navy yard, and has studied the uses of the navy yards with reference to the necessities of our fleet. With a fleet considerably less than half the size of that of the British navy, we have shipyards more than double the number, and there are several of these shipyards expensively equipped with modern machinery, which, after investigation the secretary of the navy believes to be entirely useless for naval purposes. He asks authority to abandon certain of them and to move their machinery to other places, where it can be made of use."

"The complete success of our country in arctic exploration should not remain unnoticed. The unparalleled achievement of Peary in reaching the north pole, April 6, 1909, approved by critical examination of the most expert scientists, has added to the distinction of our navy, to which he belongs, and reflects credit upon his country. I recommend fitting recognition by congress of the great achievement of Robert Edwin Peary."

Conservation.

"The subject of the conservation of the public domain has commanded the attention of the people within the last two or three years.

"There is no need for radical reform in the methods of disposing of what are really agricultural lands. The present laws have worked well. The enlarged homestead law has encouraged the successful farming of lands in the semi-arid regions.

"Nothing can be more important in the matter of conservation than the treatment of our forest lands. It was probably the ruthless destruction of forests in the older states that first called attention to the necessity for a halt in the waste of our resources.

"In the present forest reserves there are lands which are not properly forest, and which ought to be subject to homestead entry. This has caused some local irritation. We are carefully eliminating such lands from forest reserves or where their elimination is not practical listing them for entry under the forest homestead act.

"Congress ought to trust the executive to use the power of reservation only with respect to land most valuable for forest purposes. During the present administration, 62,250,000 acres of land largely non-timbered, have been excluded from forest reserves, and 3,500,000 acres of land principally valued for forest purposes have been included in forest reserves, making a reduction in forest reserves of non-timbered land amounting to 2,750,000 acres."

Coal Lands.

"The next subject, and one most important for your consideration, is the disposition of the coal lands in the United States and Alaska. At the beginning of this administration there were withdrawn from entry for purposes of classification 17,867,000 acres. Since that time there have been withdrawn by my order from entry for classification 78,977,745 acres, making a total withdrawal of 96,844,745 acres. Meantime of the acres thus withdrawn 1,061,889 have been classified and found not to contain coal and have been restored to agricultural entry, and 4,726,091 acres have been classified as coal lands, while 7,993,239 acres remain withdrawn from entry and await classification. In addition 337,000 acres have been classified as coal lands without prior withdrawal, thus increasing the classified coal lands to 10,429,372 acres.

"Under the laws providing for the disposal of coal lands in the United States, the minimum price at which lands are permitted to be sold is $10 an acre; but the secretary of the interior has the power to fix a maximum price and to sell at that price.

"As one-third of all the coal supply is held by the government, it seems wise that it should retain such control over the mining and the sale as the relation of lessor to lessee furnishes.

"The secretary of the interior thinks there are difficulties in the way of leasing public coal lands, which objections he has set forth in his report, the force of which I freely concede. I entirely approve his stating at length in his report of the objections in order that the whole subject may be presented to congress, but after a full consideration, for the reasons I have given above, I favor a leasing system and recommend it."

Water Power Sites.

"Prior to March 4, 1909, there had been, on the recommendation of the reclamation service, withdrawn from agricultural entry, because they were regarded as useful for power sites which ought not to be disposed of as agricultural lands, tracts amounting to about 4,000,000 acres. The withdrawals were hastily made and included a great deal of land that was not useful for power sites. They were intended to include the power sites on 29 rivers in 9 states. Since that time 3,475,442 acres have been restored for settlement of the original 4,000,000 because they do not contain power sites; and meantime, new withdrawals have been made which, with other restorations based upon field examination, result in withdrawals at present effective of 1,218,356 acres on vacant public land and 202,197 acres on entered public land, or a total of 1,420,553 acres. These withdrawals made from time to time cover all the power sites included in the first withdrawals and many more, on 151 rivers and in 12 states. The disposition of these power sites involves one of the most difficult questions presented in carrying out practical conservation.

"The subject is one that calls for new legislation. It has been thought that there was danger of combination to obtain possession of all the power sites and to unite them under one control. Whatever the evidence of this, or lack of it, at present we have had enough experience to know that combination would be profitable, and the control of a great number of power at will within certain sections.

"However this may be, it is the plain duty of the government to see to it that in the utilization and development of all this immense amount of water power, conditions shall be imposed that will prevent extortionate charges, which are the usual accompaniment of monopoly.

"The question of conservation is not a partisan one, and I sincerely hope that even in the short time of the present session consideration may be given to those questions which have now been much discussed, and that action may be taken upon them."

Alaska.

"With reference to the government of Alaska, I have nothing to add to the recommendations I made in my last message on the subject. I am convinced that the migratory character of the population, its unequal distribution, and its smallness of number, which the new census shows to be about 50,000, in relation to the enormous expanse of the territory, make it altogether impracticable to give to those people who are in Alaska today and may not be there a year hence, the power to elect a legislature to govern an immense territory to which they have relation so little permanent."

Pensions.

"The uniform policy of the government in the matter of granting pensions to those gallant and devoted men who fought to save the life of the nation in the perilous days of the great civil war, has always been of the most liberal character. Those men are now rapidly passing away. The best obtainable official statistics show that they are dying at the rate of something over three thousand a month, and, in view of their advancing years, this rate must inevitably in proportion, rapidly increase. To the man who risked everything on the field of battle to save the nation in the hour of its direst need we owe a debt which has not been and should not be computed in a begrudging or parsimonious spirit."

Bureau of Corporations.

Referring to the report of the commissioner of corporations, the president says:

"The commissioner finds a condition in the ownership of the standing timber of the United States other than the government timber that calls for serious attention. The direct investigation made by the commissioner covered an area which contains 80 per cent. of the privately-owned timber of the country.

"His report shows that one half of the timber in this area is owned by 200 individuals and corporations; that 14 per cent. is owned by these corporations, and that there is very extensive inter-ownership of stock, as well as other circumstances, all pointing to friendly relations among those who own a majority of this timber, a relationship which might lead to a combination for the maintenance of a price that would be very detrimental to the public interest, and would create the necessity of removing all tariff obstacles to the free importations of lumber from other countries."

Bureau of Labor.

"The commissioner of labor has been actively engaged in composing the differences between employers and employes engaged in interstate transportation, under the Erdman act, jointly with the chairman of the interstate commerce commission.

"I cannot speak in too high terms of the success of the two officers in conciliation and settlement of controversies which, but for their interposition, would have resulted disastrously to all interests.

Civil Service Commission.

"The civil service commission has continued its useful duties during the year. The necessity for the maintenance of the provisions of the civil service law was never greater than today. Officers responsible for the policy of the administration, and their immediate personal assistants or deputies, should not be included within the classified service, but in my judgment, public opinion has advanced to the point where it would support a bill providing a secure tenure during efficiency for all purely administrative officials. I entertain the profound conviction that it would greatly aid the cause of efficient and economical government and of better politics if congress could enact a bill providing that the executive shall have the power to include in the classified service all local offices under the treasury department, the department of justice, the postoffice department, the interior department and the department of commerce and labor, appointments to which now require the confirmation of the senate, and that upon such classification the advice and consent of the senate shall cease to be required in such appointments. By their certainty of tenure, dependent on good service, and by their freedom from the necessity for political activity, these local officers would be induced to become more efficient public servants.

Economy and Efficiency.

"The increase in the activities and in the annual expenditures of the federal government has been so rapid and so great that the time has come to check the expansion of government activities in new directions until we have tested the economy and efficiency with which the government of today is being carried on. The responsibility rests upon the head of the administration. He is held accountable by the public, and properly so. Despite the unselfish and patriotic efforts of the heads of departments and others charged with responsibility of government, there has grown up in this country a conviction that the expenses of government are too great. The fundamental reason for the existence undetected of waste, duplication, and bad management is the lack of prompt, accurate information.

"I have requested the head of each department to appoint committees on economy and efficiency in order to secure full co-operation in the movement by the employees of the government themselves.

"I urge the continuance of the appropriation of $100,000 requested for the fiscal year 1912.

"My experience leads me to believe that while government methods are much criticized, the bad results—if we do have bad results—are not due to a lack of zeal or willingness on the part of the civil servants."

Interstate Commerce.

"There has not been time to test the benefit and utility of the amendments to the interstate commerce law contained in the act approved June 18, 1910. The law as enacted did not contain all the features which I recommended. It did not specifically denounce as unlawful the purchase by one of two parallel and competing roads of the stock of the other. Nor did it subject to the restraining influence of the Interstate Commerce commission the power of corporations engaged in operating interstate railroads to issue new stock and bonds; nor did it authorize the making of temporary agreements between railroads limited to 30 days, fixing the same rates for traffic between the same places.

"I do not press the consideration of any of these objects upon congress at this session.

"The interstate commerce commission has recommended appropriations for the purpose of enabling it to enter upon a valuation of all railroads. This has always been within the jurisdiction of the commission, but the requisite funds have been wanting. Statistics to the value of each railroad would be valuable for many purposes, especially if we ultimately enact any limitations upon the power of the interstate railroads to issue stocks and bonds, as I hope we may.

"For the protection of our own people and the preservation of our credit in foreign trade, I urge upon congress the immediate enactment of a law under which one who, in good faith, advances money or credit upon a bill of lading issued by a common carrier upon an interstate or foreign shipment can hold the carrier liable for the value of the goods described in the bill at the valuation specified in the bill, at least to the extent of the advances made in reliance upon it.

"I further recommend that a punishment of fine and imprisonment be imposed upon railroad agents and shippers for fraud or misrepresentation in connection with the issue of bills of lading issued upon interstate and foreign shipments.

"Except as above, I do not recommend any amendment to the interstate commerce law as it stands. I do not now recommend any amendment to the anti-trust law. In other words, it seems to me that the existing legislation with reference to the regulation of corporations and the restraint of their business has reached a point where we can stop for a while and witness the effect of the vigorous execution of the laws of the statute books in restraining the abuses which certainly did exist and which roused the public to demand reform."

THE SUNBEAM,

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County, Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 20 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

Congress has met and when they ajourn, a large number of them will come home to stay and "stand pat." Old Cannon will miss lots of his old chums in the next congress.

The next national house of representatives will line up as follows: Democrats 224, Republicans 166, Socialist 1; Democratic gain 80, Democratic majority 58. Old Cannon was re-elected but he will not be the next speaker, by a long shot. Our republican congress had plenty of oppotunity to put him out but they left that job for the democrats, and you bet they will fire him proper, and the common people will give them the credit for doing a good job.

Senator Steaphens, of Polk county will contest the election of John Sugstad, who was beat at the primaries and run by the "sticker" route in November. It appears that Steaphens was up agains the power of the printing press, as in some of the precincts they voted all the stickers for Sugstad that they could put on the ballots, and if a voter got short of stickers he could get supplied from the regular pedlars, who carried them right in the voting booths. That whole sticker campaign was a ridiculous farce and will no doubt be so considerd by people that have a little brains.

Some Of Them Landed,

It seems that there was not enough county offices to go around, when the Pennington county plums were handed out and the howl that want up from the dissapointed ones was heart rending. The Red Lake Falls Gazette in discribeing part of the big row says: "Several of the business men named each other liars and to add to the general pandemonium, the dissipointed candidate raraded the streets and stirred up several fights."

The following officers was at last appointed:

Auditor—A. H. Fasel Thief River Falls.

Register of Deeds—E.L. Qust, of Thief River Falls.

Treasurer—Andrew Trovaton, Thief River Falls.

Judge of Probate—Wilhiem Michlet, of Thief River Falls.

County Attorney E M. Stanton, of Thief River Falls.

Sheriff—Jessie LaBree, Thief River Falls.

Clerk of Court—H. E Ives, the late treasurer of Red Lake county, now of Thief River Falls

Surveyor—C.H.Martz, St. Hilaire.

Coroner—Dr.Swanson, St. Hilaire.

Superintendent of scholls—E A. Mostue, of Sunbeam.

It seems that they forgot to appoint an overseer of the poor, that is of the poor farmers who will have to pay the taxes, and a janitor to take care of that court house. These are not very good offices but it might help some to give them to some of the dissatisfied ones. We have no complaint to make against any of the appointments and consider the Commissioners fortunate to get out alive and without being mobed, as we believe they have got a harder job than runing a country newspaper, if they are going to try to please everybody.

It lay in the gutter as Pauline picked her dainty way across the street. She saw it and rescued it from the mud—a long flat pocketbook of Russia leather, such as a man might carry. It was bulky with letters or papers or perhaps money. Pauline slipped the pocketbook into her muff and hurried on her way home.

When she reached her own room she spread the contents of the leather book on her dressing table. There was a large package of banknotes, $400 in all, together with a picture, a portrait cut from some magazine of a girl in a black velvet gown wearing a black velvet picture hat and holding a long stemmed rose in one hand.

"YOU DON'T MIND, DAD?" SHE WHISPERED.

Pauline looked at the picture with rising indignation, for it was a half tone reproduction of Fleming's portrait of herself. The original picture hung in her father's study downstairs.

There was a single line under the picture which had evidently illustrated some special article on Fleming, the painter. It read, "An example of Fleming's delicate portraiture."

The next day Pauline caused to be inserted in a morning paper a brief advertisement:

Found.—A pocketbook. Owner may call and prove property. No. 61 W. — street.

A continuous line of people who had lost pocketbooks of some description kept the Cameron servants to rigid attendance upon the door.

Four o'clock came and not one applicant had aroused that assurance in Pauline's breast that here was the man who had carried her picture within his pocketbook.

Again the bell rang, and the servant ushered in a tall slender man, immaculately dressed, whose air was that of Pauline's own world.

His quick glance swept boldly from Pauline's lovely dark face to the luxuriously furnished room, in one corner of which sat Pauline's maid, quietly alert.

"You have found my pocketbook, I believe," said the man pleasantly. "Awfully careless of me, you know, to drop it. Found it in Broadway, I suppose?"

"No," said Pauline graciously, "I didn't find it in Broadway. What color was the book you lost and what was its size?"

"Dark green Russia—about eight inches long."

"What did it contain?" asked Pauline.

"Money," hesitated the man—"several hundred dollars and a few trinkets."

"I'm sorry, but your description doesn't fit at all," said Pauline pleasantly, and she wondered at the ugly frown that crossed the man's brow. It was not so much a frow of disappointment as an expression of baffled rage.

The callers came at long intervals, and they were all men. Some were young and others were old, and each one offered a description that nearly fitted the pocketbook she had found. At last the callers dwindled down to one last straggler, a most prepossessing young man whose manners were especially engaging.

"I'm such a careless beggar," he explained to Pauline; "I'm always losing something or other."

"Of course I must ask you to identify the pocketbook," hesitated Pauline. Here, she felt, was the real owner of the article.

"It was a dark Russia leather, almost new, about ten inches long. It contained between $300 and $400 in bills—and something else. There was no mark of identification in the way of letters or anything of that sort. I dropped it somewhere near the park about the Sixties or Seventies—that is, I missed it shortly after I passed West Seventy-second street and went back to search for it, but it could not be found." He spoke rapidly and positively, and Pauline felt a little thrill that she had at last discovered the real owner.

Nevertheless she was rather piqued by the fact that although he might have cared enough about her picture to carry it within his pocketbook the claimant did not seem to recognize by any outward sign that the original of the picture sat before him. Consequently she pressed the point to her own [illegible].

"And the other article contained in the book?" she asked. "If you will identify that"—she paused suggestively.

For an instant he hesitated, then spoke with decision. "From its character you will understand why the subject is a delicate one."

"Here is the pocketbook," said Pauline smiling. "I am sure it is the one you lost, and I am very glad to restore it to you."

The owner almost snatched the book from her hand, so eager did he seem to recover his property. He stammered hasty words of gratitude and without opening the pocketbook thrust it in his pocket and took his leave with apparent relief.

When she was alone Pauline smiled rather maliciously as she took from a table drawer the clipped picture of herself and carried it to her room.

That night at dinner her father spoke somewhat vexedly. "Do you recollect Pauline, my dear, that I promised you should have that set of furs in Wickel's?"

"How could I forget, dad? You don't mean that you have really ordered them for me?" cried Pauline delightedly.

"I was about to do so yesterday when I lost my pocketbook. I'd been to the bank and drawn the cash, was bringing it home to you, when somehow, somewhere not far from home, I lost the confounded thing. You'll have to wait another week for the furs, puss."

"What sort of pocketbook was it, dad?" asked Pauline mechanically. The question seemed a natural one enough now—she had interviewed so many lost property owners that day.

"New one I bought a week ago, red Russia, had four hundred in it and a clipping of some sort about queer uses of electricity."

"Dad!" cried Pauline tragically.

"Well?" asked her father. "I know it was careless, but"—

"It isn't that, but I believe I found that very pocketbook yesterday. I advertised it in this morning's paper."

"Well, by Jove, where is it?" asked her father, with keen interest.

"I don't know where it is now," confessed Pauline. "I've interviewed dozens of people today. It does seem as though the streets must be strewn with pocketbooks, so many have been lost. I was most particular about identification, and it happened that the last young man who called described the pocketbook so accurately that I gave it to him."

Mr. Lester knitted his brows thoughtfully. "That's very queer, Pauline. You better tell me all about it and be sure and recollect all you can about the people who called in regard to the matter. You see, there are many dishonest men, and women, too, for that matter, who make a business of answering advertisements of that sort. Sometimes they can guess very accurately at the appearance of a lost article. Indeed, so clever are they that they manage to possess themselves of many articles to which they have not the slightest right. Did you find a clipping in the book?"

Pauline flushed at her own vanity in attributing the possession of her picture to some infatuated young man when it was that dearest of men, her father, after all, who had preserved her likeness.

"I didn't notice the clipping, dad," she said, "but I did find a magazine reproduction of my portrait—that and the money."

"I certainly did not have your picture, Pauline, but that is a detail. Tell me what you can about the people who came today."

Pauline did so, omitting no incident that she could remember and calling upon her maid to substantiate any doubtful points in her narrative. When she had concluded Mr. Lester shook mirthfully.

"Never mind, Pauline; but it is rather funny, you know. I'm afraid there was more avarice than romance in the situation. Very likely the last half dozen men who called were in league to claim the pocketbook. By clever guessing and the process of eliminating certain facts the last claimant was able to give a rather accurate description of the article and so assured you of his ownership. There, my dear, don't feel badly. Almost anybody might have been deceived in the same way. Suppose you come to my study and show me the picture. You say you kept that."

Quite mortified and very penitent, Pauline fetched the clipping from her room and laid it on her father's desk. Mr. Lester adjusted his eyeglasses and looked critically at the clipping. Then he nodded approval.

"Very good indeed, Pauline." Then he turned the paper over and smiled humorously. "'Some Peculiar Uses of Electricity,'" he read, handing the clipping to her.

Pauline looked and blushed painfully. "What a vain goose I am! Are you not ashamed to have such a foolish daughter? But it was a coincidence, wasn't it?"

Mr. Lester drew her down to his knee and kissed her gently. "There is more to this matter, Pauline. I happened into Frank Seymour's office today and picked up this clipping from his desk. He had just cut it from a magazine, and it lay 'electricity' side up. I read part of it and asked him if I might borrow the clipping. He seemed rather embarrassed. I understand the reason now. The sly young dog!"

Pauline buried her blushing face on his shoulder. "You don't mind, dad?" she whispered.

"Yes and no, Pauline," he admitted between a sigh and a smile. "It is not unexpected, and when Frank comes send him to me, and you [illegible] [illegible]."

THEIR ENGAGEMENT.

He Told Her She Would Return to Him, and She Did.

She entered the room hastily.

He was awaiting her.

"I was afraid you would be thinking I had forgotten," she said.

"No," he responded calmly, in the tone of one who is master of himself. "An engagement is an engagement with me."

She was a beautiful girl. A wealth of chestnut hair rippled below the wide brim of her bonnet. Her close fitting tailored gown yielded to every movement of her supple form.

He was a bit above the average height, a clean cut, square chinned chap, whose every expression bespoke self reliance. As he looked at her his glance was deferential, yet not timid.

"It has been a long while since we saw each other," he remarked.

"Yes, nearly a year," she replied. "But do you remember when I left that time you said I would have to come back?"

"Yes. You should have come sooner than this."

"But I have been so busy—going and coming, dances, dinners, the theater and all."

"I know. And you were married too?"

His voice did not tremble as he asked this, yet across her face there dashed a quick tinge of humiliation.

"I—I would rather not speak of that," she observed, almost coldly. "That is all over. We—we— it was to be expected. The truth is we were not meant for each other. So I—I got a divorce."

"It was better so, no doubt," he responded gently. "Won't you sit down?"

She took the chair he indicated, and as he looked down at her she flashed him a sudden smile.

"I was afraid of you the last time," she said merrily.

"But you are not afraid now?"

His voice seemed to give her assurance. She smiled again.

"No, indeed!"

He put his fingers beneath her dimpled chin and tilted her bonny head back, then gazed at her earnestly. Her limpid eyes looked up at him trustingly. The rose pink of her cheeks came and went fitfully. The white of her throat throbbed with each breath. He bent nearer to her, still with that fixed gaze. Her lips were parted.

He raised his head, and she looked out of the window silently.

There was a pause. At last she spoke.

"What are you studying about? What have you decided?"

"I think I'll have to fill two of your teeth," he said quietly. "The rest are all right. You have taken better care of them than most women do."—Life.

Pirate's Coins.

The doubloon, that famous coin of romance, is still in circulation. The Isabella doubloon, worth $5, still remains current in Cuba. The doubloon is so called because when first coined it was double the value of a pistole—that is, it was worth $8. The name was given later to a double doubloon current in the West Indies. Pieces of eight, with which every reader of "Robinson Crusoe" is familiar, are also in circulation. They are simply Spanish dollars of eight reals. A doubloon dated 1787—there are said to be only six of that date in existence—sold a year or six ago for $6,200.—New York Press.

A Condition, Not a Theory.

A sociologist in conversation with a practical person from the middle west concerning the labor problem in her part of the country thereby learned the lesson of the situation.

"Are there many men out of work?" he asked.

The lady admitted that there were quite a number.

"What," said he then, "do the unemployed do?"

"Nothing," said the lady. "That's the trouble."—Youth's Companion.

His Only Hope.

A lawyer of New Orleans tells this story: An old negro was brought up before the judge charged with chicken stealing, and when the usual question was propounded, "Guilty or not guilty?" he said, "I didn't think, boss, I lee throw myself on the [illegible] of the court."—Case and Comment.

Popular Jokes.

The most popular joke which has been published in any language in the history of the world is stated to be that which appeared in an obscure corner of the Punch almanac for 1845. It read, "Advice to persons about to marry—Don't!" It would be interesting to know who was its author. Another, founded on a similar subject, was the "Advice to persons who have fallen in love—Fall out!" One of the most brilliant things that ever appeared in our contemporary was the brief dialogue between an inquiring child and his impatient parent: "What is mind?" "No matter." "What is matter?" "Never mind."—Westminster Gazette.

Why Not Pass the Plate?

They ought to pass the plate at church weddings. It comes natural to do it in church, and to do so would add a pretty and useful employment to the duties of the ushers, who always have a little spare time before the bride arrives. And, really, getting married is more expensive than ever, and, though wedding presents are excellent in their way, what the young people usually need the most is cash. Instead of the list of gifts which the newspapers sometimes print we should read, "The collection yielded $4,000,000." That would be nice. Eugenie's American Ancestry.

The Empress Eugenie was the granddaughter of Mr. Fitzpatrick, American consul at Malaga, during the early years of the nineteenth century. Mr. Fitzpatrick's wife was of Scotch descent and claimed to be connected in some remote way with the Stuarts. They had one daughter, a very beautiful and accomplished girl, who made a brilliant marriage with the Marquis De Montijo, Comte De Teba. He died after a few years of married life, leaving her with two young daughters, one of whom subsequently married the Duke of Alba. The other, Eugenie, became empress of the French.—From the Memoirs of M. Claude.

Old Pete's Little Joke.

Foolish questions and funny answers were under discussion in the Trenton avenue and Dauphin street police station the other day, and after listening for a while to some amusing instances, Sergeant McCay told the following:

"Old Pete Flood was the attendant in the Franklin cemetery some years ago, and it became the custom to ask him how business was, just to hear his reply. It came in a heavy bass voice:

"'Aint buried a living soul today.'"—Philadelphia Times.

Admitted.

MIX THIS FOR RHEUMATISM

Easily Prepared and Inexpensive and Really Does the Work, Says Noted Authority.

Thousands of men and women who have felt the sting and torture of that dread disease, Rheumatism, which is no respecter of age, persons, sex, color or rank, will be interested to know that it is one of the easiest afflictions of the human body to conquer. Medical science has proven it not a distinct disease in itself, but a symptom caused by inactive kidneys. Rheumatism is uric acid in the blood and other waste products of the system which should be filtered and strained out in the form of urine. The function of the kidneys is to sift these poisons and acids out and keep the blood clean and pure. The kidneys however, are of sponge-like substance, the holes or pores of which will sometimes, either from overwork, cold or exposure become clogged, and failing in their function of eliminating these poisons from the blood, they remain in the veins, decompose and settling about the joints and muscles, cause the untold suffering and pain of rheumatism and backache, often producing complications of bladder and urinary disease, and general weakness.

The following simple prescription is said to relieve the worst cases of rheumatism because of its direct action upon the blood and kidneys, relieving, too, the most severe forms of bladder and urinary troubles: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime. The ingredients can be had from any prescription pharmacy, and are absolutely harmless and safe to use at any time.

SHORT SESSION OF CONGRESS OPENED

President Has Ambitious Program for the Law-Makers.

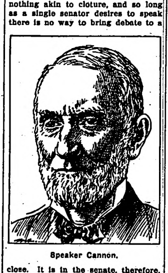
MAY MEET WITH OBSTRUCTION

Reapportionment and Tariff Board Measures Likely to Cause Fights—Events Tending Toward Extra Session.

Washington, Dec. 5.—Upon the temper of the Democratic leaders depends entirely the amount and the character of the legislation to be enacted into law at the last session of the 61st congress, which convened at noon today. According to all reports, President Taft and his advisers have outlined an ambitious program. How much of it he may be able to put through is a problem no one at this early day would be justified in predicting.

The short session of a congress expires by constitutional limitation in three months. There usually is a holiday recess that consumes a fortnight. Adjournments over from Friday to Monday cause a loss of valuable time, and in the end, by reason of these various causes, there remain only about sixty working days for the congress, reduced to half that in the house as a result of the new rules. Within this short space experience has proved that it is well nigh impossible to do more than enact the supply bills by which the funds are provided for the maintenance and support of the various branches of the government.

Special rules providing for emergencies are possible in the house and there debate can be limited and delay prevented. In the senate there is nothing akin to cloture, and so long as a single senator desires to speak there is no way to bring debate to a close. It is in the senate, therefore, that the danger comes if obstacles are thown in the way of an outlined legislative program. In the face of all this the administration has mapped out a program that will require the most adroit political and legislative management to bring it to fruition.



Speaker Cannon.

May Block Reapportionment.

Chief among the matters attracting attention, in view of the result of the recent elections, is the proposed reapportionment. This is the determination of the allotment of members of the house of representatives to the various states, based upon the population ascertained by each decennial census. While this ought not to be a political question, it invariably involves politics, and the Republicans are anxious to deal with it while they control both houses of congress. It is not essential that this new reapportionment be enacted into law at this session, and if a bill considered unfair be submitted, the Democrats in the senate may be counted upon to prevent its conclusion before March 3.

A big fight is promised with regard to the tariff board for which the president will ask a still larger appropriation and, incidentally, increased authority in the matter of conducting its inquiries and making its investigations both at home and abroad. Many leading Democrats, like Senator Bailey, for instance, are opposed to the tariff commission plan and will antagonize this. The president is very earnest in this matter. Then, too, there are many men in both parties who believe the tariff should be removed from politics entirely, and men of this view hold that this may be accomplished through a commission and are inclined to give it a fair test.

If the effort threatened by Senator Gallinger and others to push through a ship subsidy bill at the short session is made seriously, it promises to precipitate a time-consuming contest. The Democrats are opposed to this sort of legislation.

Small Hope for Currency Bill.

It does not appear likely that Mr. Aldrich will be able to put through anything in the shape of a revision of the currency laws at the coming session, although he has been credited with having that in mind. Time will be too short to admit of full and free consideration of so important a subject.

The administration's legislative plan includes, also, various conservation schemes, an anti-injunction bill giving relief, in a measure at least, demanded by organized labor, and a [illegible] plan of pension retirement for aged civil employees of the government. With the end in view of forming a cohesive Republican working force to accomplish that which he has at heart, the president has had several conferences with leading regulars and progressives at which his program has been thoroughly threshed out. The outlook seems to be good for united action of all classes of Republicans in the senate, but, as has been intimated, the danger comes from these Democrats who will antagonize all that bears a political aspect in proposed legislation.

The session may not be without its share of sensational incidents. The committee which investigated the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy has concluded its labors and its report is ready for the consideration of the two houses of congress. By the majority of the joint committee the secretary of the interior is exonerated; by the minority, including one progressive Republican, Pinchot is sustained, and the discussion of the report doubtless will cause some sensational speeches in both houses.

Lorimer Report Ready.

The Lorimer bribery charges, growing out of the allegations that the Illinois senator was elected through the corrupt use of money, were investigated by a senatorial committee during the summer and its report is ready. The impression here is that the committee did not find the charges sustained by evidence that was of sufficient importance to warrant an unfavorable report.

Another inquiry, growing out of charges made by Senator Gore on the floor of the senate, was made during the recess. This charge involved the use of money and the offer of alleged fees to certain men in the senate and house for favorable action on legislation pertaining to Indian matters. Although the formal report of the committee has not been made, it is understood that the conclusion has been reached that the statements rest on unwarranted accusations.

If one attempted to predict what will be done at the present session, it would be safe only to prophesy that the appropriation bills and incidental measures necessary to the ordinary conduct of the government will be enacted into law. There will be much talk and very little action.

Extra Session Is Predicted.

Leaders among the Republicans, as well as among the Democrats, are predicting that events are tending toward an extra session of the new congress, either immediately on the expiration of this session, or early in the summer. These leaders believe that if President Taft does not call such a session for the consideration of a revision of the tariff schedules, the Democratic or Republican leaders may force an extra session by holding up the passage of the necessary appropriation bills.

The Democratic leaders believe, at least some of them, that an extra session for the consideration of the tariff schedules would be fatal to the Republicans, because whatever the Democratic majority in the house might do would be blocked by the Republican senate. Some of the Republican leaders say that an extra session would be fatal to Democrats on the Republican theory that the "Democratic party can be counted on to do the wrong thing at the right time," and that if the tariff schedules are revised the Democrats will make some kind of blunder.

It is indeed seldom that two parties, at the same time, believe that an extra session will be of advantage to each. Nearly everything done at this session will be with an eye single to a point of advantage from which the campaign to capture the White House in 1912 can be conducted.

Dark Skins and Malaria.

In a recent issue of a daily paper we find it stated on the anonymous authority of a well known London doctor that blackness of the skin, however produced, protects against malaria, and it is said that "if you are going to a country where malaria is rife stain yourself all over with walnut juice, or black yourself with burnt cork and you will be less liable to catch the disease."

And the explanation is given that the browning of the skin prevents the actinic rays of sunlight penetrating the skin and so helping the malarial parasite to mature; and therefore we are told "if white men had artificially colored skins or even wore black underclothing they would be in the same position as the natives—protected to a certain extent against the malarial parasite maturing."

We should be interested to know on what facts the "well known London doctor" bases his statement. It is true that on the whole, the colored races suffer less severely from malaria than the white races, but we are not aware of any evidence which even suggests that this is due to the color of the skin. Of course it is possible that the staining of the skin with walnut juice or burnt cork may have a deterrent effect on the mosquito and so prevent the inoculation of the parasite, but this, we should imagine, was more than doubtful. The immunity of the savage races is probably the result of evolution by selection."

Aircraft in War.

One is certainly more impressed than one was by the importance of airmanship for the purposes of war. The airships really have proved this beyond the least doubt. Airships promise to be great in the art of observation, and every one can realize the value of that in a campaign.—London Saturday Review.

Benny on Benevolence.

Benevolence is a great thing. When you have benevolence you cannot rest until you do something to make other people feel grateful to you. The other day my mamma went up into the attic to find a lot of old clothes to give to poor people who could not afford to buy any clothing for themselves. While she was hunting around she found a gold-headed cane worth $25 that grandpa had put up there 18 years ago, and forgot all about. Thus we see, dear friends, benevolence brings its own reward.—Benny.

NEW ERA IN FINANCE

ACCURACY AND PUBLICITY PROVES TO BE A POPULAR MOTTO.

Prompt Response to Bold Move of President Vail.—"Accuracy" Reduced Western Union's Surplus $13,000,000.—"Publicity" Restored Confidence and Its Stock Went Up.

Are the great financiers of the country beginning to see a new light? Time was, until recently in fact, when the men at the head of the big corporations "kept their business to themselves," as far as the law would allow. Capable men at the head of the big concerns, long realized the weakness of their position, but what was needed obviously, as in all great reforms, was an unmistakable occasion and a courageous man. The occasion arose in the purchase of the Western Union Telegraph company by the American Telephone and Telegraph company, and the man appeared in Theodore N. Vail, President of the purchasing corporation.

It was last December when public announcement was made that the Gould holdings of Western Union had been taken over by the Telephone company.

On account of the high esteem in which the management of the telephone company is so generally held, great things were predicted as a result of the absorption of Western Union. By the press of the country the "deal" was most favorably commented on, it being widely pointed out that under the direction of such men as Theodore N. Vail and his associates, the telegraph company was bound soon to work itself into a position where it could offer the public far more efficient service than it had ever before been able to offer.

But a very few months had elapsed when it became apparent to the new management that a modern and up-to-date appraisal of the company's assets would make possible a far greater degree of efficiency of operation. "Here," they said to themselves, "we've bought control of this property and we know it's immensely valuable, but we don't know just how valuable. These appraisals of real estate and securities owned were made a long time ago. If we have a complete inventory made of every thing we've got we can announce the facts to the public, start a new set of books, and begin our responsibility to stockholders right there."

How Inventory Was Taken.

The most expert accountants and appraisers to be had were put at the task. Their labors lasted over eight months. Their report and its publication by the company marks an epoch in finance.

It began by recommending an adjustment of the difference between the appraised and book values by a charge of $5,595,089 against surplus. Book values of securities held were reduced to market values, bad and doubtful accounts were "charged off," an allowance of $2,000,000 was made for "depreciation," another of $500,000 for "reserve," and so on, until the old surplus of $18,867,000 came down to $5,136,000.

It required courage, the publication of this statement to stockholders, saying in effect: "The property of your company has been revalued: the surplus isn't nineteen millions, as you have been led to believe, but five millions," but it was the truth, and President Vail did not flinch. "Accuracy and publicity," he declared, was essential. "The stockholder has a right to know. The shares of this company are scattered from one end of the Union to the other. This is more than a private corporation. It is a great national enterprise. The public is entitled to the facts."

The report was ordered published forthwith. Financiers of the old school and speculators generally were aghast. What would happen? Would the bottom drop out of Western Union when the shareholders realized that their propetry was worth $13,000,000 less than they had supposed? But the amazing thing happened. The stock went up and stayed up. The public had responded to this remarkable display of frankness and confidence; to the new motto, "Accuracy and Publicity."

The full significance of the action of the new board is stated concisely by Harper's Weekly in these words:

"Is this policy of publicity and of open-handed dealing with shareholders and public the forerunner of a similar movement on the part of other big corporations? Certainly it is to be hoped that it is. In the case of these big companies, dependent upon public patronage and doing business under public franchise, can there be any question of the right of the people to know?

"That right is being recognized. It is recognised now in this epochal act on the part of the telephone and telegraph interests. It is the dawn of a new era in corporation finance."

Timeliness.

All measures of reformation are effective in exact proportion to their timeliness; partial decay may be cut away and cleansed; incipient error corrected; but there is a point at which corruption can no more be stayed, nor wandering recalled. It has been the manner of modern philanthropy to remain passive until that precise period, and to leave the sick to perish, and the foolish to stray, while it spent itself in frantic exertions to raise the dead, and reform the dust.—Ruskin.

Good Humor and Cheerfulness From Right Food and Drink.

Anything that interferes with good health is apt to keep cheerfulness and good humor in the background. A Washington lady found that letting coffee alone made things bright for her. She writes:

"Four years ago I was practically given up by my doctor and was not expected to live long. My nervous system was in a bad condition.

"But I was young and did not want to die so I began to look about for the cause of my chronic trouble. I used to have nervous spells which would exhaust me and after each spell it would take me days before I could sit up in a chair.

"I became convinced my trouble was caused by coffee. I decided to stop it and bought some Postum.

"The first cup, which I made according to directions, had a soothing effect on my nerves and I liked the taste. For a time I nearly lived on Postum and ate little food besides. I am today a healthy woman.

"My family and relatives wonder if I am the same person I was four years ago, when I could do no work on account of nervousness. Now I am doing my own housework, take care of two babies—one twenty the other two months old. I am so busy that I hardly get time to write a letter, yet I do it all with the cheerfulness and good humor that comes from enjoying good health.

REAPPORTIONMENT

GOVERNOR READY TO CALL SOLONS IN EXTRA SESSION IF NECESSARY.

LIQUOR AGITATION IS SHELVED

Five Hundred Attend Opening Session of the Third Northern Minnesota Development Convention.

Brainerd, Dec. 2.—Governor A. O. Eberhart aroused the northern Minnesota boomers, assembled in convention here to wild enthusiasm when he served notice that if the legislature this winter fails to pass the reapportionment bill, he will call an extra session for that purpose.

This sensational declaration came at the close of an extemporaneous speech by the governor on the annoumced subject of reapportionment. It was greeted by a storm of applause which lasted several minutes. The friends of reapportionment feel that he governor's statement insures the passage of the reapportionment bills. The members have no desire to return for an extra session and spend an extra time in St. Paul without compensation.

Governor Eberhart said in part:

"I am certain that common justice demands reapportionment and that it must come at once. I feel that when both parties have pledged themselves to it, when every one in the northern part of the state and in the large cities is for it, it is absolutely necessary that the next legislature shall reapportion the state. Reapportionment and development come hand in hand and I propose to use every rightful effort to have the legislature pass a bill that will be equitable and fair to everybody. The reason the state heretofore has not been reapportioned is because of the fear expressed by people living in the country that the large cities would get larger representation in the legislature. We have seen by the recent census figures that the cities have grown more rapidly than has the country, and at the same time that the northern part of the state also is growing rapidly. Therefore I say to you who represent the northern part of the state: "Do not allow the bugaboo of larger representation in the cities to frighten you from reapportionment, which is your just due as well as theirs.'"

Conservation Taken Up.

"Conservation, Question of the Hour," was the text taken by Frank M. Eddy, of Sauk Center. He followed the governor on the program.

The morning session concluded with the introduction of bills and the appointment of committees.

Robt. C. Dunn Addresses Delegates.

At the afternoon session, Robert C. Dunn, Princeton editor, spoke on "Good Roads and the Mill Tax."

W. M. Hayes, of Washington, D. C., and A. M. Dunton, of the McIntosh agricultural high school, spoke on the "Commission Plan for the Handling and the Settlement of State Lands" and "Consolidating Rural Schools."

A clever move to keep the liquor question off the floor of the association meeting was taken at the opening session. L. J. McPartlin, of International Falls, offered a motion which was passed without a word of comment. It provides that all resolutions be offered without reading to the committee on resolutions, and that no resolution rejected by the committee be presented to the association on the floor.

The resolution took the convention by surprise. The element which wants the association to take action for the repeal of the Indian treaties did not realize what the resolution meant until it had been passed. It has an effect of transferring the whole matter to the resolutions committee, which is expected to bury the matter without giving a chance for a scene on the floor.

Brainerd's thirst parlors are wide open and doing a thriving business. Clouds are approaching, as "Pussyfoot" Johnson has sent word he will be here on Monday. An order is expected at that time closing Brainerd's saloons on short notice.

County Option Is Not Considered.

County option is not being considered. Touching this subject and a man's qualifications for speaker the only demand is that county optionists and their "antis" be given a fair deal in the house during the coming session. Both the liquor interests and the anti-saloon men have able lobbyists ready on the scene. Those looking after the interests of the liquor men include Thomas Brady and W. L. Perkins, of St. Paul, Colonel Schall, of Duluth, and formerly of Minneapolis, and Frank White, of Elk River, recently defeated by a Prohibitionist for re-election to the legislature. Marshaling the hosts of the county optionists are Superintendent Stark of the Anti-Saloon league and W. H. Lee, of Long Prairie.

"Publicity, colonization and demonstration must go hand in hand in the development of northern Minnesota." This is the shibboleth of the convention.

In other words, this part of the state must advertise its resources, bring in the settler and, like the folks from Missouri, "show them" that there is as rich an undeveloped country as there is upon God's footstool.

And into this general scheme there enters the necessity for united action by all those who believe their own scheme, for the upbuilding of this section, is the Alpha and Omega of development.

The good roads man must work hand in hand with him who is crying for fire protection that will minimize such horrors as visited Baudette and Spooner recently; must hold up the hands of the man who insists that by drainage of swamp lands is the greatest good to be accomplished, and must materially aid and comfort those who demand for the settlers a chance to educate themselves and their children not only in the things that make for culture and social intercourse, but in scientific agricultural methods.

Brainerd. — An immediate reapportionment which shall not increase the membership in either the house or senate is to be demanded of the legislature by the Northern Development Association. In order that it can make known its reasons for reapportionment in no uncertain tones the association appointed a lobby that shall go to St. Paul, Jan. 1, and stay with the solons until all reapportionment demands have been granted or finally denied. The resolution covering the subject matter, introduced by H. Oldenberg, was unanimously adopted by the special committee on reapportionment, consisting of two members from each of the 34 counties represented in the association.

The resolution follows:

"Resolved, That the demand be made on the legislature to pass without delay a reapportionment bill, to become operative at the general election of 1912, which shall not contemplate an increase in the membership of the legislature.

"Be it Further Resolved, That the chair be authorized to appoint a committee of seven to go to St. Paul at the beginning of the next session of the legislature to represent this association in the interests of the bill."

Lobbyists Are Named.

Conforming with this suggestion, President Maxfield appointed the following committees:

Sixth congressional district, Rudolph MacKenzie, and R. J. Bell.

trict, H. Oldenberg, C. P. Craig, and J. E. Klenitz; Ninth district, W. R. MacKenzie and R. J. Bell.

Strong Good Roads Plank.

The resolutions committee will report a strong good roads plank, one calling for adequate fire protection and one demanding for the adoption by the state of a consolidated rural school system.

G. E. Marshall, chief United States forestry supervisor in the Cass Lake reservation, was the first speaker on the program. His address was on "Forest Fire Protection." He said, in part:

Problem of Forest Fire Protection.

"The problem of fire protection has come to be one of the most important problems to be considered in the proper development of northern Minnesota and in a great measure to the entire state, for two reasons:

"First—Northern Minnesota cannot afford to lose its timber or its citizens by fire.

"Second—Minnesota cannot afford to have the reputation that it does not provide adequate protection to the people that have been induced to settle in the northern part of the state.

"Now, what must Minnesota do to prevent fires? Please note that I did not say 'to protect itself from fires,' but 'to prevent fires.' The fundamental principle of forest fire protection is that there must be an organization to prevent fires and not merely designed to put fires out after they start.

"Minnesota today is without such an organization, and, assuming that the theory of prevention rather than protection is the correct one, in order to get started right, such a service must be provided.

Other speakers were Z. D. Scott, of the forestry board, Wallace G. Nye, of Minneapolis, A. R. Whitson, of the University of Wisconsin, and D. E. Willard, of the Northern Pacific railway.

With one exception all of the old officers were re-elected. The list comprises H. J. Maxfield, of Wadena, president; W. R. MacKenzie, Bemidji, secretary; Walter J. Smith, of Eveleth, treasurer; executive committee, F. A. Patrick, of Duluth, M. N. Koll, of Cass Lake and M. J. Brown, of Warren, who in St. Paul.

Duluth was chosen as the meeting place for tne next convention.

Last of Lupo Gang Caught.

New York, Des. 3.—The notorious Lupo gang of counterfeiters, whose members were suspected of at least one murder and many Black Hand cases, was put out of existence, the police believe, by the arrest here of 13 Italians and the seizure of a large amount of counterfeit bills. Nine of the prisoners are believed to be the rest of the gang, the leaders of which were arrested last winter and are serving terms aggregating 150 years at Atlanta, for counterfeiting. The gang was headed by "Lupo, the Wolf."

"And so your father refuses to consent to our union?"

"He does Rodolphus."

The sad youth swallowed a sob.

"Is there nothing left for us, then, but an elopement?" said he.

"Nothing."

"Do you think, Clementine, that you could abandon this luxurious home, forget all the enjoyments of great wealth, banish yourself forever from your devoted parents' hearts, and go west with a poor young man to enter a home of lifelong poverty and self-denial?"

"I could, Rodolphus."

The sad youth rose wearily and reached for his hat.

"Then," said he, "you are far from being the practical girl I have all along taken you to be."

And with one last look around on the sumptuousness that some day he had hoped to share, he sobbed and said farewell.—Browning's Magazine.

16 YEARS OF SKIN DISEASE

"For sixteen long years I have been suffering with a bad case of skin disease. While a child there broke out a red sore on the legs just in back of my knees. It waxed from bad to worse, and at last I saw I had a bad skin disease. I tried many widely known doctors in different cities but to no satisfactory result. The plague bothered me more in warm weather than in winter and being on my leg joints it made it impossible for me to walk, and I was forced to stay indoors in the warmest weather. My hopes of recovery were by this time spent. Sleepless nights and restless days made life an unbearable burden. At last I was advised to try the Cuticura remedies [Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills] and I did not need more than a trial to convince me that I was on the road of success this time. I bought two sets of the Cuticura Remedies and after these were gone I was a different man entirely. I am now the happiest man that there is at least one true cure for skin diseases. Leonard A. Because it is right at the edge of Greater Jacksonville, the fastest growing city in the country. Jacksonville Heights farms begin one mile from where land is selling in town lots at the rate of $3,250.00 per acre.

Because it was practically the first of all the Florida colonies to develop and settle—on account of its unsurpassed soil, location, altitude and cheapest shipping facilities.

Because 2700 farms have been sold to date and a population of about 700 souls sprung up in one year—and the lands are now settling at the rate of 40 families per month.

Because the Purchasers of Jacksonville Heights Lands Have Made Good

Settlers and farmers have succeeded. Prices and values have advanced—four schools have been erected. Hard surface roads constructed. Telephone line established connecting up with Jacksonville local telephone. Hotel buildings erected. 210 farms fenced and being developed all in a little over one year.

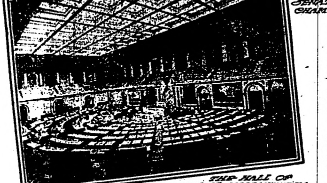
GOSSIP OF OUR LAW-MAKERS

by EDWARD B. CLARK

JAMES S. SHERMAN PRESIDING OFFICER OF THE SENATE

THE SENATE CHAMBER



THE HALL OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

CHANGES which are certain to come in the membership of the United States Senate next March will involve much more than a mere disappearance of old faces and the appearance of new ones. It often has been said that the senate of the United States is a law unto itself in matters of procedure, and so it is. The senate does things as no other legislative body in the world does them. The senators pride themselves upon the dignity of their body and they take no little pride apparently in the uniqueness of the rules which govern them and in the accepted method of doing things without absolute governing regulation.

Over in the house members draw for seats. A man just elected is as likely to get a first-class seat as a man who has been in the service of the house for years. The leader of the majority and the leader of the minority and the oldest member in point of service in the hall are allowed to select their own seats. After they have made their choice all is a lottery. In the senate the thing is different. A newly elected member of the upper house takes such a seat as he can find vacant, and his first duty to himself is to "file" on the seat of some other member so that he may get it when the other member dies or retires.

At times there are five or six "filings" for the same seat. For instance, if some senator has a choice seat and he is aged and in the ordinary course of things may be expected to die soon, his seat is certain to be in request by several senators provided that those lower on the list of applicants think that those above them like the holder of the seat himself, are likely to die, or to be retired quickly from the service by their constituents.

Some of the old senators do not like the way in which the younger members file for their seats. Then there are some senators who are not old who do not like to feel that others think that their seats soon are to be vacated. When a senator in the prime of life finds that his seat has been "filed" on he takes it as an intimation that the senator who does the filing thinks that the seat's occupant is nearing the end of his tether because his state has disapproved of his services, or that the political party opposing the one of which he is a member is likely soon to become in the ascendant.

Senator Dolliver, who died recently, had one of the best seats in the senate chamber, a commanding place from which he could always catch the eye of the presiding officer. The Iowan's successor in the senate will not get his predecessor's seat, for notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Dolliver was apparently in good health and was only fifty-two years old, there were three applications on file for his seat when he should vacate it. Of course it must be understood that the seats of the Republicans and those of the Democrats are separated and that no man of one party ever files an application for the seat of a man of the other party.

Senator Beveridge of Indiana was in the upper house for years before he succeeded in getting a seat to his liking. Early in his service he had filed an application for the seat occupied by Senator Spooner of Wisconsin, a vigorous man with apparently a long lease of earthly and senatorial life ahead of him. Unexpectedly Senator Spooner resigned, and Beveridge moved to what is perhaps the best seat in the house, one on the middle aisle midway between the front and rear of the chamber.

Elihu Root, who is accounted one of the foremost men in the upper house in point of ability, is obliged to sit in what is known as the "Cherokee Strip." There are so many Republicans in the present senate that they more than fill the seats allotted to the majority on the left side of the center aisle. There are not enough Democrats to fill the seats allotted to them. The vacant Democratic seats are away around near the wall to the extreme right of the vice-president, who has to turn his head to see the seats of the occupants. In this "Cherokee Strip" sits the "overflow" Republicans and one of them is Elihu Root.

Before the new senate office building was completed it was the effort of the senate to provide a separate room in the Capitol for each senator. All of these rooms were called committee rooms, but in order to dignify them as such it was necessary to create several committees which really were nothing more than committees in name, for they seldom held meetings and it is said that in one or two cases no meetings ever have been held. The senators as they were assigned to rooms were made chairmen of the committees which were supposed to meet in the assigned chambers. This gave the minority senators chairmanships, but it can be taken for granted that the majority always saw to it that the committees presided over by minority men were not of a kind to have any great influence on legislation.

Now that the senate office building is occupied and each senator has a general office, a private office, a reception room and a bath, it is not necessary to provide separate rooms in the Capitol for all the upper house members. So it is that before long it may be that the farce of naming committees which never have anything to do may be done away with.

Here is a list of some of the practically useless committees of the senate: "Transportation and sale of meat products;" "Revolutionary claims;" "Transportation rates to the seaboard;" "Investigate trespass upon Indian lands;" and last, "Disposition of useless papers in the executive departments."

There are to be many changes in committee chairmanships in March next and in fact there will have to be a general shaking up in the committee memberships as a result of changes in the senate's roll call. Senator Dolliver who died was the chairman of the committee on agriculture and forestry, one of the most important subsidiary bodies of the United States senate. Senator Frances E. Warren of Wyoming is the ranking member of the committee now that Senator Dolliver is dead, but Warren is the chairman of the committee on military affairs, a position which he would prefer to hold to that of the chairmanship of the agricultural body. No member holds two important chairs and so some one besides Senator Warren must be selected to take Mr. Dolliver's place at the head of the committee which looks after the bills in which the farmers of the country and the forest enthusiasts are particularly interested.

Eugene Hale of Maine will retire in March. He is at the head of the committee on appropriations, a position which next to the chieftainship of the committee on finance is the most important chairmanship in the gift of the senate. Nobody knows yet who will succeed Mr. Hale as committee chief, but it can be taken for granted that if the Republicans hold control of the senate and the so-called regulars hold control of the Republicans, Mr. Hale will be succeeded by a man of what in these days the country is given to call the old school of Republican thought.

Senator Nelson W. Aldrich of Rhode Island, the Republican leader in the senate, is the chairman of the committee on finance, which corresponds to the committee on ways and means of the house of representatives. It was the committee on finance which considered the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill and which reported it to the senate. Every bill which has to do with the raising of revenue goes to Mr. Aldrich's committee. Under the constitution all such revenue measures must originate in the house of representatives, but frequently the United States senate takes house bills and strikes out everything in them except the enacting clause, thus gets around the constitutional question, and frames revenue bills much as it wishes to. Of course these bills have to go back to the house for agreement, but the senate despite constitutional inhibition does just about as much original work in revenue measures as the house itself.

Who is going to succeed Nelson W. Aldrich as chairman of the most powerful committee in the senate of the United States? Nobody knows. Senator Julius C. Burrows of Michigan ranks next to Mr. Aldrich on the finance committee and in the natural order of things he would succeed to Mr. Aldrich's place as finance chairman. The difficulty is that Mr. Burrows has been defeated in the primaries for re-election to the senate and like Mr. Aldrich he is to retire in March. Boies Penrose of Pennsylvania comes next on this all powerful body, but it is more than whispered that chairmanship preferment is not to be given to Mr. Penrose. Next in order comes Eugene Hale of Maine, who is to retire in March, and thus is out of consideration. Then comes Shelby M. Cullom of Illinois, who will not accept the chairmanship under any circumstances, for his age precludes his undertaking the hard work connected with it. No one knows yet who will succeed the powerful Senator Aldrich of Rhode Island as the chief of the finance committee, a position which carries with it ordinarily the Republican leadership of the senate of the United States.

A good deal of historic interest centers in some of the committee rooms of the senate. The present senate wing of the Capitol was not completed until the year 1859, but there are several committee rooms still located in the old part of the great building. Even in the new section there are two or three rooms which have witnessed stirring scenes. In the room of the committee on territories for instance, a body of which Senator Beveridge of Indiana is the chairman, there were held the hearings on the Kansas-Nebraska bill and on other "free or slave soil state" matters. In the room of the committee on privileges and elections, of which Senator Burrows of Michigan is the chairman, many senators have had what might be called grand jury hearings on the question of their right to their seats. The Utah cases have been heard here, and it was here that Senator W. A. Clark of Montana appeared through his counsel to try to prove that he did not use wrongful means to secure his seat in the senate.

In the room of the committee on military affairs hundreds upon hundreds of problems were worked out during the days of the civil war. Since the United States has become a world power Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, chairman of the committee on the Philippines, has had many puzzling questions on his hands, and the hearings which have been held in this room at times have attracted crowds and nearly always have been of deep interest. In the Philippines room the "anti-Imperialists" have argued on behalf of independence for the Pilippino, and there have been met in debate by men who have maintained that the day of liberty for the "little brown brother" must be postponed until he is qualified for its privileges.

Memories of men pass quickly. While the United States government as a government is only about 121 years old, few men can be found today to identify without looking at the names, the pictures and the busts of men high in official government position or of great fame in their time in contemporary history. In the senate chamber placed in niches about the gallery walls are busts of the vice-presidents of the United States. Only the guides of the Capitol who have their lessons letters proof, can tell the names of these men without reference to the printed lists or the printed inscriptions.

When the house cleaning days were over only a season ago two pictures were replaced on the walls of the corridor of the senate. One of them was a picture of Patrick Henry and the other was that of Thomas Jefferson. For weeks the fact that Jefferson's picture has been labeled Patrick Henry and Patrick Henry's had been labeled Thomas Jefferson went undetected. Finally a visitor noticed the error, called attention to it and had the change made.

Perhaps the most striking picture in the senate corridors is that which shows Commodore Perry standing in the row boat to which he went from his sinking flag ship Lawrence to the ship Niagara at the battle of Lake Erie. Perry is pictured erect in the boat while a small boy evidently a "midship-mite," also standing trying to pull the Commodore down to a seat so that he will be less exposed to the furious rain of the shot of the enemy. The boy who is trying to induce the commodore to take the necessary precaution to save his life was a nephew of the great sailor, and it was he who later opened the ports of Japan to the commerce of the world. So it is that in the painting are the portraits of two Perrys, both of whom are famous in the naval annals of the United States.

MAD KING OTTO'S LIFE

Some remarkable details relating to the mad King Otto of Bavaria are published from a diplomatic source by the Giornale d'Italia, the London Chronicle says. Though shut up for forty years in castles, now at the Castle Furstenried, and though sixty-two years of age. Otto is still a fine, handsome figure, with a magnificent beard and flowing gray locks.

The stories about his periodical fits of fury are quite untrue. His court is presided over by Marshal Baron Redwis and consists of a few trusty gentry belonging to the most ancient families of the Bavarian aristocracy.

King Otto suffers terriby from insomnia and often sits up in bed half the night staring toward the door, as if expecting somebody to enter. He, however, rises punctually every morning at 8 and mutely allows himself to be dressed by his valet. He has a holy horror of soap and water, and of having his hair and nails cut, so that servants have to await patiently a favorable day for these operations, when the poor patient is in a state of complete apathy. King Otto smokes incredible quantities of cigarettes and is always puffing away save when he is absorbed in his favorite pastime of studying the operatic music of his pet composer, Verdi. Often he causes the castle to resound all day long with the melodies of "Rigoletto."

The diplomat relates that the first symptom of brain decay in the young prince, till then so bright, forceful and courageous, was manifested during the Franco-German war. Just before the seige of Paris Kaiser William summoned him to the headquarters of the general staff and kept him under observation, in company with Bismarck and Moltke, the reason being that King Otto had called out a squad of cavalry and ordered them to charge straight at a stone wall, which, he insisted, was a body of the enemy's infantry.

He began preaching everywhere the stern necessity of concluding peace with France at any price. Soon after intercepted letters were brought to the Emperor William which the Bavarian prince had been dispatching secretly to the enemy. It was then that the old kaiser sadly sent for the demented prince, decorated him with the order of the iron cross for service rendered in the campaign and packed him off under a medical escort for a pleasure trip in Spain and Italy.

Curari a Queer Poison

Curari, the vegetable poison with which the Indians of the upper Amazon tip their hunting arrows, remains a mystery in its composition after a hundred years of investigation by scientists. The Indians will sell it for its weight in silver, but will not reveal the plants from which it is derived. Not long ago a professor in a German university was sent to the Amazon wilderness for the express purpose of discovering the secret, for curari, or urari, as it is otherwise called, is now thought to be of great value in medicine. The professor lived two years in Indian villages, and while he was permitted to witness the boiling of the "witches' broth," which lasted several days, he could not tell what plants went into the brew. Returning from his baffled quest down the Amazon with a quantity of the poison, the professor was met by another traveler, Dewey Austin Cobb, who had got possession of a native blowgun. The latter tells in the National Geographic Magazine how he put some of the professor's curari on some of his blowgun arrows, which are like toothpicks feathered with cotton, and tried it on a buck deer in the forest.

"After a deliberate aim our hunter fired," says Mr. Cobb, "if I may use such a word for the little puff, scarcely heard by us, and entirely inaudible above the rustling corn leaves at the distance of the deer. The animal gave a slight start as it felt the prick of the arrow on its flank and turned partly around, sniffing the air for a scent, and looking about as if searching for the insect that had bitten or stung it. Detecting nothing, it stood still and unalarmed. At the end of a minute, or a minute and a half at most, its head dropped a little, as if it was sleepy.

"When the hunter saw this he arose and stepped out in plain sight. The deer turned his head and looked at him, and moved forward, not away from him, a few steps, and stopped. It showed no fear, but simply curiosity. After another minute the professor and I arose, and all three walked quietly to within reach of it. It made no movement to run away, but watched us intently, and shifted its position a little. Its movements seemed perfectly easy and natural. Absence of fear was the only observable change, until at the end of three minutes more; then it lay down, not falling, but as naturally as a cow or sheep when ready for sleep.

"We all approached its side, and the hunter laid a hand on its shoulder. It looked up at him, but showed no resentment or fear. Even its breathing seemed easy and natural, which surprised me, as I had heard that death resulted from paralysis of the lungs when caused by urari."

Gaunt House of "Vanity Fair."

Writing on the original of Gaunt House in Thackeray's first novel, "Vanity Fair," C. Van Noorden concludes that this was Harcourt House, Cavendish Square, and not, as most commentators incline to believe, either Hertford House, Manchester Square, or Lansdowne House, Berkeley Square. Harcourt House, says Mr. Van Noorden, corresponds almost exactly with the novelist's description in "Vanity Fair."

"The vast hall, the great gateway, etc., all are here, while the equestrian statue resolves itself into that of the Duke of Cumberland, the 'Butcher' of Culloden, which was removed in 1868, ostensibly to be recast, but has never reappeared. This figure appears in Thackeray's own illustration of the arrest of Capt. Crawley when leaving Gaunt House, affording another proof of the correctness of this localization. Harcourt House has now given way to a block of residential flats."—London Graphic.

Old Beverly Church Constructed With a Magazine.

Town's Ammunition Stored for Safe Keeping in Unitarian Structure—No Fires Ever Kindled in Meeting House.

Beverly, Mass.—The Unitarian church of Beverly is located on Cabot street in the central part of the city. For some years the parish was connected with Salem.

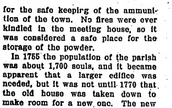
In the winter of 1666 the people of the Beverly parish sent a petition to the Salem people stating that they wished to form a parish of their own in Beverly and to erect a house of worship. The petition was received. It was signed by Roger Conant and 48 other church members.

On July 4, 1667, the subject of the petition was again considered and unanimous consent was given. Aug. 28 of the same year Mr. Hale accepted a call, and on Sept. 27 he was ordained. Previous to the ordination exercises the church was organized.

The following provision was made by the society for Dr. Hale's support. His salary was to be £70 a year with 30 cords of firewood. It was further agdeed that he should have the use of a new house, two acres of land to be fenced in, as much meadow as bore about four loads of hay and the benefit of the pasturing during the time that he remained with them in the ministry.

In 1690 Mr. Hale was invited by the general court to join the expedition against Canada as chaplain. This was strongly objected to on the part of the parish, but the objection did not seem to have weight and he went. Mr. Hale died May 15, 1700, and Thomas Blower of Cambridge succeeded him, being ordained Oct. 26, 1701.

The first meeting house was built in 1656, near the site of the present vestry. The second meeting house was built in 1682, on the site of the present church. The house was used for the transaction of public business, and in 1727 a powder room was built for the safe keeping of the ammunition of the town. No fires were ever kindled in the meeting house, so it was considered a safe place for the storage of the powder.



Unitarian Church at Beverly.

In 1755 the population of the parish was about 1,700 souls, and it became apparent that a larger edifice was needed, but it was not until 1770 that the old house was taken down to make room for a new one. The new house was built, and in 1795 it was enlarged. In 1835 it was again enlarged at a cost of $10,000, the whole structure being taken down with the exception of the stout oaken frame, and rebuilt in its present form. The church still stands and is in first-class condition.

REWARD AFTER MANY YEARS

A Modest Hero Gets a Gold Medal From Uncle Sam for Life-Saving Bravery.

Washington.—After 32 years of waiting, James Cummings, of Custer, Mich., a quiet hero, too modest to tell of his own bravery, has received from the treasury department a gold medal for his part in saving 44 lives from the wreck of the grain barge Rutler, off Ludington, Mich., on November 1, 1878.

Cummings was the engineer on the government harbor tug Colonel Graham. In a raw November gale the Rutler went down in 18 feet of water, when the cargo shifted, and drove the crew of 44 into the rigging. There the men hung a night and a day, the icy water breaking over them.

When Capt. Frederick Kendrick of the Graham volunteered to tow a lifeboat out to the wreck and the masters of sturdier craft had shaken their heads and declared it a lost hope, Cummings, down in the dark hold of the tug, stood by the throttle and encouraged his firemen. In a sea that threatened to swamp the tug and carried off the lifeboat they fought to the lee side of the wreck and took off the men.

Capt. Kendrick got a medal immediately, but the engineer, below was forgotten, until Representative James McLaughlin recently heard of his case and brought it to the attention of the treasury department.

DOINGS AT THE CAPITAL

Outclass Other Countries in Savings

SAVINGS BANK

WASHINGTON.—More than 9,000,000 depositors in the savings banks of the United States hold over $4,000,000,000. In the last year the number of savings bank depositors has increased over 300,000. The total amount of their deposits has risen $357,000,000 in twelve months. The average amount of every depositor's account is $445, which is nearly $25 more than the average the year before.

It is certain that not less than $6,000,000 in bank deposits can fairly be counted as savings. The national banks hold about $800,000,000 of such deposits. The trust companies have about $700,000,000 in savings accounts. The state banks hold over $500,000,000 on savings bank conditions. Total savings deposits of the country cannot fall under $6,000,000,000. There are more than 15,000,000 separate accounts in that immense sum.

The contrast between these figures and the statistics which measure the savings of other countries is proof of the difference between the ability to save and the wide diffusion of prosperity in the United States and the conditions in foreign lands.

In Germany, for instance, there are more than 19,000,000 savings accounts, but the total amount represented by that multitude of deposits is only about $3,400,000,000, or little more than half of the savings deposits in American banks. The United Kingdom, with nearly half as large a population as that of the United States, has about 13,000,000 savings accounts, including postal savings banks, of course, but the deposits amount to only about $1,050,000,000, or 16 per cent. of the American total.

Austria and Hungary together have about $1,600,000,000 in savings deposits owned by nearly 8,000,000 depositors. Italy stands high in the number of savings accounts, with 7,000,000 of them, in round figures, but low in the total amount of the deposits, which are under $700,000,000.

Japan is a marvel in respect to the wide use of savings banks, including the postal savings department of the government, but the amount of the deposits is very small in proportion to the multitude of accounts.

White House Season Formally Opens

FORMAL announcement of official functions to be given at the White House during the season has been made. These official affairs are quite distinct from those given by Mrs. Taft when the occasions are surround by a more private and personal atmosphere.

According to established custom the reception to the diplomat corps will be given first, and the date chosen is January 10, to be followed a week later by the diplomatic dinner. At the reception all persons connected with the embassies and legations, and the members of their families, are invited to be present, but at the dinner only the diplomatic chiefs and their wives, if there are any, receive invitations.

On January 24 the annual reception to the judiciary will take place, which a week later will be followed by the customary dinner to the members of the Supreme court. Mr. Justice Hughes and Mrs. Hughes will attend these functions at the White House as guests of honor for the first time.

The reception to the congressional circles will be on February 7, and as a dinner to these same people would be a practical impossibility at the White House, one is not given, but President and Mrs. Taft conceived the idea of giving a dinner in compliment to the speaker when they took possession of the White House, and last year the custom was inaugurated.

The following Tuesday, February 21, the state functions, which last a trifle over two months, will be concluded with the reception to the army and navy, an affair which has more brilliancy than any of the others, owing to the fact that most of the men guests are in full-dress uniform. Most people are uncertain whether they prefer to be present at the first or the last of the receptions, for, of course, that given especially for the diplomats is particularly brilliant.

Harem Refugee Goes Back to Turkey

NOW I AM NOT AFRAID OF ALL THE TURKS IN TURKEY

"I SHALL return to Turkey and minister to the persecutions of my people," says Bernixa Baherion, an Armenian girl, who is looking forward to the time when she will return to Constantinople, whence she fled six years ago, disguised as the servant of an American missionary, to escape life in a Musselman's harem.

She will return as an American citizen, an unordained minister of a Christian creed and a graduate nurse with a diploma from the Seventh Day Adventist sanitarium of this city and six months' experience in the famous London City hospital. She is just finishing her third and last year at the local institution, and this winter will go to England for the post-graduate course in the London hospital before going to Turkey.

Asked if she no longer dreaded those who had attempted to harm her, she replied: "They dare not molest me. I have lived in this country for six years. I am now an American citizen. I have taken out my first papers and am now ready to swear allegiance to the land of my adoption.

As Miss Baherion talked her voice was tense with emotion and her hands worked nervously, as she lived again the days that preceded her flight. She told how, as a child, reared in the Armenian faith, she had been converted by her father, himself a convert of the Adventist mission house in Constantinople.

Health Expert on Dangerous Games

DR. HARVEY W. WILEY, chief chemist of the department of agriculture and national authority on how to eat, has essayed a new role. Doctor Wiley has announced himself as a believer in the doctrine that it is better to have a few boys killed at football, on the diamond and in the water than to bring up a race of mollycoddles.

Rough sport, according to Doctor Wiley, is essential to the upbringing of a race of fearless, sturdy men who are qualified to cope with the great problems of life and to furnish the right sort of backbone for a progressive nation. To a reporter Doctor Wiley said:

"It is better, even for a few individuals, to sacrifice themselves for the good of the race than to bring up mollycoddles.

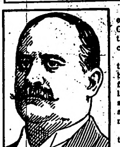
"If all the sports in which persons have sometimes been killed should be eliminated from the list of human activities, only ring-around-a-rosy would be left. Football would, of course, never be played again; baseball, riding, driving, swimming, boating, skating, flying in the air would soon be forgotten pleasures.

"It is that very element of danger in a sport that makes the sport an education in itself. It is the danger in the sport that educates youths and lads to be bold and fearless, and to be resourceful when beset with troublesome problems. The boy who has not played at dangerous games is not apt to know how to work at dangerous labors.

"The out-of-doors life of games, particularly of games of lusty activity, are necessary to children. City boys and girls, as compared with their country cousins, are raised under a restraint that works to their disadvantage."

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

NEW SENATOR FROM GEORGIA



Joseph Meriwether Terrell is the new United States senator from Georgia. The naming of Governor Terrell probably caused no surprise throughout the state. He was the one man most conspicuously mentioned for the post.

A former governor of Georgia and former attorney general of the state, Senator Terrell has been conspicuous for his interest in education for the boys and girls of the state. The establishment of the eleven district agricultural schools which have since come into being was authorized during his incumbency of the gubernatorial office in 1902.

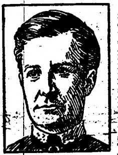
Senator Terrell served in the lower house in the sessions of 1884 and 1886, and in the senate which convened in 1890. He was elected attorney general in 1892 and served until 1902, when he resigned to make the race for governor. In that campaign he made over 120 speeches.

He served in the office of governor for four years and eight months, being given an extra length of time owing to the action of the legislature in changing the time of meeting of the legislature from October to June. He retired from the governor's chair on July 1, 1906, and has since been engaged in the practise of law in Atlanta.

The new junior senator from Georgia is forty-nine years of age. He was born in Greenville, Meriwether county, on June 6, 1861, the son of Joel E. G. and Sarah R. (Anthony) Terrell. The county of his birth was named for General David Meriwether, an uncle of his grandfather, and the one for whom the grandfather was named. He was educated in the common schools of the state and studied law, being admitted to the bar in 1882. Four years later, on October 19, 1886, he married Jessie Lee Spivey of Greensville.

The term for which Senator Terrell is named will terminate on the second Tuesday after the legislature meets next June, or whenever his successor is elected and qualifies.

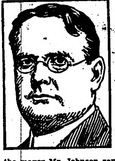
A WOMAN AIRSHIP BUILDER



Thousands of persons pass daily a dingy building in Twenty-third street, New York city, without ever so much as dreaming that up in its loft there is a woman with tireless brain at work on the great problem of conquering the air. One need not be unduly surprised at this, as women have invaded most of man's territory, anyway. Miss E. Lillian Todd is no newcomer in the field, yet she is the only woman builder of airships, and it is in the loft mentioned that she does all her planning. Visitors admitted to the place soon learn to watch out. If they do not they are sure to be hit in the nose by some cardboard model which the ardent Miss Todd sends whizzing across the room with a rubber-band motor. Miss Todd began serious work on a biplane about two years ago which was in successful flight on the aviation field at Mineola recently. "I don't care to say just what I'm working toward," she says, in answer to a question, "but what I—what every builder of an airship wants to achieve is a ship that will balance and recover automatically, like a bird. That more than anything else will make airship travel practical.

"I believe airships will be used as practical carriers within five years. They won't take the place of trolley cars, but there is a vast field for airships. They can be used for exploration. Think what difficult marches they will save. They will be of endless value to civil engineers in taking observations for the best points for bridges, etc. And of course they would be immensely useful in war; but let us hope there won't be any war for them to be used in.

BARS THE INAUGURAL BALL



Governor-elect H. W. Johnson of California, who declined to attend an inaugural ball arranged in his honor, is the insurgent leader in his state. He first came into prominence during the fight against graft, and it was largely due to his influence that Abe Ruef was convicted after the shooting of Francis J. Heney in court. Mr. Johnson was born in California in 1866. He studied at the University of California, practiced law at Sacramento and went to San Francisco in 1902. Prior to his departure for Washington he dictated letters in which he declined to attend the ball.

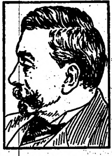
The mayor of Sacramento appointed a committee of thirty citizens to arrange for the customary inaugural ball. The list was submitted by Mr. Johnson's friends. In a letter received by the mayor Mr. Johnson says: "So far as I am personally concerned, I prefer that your plans be not carried out. I wish my inauguration to be of the most simple and direct character, without ceremony or ostentation."

Mr. Johnson says in a letter to a friend, Victor Hatfield:

"I wish the inauguration to be direct, certain and simple; and while, of course, the social amenities of the position will be punctiliously observed, superfluous entertainment to myself will be eliminated.

"It is for these reasons that I do not wish, so far as it relates to me, any inaugural ball or ceremony."

WINANS NEW TO HIS COUNTRY



Although he is fifty-six years of age, Walter Winans, an American citizen, never saw this country until he stepped ashore from the steamer Cedric at New York the other day. Mr. Winans' father, William L. Winans of Baltimore, went to Russia to build a railroad for the czar and never returned. It was said that the sea voyage from America had been so disagreeable that he feared to make the return. At any rate his son Walter was born in St. Petersburg and as the family established its residence in England he was brought up in that country.

Walter inherited an enormous fortune. He has devoted his life to sport. He has 32 of his horses now on Austrian tracks and may send these to America some day. He has a very large stable of show horses, 16 of which he has sent to this country for exhibition at the New York horse show. Mr. Winans is also a hunter of big game. He has killed 2,000 stags and boars. In fact, he is more devoted to hunting than he is to horse shows and racing. It is not alone as a sportsman that Mr. Winans has won fame. He has gone in for art and his work as a sculptor and painter has been exhibited at the Royal academy. Mr. Winans is much interested in tattooing, and a design on his arm is said to be the most beautiful piece of tattooing ever done.

Mr. Winans has lived nearly 40 years in England, and for 12 years he held the revolver championship of that country. He has always classified himself as an American. He is a chevalier of the imperial Russian order of St. Stanislas.

Odd News From Big Cities

Stories of Strange Happenings in the Metropolitan Towns

The Pursuit of the Tricky Smuggler

NEW YORK.—What is the psychology of the smuggler? Is he actuated by greed? Does he love the game for its excitement? Does he look upon the government as so impersonal a thing that to steal from it is not a sin? Is the rich man instinctively a greater smuggler than the poor man, and is the American a greater sinner than his alien brother?

These questions surely must have occurred to everyone who has been watching the extraordinary recent happenings at the New York custom house; who has made note of the millionaires and their wives who have been caught red-handed in attempts to cheat the government in the most brazen fashion; who has read of the tremendous frauds upon the customs perpetrated by the sugar trust and other great importers.

Collector Loeb has imbued subordinates with the conviction that they are not paid their salaries to help folk cheat the government. Among passengers, at least, most of the smuggling in the old days was accomplished through collusion of subordinates in the customs service. The system steadily developed through many, many years, until the sophisticated traveler knew perfectly that a ten or twenty dollar bill, laid on the top-tray of a trunk, would, when that trunk was opened on the dock, insure immunity from actual search, and that the money would be missing, later when the trunk was opened at hotel or home. A ten or twenty dollar bill so placed, in these days, would be like a spark to set a whole train of official powder burning—a train of powder which would lead to an explosion beyond doubt. It might blow the culprit into jail; it certainly would blow a heavy fine out of his pocket.

"In numerical proportion do you catch as many smugglers among steerage passengers as among travelers in the first cabin?" the vigorous collector was asked.

"No," he said. "I don't believe we do."

"What is the psychology of that?"

"I—haven't thought it out," said he a little hesitantly. "It would be interesting, though. Perhaps the fact that one has money makes him nervier. That may be it."

Plundering a City's Philanthropists

PHILANTHROPIC CROOK

PITTSBURG, PA.—"So-called 'Philanthropy' has become one of the leading crimes of Pittsburg—a crime to which we have found it necessary to apply heroic treatment."

Peter Pry Shevlin, a Pittsburg detective, who has been given the task of running down "Philanthropic crooks" in Pittsburg, made this remark:

"The good people of Pittsburg are virtually sandbagged each year out of more than enough to keep our poor in luxury," he continued, "and yet of each dollar given through the honest philanthropic promoter only about forty ce[illegible] of it reaches the point for which it was intended. As for the dishonest promoter who is now infesting Pittsburg—well, he gets it all, and in most cases comes back with an expense account to collect—and collects it."

It has been proved that a man with a good suit of clothes and a good address can, by gaining an audience with some of the social lead[illegible] Pittsburg and getting a name or [illegible] signed to a paper, start out and collect from $1,000 to $10,000 with little trouble. The amount of money he gets depends largely on the nature of the scheme.

The first of the alleged high-class philanthropic crooks to be taken in by the Pittsburg police through Shevlin's work is one named Silverman, who, it is alleged by the police, has already cleaned up $25,000 through the laxness of method in giving, by the rich of Pittsburg. Silverman has been in the toils in Pittsburg at least twenty times, but each time, until the present, he has been helped out by very rich relatives of his wife. Now the postal authorities have him.

Bent Pin Upsets Dignity of the Court

ST. LOUIS.—Judge William Jefferson Pollard of the Dayton street police court is sore as a result of the action of an undiscovered enemy who wounded his dignity and nether limbs by inserting a bent pin into his anatomy while he was sitting on the bench.

The bent pin was fastened in a board underneath the desk under which he stretched his legs.

The judge, after hearing a case on trial, started to cross his legs, preliminary to launching his judicial dictum, when an explosive "Ouch!" from the judicial lips startled the crowded courtroom and stopped the proceedings.

The judge quickly uncrossed his legs and tenderly rubbed the right one, while a pained and indignant expression possessed his features. He stooped underneath the desk and arose a moment later with a bent pin in his hands, which he held up for inspection.

"This thing has to stop!" he thundered. "This is not the first time I have been similarly outraged, and if it is not stopped I will demand a searching police investigation. I have a very strong suspicion of the identity of the person responsible for it, and I propose to make it hot for him if my suspicions are confirmed."

Judge Pollard would not tell who it is he suspects of the joke. He says he is not thin skinned, but he does draw the line at such pointed attacks.

All Betting Now Illegal in New York

ONE CAN'T EVEN PLAY MARBLES !-?-

ALBANY, N. Y.—All of the several laws prohibiting betting of every character in the state of New York are now in effect. These laws were originally aimed solely at racing, but amendments and changes were made until now it is hazardous to offer to make a wager by word of mouth. While there can be no wager unless there are two persons to the transaction, but if the offer is made and accepted, though no money be passed, the law is violated.

Directors and managers of race tracks are made liable for any violations that may occur within their grounds. Just as long as the blame was not fixed on them directly they were willing to race, and those desiring to bet on the races could find ways of their own to evade the law.

The laws apparently leave no loophole and several of the poolrooms and handbook men, who have done a thriving business in New York, have put up the shutters and others have intimated that they will make no further fight for a play when it may mean arrest and a jail term. If any plan has been devised to evade the law it is not generally known. Of course there are many who will continue to bet as they have before, but the handbook men are looking for new customers.

Though horse racing is a favorite medium for bettors, there is another sport that will feel the effects of the new law. It is boxing. At all of the club affairs there has been plenty of bets made on the result, and it has been the custom to make them openly. Now it will have to be done under cover, and then in violation of the law. "Orally or otherwise," as the law reads, puts up the bars just about as tightly as could be imagined.

AGE AND HUMAN USEFULNESS.

At what age are men at their best? The pessimistic theory attributed to Doctor Osler, which he afterward repudiated, that the golden age is thirty-five, or thereabouts, that it is followed inevitably by waning powers, and that there should be provision for chloroforming all who threaten to survive the age of sixty, has never had many serious adherents, says the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin. It is generally conceded that thirty-five is rather the beginning than the end of the prime of life, and that the vigorous human individual who lives sanely and cheerfully may do more in some important fields of activity after he has acquired the ripe judgment that comes with experience than in the heyday of the thirties and forties. Dr. T. M. Crothers of Hartford, Conn., has come forward with a declaration that is quite as interesting as the one Doctor Osler disowned, and that ought to attract equally wide attention. He says that "there are many reasons for believing that we carry around with us great reserve powers, and unknown energies which are seldom used, and that in old age appeal to these powers may give a certain vigor entirely unexpected, which lengthens our life and practically overcomes disease." He also says that "the man past sixty and from that on to eighty ought to be at his very best because life is then no experiment, and he has attained a position where he can use all his powers to the best advantage." Doctor Crothers insists that there is no theory in this, but that it "is sustained by a great variety of facts which fortunately are becoming more realized as the years go by."

A traveler in the west a decade ago was much amused at the vehicles he saw. They were all kinds of "contraptions." Buggies, "dearborns"—any old thing to ride in. The people out there were living close, faring hard and—saving money, says the Philadelphia Press. That's why the per capita savings bank account of Kansas excels that of all other states. It is astonishingly different today. At the Leavenworth county fair some days ago dozens of farmers came to the grounds in motor cars. They had paid for them, too. They had raised the wheat and corn to do it. The mere sensation of gliding swiftly over the roads where a year or so back they had condemned the "buzz" wagons which frightened their horses, gave them confidence and a new satisfaction. This is what the automobile has achieved in our country districts. It has made a modest toiler a man of new resources. It has put a machine in his hands and said, "Use it." And he is using it. He feels himself on a par with any millionaire who can afford to buy a new model every year.

The rapidity of development in this age is such as to cause many to lose sight of the fact that some of our chief industries are of comparatively modern origin. Cotton spinning has come to be one of the foremost of manufactures in this and other countries, says the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin. But in the present form it has been in existence less than a hundred years, the first cotton-spinning mill in the United States having been started in 1811 at Fall River, Mass. That city is preparing to observe the centenary of the business, and next year will have an imposing celebration. It may be of interest to know that when cotton manufacturing was started there Fall River was known as Troy, a name which was retained until 1834. Cotton goods of various kinds are made in Troy, N. Y., and vicinity, and the anniversary of the origin of cotton spinning will enlist attention.

Wonders never cease. A woman in Minneapolis is suing for a divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment because her husband persists in kissing her too often and ardently. And others complain because they are never kissed. No wonder the poor men have been trying unsuccessfully to strike a happy medium since the world started.

Boston is developing a taste for shark meat. There is some uneasy feeling in Wall street lest the taste spread to Gotham.

A Virginia school board has established a rule that its school teachers of the softer sex must not attend dances. The board should explain whether this action is taken because the teachers are not good enough to appear at dances or because they are too good.

The arrest of a man one hundred and seven years old shows how carefully we are protected from menaces to our community.

MRS. EDDY AT REST

BOSTON SERVICE AT BIER OF CHRISTIAN SCIENCE LEADER ATTENDED BY 120.

ONLY PINK ROSES ON CASKET

Relatives, Members of Household and Officials of Church Make Up Company of Mourners—Body Placed in Vault at Mount Auburn Cemetery.

Boston.—The body of Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy was placed in the receiving vault at Mount Auburn cemetery Thursday after services attended by 120 persons, including her family, relatives, members of her households, officials of the Christian Science church and publishing house and her personal students residing in Boston and vicinity.

Funeral services at the Chestnut Hill home were simple and were conducted with quiet dignity. Long before the time for the services to begin the holders of cards of admission began to arrive. Judge Clifford P. Smith, first reader of the mother church, conducted the services.

A great hall divides the house. At the left are two parlors and in the rear parlor in the bay window was the coffin of massive bronze, containing the body of Mrs. Eddy. Upon the coffin, which was closed, Mrs. Eddy's son and her grandchildren and her adopted son having seen the well-known face, was a bunch of pink roses from the members of the household. This was the only floral offering to be seen. In the rear of the hall Judge Smith was stationed. Those invited to the services were in the hall, the front parlor and the library, to the right of the entrance. Grouped on the second floor at the head of a wide staircase were Mrs. Eddy's family, her other relatives and members of her household. The furniture had been removed from the room where the coffin sat. The old rose draperies harmonized with the wall decorations, and the soft light of day illuminated the surroundings.

Judge Smith began the services by the reading of a lesson sermon correlative passages from "Science and Health, With Key to the Scriptures."

The poem by Mrs. Eddy, "Mother's Evening Prayer," was read by Mrs. Carol Hoyt Powers, second reader of the mother church.

This concluded the services and the coffin was then carried out of the door to the porte cochere, where the hearse was in waiting and the journey to Mount Auburn cemetery was begun.

There was no service at the receiving vault other than the reading of the XXIII. Psalm by Judge Smith and last verse in Jude: "To the only wise God, our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever," given as a benediction.

The coffin was then taken within by the pallbearers, the vault was sealed and there a guard will be maintained until a mausoleum has been built on the plots chosen for the final resting place of the body.

URGES MONEY REFORM PLAN

Secretary MacVeagh Says, in Annual Report, Our Present Currency System Breeds Panics.

Washington.—Currency reform; extension of the scope of the national banking laws, if there are no immediate general changes in the monetary system; civil service retirements; a customs service free from practical politics; business-like methods in the daily transactions of the government and abolition of red tape wherever it clogs the wheels of the government's business are among the recommendations in the annual report of MacVeagh, secretary of the treasury, presented to congress Thursday.

Expenses of governments in the fiscal year 1912, for which this session of congress is asked to appropriate, are estimated at $630,494,013.12. The estimated expenditures of the Panama canal are given as $56,920,847.69, making a total of $687,414,860.81. The estimates represent net savings of about $18,000,000 in the executive departments, compared with the appropriations for the current fiscal year.

"Our system can fairly be called a panic-breeding system," he says, "whereas every other great national banking and currency system is panic-preventing. As long as we continue under our present system we are liable to panics, and the devastations of panics reach Republicans and Democrats, and all parts of the country alike. Panics are no longer necessary and no longer respectable.

"We have no system of reserves; our banking system destroys them. It concentrates in New York what are pretended to be reserves and then forces the New York banks to lend and abolish them. Our system, instead of building up a reserve, destroys it as fast as it inclines to accumulate."

TORONTO MOB WRECKS CARS

WILD RIOT FOLLOWS MEETING OF PROTEST.

Eighteen Men Are Injured—Eleven Coaches Destroyed—Police Powerless to Keep Order.

Toronto, On.—In a riot of citizens 18 men were injured, 11 street cars demolished and the windows in 200 more were smashed, and quiet was restored only when the street car service in the down-town district was stopped.

Incited by fiery speeches, an audience of several thousand persons at a mass meeting called by Mayor Geary to protest against the installation of pay-as-you-enter cars was swept beyond control and became a mob whose carnival of destruction continued unchecked for over an hour. Except when motormen ran at high speed through the mob, every car that came within reach was demolished.

Two weeks ago the Toronto street railway installed pay-as-you-enter cars on the principal car lines. Much dissatisfaction developed over the innovation. It was claimed that antiquated cars not adapted to that kind of service were used. In addition it was said people getting on have been subjected to rough talk from conductors and crowding which, in the case of women, almost amounted to indecency. Ill feeling on the part of citizens has been growing steadily.

Much popular indignation has been aroused by the company's orders prohibiting smoking on the rear platforms and requiring persons to leave by the forward exit. The company asserted the right to fine persons infringing these rules and the provincial railway board affirmed this claim.

DUVEEN BROS. OWE $5,000,000

Collector Loeb Announces Art Firm Has Defrauded Government Out of Vast Sum.

New York.—Duveen Bros., the greatest art and antique dealers and connoisseurs in America, owe the United States government $5,000,000, according to an announcement made by Collector Loeb Tuesday.

This vast sum represents the customs duties out of which the government has been defrauded by the Duveens since they established their famous house twenty years ago. The amount was arrived at by the government experts, who have been comparing the book values of the firm with invoiced values sworn to on articles entered at the New York custom house. The amount claimed does not represent the value of the imports, but the actual amount out of which it is alleged the wealthy Englishmen have swindled this government in tariff duties.

John B. Stanchfield, attorney for the Duveens both in the civil and criminal actions pending against them, has instituted negotiations with officials of the treasury department and department of justice at Washington to compromise the cases against his clients, one condition of which is that the criminal proceedings against them shall be stopped upon the payment of a large sum of money by them.

JACK-POT STORY IS DENIED

Robert E. Wilson Testifies Before Senate Committee at Washington in Lorimer Case.

Washington.—The issue of whether or not William Lorimer is entitled to his seat in the United States senate will be submitted to that body before the Christmas recess of congress, according to the present plans of the sub-committee that is taking the evidence in the case. That was the program announced Wednesday by Senator Burrows, chairman of the committee on privileges and elections.

The announcement was made at the conclusion of the testimony of Robert E. Wilson of Illinois, the alleged distributor of the "jack-pot" of the last Illinois legislature. Wilson, after being much sought after, followed the footsteps of his predecessor on the witness stand—Lee O'Neil Browne—by entering a general denial to all the charges that he personally profited by the election of Lorimer to the senate, or that he gave out the "jack-pot" money in $900 packages to White, Link, Beckemeyer and the other southern Illinois "jack-potters."

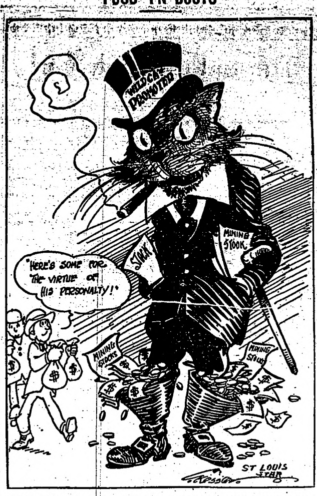
PUSS IN BOOTS



ACQUIT BALLINGER

MEMBERS OF CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE REPORT FAVORING INTERIOR SECRETARY.

HIS EFFICIENCY SUSTAINED

Critics of Cabinet Official Held Over-Zealous in Findings of Nelson and Colleagues — Coal Land Entries Taken Up.

Washington.—The Ballinger-Pinchot investigating committee, after eleven months of work, made its final report to congress Wednesday. The majority report, which is signed by seven Republican members, completely exonerates Secretary Ballinger on all the charges brought against him and condemns his accusers as having been inspired by animosity, built upon a supposed difference of policy respecting conservation.

After stating that the evidence presented related in the main to charges of various kinds against Mr. Ballinger and that these came chiefly from two sources—L. R. Glavis and Gifford Pinchot—the majority announced the following conclusion:

"The evidence has wholly failed to make out a case. Neither any fact proved nor all the facts put together exhibit Mr. Ballinger as being anything but a competent and honorable gentleman, honestly and faithfully performing the duties of his high office with an eye single to the public interest."

This report is signed by Senators Knute Nelson, chairman; Frank P. Flint, George Sutherland and Elihu Root, and Representatives Samuel W. McCall of Massachusetts, vice-chairman; Marlin E. Olmsted of Pennsylvania and Edwin Denby of Michigan, all Republicans.

A few months ago the Democratic members, Senators D. U. Fletcher and William E. Purcell, and Representatives Ollie M. James of Kentucky and James M. Graham of Illinois, with Representative Edmond H. Madison of Kansas, progressive Republican, issued another report, which they maintained to be a majority opinion, condemning the conduct of Mr. Ballinger as secretary of the interior. This report was made public after a meeting of the committee at Minneapolis last September, which was not attended by several of the Republicans who now have exonerated Mr. Ballinger. The natural minority became a majority and the Republicans who were present, with the exception of Mr. Madison, withdrew and broke the quorum.

In speaking of the "animosity" caused by differences respecting the conservation of natural resources, the majority of the committee said that the accusers evidently had this policy deeply at heart, and were "evidently disposed to take a most unfavorable view of the character and motives of anyone whom they supposed to be opposed to their views."

LIBERAL LOSSES WIPED OUT

CAPTURE FIVE UNIONIST SEATS IN THIRD DAY'S POLLING.

Hope of Changing Complexion of Government Has Become a Forlorn One to the Opposition.

London.—The third day's polling in the general election to decide control of the next parliament proved the most severe blow the Unionists have received. Going into the contest with a net gain of five seats, they came out with a net loss of one in the 299 seats now filled.

The Liberals captured five Union seats, Whitehaven, Coventry West, Southwark, Burnley and Woolwich. Against these decisive victories the Unionists have won only one seat, that of St. Helens in Lancashire, where they defeated a Laborite.

This net gain of four on the day's polling, added to the two Sunderland seats, wipes out the 12 Liberal losses, leaving the government with a net gain of one seat. As they went to the country with a majority of 124, this net gain of one, counting two on division, marks the beginning of the advance to a majority of 150 anticipated by the Liberal whips, and possibly to the 175 lugubriously predicted by the Unionist whips.

The voting has been remarkably steady. With the exception of Birmingham, where the Unionist plurality went down by 3,000, Liverpool, Preston, Nottingham and all the industrial towns, with a population of over 100,000, have recorded majorities for the Liberals. As far as the boroughs of London are concerned, the result of the election is a foregone conclusion, although there are still many boroughs to vote.

It is expected that the Liberals will win many of the county seats which they lost in January.

The complexion of the house of commons now stands: Government coalition, 152; Unionist opposition, 147.

The coalition consisted of: Liberals, 106; Laborites, 20; Nationalists, 26.

MOTHER MAKES FATAL ERROR

Gives Her Two Little Sons Tartar Emetic for Epsom Salts and They Die.

DeKalb, Ill.—Two sons of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Brown died within a few hours of one another from the effects of a dose of tartar emetic which was given them instead of epsom salts. The Browns' were moving from Sycamore to DeKalb.

The children had complained of not feeling well, and the mother decided to give them a dose of salts. In the confusion of the goods which were packed and ready to be hauled to Dekalb, she picked up the wrong bottle, which contained tartar emetic and which had been used about the house to drive ants away. It was from this bottle she gave the children the dose which took their lives in a few hours. The grief-stricken mother is lying in a prostrate condition.

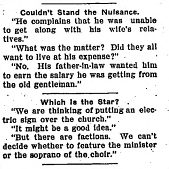
A LINGERER.



The Eldest Daughter—If Harry had lived in the old days he'd have made a good knight.

Her father—I don't know much about that—but it takes him a long time to say 'good night' now.

Couldn't Stand the Nuisance.

"He complains that he was unable to get along with his wife's relatives."

"What was the matter? Did they all want to live at his expense?"

"No. His father-in-law wanted him to earn the salary he was getting from the old gentleman."

Which Is the Star?

"We are thinking of putting an electric sign over the church."

"It might be a good idea."

"But there are factions. We can't decide whether to feature the minister or the soprano of the choir."

EAGER TO WORK.

Health Regained by Right Food.

The average healthy man or woman is usually eager to be busy at some useful task or employment.

But let dyspepsia or indigestion get hold of one, and all endeavor becomes a burden.

"A year ago, after recovering from an operation," writes a Michigan lady, "my stomach and nerves began to give me much trouble.

"At times my appetite was voracious, but when indulged, indigestion followed. Other times I had no appetite whatever. The food I took did not nourish me and I grew weaker than ever.

"I lost interest in everything and wanted to be alone. I had always had good nerves, but now the merest trifle would upset me and bring on a violent headache. Walking across the room was an effort and prescribed exercise was out of the question.

"I had seen Grape-Nuts advertised, but did not believe what I read at the time. At last when it seemed as if I was literally starving, I began to eat Grape-Nuts.

"I had not been able to work for a year, but now after two months on Grape-Nuts I am eager to be at work again. My stomach gives me no trouble now, my nerves are steady as ever, and interest in life and ambition have come back with the return to health."

THRESHING RETURNS FROM WESTERN CANADA.

They Reveal Larger Averages of Wheat and Oats Than Anticipated.

The returns from the grain fields of Western Canada as revealed by the work of the Threshers, show much larger yields than were expected as the crop was ripening. It is a little early yet to give an estimate of the crop as a whole, but individual yields selected from various points throughout Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta show that the farmers there as a rule have had reason to be thankful over the results. Excellent yields are reported from many portions of Manitoba and a large district of Saskatchewan has turned out well, while the central portion of Alberta is splendid. There will be shown at the land exposition at St. Louis a sample of the Marque's wheat—a new variety and one that appears to be well adapted to the soil and climate of Western Canada—that yielded 53 bushels to the acre. The exhibit and statement will be supported by affidavits from the growers. This wheat weighs well, and being a hard variety will find a ready market at the highest prices obtainable for a first-class article. It is interesting to point out that a field of one hundred acres of this wheat would give its producers 5,300 bushels. Sold at 85 cents a bushel would give him $45 an acre. Counting all the cost of interest on land at $20 an acre, getting the land ready for crop. Seed sowing, harvesting and marketing, the entire cost of production would not exceed $8 an acre, leaving the handsome net profit of $37 an acre. Is there any crop that would yield a better return than this, with the same labor and initial expense? Cotton fields will not do it, apple orchards with their great expense of cultivation and the risk to run from the various enemies of the fruit cannot begin to do it. While what is considered an exceptional case just now is presented, there is no doubt that this man's experience may be duplicated by others who care to follow his example. As has been said the growing of this wheat is but in its infancy, and wheat growing is still largely confined to other older varieties that do not yield as abundantly. Even with these we have records before us of farmers who have grown 40 bushels to the acre., others 35, some 30, and others again 25 bushels. Taking even 20 bushels, and some farmers report that amount, it is found that the returns from such a yield would be $17 an acre. This wheat will cost to get to market, including all expenses, about $8 an acre, and the farmers will still have a net profit of about $9 an acre. Certainly the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba are progressing, settlement is increasing and there is a general contentment all over the country. The social conditions are splendid, the climate is excellent, and there is every condition to make the settler satisfied. At the farming congress, held at Spokane in October, wheat shown by the Alberta Government, took the silver cup, awarded by the Governor of the State. It completely outclassed all other specimens on exhibition, and it was but an ordinary selection, hundreds of fields in Alberta and Saskatchewan being able to duplicate it. There are still available thousands of homesteads, as well as large areas of first-class land—that is being offered for sale at low prices. The agent of the Canadian Government from whom the above facts have been learned expects that the rush to Canada will next year largely exceed the numbers who have gone this year.

Progress in Railroading.

"Yes," said the lady whose dress case is covered with strange foreign labels, "the way railroads run nowadays is a great improvement over what they were 50 years ago."

"But surely you had no experience as a traveler 50 years ago," says her friend.

"I don't mean that. But nowadays, don't you notice, when there is a wreck it is always had at some point convenient to a cluster of farm houses where the victims can go for coffee and to get warm?"

What World Lost?

"It was the worst calamity that ever happened to me," sighed the pale, intellectual, high browed young woman. "I had written a modern society novel, complete to the last chapter, and a careless servant girl gathered the sheets of the manuscript from the floor, where the wind had blown them, and used them to start a fire in the grate."

"What a burning shame that was!" commented Mrs. Tartan.

Why Kick?

Louis Wisna, the Newark artist, wore a gloomy look on his usually cheerful face.

"It has just struck me," he said to Charles Strasse, "that my shoes don't cost me as much as my youngster's."

"Then what are you complaining about?" asked Strasse.

Asking Too Much.

"The count has promised that he will never beat or kick me if I will marry him," said the beautiful heiress.

"But has he promised to work for you?" her father asked.

"Oh, papa, don't be unreasonable."

PISO'S is the name to remember

The Little Lonely Girl

By TEMPLE BAILEY

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

A month of rain and a month of high winds had kept the Little Lonely Girl a prisoner. Hence, on the first sunshiny morning in October she sallied forth, locking the door of her room, high up in the tall tenement, with a sense of joy and of freedom unknown to those whose lives are not bounded by four narrow walls.

The Little Lonely Girl carried a very small basket and a thumbed paper-backed volume. Over her arm hung a shabby shawl. She stepped lightly, however, as if her feet wanted to fly over the ground and take her as quickly as possible from the grimy street where she lived.

It was ten o'clock when she reached the goal of her desires. Most people would have seen nothing attractive in the stretch of stone sea wall at the end of a smoke stained city park. But there was a curve in the wall which made a rest for the Little Lonely Girl's back, and, with the shawl tucked in for a cushion and her book in her lap, she could read and watch the ships, and drink in the freshness of the sharp, salt air.

At noon she was ready for her lunch, and the hard-boiled egg and slice of bread seemed wholly inadequate to the demands of her appetite. She ate the very last crumb, then flung the box from the top of the wall. With it went a fine white napkin, which was a left-over from more affluent days. She craned her neck to look where it fell, and saw it flutter across the eyes of a man who lay half asleep on the sands below.

He looked up.

"Would you mind," she hesitated, "handing it to me?"

He was on his feet in a moment. "Wait till I catch it," he called.

As she watched him run after it there seemed something familiar in the long stride.

She Could Read and Watch the Ships.

Therefore she was ready to say demurely: "Who would have thought of seeing you here?"

He peered up at her through his glasses. "Babbie," he said, "by all the fates! Did you drop from the sky?"

She shook her head. "I was watching the ships from the sea wall."

"Wait till I come up," he said, and made a quick ascent.

"Now tell me," he commanded. He sat down beside her on the shawl.

The telling was not easy. "I am living here in the city and earning my living."

"How?" was his quick question.

She evaded him. "And this is the first clear day for a long time, so I took a holiday and brought my lunch and my book, and—it's lovely."

In spite of the brave tone, he was not deceived. His keen eyes had noted the shabby black shoe tucked under the worn skirt, the plain little hat and the unfashionable coat. It was not thus that Babbie had garbed herself in her butterfly days.

"Babbie," he said, gravely, "what has happened to you, my child?"

"I mustn't tell you," she whispered.

He leaned down to look in her eyes. "Why not?"

"Because I don't want—pity."

"Ah—" His hand went over hers in a sudden hard grasp. "Is it as bad as that?"

"Yes, I have almost died of loneliness—and you were the only one who might have helped—and I couldn't ask you."

"Why not?"

"I think you know."

"Because you sent me away when you were prosperous, you wouldn't call me back when you were poor? Is that it, Babbie?"

"Yes."

"Don't you know that my love wouldn't ask questions? Don't you know that I've been sailing the seas, traveling in foreign lands to ease my heart? Could anything make me so glad as to spend my life in service for you?"

"I know, but the same cause exists today that existed a year ago. Richard."

"You still stick to that?" There was a note of anger in his voice.

"Yes."

He stood up. "Then I might as well go, as I went before—"

Her hand went out to stay him, then she said, drearily: "Yes, you might as well go."

So he went, heavily, as one who carries a burden, but when he reached the sands he called back to her. "Tell me where you live." She shook her head, emphatically. "No."

After he had gone she packed up her book and her shawl and went home. The brightness had gone out of her day, and she wanted to be where she could weep alone. It was dark when she reached her room, and there was nothing to eat, for her midday meal was all she could afford.

It was very early in the next morning when the slatternly chorewoman, who looked after the halls, knocked at Babbie's door.

"A basket left for you, miss," she said, and thrust it in.

"Not for me—" Babbie protested to the echoes; then she slipped out of bed and knelt to open the tiny hamper. "It's surely a mistake," she murmured.

But it was not a mistake, for under the oiled paper was a bunch of white violets, with a card: "For Babbie's breakfast table" scrawled on it. Then there was a grape fruit, six small white rolls, a little jar of marmelade and another of potted chicken, a pat of sweet butter and a bottle of milk.

There was no name, but Babbie knew the writing. She glanced hastily from the window, but no one stood on the doorstep. And though, when she was dressed, she made many excursions down the stairs, she did not come upon him.

Every day there came a small hamper; sometimes it was sent from the delicatessen shop around the corner, and held a hot meal, and again it was from the fish market, with oysters cold in their shells, or a lobster with all the accompaniments of pickles and crackers and mayonnaise, or from the fruit shop, with nuts and apples and oranges and grapes and figs.

While her pride rebelled at these gifts, she could never find the donor to ask him to stop. Her timidity and reserve made her shrink from going to the shop keepers, and in the meantime she grew rosy and strong with the good food and the knowledge that she had a friend.

The chorewoman, whose lot was cheered somewhat by a share in the good things which came to Babbie, offered pertinent advice.

"If you've got a man that thinks enough of you to send you such things, you'd better tie to him."

"Babbie shook her head. "I mustn't."

"Why not?"

A sudden impulse came over the girl to confide in this shrewd woman.

"Do you think it is right for a woman to marry when she thinks she inherits an incurable malady? My father died of one and I have always been afraid. The man who sends these things wanted to marry me then, but I was still afraid. One can't help thinking of what may happen, you know. So I came here and have sewed and managed to exist."

The chorewoman's keen eyes met hers. "Do you know what I think?" she asked.

"No."

"You've been left to think about yourself too much. Probably your pa coddled you, and got your mind in the wrong way. I don't believe you're any more sick than I am."

"But—" Babbie began.

"Look here," the good woman said, "you go down to the hospital with me in the morning. They have a big man there who doesn't make mistakes about such things, and he'll tell you the truth."

Babbie promised, but the trip was never made, for that night the "big man," who was a famous doctor, tramped up the stairs with Richard Dwight.

"I'm not going to have any more foolishness, Babbie," Richard said quietly, as he came in. "I've had to wait all these days until the doctor came back from a trip. I don't want the opinion of any one else."

There was a trained nurse with the doctor, and Richard went away to talk in a whisper to the chorewoman, who was an eager listener on the stairs.

The doctor, coming down, delivered his opinion with a smile. "She is as sound as a nut."

Richard went up three steps at a time. "And now, Babbie!" he said radiantly.

She held out her hands to him. "And now—" but he did not let her finish her sentence; for his arms were about her.

At the wedding the chorewoman was the only spectator. She was resplendent in a new gown, which was the gift of the groom, and happy in the promise of her new position as housekeeper in Babbie's home.

So perhaps the sum of her prayers for the bride amounted to more than the usual formal petition which at such functions go up from critical audiences.

Horrible Bequest to Father.

What is probably the strangest and, at the same time, the most horrible bequest ever made is to be found in the will of Lieutenant de Pab, formerly an officer in a smart regiment of Austrian hussars, who was executed by strangling some few years ago for the murder of his brother. Previous to his execution the murderer requested that he might be photographed while hanging on the gallows, and a copy of the ghastly picture sent to his father.

POULTRY

FEED POULTRY BEEF SCRAPS

Hens Need Variety of Food if They Are to Be Kept in Healthy Laying Condition.

Poultry need a variety of food if they are to be kept in a healthy laying condition. There are too many flocks of poultry on our farms during the winter that lack animal and green food—in fact, are fed a one-sided ration. Corn and oats are handy, and it is "something to eat" for the hens. But in order to produce eggs and be profitable, hens must have some proportion of animal food. Beef scrap is excellent if it is properly prepared and properly fed. This is a preparation from scraps of beef that are purified and, through a chemical process, are preserved for future use. Care must be taken that the scrap is pure and of good quality. If it is salty, musty, lumpy, or has a foul odor, it is not fit to feed; in fact, will cause indigestion and bowel trouble when forced upon the hens.

Where the hopper system of feeding is followed, do not mix the beef scrap with the grain, but supply it to the fowls in an apartment by itself. Fowls should first become accustomed to it by giving them a little at a time at first. Overfeeding of this highly nutritious food will cause bowel trouble, says Wisconsin Farmer. After hens have become accustomed to it, a supply can be kept before them at all times, and that they will eat only what they need, provided they are fed liberally of other foods and do not partake of the scrap to satisfy their hunger. If it is found that fowls are eating too much of the beef scrap, take it away altogether and only feed it occasionally, giving it either in the mash or feeding it dry, according to the convenience of the poultry keeper. Fowls should have only a small proportion of the beef scrap—about 15 or 20 pounds to each 100 pounds or dry grain, and even less than that will give good results.

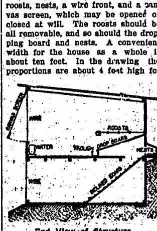
Farmers who are keeping a small flock of hens for winter eggs—say about fifty hens—will do well to buy a couple of hundred pounds of beef scrap, or any other prepared animal food, and see what a difference can be made in the production of eggs. A little of scrap, together with a variety of vegetables and what other animal food that is usually obtainable on a farm, will make eggs when the price is high. Do not wait until the last moment before laying in the proper food for winter eggs.

SIDE-HILL POULTRY HOUSE

Convenient Plan for Construction of Double-Story Affair With Scratching Pen Below.

A convenient way of building a poultry house on a side hill is shown in the drawing herewith. This is a double-story affair, with a scratching room below. This room is open to the south and is partly below ground, says the Orange Judd Farmer. Not only does this afford a good scratching room, but it aids in moderating the temperature in the roosting room above, which is thus kept warm in winter and cool in summer. If desired, a part of this lower room may be used as a dust bath, preferably with a glassed window in front to protect it from rain and snow and to keep the dust well sunned. Drinking water should be kept on the second floor, so as to be away from the dust as much as possible.

The upper floor is provided with roosts, nests, a wire front, and a canvas screen, which may be opened or closed at will. The roosts should be all removable, and so should the dropping board and nests. A convenient width for the house as a whole is about ten feet. In the drawing the proportions are about 4 feet high for the lower floor, 4 feet 6 inches for the upper floor at the back, and 6 feet at the front. Any convenient length may be chosen for the house, but handy sizes for the pens are 8 to 10 feet, depending upon the size of the flocks.



End View of Structure.

Fine Eggs for Hatching.

Too many people are afraid to pay the price of fine stock for eggs for hatching. Remember that the best costs money and, while it is just as easy to raise thoroughbred fowls after you get started, you must pay a good price for good stuff to start with. So many who are just starting in fancy poultry keeping want to get fine birds for too little money. Remember that fine birds are in demand and the person who has them doesn't need to sell them at give-away prices. Often those who have not fine stock offer them as

TWO GOOD WATER FOUNTAINS

Receptacles Are Absolute Necessity in Chicken Yard and Inexpensive—How to Make Them.

It is of the utmost importance that poultry have easy access to good fresh water at all times. Two simple drinking fountains are shown in the illustration.

The one on the left is made from an old empty can and pan. Two ears are soldered on the sides with a wire so it can be hung in a frame. This can is placed right side up and filled with water when a cork is put in through which is made a small hole. The can is then inverted and made secure and a shallow pan is placed under the cork. The water will fill the pan above the hole in the cork and as fast as the water is drunk by the fowls more fresh water from the reservoir will run into the pan. The figure on the right is made in a similar manner except that the water is held in a receptacle soldered on by the tinner. These cans must be air-tight with no openings, save those permitting the water to come out.

SIMPLE DRIVER FOR POULTRY

Device Is Good for Ducks, as They Are Extremely Nervous and Easily Frightened.

It is not very easy to drive chickens where they don't want to go. "Shooing" with the apron or throwing up the arms only serves to frighten them, and rarely accomplishes the object desired.

A simple help is a palm-leaf fan wired to a long stick. Used gently, the chickens may be guided in any direction, and are never frightened. This device is especially good for the purpose of driving ducks, as they are extremely nervous and easily frightened.

A Simple Chicken Driver.

Milk for Laying Hens.

Milk, in small quantities, will generally be taken readily by laying hens, and it is in every way excellent for them, but if given too frequently, or in so large quantities that it cannot soon be taken care of, a flock is apt to tire of it, and sometimes refuse it entirely. Pure water should always be accessible, as milk will not and cannot take its place.

Good Roofing.

Shingles or felt roofing makes a warmer and cooler roof than metal for poultry houses. Heavy felt roofing is especially good for this purpose, because it keeps out cold winds.

Fix House and Yard.

During the fall months is the time to fix the poultry house and yard, for when cold weather comes we find the work disagreeable and often impossible.

POULTRY NOTES

Fresh eggs are always cash and are never unsalable.

Do not provide roosts with sharp edges for the young birds.

Work to secure special customers for eggs and dressed poultry.

Breed only from the most vigorous breeding stock to be secured.

Lice and mites are ever present where cleanliness is neglected.

Pigeons must have clean bathing water about three times a week.

Good health in the fowls is the foundation of successful poultry husbandry.

There are many reasons why pure bred chickens should be preferred on the farm.

A good, active, healthy, growing chicken will seldom be troubled with leg weakness.

Keep doubtful eggs at home, as a bad egg may result in the loss of a good customer.

One of the most difficult things for a beginner in poultry raising to learn is to cull closely.

There is something in oats that gives speed to the mare and material for eggs to hens.

Have a clean, warm, dry place with straw or litter for the roosting quarters of the ducks.

In placing the birds in winter quarters separate hens from pullets, as they require radically different amounts of food.

It is said that the largest incubator in the world is in Australia; 11,440 ducks' eggs or 14,044 hens' eggs can be hatched in it at one time.

The main factor in securing success with poultry in winter lies in the house being perfectly dry and warm.

Why Do They?

Why women like the baldheaded man it is somewhat difficult to define. It may be because he appears to be:

Thoughtful and kind.

Trustworthy and confiding. Whimsical. Past the follies and frivolities of youth.

Usually successful.

A man of property.

Opinions why women like the baldheaded man obtained by the Daily Mirror are as follows:

He is not silly like young men.

He accepts refusals of marriage so nicely that one is sorry one did not accept him.

The bald patch looks so clean and nice. One would like to kiss it.

A doctor welcomes baldness when it comes to him, as it is a sign of sedentariness and dignified learning, which invariably increases his practise.

It was kind of a mean trick to get that train load of professional voters down from Bemidji to vote for Pennington county, and then not pay their fare back. There was quite a number of the poor fellows passed through Plummer "beating" their way back to the tall timber.

The Republican Leagues of St. Paul, Minneapolis and Stillwater have, through a joint committee, arranged for a convention to be held in Minneapolis on the fourth day of January, 1911, and a banquet at St. Paul on the evening of the same date. This is the first political convention ever held in the northwest solely for the purpose of considering political principals. It is the hope of the committee that every Progressive Republican in the state will co-operate to make this movement a success.

The Eleven Towns-Swanson, at-al, are kicking because the farmers were not heard of when the Pennington county officers were appointed. The farmers got just what we told them they would get before election-they got it in the neck. Do you remember the five stars? Thief River Falls has three and the farmers two! You were fine fellows when you was turning the grind stone for them to grind their ax but now you belong to the farmer producing class. Good for you! It serves you right, and we are sure that they will hold you down so close that an eleven town farmer could not get the position of official spittoon cleaner. Put in another kick, that's all the good it will do you.

His Little Joke.

A well known German who is something of a wag walked into one of the public offices in Cincinnati the other day, and from the noise it was plain that he was wearing a pair of new shoes or ones that had recently been repaired.

One of the clerks remarked about the shoes, and the German said:

"I comes pretty near selling dese shoes the other day."

"How is that?" asked the clerk.

"I had 'em half soled," said the German as he walked out of the office.

A deep groan was heard as he slipped through the door.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

A SEA MYSTERY.

Showing That Hate Is Stronger Than the Elements.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

I have been on the sea for forty years and have passed through many dangers. Thus I have had ample opportunity to observe how different people will act in the presence of death. Three times have I been carried from a stranded ship over boiling seas in a breeches buoy and twice gone down with the ship. While I can't say that I have become used to it, yet I have gained self control in the presence of death, and this has enabled me to take notice of the action of others similarly situated.

Up to a certain point a marine disaster is like a battle, many on board being sustained by an endeavor to avert the catastrophe. But once all effort has become useless those exposed to the merciless waters sink to a condition of despair. Then the timid woman may rise above the vigorous man, and a little child may show more fortitude than all. Once, and only once, in my long experience have I witnessed a case where the fear of death from the waves was swallowed by something stronger.

In 187— I was captain of a steamer fitted up for the passenger service and running between New York and Bermuda. One trip we made at a season when travel was at a minimum and carried very few passengers. The day we sailed the weather was fair. The few passengers were supposed to be on board, and the gangplank was about to be drawn in when a man was seen running through the dock house for the steamer. I was leaning over the rail at the time to see that all was clear for pulling out, and as soon as the newcomer was aboard I turned away. Then I saw a passenger standing on the deck pale as a ghost.

"Did he get aboard?" he asked.

"Yes," I replied and gave the signal to move. I had too much on my mind to give any thought to the incident, and it did not occur to me again till later in the voyage.

The next morning after breakfast as I was going up on to the bridge a man stopped me and said:

"Captain, since you have sailed one of your passengers has disappeared."

"How do you know that?" I asked.

"Never mind how I know it. I simply report the fact."

"Which one is missing?"

"His name is on the list as Elbert Carpenter."

"I will have a search made."

I called for the purser, went over the list with him and told him to find Elbert Carpenter. He made a search and reported that no such man was aboard the ship. A stateroom had been engaged under the name, but the key had not been called for. No one knew him, and it was not known whether he had come aboard or not. I sent for the passenger who had reported the matter and told him that it was probable the man had been left behind.

"No, he wasn't," said the informant. "I saw him on deck standing beside you when I came aboard."

"Are you the man who came late?" I asked.

"Yes. I was the last one to go up the gangplank."

Then I remembered the passenger who seemed to have been affected by the other's coming.

"What's your name?" I asked.

"Burton—Edgar Burton."

"Well, Mr. Burton, will you be good enough to tell me why you take so great an interest in this man Carpenter?"

Without reply he turned on his heel and left me. I asked the purser what it all meant, and he said he didn't know. A man had engaged passage under the name of Elbert Carpenter, but he had seen nothing of him. He had searched the ship and had not found him, but admitted that it was quite possible for a man to hide, especially by going away down into the depths of the hold. I took a look at all the passengers—there were but twelve of them—with a view to discovering if I could recognize the man who stood beside me when we sailed. After examining them all I was sure he was not among them.

The affair was a mystery. The officers made it a topic of conversation while on and off duty, and the passengers in the smoking room talked and made bets about it. A pool [illegible] placed [illegible] problem whether Carpenter had come aboard, was still aboard or had gone overboard. The only person from whom it seemed probable that information could be obtained was Mr. Burton, but when approached on the subject he shut himself up like a clam.

The more I thought about the missing man the more I recalled his appearance. He was rather long of body and short of leg, long neck and red hair, his face being sprinkled with freckles. Mr. Burton was in appearance his antipodes. His body was not long enough for his legs, which were like stilts. His complexion was dark, and his face wore a sinister expression. A scar on his left cheek was noticeable. His head was small, round as a bullet and set down on his high shoulders without any interval of neck.

I instructed the purser to continue to search for the missing passenger, for I had seen him, and he must have come aboard. Of course as soon as we made port his loss would be common property, the reporters would make a good deal out of it, and I preferred that we should be able to give an explanation. But the purser, I was told, poohpoohed both my evidence and that of Mr. Burton, which concurred, and made only a half hearted effort to find the man. His theory was that Carpenter had not come aboard.

But that occurred which put the mystery out of the heads of all of us. Before sailing the signal service had given a warning of a hurricane in the West Indies. I watched the barometer and one morning about four bells saw it drop like lead. It wasn't long after this that the wind began to send fragmentary clouds across the heavens, increasing hour after hour in violence till it was plain that we were in the teeth of the hurricane.

Our vessel was of average strength, but any ordinary ship having to stand the wind and waves of a hurricane is liable to give way. When a wave struck us it was as if several tons of rock had been hurled against us out of the mouth of a gigantic gun. The drops of water beating against my cheek struck like gravel stones. The only passenger on deck was Mr. Burton. I was on the bridge when I saw him come up the companionway, turn and look at the storm. It seemed to make no more impression on him than a twelve knot gale. Then, looking up at me, he sang out:

"This will drive him out."

At any other time the words would have seemed ludicrous, but now, knowing that if the hurricane did not blow itself out very soon our vessel would not be able to stand up against it, I had no interest in what the man meant. Indeed, soon after this I heard an ominous creaking and when the bow plunged down in between the monster waves and rose again I felt the ship bend at the waist. From that moment I knew she was liable to break in two.

It was half an hour after this that I left the bridge in charge of the first mate and went below to make an examination. By this time the passengers knew that the ship was about to go to pieces. Passing through the cabin, I found them all, except Burton, grouped while one of them was praying.

"Are we lost, captain?" asked all at once.

"I am going to see," I replied and hurried away. Passing down a companionway, I entered a lower deck. It was dark, but not so dark that I could not discern objects. And this is the sight I saw through the gloom.

There was the long bodied, short legged carpenter defending himself against the stilted Burton. Carpenter's weapon was a heavy furnace poker, Burton's a cutlass that he had stolen from among a lot of old arms that had been locked up in the ship for years. Burton made his thrusts and let fall his blows with the fury of a demon, while Carpenter, though on the defensive, had been driven to bay and was no less wildly vindictive. Both men were covered with blood.

The contrast between this picture and that of the huddled passengers I had just left occurring under the frightful conditions made my blood run cold. The ship and passengers were in my care. I was going to find out how great was the damage from the strain—whether, indeed, we had minutes or hours before being engulfed—and yet my steps were momentarily arrested by the sight of two human beings seeking to kill each other in the very presence of another, a more fearful, ending. Yet it was but a glance I gave them, then hurried on.

I found the strain great, but there were braces that bid fair to still hold the ship together for some time. Having noted this, I hurried back to the bridge by another route than that by which I had come, for I desired to shut off both the praying passengers and the fighting enemies. As soon as I reached the deck I noticed a lull in the wind and saw a yellow strip of light on the horizon in the direction from which the storm had come. I sent an officer to the passengers below to tell them the hurricane had passed and there was hope that the ship would not break in two.

It was not till the next morning that I considered the danger past. Then I went below to announce the good news to the passengers. All were in the cabin except Burton and Carpenter. As I left them I heard the voice of a passenger raised in thanksgiving for having been spared. I went on into the place where I had left the two men fighting and found them [illegible]. What the elemental tempest had passed over the [illegible] of hate had taken [illegible].

Their secret died with them. Nothing ever afterward came up to give a clew to the nature of the feud between them. We buried them at sea, [illegible] them over the ship's side to [illegible]

Fine winter weather this!

Ye editor was doing Notary work at Rhoda Wednesday.

There will be a Christmas tree entertainment at the Kratka hall on Sunday evening December 25th. All are welcome.

Miss Hooper has been taking pains to get up a good program for the Highlanding school, for next Friday evening. Be sure to come and hear it.

County Commissioner Peter Hedeen was up here yesterday making a deal for wood with Walt McAndress and made this office a plesent call.

We do not know how the Pennington county contest is geting along, but we received a business letter yesterday from a man who ought to know with this p.s: "Pennington county will be kocked off the map."

There will be a Christmas tree entertainment at Highlanding school house on Friday evening December 23rd. The school will give an intertainment commencing at 8 o'clock sharp. After the close of the school childrens programme the presents will be distributed. All are welcome.

The town of Kratka are geting permission to build a bridge across Red Lake River and will get the money this winter to build it. Good boys! Here is wishing you success. We are not in the bridge building business this winter, as we got our wings pretty well clipped two years ago, and we find that it is no fun to pay out your good hard cash to try and get a public bridge and get dirt for thanks. Now you Highlanding fellows don't need to fight geting a bridge in your town or get Swanson to help you, as we wont bother you at all, for we are not in the bridge business.

A Fine Wedding Reception.

The wedding reception of Mr. and Mrs. Gunder Stromme, held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Kolstad, last Saturday evening was one of the largest gatherings of people that we have have ever seen in eastern Red Lake county. Mr. Kolstran has just completed a 40 x 50 foot barn and the upper story was used for a ball room, with no room to spare. He also has a large farm residence, and that was crowded full of people. But they all had a good time, and no one had to complain of being hungry, or dry. Music was furnished by the Kolski string band, and dancing was kept up until daylight in the morning. Mr. and Mrs. Stromme recived some fine presents and those who had not provided presents made up and presented a purse to the bride, and all went home satisfied, and wishing the happy couple a long and happy wedded life.

WOOD WANTED.

Seald bids will be received by the board of directors of school district No. 87, for ten cords of green poplar wood, to be deliverd at the Highlanding school house by March 15th. All bids should be handed in on or before Jan. 7th, at which time the bids will be opend and contract let.

W. G. Hunt, clerk.

Very Fine Mixers.

It was found in the Stephens Sugstad election contest over in Polk county, that one man had wrote the name of John Sugstad on 72 election ballots that were cast and counted. Pretty good mixer that, but we can beat him, as we have a duck in Thief River Falls that fixed 88 ballots that voted no on county division, so they would not count at all.

Bring on your next story from Polk, as we are 16 votes ahead

STAGE REALISM.

Clara Morris' Study of a Victim of Heart Disease.

No actress ever surpassed Clara Morris in the care with which she studied for a part. When she was studying the part of Cora in "Article 47" she visited an insane asylum in order to learn the signs of insanity. Cora was not only insane, but she was disfigured by a hideous scar as well. Miss Morris spent weeks in trying to secure a correct representation, and one day she saw in a street car a woman who had exactly that kind of disfigurement. She studied it and reproduced it, but her kindness of heart shrank from reproducing it in such fashion that the sufferer might recognize it if she ever saw the play. So she worked over it until she made enough alterations to feel certain that no one, not even the owner of the original scar, could ever suspect the imitation.

When she was studying the part of Miss Moulton, who was to die of heart disease, she visited a specialist who had a number of patients suffering from that trouble. He showed her one of his patients and then, to her surprise and horror, ran the sufferer up a flight of stairs that Miss Morris might see the symptoms as produced after an excitement of the heart. Miss Morris was filled with pain and pity. She made the poor patient a present of a bank bill as she was leaving. The woman accepted it and then as she was stuffing it into her glove caught sight of the figure on the note. The size was so large that it brought on a recurrence of all the symptoms—the starting eyes, the gasping breath, the widening nostrils. This time the heart excitement was caused by joy, not pain, but Miss Morris was so overcome with horror and sympathy that she hurriedly left the house.—Ladies' Home Journal.

HIS FIRST WIG.

John D. Rockefeller Was Timid About Wearing It in Public.

When John D. Rockefeller first donned a wig he was apparently somewhat timid about showing himself with it in public. H. M. Briggs, who was for a number of years very closely connected with Mr. Rockefeller as his personal bodyguard, writes in the American Magazine of the oil king's debut in his new hirsute adornment:

"One morning Mr. Rockefeller came to church in a wig for the first time. As he arrived some time before the services very few were present. Dr. Eaton, the pastor of the church, laughingly said, 'Mr. Rockefeller, we love you with or without it.' I went with him into the Sunday school, and we passed a reporter, who did not recognize him. I told Mr. Rockefeller of this, and he said, 'You surprise me.' He inquired if there was a mirror in the church, and I took him into Dr. Eaton's office. He stood in front of the glass, and, finally getting it adjusted, he asked me if it looked all right. I asked him if it was comfortable. I really did think the wig made a great improvement in his appearance. He said that it was going to be quite an ordeal to enter the church for the service. I said, 'Mr. Rockefeller, you have gone through worse.' He shrugged his shoulders, and we passed into the church together. If his presence on previous occasions never failed to attract attention the stir that followed his entrance on this particular morning must be left to the imagination. After the service, when the 'ordeal' was over, he seemed as tickled with his wig as a boy with a new pair of red topped boots."

Manufacturing Christmas Cards and Novelties

"STAMPING" CHRISTMAS SEALS

THE purchaser of one or a dozen Christmas cards never gives a thought to the fact that he is contributing his mite to an industry of really surprising magnitude considering that the majority of its products are designed to sell for a penny, a nickel or a dime. And yet a moment's reflection must convince one that it is no slight responsibility to provide holiday tokens for the American people, for there are few commodities more generally used than are these inexpensive expressions of good will that accompany almost every gift at Christmas and are sent through the mails by the millions at the joyous Yuletide season.

By way of indicating the development which has been reached in this business of supplying Christmas and New Year souvenirs it may be cited that the largest American manufactory of these trifles occupies a five-story brick building with more than 100,000 square feet of floor space and a big addition is now being built to meet the ever-increasing demand. In this fountain-head of holiday trophies there are employed more than 300 persons, many of them high-salaried designers, engravers and color printers. Fully two-thirds of the force of workers is made up of girls and young women, for despite all the wonderful machines which have been invented of late years to help in the manufacture of Christmas novelties, a large part of the work must yet be done by hand and in this deft feminine fingers are to be preferred to men's handiwork.

It may surprise some people to learn that a manufactory of Christmas cards and like novelties is busy all the year round. One Christmas has no sooner passed into history than the designers are busy trying to evolve new conceits and novelties of various kinds for the next December trade, and using the record of sales for the holidays just past to guide them in their efforts by the evidence it affords of the trend of the ever-changing public taste. Nor is the "busy season"—the "rush period" of this activity the interval of a few weeks before Christmas, as many might suppose. On the contrary, it is during the midsummer. When most of us are celebrating the Fourth of July and enjoying an August vacation the workers in the Christmas card factory are toiling night and day to get out cards with pictures of snow scenes and the like. Of course emergency orders are received almost up to Christmas, but the great bulk of Christmas novelties must be in the hands of the dealers four months in advance of the day they are to be placed on sale.

And just here it may be added that by no means all of the Christmas tokens turned out by these wonder workers are low priced. We are wont to think of Christmas novelties as costing no more than a quarter apiece, at the outside, and yet among the hundreds of different designs produced by a big manufactory each year will be found holiday remembrances that retail at prices ranging all the way from one cent to $10. Yet the profits of the manufacturers come principally from the low-price goods and there is ever a feverish quest for novelties. The souvenir post card craze was the biggest thing the manufacturers ever encountered, and for all that one American factory has prepared 20,000,000 post cards for this year's trade it is realized that the fad has seen its best days and the manufacturers are now hunting high and low for something to take its place. The most promising prospect is found in the little Christmas "seals" (stamps or stickers) for packages and letters which have come to have such a vogue of late years and are now being manufactured by the dozens of millions a year.

There are some seven or eight main operations in the manufacture of a novelty such as a Christmas card or an ornamental calendar. First of all comes the designing or the making of a preliminary sketch the object of which is to show how the completed novelty will look. This sketch may be painted in water color, made with the aid of an "air brush" or formed by pasting together (in a new arrangement) details taken from other novelties.

When a design is approved it goes to the "reproducing room," where arrangements are made for manufacture in quantity. Next comes the preparation of the printing plates, dies, etc., and this is followed by the actual printing in quantity. Some of the presses are big enough to print 64 Christmas cards at a time, but some of the more elaborate cards must be run through the presses ten or a dozen times in order to obtain the desired color combinations. Cardboard novelties must be cut and then stamped or pressed into shape. The Christmas seals above mentioned are punched by hand or by means of machinery. The arrangement of the various pieces that go to make up a novelty, the adjustments of silken cords, the tying of ribbons, etc., all come in a process known as "manufacture." Finally the cards or novelties are packed in wooden or pasteboard boxes, all ready to be displayed on the counters of the stores as soon as the holiday spirit in the air proclaims the approach of the principal holiday of the year.

THE TRUE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT

Kindness Toward Our Fellow Men, Toward the Needy and the Lowly Is Its Message.

The old message of good will toward men is the Christmas spirit, and the hope is that all have been cultivating that spirit all the year long. If some have not, however, this week is their opportunity, to secure at least a fringe of it.

The birth of Jesus of Nazareth is the special occasion of the festival, but all are agreed that the best way to celebrate that momentous event is by keeping the old message of good will to men fresh and active in the hearts of all.

To be plain and brief the spirit of Christmas is kindness toward our fellow men—toward the needy, the lonely, the unfortunates in our civilization's complex life.

Christmas is the one great festival of the entire Christian world, and no one keeps it who does not imbibe that spirit [illegible] sounded the note of peace to men, of good will, and this note has gone on gathering strength and university down through the ages. All the ceremonials on Christmas day are outranked by the general feeling and desire to increase the happiness of others. For that is what the Christmas spirit is. It is not the cost of the gift that counts, but the spirit that goes with it.

The world is growing kindlier and better, and this is why each succeeding Christmas is greater than any that went before. Christmas and Santa Claus and the joy of children and the brightening of the lives of the less fortunate are all great living facts, and it is these facts that constitute the spirit of Christmas. Whoever has that spirit within his breast has the true key to Christmas with all its joys and happiness.

CONVIVIALITY OF CHRISTMAS

Holiday Season Moves Judge to Be Lenient Towards Old Toper.

At a dinner in Denver Judge Ben B. Lindsey told a story about Christmas conviviality.

"There used to be an old fellow of 60," he said, "who got arrested about twice a week for conviviality. He was always haled before Magistrate Blank, and as the magistrate was about 60, too, a queer kind of comradeship, almost friendship, arose between the two men.

"In the late autumn the toper was called away from Denver. He did not return till Christmas time. The convivial Christmas spirit in the crisp Denver air was, of course, too much for him, and the day after his return he was haled before the usual magistrate on the usual charge. [illegible]

"'Yes, your honor,' said old George, humbly.

"'You've been away some time, haven't you?'

"'Yes, your honor; nigh on to three months.'

"'And how many times, George, did you get drunk during that period?'

"'I don't like to say, your honor,' old George faltered, 'before all these here people.'

"'Well,' said the magistrate, 'take paper and pencil and write it down.'

"So George wrote, and the paper was passed up to the magistrate, who looked at it and said:

"'Ah, well, it's the Christmas season, and since you were away three months, George, and only got drunk 16 times, I'll let you off.'

"'Thank you, judge,' said old George, as he left the dock. 'You looked at the paper upside down, though.'"

As if the immemorial charges against her of keeping us awake o' nights and of eating canary birds whenever she gets the chance were not enough, the doctors have just discovered that for years she has been responsible for the spread of diphtheria. Dr. G. J. Awburn of Manchester, England, having traced an epidemic of this disease in a suburb of that city to a pet cat belonging to one of his patients, has found, after much clever investigation, that all cats are peculiarly susceptible to diphtheritic affections of the throat. He has therefore recently been warning all families who own cats to watch them carefully, and, if they develop coughs, to forbid their being hugged and petted. Dr. Awburn further recommends that if the cough persists and the cat begins to grow thin to have the animal destroyed at once. The only really safe way, he says, is to let the first wheeze be pussy's death warrant.

SAVED OLD LADY'S HAIR

"My mother used to have a very bad humor on her head which the doctors called an eczema, and for it I had two different doctors. Her head was very sore and her hair nearly all fell out in spite of what they both did. One day her niece came in and they were speaking of how her hair was falling out and the doctors did it no good. She says, 'Aunt, why don't you try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment?' Mother did and they helped her. In six months' time the itching, burning and scalding of her head was over and her hair began growing. Today she feels much in debt to Cuticura Soap and Ointment for the fine head of hair she has for an old lady of seventy-four.

"My own case was an eczema in my feet. As soon as the cold weather came my feet would itch and burn and then they would crack open and bleed. Then I thought I would flee to my mother's friends, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I did for four or five winters, and now my feet are as smooth as any one's. Ellsworth Dunham, Hiram, Me., Sept. 30, 1909."

A Long Chance.

"I took a long chance when I asked her to marry me."

"She rejected you, eh?"

"No, that was the long chance I took. She accepted me."

Experience is a safer and more useful guide than any principle, however accurate and scientific it may be.—Buckle.

44 Bu. to the Acre is a heavy yield, but that's what John Kennedy of Edmonton, Alberta, Western Canada, got from 40 acres of Spring Wheat in 1910. Reports from other districts in that province showed other excellent results—such as 4,000 bushels of wheat from 120 acres, or 33 1-3 bu. per acre. 25, 30 and 40 bushel yields were numerous. As high as 132 bushels of oats to the acre were threshed from Alberta fields in 1910.

The Silver Cup

at the recent Spokane Fair was awarded to the Alberta Government for its exhibit of grains, grasses and vegetables. Reports of excellent yields for 1910 come also from Saskatchewan and Manitoba in Western Canada.

Free homesteads of 160 acres, and adjoining preemptions of 160 acres (at $3 per acre) are to be had in the choicest districts.

Schools convenient, climate excellent, soil the very best, railways close at hand, building lumber cheap, fuel easy to get and reasonable in price, water easily procured, mixed farming a success.

OLD BONDS BURNED

REDEEMED PAPERS ARE BURNED IN PRESENCE OF GOVERNOR AND OFFICIALS.

CEREMONY HELD AT CAPITAL

Papers Were Liens of $1,659,000—Major Portion Stands for Loss in Wild-Cat Rail Schemes.

St. Paul.—With all the impressive ceremonies that usually attend the burning of a church mortgage, old time state bonds, valued once at $1,659,000, but which were redeemed during the last year, were fed to the flames in the furnace at the capitol engine house. Present at the service were Governor Eberhart, Attorney General Simpson, Secretary of State Schmahl, State Treasurer Pettijohn, State Auditor Iverson and several newspaper men. The documents consisted of $1,450,000 in state capitol certificates and $188,000 in Minnesota refunding bonds.

The destruction of the latter marks the disappearance of the last of the old railroad bonds of 1858, and closes one of the most interesting and exciting of the financial controversies in the state's history. On March 9, 1858, the first legislature elected under the constitution passed an act proposing an amendment, authorizing a loan of $5,000,000 to four railroads. The eagerness of the people in those days to encourage railway companies with large grants and subsidies resulted in the passing of the amendment by a large vote.

State Left Holding Sack.

The bonds were issued and the companies proceeded to build their roads, but none was ever completed. The work was abandoned after bonds amounting to $2,275,000 had been issued. The state became the purchaser of these bonds at a foreclosure sale in October, 1860. In November, 1860, the people adopted an amendment which, in substance, repudiated the railway bonds by providing that no law levying a tax for the payment of these bonds would be valid until it should be ratified by a majority of the voters. It further provided that there should be no further issue of bonds under the act of 1858, and the law was stricken from the constitution.

For twenty years the bonds were not recognized as a valid state obligation. There was, however, a growing sentiment that a moral obligation rested upon the state to pay the debt. As a result the legislature, in 1881, provided for a compromise by which the holders of the bonds were to accept 15 per cent of the face value. The adjustment bonds, amounting to $4,253,000, were issued as substitutes for the old railroad issue.

Debt Now Wiped Out.

In 1891 the legislature authorized a refundment of the bonds of 1881 and after deducting the proceeds from the sale of internal improvement lands only $1,764,000 remained unpaid. Portions of these bonds were paid each year from a 2-10 mill levy. The last bond was paid recently, wiping out the entire obligation.

The payment of $1,450,000 capitol commission certificates, which also were destroyed, leaves $2,100,000 to be paid. This money is raised by a 2-10 mill levy. There will be enough money on hand on Feb. 1 to reduce the indebtedness to $1,850,000.

If the plans of State Auditor Iverson materialize the surplus of $850,000 in the state treasury will be used to pay off part of the certificates, reducing the debt to $1,000,000.

DENY NEW LINE IS TO BE BUILT.

Milwaukee Road Gives Little Hope to Farmers Around Willmar.

Willmar.—In reply to an inquiry by large delegations of farmers through the Willmar Commercial Club as to the probability of the Milwaukee company building the line of road projected from Hutchinson to Fargo in the near future a letter has been received from Vice-President E. W. McKenna containing the following statement:

"In respect to building a line upon a survey between Hutchinson and Fargo, which was made by this company last summer, the company has absolutely no plans in that direction, as it must be patent to an observer of events that the construction of any additional mileage of railway under existing conditions is entirely out of the question."

There is little doubt, however, that this line will eventually be built, and that a concerted action will be made by people interested in this and adjoining counties to convince the company that a route via Willmar, Sunburg and Starbuck would tap a country of far greater possibilities than that reached by the first survey.

STILLWATER MILL IS BURNED.

Tozer Company's Plant Destroyed—Loss Placed at $50,000.

Stillwater. — Fire broke out at South Stillwater, causing a loss estimated at from $50,000 to $60,000. The planing mill of the David Tozer company was totally destroyed. The plant was insured for about $40,000. The company intends to rebuild the plant at once. The origin of the fire is unknown, but it is thought it started in the boiler room.

PLEADS GUILTY TO ARSON.

Several More to Face Trial in Connection With the Same Offense.

Glenwood. — Richard Rogers of St. Paul, charged with the burning of a store in Westport, last June, had his hearing in justice court and was bound over to the district court. He pleaded guilty before Judge Flaherty to arson in the third degree, and was sentenced to four and one-half years at hard labor in the prison at Stillwater.

When asked whether he had anything to say, Rogers said he had been hired to do the work. He received a letter stating that there was $100 for him for doing a certain job. He met the man who had written the letter and asked him what he was to do. On arriving at Glenwood a team was hired in the evening, and when the men arrived at Westport he was ordered to set fire to the store. He did not know until he reached Westport what he was to do. Rogers is 40 years old. He has no trade, he says, but makes his money by gambling.

The case of the state against William Jones was then taken up. Jones was indicted last June by the grand jury in connection with the same fire. The state is represented by County Attorney J. O. Grove and State Senator C. J. Gunderson. Jones is defended by H. T. Ronning.

Indictments have also been found against James Adair of St. Paul, who owned the stock, and Harry Weiler, who was in charge of the store for Adair.

"HONEY BOYS" BURY HACHET.

"Insurgent" and "Standpat" Bee-Keepers Forget Squabbles.

Minneapolis. — "Insurgent" and "standpat" apiarians were as sweet as honey with each other when factions of the organizations that had warred for eight years came together in annual meeting at the First Unitarian church, united as the Minnesota Bee Keepers' association.

As a result of the split, the new organization is to have for its purpose "the promotion of good fellowship and brotherly feeling among the bee keepers, as well as accomplish the more practical objects of increasing the knowledge and secure needed legislation."

The session opened with a "Beginners' Hour," in charge of Scott La Mont. "Our Society's Responsibility in the Apiarian Exhibit at the State Fair" was discussed by Rev. J. Kimball of Duluth and M. V. Facey of Preston. Bee hive demonstrations were conducted by E. L. Leonard, Minneapolis, in the afternoon, when there also was a report made by State Bee Inspector Hamlin V. Poore of Bird Island.

FRANCE AIDS POTATO MARKET.

Moorhead Grower Expects Duty Removal to Stimulate Demand.

Moorhead.—Produce men in this city, which is a center of shipping for the crop of Red River Valley Early Ohios, are of the opinion that the action of the French government, in removing the duty on incoming potatoes, will greatly stimulate the potato market within a short time. Leslie Welter, one of the local dealers, says:

"It may take some weeks before the produce men in the East get the crop moving across the water, but eventually the strain on the local market, produced by Eastern potatoes coming West, will be relieved and prices will rise and the demand increase."

The last government crop report shows a potato crop of 328,000,000 bushels for this year. The average consumption per capita is three and one-half bushels. If the complete census returns show the population of the United States to be 91,000,000, then on the three and one-half bushels consumption basis, the United States would consume 318,000,000 bushels of potatoes this year. If France will only take the 10,000,000 bushels, which would only mean one-half bushel per capita, the surplus of this country would be relieved and the situation would clear.

MEDICAL BODIES MAY MERGE.

Mankato. — The thirtieth anniversary of the founding of the Minnesota Valley Medical association and Southern Minnesota Medical association was celebrated at a joint meeting of the associations. The question of merging the bodies was discussed. All the delegates were in favor of the plan, but voting on the proposition was postponed until the summer meetings of the associations.

The following officers were chosen by the Minnesota Valley association: President, Dr. L. A. Fritchie, New Ulm; first vice president, Dr. H. B. Aitken, Le Sueur Center; second vice president, Dr. J. J. O'Hara, Janesville; secretary, Dr. A. G. Liedloff, Mankato; treasurer, Dr. G. F. Merritt, St. Peter.

ARRIVE IN NEW YORK SOON.

Body of Dr. Hutchinson Probably Will Be Buried in Faribault.

St. Paul.—John Hutchinson, brother of Dr. Hutchinson, who died at Algiers, Africa, secured definite information that Mrs. Hutchinson would arrive in New York about December 14. It is probable she has the body of her husband with her, although Mr. Hutchinson could not be certain of this. The funeral will be held at Faribault, the old home of Dr. Hutchinson.

MILLIONS ASKED FOR RIVER.

Treasury Estimates Include High Dam For Twin Cities.

Washington, D. C. — If the estimates of the treasury department sent to congress are adopted in making appropriations for this year $250,000 will be expended in continuing the construction of the high dam and locks in the Mississippi river at Minneapolis.

The total of the estimates for improving the Mississippi from the Ohio river to Minneapolis for the next year will be $2,500,000 as compared with $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 11, 1911. Of this amount $1,250,000 is needed for the work on the river between the mouth of the Missouri and Minneapolis. There also is an estimate that the work on the Mississippi river from the head of navigation to the mouth of the Ohio, river, including the expenses of the Mississippi river commission, will amount to $3,000,000 as compared with $2,000,000 of last year.

An appropriation of $3,600 for the maintenance of the St. Croix river is asked; for the maintenance of Agate Bay harbor, $2,000; for the maintenance of the Red River of the North, $5,500.

Among other appropriations for Minnesota and the Northwest are $2,500 for the improvement of the Wind Cave in the National park, South Dakota; $4,500 for the Duluth fish culture station, and $8,700 for the Homer, Minn., station.

For public buildings at Faribault, Minn., $20,000; Lead, S. D., $20,000; Sioux Falls, S. D., $12,000; Duluth, $95,000 for additional lands.

MORE SALOONS ARE CLOSED.

Government Indian Agents Strike Near Bemidji.

Bemidji.—The "Pussy-foot" Johnson lightning struck close to Bemidji, three saloons in this city's supurb, Nymore, having been closed by Special Agent E. T. Brents. Practically all saloons in the territory affected by the 1855 treaty with the exception of the 28 saloons still doing business here, are closed.

In each place orders were issued to pack up all liquors and ship them out of the dry zone or to the brewery at once. This was complied with and no liquor was confiscated.

Tenstrike and Turtle River have also been closed.

Deputy James M. Quinn, of Brainerd, closed Pillager and Klondike saloons. It is strongly suspected that Deputy Quinn and assistant deputies will close the saloons and malt shops of the Cuyuna range. There are five malt shops in Deerwood, one saloon at Crosby in the Spalding hotel, one malt shop at Ironton, one saloon and two malt shops at Cuyuna. The first slated to be closed in this list is at Crosby, it is said.

GAS PLANT WORK STOPPED.

Waseca Mayor Refuses to Approve of City Franchise.

Waseca.—The Waseca Gas Company's franchise, which has been the issue in two general and two special elections, has been brought before the district court for determination as to its validity, by the filing of a petition for an injunction restraining the gas company from further work on their mains and plant. This franchise was granted in a special election about two years ago, but the council at that time refused to allow the company to build the plant, and a special election was called by the council for the purpose of voting bonds for a municipal gas plant. Municipal ownership was voted down and in the next general election a council favorable to the gas franchise was elected. The franchise was granted, but the mayor refused to approve it. Notwithstanding this the company commenced work and has proceeded with the building of the plant until the restraining order was issued. The stockholders of the company are all residents of this city.

PHYSICIAN INDICTED FOR ARSON

Accused of Setting Fire to Auto to Collect $800 Insurance.

St. Cloud.—A sensation was sprung in the district court when the grand jury of Stearns county returned an indictment for arson in the second degree against Dr. J. C. Boehm, a prominent physician of this city. It is alleged in the indictment that Dr. Boehm set fire to an automobile belonging to him in order to collect $800 insurance on the machine.

A bench warrant was sworn out and the prisoner was arraigned before Judge M. D. Taylor. Bail was fixed at $1,000, which was furnished.

Dr. Boehm is one of the most prominent physician here and the act on of the grand jury came as a complete surprise. He has lived here twenty years and always has borne a good reputation, having served at times as an alderman, member of the board of education, secretary of the Stearns-Benton county medical association and at present he is a member of the government medical pension examiners Accidentally Shot; Killed.

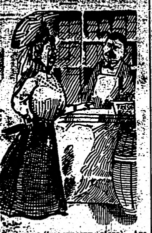
Duluth. — Robert Quayle, aged fourteen, of Aurora, Minn., met death by being shot while hunting. Quayle and a companion, George Rye, were hunting rabbits in the woods near Doop's farm. They came to a small creek which Quayle crossed first. Rye handed Quayle the guns. He took them muzzle first, and in drawing them toward him the hammer of a shotgun became entangled in Rye's clothes, discharging the weapon. The charge of shot entered Quayle's body killing him instantly.

THE JOCULAR CLERK.



Customer (in grocery store)—Are those eggs on that counter fresh?

Clerk—Yes, ma'am.

Customer—How long have they been laid?

Clerk—I laid them there myself, ma'am, 20 minutes ago.

Sense of Taste.

From a series of experiments recently made at the University of Kansas it is evident that the average person can taste the bitter of quinine when one part is dissolved in 52,000 parts of water. Salt was detected in water when one part to 640 of the liquid was used. Sugar could be tasted in 228 parts of water and common soda in 48. In nearly all cases women could detect a smaller quantity than men.

Literary Accuracy.

"You write of your hero as stealing home in the darkness," said the editor.

"Yes," replied the author.

"Well, you ought to know better than that. He couldn't steal home in the dark. If it was dark enough to be worth noticing the game would have been called."

Russia's Growing Population.

This year's census of the Russian empire adds another five millions to the population as enumerated in 1908. The czar's subjects now number 160,000,000 and increase every year by 2,500,000 despite wars, epidemics and internal disturbances. As there is no lack of cultivated soil in Russia there seems no reason why this big annual increase should not continue.

Fulfillment.

"Two great desires of my life have been gratified. One was to go up in an airship."

"And the other?"

"To get safely back to earth."

Rosemary—that's for Remembrance

A Christmas Story

by S. R. Crockett

THE Morris-Moores had just had their first—no, not quarrel—tiff. Harry was now in his study pulling down books he did not want and piling them up on his table. He selected a row of notebooks bearing title, "The Grisons and the Italian-Valleys." He got out extensive white-blotched Swiss survey maps, and files of the little "Ladin" paper printed at Samaaden. He had got all this up thoroughly on his last journey, and now was the time to dip deep into the pile of printed and annotated "stuff." It would help him to forget anything so absolutely silly as a little wife upstairs in her room, the tears of temper still wet on her cheeks, and employing her small white teeth in reducing to tattered "waste" a soaked lace pocket handkerchief.

Henry Morris-Moore felt himself very superior. He was calm, cold, judicial, and above what he called "infantile tempers."

Upstairs Clara wept and fretted.

To think, only to think—scarcely ten months married, and it had come to this! Ah, if only she had known! Were all men so cruel, so bitter? Did nobody care for her? She would go to her mother—No (Clara's reflection came refreshingly cool, like a splash of cold water), no-o-o—well, not quite that! For one thing, she knew her mother; and Mrs. Murray-Linklater would "pack her back to her husband." Clara heard her mother speak these very words.

But—it was over. So much was fixed. Never, never would it be "glad, confident morning again." Henry had settled that when he spoke those words—those cruel dividing words. He had said—had said—well, Clara could not quite remember what. But, at any rate, it was over. She could never forgive him—for saying that—yes, about dear Aunt Laetitia. Oh, yes, she remembered, "that he could never get her a single night to himself without some stalking old she-patriarch with a reticule coming in to spoil everything."

CLARA WAS LOOKING SIDEWAYS AT THE PATTERN OF THE CARPET

A GIRL STANDING ON THE STEPS, PUTTING UP HOLLY AND GREEN STUFF

Clara would not have her family spoken against—not by a score of Henry Moores. She had been educated carefully in the Murray-Linklater cult, and no Vere de Vere could be prouder of her name.

Clara, in her bolted bedroom, was getting out her blotting book and pad to write to her poor wronged aunt. She was going to ask a refuge for the few remaining days of a blasted life. Yes, that was the adjective she was using, and (strange coincidence!) the villain below stairs was also using it, though perhaps in a more colloquial sense. He had just knocked over a whole pile of the neat notebooks in which he stored away his literary material, and was passing off his own clumsiness in invective against inanimate things. This was his man's way of biting his handkerchief.

But the strong arm of coincidence reached yet further.

Stumbling and grumbling, Harry gathered up the fruit of his travel experiences and began re-storing them in the little three-cornered shelves where he kept such things for reference. Work would not "go" to-night, somehow. One remained in his hand—a small pocket notebook with rounded corners, which served to carry about him for the shortest personal jottings. Usually it lay among his keys on the dressing table, and when he shaved he was in the habit of putting down a word or two—oh, as brief and bald as possible.

But this particular stubby volume happened to be his diary of two years ago, and he stood there with one hand mechanically pushing the notebooks into their places, while his eyes, entangled by what he read, transported him to the ragged carpet, the peremptorily furnished lodgings, the solitary walks, hands deep in pockets, overcoat collar up, cap pulled low—of the days when first— But stay, what was Clara doing?

She had got out her blotting book from under "The Songs of the North." The new maid—very hard on the temper of young wives are new maids, as a class—had jammed it into the rack, bending the corners shamefully. And so, when at last Clara had released the folio, lo! a cascade of solidly built volumes in red basil clattered to the ground. She had just time to spring back; for the volumes had solid brass locks, all opened with the same little gold key. She wore it about her neck, and no one in the world, not even Harry, had ever been allowed to peep within. Indeed, since she was married she had not often done so herself. But now—now that the happiness of her life had foundered beneath her, she would go back—it might be all the pleasure (sob) that was left her—thus to live over a happy past. (A time.)

Watkins, the Moores' new maid, experienced some surprise (and not unnaturally) when, in the exercise of her vocation, she was carrying a copper jug of hot water to Mrs. Moore's dressing room before sounding the first gong, she observed her master and mistress approach each other from opposite ends of the corridor, both intently reading, like people on a stage—he in a small black book, she in one large, fat and red.

A still poorer opinion had Sarah Watkins of her new place when she saw the readers look up simultaneously, suddenly and guiltily close their books, turn on their several heels, and so exeunt.

"And them sez as what they has only been married ten months!" she meditated. "Well—we'll see what's to come of this!"

The family dinner that night was distinguished by extreme correctitude of demeanor, and an etiquette almost Spanish in its stateliness. They were nothing if not polite—that is, when Watkins was in the room. But Watkins knew, and stayed a moment on the mat, listening to the silence that dropped like a pall. She entered, smiling to herself, knowing (oh, experienced Watkins) that she would find Clara looking sideways at the pattern of the carpet as though she had never seen it before, while at his end of the table Harry was molding bread pellets as if for a wager. These things do not vary.

But even Watkins the wise did not know everything. Penny fiction does not inform its readers what real people do. So as soon as Clara had escaped out of the dining room, before he had time to open the door for her, Harry sulkily sat down and felt for his cigarette case. He was sure he had left it in the drawing room. Yet he would not go for it. He could hear Clara playing a noisy jig, the wriggle and stamp of which he particularly loathed.

"The little wretch," he said, laughing in spite of himself, "she knows quite well."

"Good evening, Mr. Moore," said his wife, and he rose and went. "Your cigarette case is in the smoking room."

But this time Harry had it all his own way. Six feet of blonde colossus made short work of mere pinpricks of the tongue. Clara found herself swept off the piano stool and installed where, on the rounded arm of a big easy chair, she had little more liberty of movement than that of swinging her feet naughtily and rebelliously, while her husband questioned her.

"What book were you reading so intently this afternoon when I came upon you in the corridor? Let me see it?"

"Shan't!" (A time). "Oh, you coward! Because you are strong! I shall go to—to—"

"Where? To whom?" said Harry, easily.

"To my—to Aunt Laetitia."

"She wouldn't have you, child," laughed her husband, "and besides, she would charge you board—which I should have to pay!"

"Well, I would pay it out of my own money—there!"

"What own money?"

"My house money!"

"You forget, Mrs. Morris-Moore," said her husband, gravely. "If you run away, you wouldn't have any house money!"

Then in a burst, as he shook her, "Oh' you great baby," he cried, "make up. Bring the book! It was a volume of your diary. I knew by the lock. I'll show you mine. Fair exchange! Off with you!"

"Well, come with me, then," said Clara, holding out her hand, "but don't you think I'm giving in. It's only yielding to brute force. My spirit is unconquered."

"Never mind your spirit," said her lord, "fetch the book!"

And in these books, the greater and the lesser, they read late into the night.

And this was what they found.

"'Christmas eve'"— said Clara, "begin there!"

And she paused, waiting, with her finger in its place.

"Oh," said her husband, "I don't think there is much!"

"And you call yourself a writer!"

"Well, shall I begin?" Clara was all on pins and needles now. She could hardly keep still. The quarrel was forgotten.

"'Christmas eve' (she read). 'A dull day—Paid calls in the lane—Went to Margaret's. Baby is adorable and Tom begins to love me and calls me Aunty dee-ar. Came home by Grant's and brought back fruit for dinner. There is a man coming, a friend of father's. It is a horrid nuisance.'"

Here Clara Moore broke off suddenly.

"Oh, I wrote everything fresh, you see. I wanted to remember. You've no idea how bad my memory used to be in those days. Being married helps. One has to remember one's husband's iniquities."

"'Set in a notebook, learned and conned by rote,' murmured Harry.

His wife stopped and looked severely at him.

"Well," she said, "I did write a lot, I know, and yours is no fair exchange. I did it partly as an exercise, you see, for I was considered very good at composition at school, whatever you may think. Besides, I don't believe you have anything in that book at all."

"Oh, yes—I have!" and he flourished a closely written page of memoranda before her eyes.

"Well," she said, with a sigh (and her eyes were dim and distant), "I will read—though I never thought to let anyone see—not even you. But since you have been so horrid to me, I will."

It seemed an odd reason, but Harry wisely nodded. Clara fluttered some leaves thoughtfully. "Where shall I go on?" she asked, knitting her brows.

"You did begin from the beginning," he smiled as he spoke, "why not continue?"

She glanced up with sudden shyness, almost as he spoke, "why not continue?"

She glanced up with sudden shyness, almost like a surprised Eve.

"You were saying that it was a horrid nuisance, having me come to dinner," said Harry Moore, "did you change your mind?"

"Here it is," said his wife, running her eye down the columns of close-knit writing. "'11:00 p. m. He is gone. It was not so horrid after all. But I think he likes Edith best. He is big and badly dressed. Why can't writers and artistic people dress humanly? He had on the funniest tie I ever saw, and a beard, and he came in a big gray cloak like one of Millet's shepherds! But he talked—yes, it was worth while hearing him talk. Not much to me, though, but he looked at me a lot, and somehow seemed to be conscious of everything I was doing. Dr. Stonor came in after, and wanted me to look out music for him. We went into the corner together and got out the folios, and though he was talking to father, I knew very well he was watching us.' That's all,"—Clara concluded. She had been reading very rapidly, as if anxious to get to the end. "Now for yours!"

"Go on, please," cried Clara, stamping her foot, "and mind, don't alter a word or put in more. I shall know!"

"'Christmas eve'" (began Harry) "'worked at Guardian article, took it round, saw proof of yesterday's. Chief wants me to go to Armenia about the atrocities. Shan't! To club in afternoon—Clifton, McCosh, Moxon and several of the fellows there, who wanted me to stop. Told them I couldn't. Had to go out to old Linklater's to dinner—girls, music, bore—but I should look in later.'"

"Oh!" interjected Clara, with her head suddenly haughty, "a bore—was it?"

"You said a horrid nuisance!" remarked her husband, and continued his reading without troubling to defend himself further.

"'I got there early—long way out of town—several false trails. At last found the place—a big house under trees. From the doorway I could see in the hall a girl standing on steps, putting up holly and green stuff. Presently old Linklater came and introduced me. "This is Clara!" I became conscious of two great, dark, steady, grayish-hazel eyes. The dinner went all right after that. Pretty—well, I don't know: a fascinating and glamorous person certainly. There was also a sister.'"

"Nonsense!" said Clara. "You are making up as you go along. I know you."

Her husband silently handed her the book. Decidedly it was so written.

Clara did not apologize for her unbelief. She only remarked, "Oh, but you are a dear."

And, rubbing her cheek against his coat sleeve, she purred.

"Go on!" she said.

"'Dinner quite informal,' Harry continued. "'Talked too much, but got led on somehow. Everything went well. Doctor fellow there, who put on a lot of friend-of-the-family side—sat in a corner and talked to the girl with the eyes.'"

"Ah, ha! You see—you were jealous already!" cried Clara, clapping her hands joyously.

"Nonsense!" said Harry Moore. "Of little Stonor? I think I see myself!"

"Read the next day—go on—go on! No, the day you came to Elton again!"

"'Went to make my "digestion" call. Took some flowers up to Elton, and talked to the old lady. Think I made a conquest. But the Lady of the Eyes did not show up. Waited an hour and a half, but don't think I wasted my time entirely. Dear old lady!'"

"Harry, you are a cold-blooded wretch!"

"Very much the contrary, Mrs. Moore!"

"Now shall I read?" And without giving him time to answer, Clara opened the solid basil boards and continued, "'Dec. 28th: Went out all the afternoon with Miss Grierson. Down the lane—soup kitchen, girls' club, and went home with her to tea. When I got home I saw mother had a secret. You always knew by the satisfied way she has of looking mysterious. She would be disappointed if you didn't ask her at once. So I teased her to tell.

"'Do you know whom I've been entertaining all afternoon?' she said, her shoulders shaking with repressed laughter. I understood well enough.

"'Oh, the curate,' I said, as carelessly as I could. 'I saw him going down the lane like a pair of compasses let loose.'

"'Do you think the curate would bring me those?' said mother, triumphantly. And she showed me a lovely bunch of roses, a wagon-load nearly, which she had set well back in the dusk of the piano, so that I should not see them before mother had her little triumph. My! they must have cost heaps of money this time of year. 'They are all mine,' said mother, 'but if you are good you can have just one bud for yourself. You see what one gets by staying quietly at home!'

"'She was teasing me, of course, this dear old sweet-hearted mother.

"'You see what one gets for doing works of charity and mercy!' I said. 'He would have given them to me if I'd been here. I'll never do a good action again!'"

"Now turn on to 'Four Seas Cottage,' and read about that," cried Clara. Her eyes were not gray now, nor yet hazel. The dark pupils had swallowed up all the rest, overflowing everything with the soft blackness of a misty night of few stars.

"Let's see. Easter, wasn't it?" said her husband. "But why skip? Much water had flowed under bridges during these months of spring."

"Oh, I want to get to the end—the end!" Clara whispered, excitedly. "Quick, quick—I can't wait!"

"Well, here it is: 'April 8th. We went a walk along the beach, she and I. We talked. I told her that unless something was going to come of this, I must go away.

"'What,' she said, 'for altogether?' And I said 'Yes.' Then she walked a good while silent, and when I looked, I could see'—"

"No, you didn't" said Clara. "I could never have been so silly!"

"'Tear after big tear rolling slowly down her cheek,'" Harry continued, imperturbably. "'I needed no more than that—who would?

"'You don't want me to go?' I cried.

"'She shook her head, still weeping, and not caring now whether I saw or not.

"'So I stayed.'"

They sat long silent that night in their own home, near each other, and happy Harry's heart was softened. He was in the mood for concessions.

"Dear," he said, "if you would like Aunt Laetitia to come and stay with us a month—"

"Oh, bother Aunt Laetitia!" exclaimed Mrs. Henry Moore, "I only want you!"

And thus did Clara Murray-Linklater deny her father's house and cleave to her husband.

BENEATH BIG BEECH

Rural Dominie Ties Nuptial Knots Divorce Courts Do Not Sever.

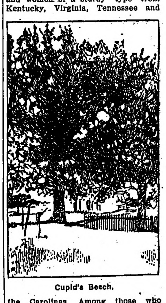
Liberty Church Neighborhood Not Only Marriage Center, but Its People Consider It a Youthful Misfortune to Die Under Seventy.

Gosport, Ind.—There has been discovered a remedy for the divorce evil. It is a simple but sure cure. Let the Rev. Josiah Burton, a rural dominie, living four miles east of Gosport, tie the matrimonial knot beneath the boughs of "Cupid's Beech." Then, if his record holds, all divorce laws may be eliminated from the statutes and no one need go singing: "I'm On My Way to Reno." It is the Rev. Josiah Burton's proud boast that no divorce court has ever severed a tie he bound.

The Rev. Josiah Burton has three altars of matrimony—his little church across the fields, his home and—most romantic of all—a grand old beech tree that has been popularly christened "Cupid's Beech" because of the marriage ceremonies performed beneath its boughs. The tree stands at the corner of the fence that surrounds the old minister's home and no marriage ever solemnized in its shade has ever been shattered by a divorce court.

The Rev. Josiah Burton is an interesting man in an interesting locality. Not only do his matrimonial knots stay tied, but there seems to be some good angel hovering over the hills in which he dwells whose mission is to grant happy old age to all who find a home there. To die under 80 in the vicinity of "Cupid's Beech" is looked upon as passing away in infancy.

In the early part of the last century there moved into the hills of Owen and Monroe counties many men and women of a sturdy type from Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee and the Carolinas. Among those who came was John Burton, the father of Josiah. In the year 1818 he settled on a tract of ground four miles east of Gosport in a section now known as Liberty Church neighborhood. The country was then sparsely settled and there were only mere bridle paths leading to the few settlements.



Cupid's Beech.

By 1830 the country had become a little more populous and there was talk of establishing a church. There were many denominations in the neighborhood, and it was finally decided to build a church that should be non-denominational, but with leanings toward the Methodist Protestant creed. John Burton gave enough ground for the building of a church, and another member of the new organization donated ground for a cemetery adjoining the church.

On the morning of September 23, 1831, a company of neighbors gathered at the spot given by John Burton as a church site. Each carried a broadax. The men were divided into two squads. They then went into the forest in search of yellow poplar trees. The giants of the wilderness began to fall and soon the brethren were hewing the trees with that expert swing known only to the pioneers.

When dinner time came the church builders sat down to a meal such as only old-fashioned cooks could cook. All of the food and the dishes were carried to the place by a 10-year-old boy. That boy was Josiah Burton, and the church was started on his tenth birthday.

Liberty Church is an interesting type of the old-fashioned meeting house. It is a plain room with plain, old-fashioned pews. The pulpit was made by a local carpenter and the choir and organ have a slightly elevated platform to the left of the minister.

If there is one thing that makes the aged minister who presides at Liberty Church happy it is a wedding. He doesn't know how many couples he has united in marriage, but he has yet to hear of one of them being broken by a divorce decree. Uncle Josiah takes supreme delight in having some couple drive up to the door and call him out to tie the nuptial knot. It is then that he dons his Prince Albert and white cravat and puts on his most responsible air. In recent years he has had numerous calls for weddings in the shade of "Cupid's Beech." "Providence seems to favor all who are married beneath that tree," says the minister. "So come ye!"

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

The Physical Bigness of Uncle Sam

WASHINGTON.—How many Americans realize the huge bulk of the population of their country, in the same sense that coal is heavy or the hay crop is immense in cubic feet? Just as a matter of physical bigness, this is a great nation, not in possessions but in people.

If all of the inhabitants of the United States, grownups and children, were to lie down in a long line, one person's head touching the feet of the one in front, there would be about 75,000 miles of such a human chain.

If every American stood up to be counted, in a long row of men, women and children, even if they stood so close together that they occupied only a foot and a half apiece, the file would be more than 25,000 miles long.

Averaging the 93,000,000 people in the United States, young and old, adults and babies, at 100 pounds apiece, the American nation weighs 4,500,000 tons. That is enough to load 1,000 good-sized steamships with human freight, if it were piled in like coal or grain, with no regard whatever for space or air.

If the 93,000,000 Americans, babies included, drink, on the average, a pint of some liquid every day, which is an extremely modest estimate, the people of the United States consume about 45,000 tons of water, beer, milk, coffee, tea, etc., daily. The quantity may be twice as great, or even more. But 45,000 tons would load 900 freight cars of the largest size. That means about 25 long trains.

The physical bigness of Uncle Sam is impressive if viewed from any direction or calculated upon any basis. If the average consumption of solid food—bread, meat, potatoes and other vegetables, cake, pie, fruits, etc.—is only a pound and a half a day that means 135,000,000 pounds, or 67,500 tons, every 24 hours.

On the strength gained by such inroads upon the food stores of the world the people of the United States can easily lift 4,500,000 tons at the same instant. If they walk only a mile apiece in a day, which is certainly too low an estimate, the total is equal to walking three times around the earth at the equator, and more than half way around the fourth time.

Truly we are a big nation. We bulk tremendously on the scales and under the tape measure. American quantity will evidently care for itself.

Expert Offers Criticism of the Army

THIS IS FINE TRAININ' FER A SOLDIER —SEEIN' TH' WOILD-BAH!-

THAT the United States army is inferior in military organization to the armies of every other large nation of the world is the sentiment of H. Lee Clotworthy, military expert, associate editor of the United States Infantry Journal, and formerly a captain in the army. He asserts that Uncle Sam's military department is inefficient as a fighting machine, and that any one of the big powers—notably Japan—could "whip the daylights out of us without half trying."

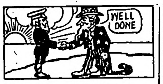
"There are 30 regiments of infantry in the army," he says, "but hardly any one of them has been mobilized together in order to give the men the proper training. They are scattered all over the country at various needless military posts. Consequently, both officers and men suffer for lack of adequate drill, and would be absolutely unprepared to fight an army of real soldiers.

"There are a great many needless military posts. Of course, it is necessary to keep men in the Philippines and Alaska, but not in small towns. The latter type—known to military men as 'hitching posts'—were established years ago and small towns have grown up around them.

"These posts also are one of the principal causes of desertion. A recruit enlists because of visions about how grand it is to be a soldier. On arriving at some post, however, he finds he must be a carpenter, a gardener, or a telephone operator. At some stations half of the men are employed in this way rather than occupying their time in learning to be soldiers.

"Instead of useless military posts, the army should be divided into large divisions, located at large central points. There are only 3,000 infantrymen along the Pacific coast, where the present situation demands that a strong force be concentrated.

Soldier Serves His Country 56 Years



GOVERNOR'S ISLAND is to lose its oldest soldier. He is Sergt. David Robertson of the Hospital corps of the army, who has spent 56 years in the service and now, at the mature age of seventy-eight, has been recommended for retirement upon full pay and allowances. It will take a special bill, of course, to thus recognize the services of Robertson and major generals and brigadier generals have recommended to the secretary of war that he present to congress such a bill.

An interesting thing about the long and faithful service of Sergeant Robertson is that it has been almost continually spent on Governor's Island. He has seen generals and colonels come and go. He was a veteran when "Hancock's Superb" came to take command of the department of the east and the military division of the Atlantic. On Governor's Island he married and raised his family, and, looking northward from his island home, Robertson has seen the skies over Manhattan red with the fires of the draft riots and watched the transports which in later days sailed out laden with troops for distant possessions of the United States. He has seen the island upon which he lived grow from the small, unwalled spot which it was when he enlisted to the great military depot which it now is.

On Governor's Island there still exists a little graveyard where those who died in the great cholera epidemic of 1854 are buried. Robertson was a young man then and stuck, quietly and faithfully, to his post.

Waste of Death Is Greatly Lessened

THEY'RE BECOMING TOO WISE FOR ME —!- C-U-R-S-E-S

LAST year the death rate in the United States was probably the lowest ever known. It certainly was less than the mortality of any other year since vital statistics have been collected in a sufficiently large part of the country to indicate clearly the general state of the public health.

In 1909 the death rate in states and cities which contain more than half of the population of the United States was almost exactly 15 to every thousand persons living. It was not quite one in the thousand below the average mortality rate of the preceding five years. The fraction was nine-tenths. That means nine lives in every 10,000 of the population.

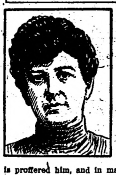
The cutting down of the death rate enough to save 81,000 lives in a year is like stopping the waste of life in a great war. It is equivalent to warding off death 6,750 times every month, 1,687 every week, 241 times a day. It averts ten deaths every hour, one every six minutes day and night, from one year's end to the next.

If the economic value of the lives saved by lowering the death rate in the United States—the results of better and more careful living—is placed at no more than an average of $1,000 apiece, the effect of cutting down the mortality 81,000 in a year is much the same as preventing the waste of $81,000,000 dealing with this great economy in human life on the hardest and narrowest industrial and commercial basis.

The gradual change for the better in respect to saving life and warding off death is not confined to the United States. It is going on in other countries, also Throughout the civilized world, there is a general change for the better in the conditions of living and in the chances for life itself. The conservation of human life is one of the great interests and one of the best signs of the times.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

WANTS STATE TO AID WIDOWS



"Every widow wh[illegible] been left with little children and in straitened circumstances should receive a pension from the state."

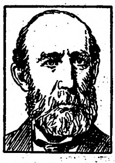
Such is the declaration of Mrs. Clarence O. Burns, president of the Little Mothers' Aid Society of New York, who is firm in her belief as to the advisability of this plan. The important question is being brought forward in women's clubs all over the United States, and any discussion of it is timely. The opinion of Mrs. Burns, especially, is one to carry weight, for she is well qualified to speak forcibly on the subject. She says in part:

"A man carries a [illegible] for his nation. If he is injured in war he receives a pension in recognition of the service he has rendered to his country. He feels no humiliation when the money is proffered him, and in many cases is only too ready to apply to the state for it if he has not been recognized.

"Now, a woman risks her life for her country, her children grow up to serve their nation, and why, when this woman gives so much to the world, should she not, when left in destitute or straitened circumstances, receive as much as the man who goes to war?

"This pension for the widow would give both the child and the mother a chance for life—a thing which neither can have now."

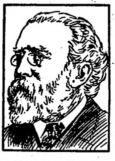
CAPTURED FAMOUS PEG LEG



Of all the innumerable relics on exhibition in the Illinois Memorial hall in the state house, none attracts more attention from tourists than the cork leg of General Santa Ana, the Mexican commander, which was captured by a company of central Illinois soldiers. The finding of the cork leg was one of the most interesting incidents of the Mexican war. An extraordinary fact, recently brought to light by investigations conducted by the McLean county historical society, is that the soldier who first caught sight of the leg took possession of it and sent it to the rear for safe keeping while a battle was in progress, is yet living, in the person of Edward Elvin Elliot, formerly of Bloomington, Ill., and now of San Rafael, Cal.

In a letter confirming the statement that he was the captor of the cork leg, Mr. Elliot relates the incident connected therewith, the story being of interest to the student of history. Mr. Elliot states that he enlisted in Company B of the Fourth Illinois infantry when war was declared with Mexico. He left the printer's case to take up arms. The first engagement of consequence for the regiment of which Mr. Elliot was a member was known as the battle of Cerro Gordo, April 18, 1847. The Mexicans retreated when their batteries were attacked and the Fourth regiment coming up found the coach of General Santa Ana standing in the road where it had been abandoned, due to the killing of one of the mules hitched to it. General Santa Ana was mounted upon the other mule and fled. His departure was so hurried that he was forced to leave behind in the coach his cork leg, a bag of gold doubloons and a basket of lunch. Elliot reached the coach first and with a soldier's curiosity jumped inside, handing out the cork leg, the chest of gold and basket of food to his companions.

NOTED IRISHMAN REACHES 80

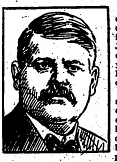


One of Great Britain's grand old men, Justin McCarthy, recently celebrated in London his eightieth birthday anniversary and was the recipient of congratulations from every part of the English-speaking world. His career has been an active and a useful one, part of it passed in the turmoil of political strife and part of it in the quietness of his library, from which have issued many works of exceptional merit.

Mr. McCarthy, former leader of the Irish Nationalists, comes of a family devoted for many generations to the cause of Ireland. He was born in "rebel" Cork, November 22, 1830. He had literary tastes as a youth, but his chief desire was to be a barrister. Academic degrees were then denied to Roman Catholics and to Protestant dissenters. Thus debarred from entering the legal profession through the university, and unable to afford the costly training outside the university, young McCarthy turned his attention to journalism and became a reporter on the Cork Examiner. He was a youthful sympathizer with the Nationalist movement, and was deeply impressed by the trial of Smith O'Brien and the elder Dillon and Thomas Francis Meagher, who were sentenced to death, but reprieved by Queen Victoria and transported to Van Diemen's Land. Young McCarthy was sent to report the trial. He was a patriotic youth of nineteen and received his baptism of fire as he filled his notebook in the courthouse at Ballingarry.

Mr. McCarthy's parliamentary career extended over 17 years and he was chairman of the Irish parliamentary party from 1890 to 1896. His speeches in parliament were in fine literary form and were full of historical allusions and poetical quotations.

FROM POORHOUSE TO SENATE



The rise of a man from the lowliest station to one of the highest in his state is not among the events that belong exclusively to the past, nor is it confined solely to the realm of fiction. John J. Dunnegan of Shenandoah, Iowa, who has been elected to the Iowa state senate, passed three years of his early childhood as an inmate of a North Carolina poorhouse, being left at the age of three without either father or mother.

When six years of age he was bound out to a family who treated him with the utmost cruelty. Misery and hardship gripped him from the cradle and robbed him of all the joys of childhood. From the poorhouse, without education, or aid from others, John Dunnegan has risen by his own efforts to affluence and high official position. He has worked as a section hand on a railroad at $1.10 a day, as hired man on a farm, has dug wells and cisterns with a spade, and performed many other kinds of hard work for small pay. He was married when twenty-nine, being at that time the owner of a livery stable in Milford, Neb. Shortly afterward he lost everything in a fire, came to Shenandoah "dead broke" and grasped eagerly the first job offered him—digging a well. Later he started in the plumbing business in a small way, but his business did not long remain small. It grew rapidly until it extended into a dozen different states.

He was the nominee of the Democratic party for state senator in a district which has a normal Republican majority of 1,200, but he overcame this and was elected by a majority of nearly 1,000.

IF I HAD ONLY HALF OF $3000 I'D BE VERY WELL SATISFIED
MA I'M HUNGRY

NEW YORK.—"It is impossible for a woman to live in comfort in New York on $3,000 a year." This is the claim of Mrs. Juanite LeBar, who has petitioned the orphans' court in Scranton, Pa., to allow her an additional $1,000 so she can send her eleven-year-old son to a military academy. "During my husband's life," her petition cites, "our income was $6,000 a year, and the estate is now yielding $8,000, so I don't see what law there can be that refuses a woman half of her income." Mrs. LaBar lives in a comfortable, but modest apartment, dresses well and lives on the best the market will afford, but she claims she is not extravagant for she doesn't owe a cent.

"I can't get along on $3,000 a year," says Mrs. LaBar. "And I am not extravagant. My apartment is modest, but comfortable. It is absolutely impossible for us to live at a hotel on account of the expense, and we have to take an apartment. I have to keep one servant, because, in the first place, I am not strong enough to do the work, and in the second place there is no reason why I should put in my time in the kitchen. I consider a servant one of the necessities.

"Then butter, eggs, meat and everything else has gone up so, and I insist upon the best for my table, because that was what I was raised to have, and I am unwilling to eat inferior stuffs or give them to my boy. I consider money spent for good food an insurance, out of which you get heaps of pleasure beside.

"People in Scranton ask me why I don't move into the country, because I could live much cheaper there and economize. I don't see what good that would be—the prospect looks unutterably dark to me. I would be lonely, and I don't like the country, anyhow. New York is a necessity.

"In regard to clothes. A woman in New York, if she is to be presentable at all, must have decent and appropriate clothes. I make and design many of my own gowns, and some of them I will confess to fixing over. That saves a great item of expense for the budget. I don't think imported gowns or a great number of gowns are a necessity, but they must be well made, of good quality, and have plenty of style about them.

City Heated by Natural Hot Water

THESE 'ERE SPRINGS ARE SOME GOOD ALL RIGHT

BOISE, Idaho.—This is the only city in the country heated by natural hot water, taken from springs near the town, and which is employed not alone for heating purposes, but for cooking and even in sprinkling the streets of the city in summer, there is such an abundance of the water flowing from three wells. The water remains at about 175 degrees in temperature and the flow averages about 1,500,000 gallons a day.

One hundred and ten homes in Boise are supplied with the water, which is employed for all household purposes, except washing of silverware, which tarnishes in the water, charged as it is with sulphur and minerals. The water is pumped from three large wells, about six miles east of Boise, in the foothills of the Owyhoes.

Interest was first taken in the water in 1890. Previous to that time there had been a great black mud hole where the wells have since been sunk. The water was stagnant and the spot was known simply as a place where hundreds of range cattle had dropped out of sight in the old days into what appeared to be a bottomless well.

The cost of the water a year to the average family is $135. The water company which now has control of the wells does not employ the meter system in measuring the supply, but the water flow is gauged by the size of the pipes running into the individual homes.

So curative were the waters considered that they were carried by them back to their camps, where they were rubbed on the limbs of invalids to heal rheumatic and kindred complaints.

Municipal Dance Tried in Milwaukee

I'M GLAD I DON'T HAVE TO BE A WALL FLOWER ANY MORE

MILWAUKEE, Wis.—The city of Milwaukee will have another municipal ball. This is the declaration of the city administration after a review of the initial municipal dance at which the mayor, city officials and society danced in the same hall as workingmen and women.

"I think these gatherings have something about them that will make for the betterment of the city," says Mayor Seidel. "You know when we read about each other in the papers or hear each other talked about we sometimes think that the other fellows are awful fellows. But when we look into each other's eyes we find that the other fellows are not so bad after all.

"For one thing, I hope to see these dances as democratic as they can be. Gentlemen will leave their dress suits at home at the next dance, I hope. If any young ladies have new hats or fancy gowns at home, I hope they won't wear 'em."

The plans of the dance did not take cognizance of "wall flowers," and there did not seem to be any. It was the duty of floor managers to see that young persons were introduced. The spirit of friendliness so far took possession of the affair that it was not long before a fellow could ask a girl he did not know to dance without being snubbed.

But no one seemed troubled about her own gown or that of her neighbor to any great extent. Each one was intent on the good time she was having, and the great matter of speculation was who her next partner for the dance would be, and not how much some other dancer's dressmaker's bill had been.

The Brotherhood Home of Cleveland

CLEVELAND, O.—An institution which is doing great good in Cleveland, Ohio, is the Brotherhood Home, developed from the idea of one man, an ex-prisoner who wanted to help someone else.

In November, 1905, James Shaw was paroled from the Cleveland house of correction. While there he had been a teacher in the night school, and had become interested in the Bible class. He was a man of more intelligence than the average workhouse prisoner and soon after his release on parole obtained employment with a shipbuilding company. When he drew his first wages he went to the director of charities and corrections with the proposal that he take in another prisoner who was about to be paroled.

"I think Fred wants to behave and live decently," he told the director. "I can give him a bed, stake him to a meal ticket and get him a job, too."

"Fred" did want to live better and went to work with a will. In a week they rented another room, and went again to the director with the request for the parole of two other members of the workhouse night school class. They promised to give them food and lodging, and to get them work. The four in turn put by something each day for "grub stakes" for other unfortunates and presently the club had a membership of nine.

Soon after that the Brotherhood, as it had come to be known, moved to a ten-room house on the lake front. The parole officer went in debt for $900 worth of furniture. At the end of the year the club showed an earning which nearly took it out of debt. Ten rooms were added, followed by ten more a little later. It was self-supporting, and had paid for $2,000 worth of furniture. The later history of the organization is a record of continued efficient work, with finances fairly easy when work is plenty, and painfully tight when it is scarce.

WORLD GROWING BETTER.

Every issue of a newspaper which tries to record the most important events of the day seems to be on its face an indictment of the human race and modern civilization. Stories of greed, oppression, wrongs and crime often take up most of the space in its columns. The effect upon the reader is sometimes to make him think, for the moment at least, that the world is growing more hard and cruel, and that society, as it is constituted, is a failure. But such a view is all wrong, and the thoughtful reader soon realizes it. The world is growing better all the time, and humanity is steadily advancing from one plane of life to another. The reason there seems more wickedness is that the people of the earth are in closer communication with one another than they were only a few years ago, says the Cleveland Leader. Crimes which once remained unknown to all but a comparatively few are now revealed to the entire civilized world, that it may know the sort of men it must suppress, the extent of the harm they inflict and the manner in which they are dealt with. Wrongs which once flourished because they were hidden are now dragged into the light of day and exposed in all their meanness in the pages of the newspapers. Modern civilization, through its most powerful agency for progress, the public press, lays bare the hitherto hidden wounds inflicted upon society, that they may be cured and their repetition prevented. No, the world is not growing worse. There is less of poverty, crime and suffering than existed only a few years ago. Life is easier, more profitable and more full of joy. The man with the shovel gets more out of it than did the man with the two-handed sword in his castle, a brief remove back in the life of the race.

Exchanging professors with American institutions of learning is an increasing practise among educators abroad. For several years the interchange has been going on between this country and Germany, and some of the ablest of our teachers have served in Berlin and elsewhere, while German professors have done similar work in American universities and colleges, says the Troy Times. Now a prominent business man of Copenhagen has given $100,000 to the Scandinavian-American Society to promote the interchange of professors between American and Danish universities. The Rhodes scholarships, through which American students receive the benefit of advanced courses at England's great university of Oxford, furnish another illustration of the solidarity of learning which incidentally must tend to draw nations nearer to one another.

Runaway matches have been known to turn out ideally, but not often. Their average course is toward wreckage and wretchedness. The very need of secrecy and flight is generally indicative of a fault in the scheme somewhere, and young girls who are willing to defy parental love and care and marry by stealth need feel no surprise when their idols' feet turn out to be clay, and a poor variety of that. Spite of the jokesmiths, the cartoonists and the waggish poets, marriage is the most serious step in the lives of men and women, says the Boston Post. Even the mature ought to give it at least as respectable consideration as they would any other investment. Boys and girls need to take advice on the matter, not railroad trains to a quick-service city clerk's office somewhere "across the line."

The many exposures of smuggling by rich women shows a curious cast of the feminine mind. In nearly every instance the culprit was aware of the law and that she was violating it; but few, if any, regarded the statute seriously and doubted even in the event of detection that it would be applicable to her own individual instance. Most women of this class have never come in contact with the law, having lived in a realm in which their own will was sovereign. That the law is no respecter of persons they have had to learn, and those who will take to themselves the lesson should be better citizens and certainly more familiar with the institutions of their country.

Among the fashion notes of the day is one to the effect that there is war between the large and the small bonnets. In such a strife no doubt the principal weapon of offense and defense wielded by the ladies will be the hatpin.

When the czar and the kaiser met they kissed; but the salutation of the governor of North Carolina and the governor of South Carolina had far more spirit to it.

FUND TO END WAR

CARNEGIE GIVES $10,000,000 TO ESTABLISH WORLD PEACE AND ATTACK EXISTING EVILS.

TRUSTEES PUT IN CONTROL

Perpetual Fund Formed by Ironmaster With Taft as Honorary Head and Prominent Men as Trustees—Latter Choose Elihu Root as Chief.

Washington.—Surrounded by 27 trustees of his own choosing comprising former cabinet members, ex-ambassadors, college president, lawyers and educators, Andrew Carnegie Wednesday transferred $10,000,000 of five per cent. first-mortgage bonds, value $11,500,000, to be devoted primarily to the establishment of universal peace by the abolition of war between the nations of the earth.

The trustees organized by choosing as president United States Senator Elihu Root, permanent representative of the United States at The Hague tribunal. President Taft has consented to be honorary president of the foundation.

The method by which the annual income of half a million dollars shall be expended is left by Mr. Carnegie entirely to the trustees. The foundation is to be perpetual and when the establishment of universal peace is attained the donor provides that the revenue shall be devoted to the banishment of the "next most degrading evil or evils" the suppression of which would "most advance the progress, elevation and happiness of men."

The informal trust deed presented by Mr. Carnegie to the trustees reads as follows:

"Gentlemen: I have transferred to you as trustees of the Carnegie peace fund $10,000,000 five per cent. first-mortgage bonds, value $11,500,000, the revenue of which is to be administered by you to hasten the abolition of international war, the foulest blot upon our civilization. Although we no longer eat our fellow men or torture prisoners, or sack cities, killing their inhabitants, we still kill each other in war like barbarians. Only wild beasts are excusable for doing that in this, the twentieth century of the Christian era; for the crime of war is inherent, since it decides not in favor of the right but always of the strong. The nation is criminal which refuses arbitration and drives its adversary to a tribunal which knows nothing of righteous judgment.

"Let my trustees, therefore, ask themselves from time to time, from age to age, how they can best help man in his glorious ascent onward and upward and to this end devote this fund.

"Thanking you for your cordial acceptance of the trust and your hearty approval of its object, I am, very gratefully, yours,

"ANDREW CARNEGIE."

GIRL FREED; CROWD CHEERS

HATTIE LE BLANC, 17 YEARS OLD, ACQUITTED OF MURDER.

Spectators in Court Applaud Verdict for Young Woman Accused of Killing Cambridge Laundryman.

East Cambridge, Mass.—Hattie La Blanc, a seventeen-year-old French girl, was acquitted by a jury in the Middlesex county court of the charge of slaying her employer, Clarence F. Glover, a wealthy laundryman of Waltham, Conn., in November, 1909.

The verdict was met by loud cheering from the spectators in the crowded courtroom and when the girl left the courthouse for the jail on the other side of the street she was greeted by cheers from the crowds on all sides. Going to the jail she thanked her attendants and when the jury marched two abreast to the jail to see her she shook each one by the hand and thanked them through an interpreter.

When Judge Bond had completed his charge to the jury Hattie was told that she might address the jury. She stood up without the slightest embarrassment, although rather pale, and said:

"I did not do it and want to go home with my father." She spoke in a low tone and the clerk repeated her words so that all might hear.

When Mrs. Lillian M. Glover, widow of the victim of the shooting, learned of the verdict, she was asked for her opinion.

"Why, I don't know," she said. "It was a funny trial. I am not surprised at the result after the rulings of the court. I cannot say that I am sorry. I thought at first that Hattie would be sentenced for a short term."

Bluecoats Detailed to Protect Strikebreakers Are Assaulted by Maddened Men and Women—Use Revolvers to Quell Fight.

Chicago.—One striker was killed, another was probably fatally shot, and several persons were more or less severely injured Thursday in a terrific battle between the police and striking garment workers, during which the former made free use of their revolvers.

The strikers were fired on by the police after they had beaten Sergeant Wieneke and Policeman Albert Winge to the ground at North Wood street and Bloomingdale road.

Civil war in Chicago unless the employers come to terms was prophesied by strike leaders as a result of the latest violence. The police charge that the riot was instigated by strike leaders.

While the police are searching for the men they believe to be responsible, labor leaders in Chicago called on Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, to end the strike. If he fails it was said that Theodore Roosevelt and John Mitchell will be asked to use their good offices in the trouble.

Police reserves from three stations and private detectives from near-by garment-making plants finally beat off the mob which, urged on by striking girl garment makers, carrying revolvers, threatened to annihilate the small army of policemen.

BIG BUCKET SHOP RAIDED

Capital Investment Company With 33 Branch Offices Is Closed by Federal Officers.

Chicago.—Special agents of the government swooped down upon and raided the last of a chain of large bucketshops that have operated in the United States for a number of years.

The offices of the Capital Investment company were closed after all books and paraphernalia had been removed, marking the end of the government's war on the bucketshops.

The federal action is directed against thirty-three brokerage offices and thirty-eight individuals. Of the later, Sidmon McHie, wealthy broker, club and society man, is the leader. He was the recognized head of the Capital Investment company. McHie was not arrested, however, with the forty other persons taken to the Central station. He left recently for a trip through the west.

According to Charles F. DeWoody, head of the bureau of investigation of the department of justice in Chicago, the business done by this investment company with its thirty-three subsidiary brokerage connections amounted to millions each year.

The government official believed the federal authorities had played a trump card in closing the offices of the company.

Seventeen men arrested in the raid were arraigned before United States Commissioner Foote, who set their bonds at $10,000 each.

BATTLE REPORTED IN MEXICO

OFFICIAL TELEGRAM SAYS FIGHT ON AT GUERRERO.

Washington Hears That Rebels Have Been Completely Routed in All Parts of Republic.

Mexico City.—A decisive fight is now in progress at Guerrero between government troops and the insurrectos according to an official telegram from Chihuahua.

The telegram was sent from Chihuahua after the battle had been in progress for one hour without either side having a decided advantage.

The rebels, who fought at Cerro Prieto, retreated toward Guerrero and there took up a new position. It is said they number altogether about 1,000, of which about one-half are equipped with modern rifles. They have no artillery.

General Navarro, after the battle at Cerro Prieto, rested his men a short time and then pushed on toward Guerrero without awaiting further reinforcements.

It is confidently expected that the government will win. All reports from Chihuahua district so far have come through the government channels for which reason many people believe them painted in too vivid colors in favor of the government. The battle at Guerrero, however, should decide the matter.

Col. Roosevelt was the special lecturer at the Nobel peace meeting here, and, while he spoke encouragingly of the efforts of Andrew Carnegie and other laborers in behalf of tranquility among all nations, he held to the principal that the surest guarantee of peace lies in an army and navy that will strike terror to the foes of the United States. He said that the United States could and must operate the Panama canal without any foreign partnership or partnerships.

THE CENSUS OF CANADA

ITS GROWTH IN TEN YEARS PAST.

A census of the Dominion of Canada will be made during 1911. It will show that during the past decade a remarkable development has taken place, and, when compared with the population, a greater percentage of increase in industries of all kinds than has ever been shown by any country. Commerce, mining, agriculture and railways have made a steady march onward. The population will be considerably over 8,000,000. Thousands of miles of railway lines have been construction since the last census was taken ten years ago. This construction was made necessary by the opening up of the new agricultural districts in Western Canada, in which there have been pouring year after year an increasing number of settlers, until the present year will witness settlement of over 300,000, or a trifle less than one-third of the immigration to the United States during the same period with its 92,000,000 of population. Even with these hundreds of thousands of newcomers, the great majority of whom go upon the land, there is still available room for hundreds of thousands additional. The census figures will therefore show a great—a vast—increase in the number of farms under occupation, as well as in the output of the farms. When the figures of the splendid immigration are added to the natural increase, the total will surprise even the most optimistic. To the excellent growth that the western portion of Canada will show may largely be attributed the commercial and industrial growth of the eastern portion of Canada. All Canada is being upbuilded, and in this transformation there is taking part the people from many countries, but only from those countries that produce the strong and vigorous. As some evidence of the growth of the western portion of Canada, in agricultural industry, it is instructive to point out that over 100,000 homesteads of 160 acres each have been transferred to actual settlers in the past two years. This means 25,000 square miles of territory, and then, when is added the 40,000 160-acre preemption blocks, there is an additional 10,000 square miles, or a total of 35,000 square miles—a territory as large as the State of Indiana, and settled within two years. Reduced to the producing capacity imperative on the cultivation restriction of 50 acres of cultivation on each 160-acre homestead within three years, there will be within a year and a half from now upwards of 5,000,000 additional acres from this one source added to the entire producing area of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

In 1901, at the time of the last census of Canada, successful agriculture in the Provinces of Monitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta was an experiment to many. There were skeptics who could not believe that it was possible to grow thirty, forty, and even fifty bushels of wheat to the acre, or that as high as one hundred and thirty bushels of oats to the acre could be grown. The skeptics are not to be found today. The evidence of the hundreds of thousands of farmers is too overwhelming. Not only have the lands of western Canada proven their worth in the matter of raising all the smaller field grains, but for mixed farming, and for cattle raising there is no better country anywhere. The climate is perfectly adapted to all these pursuits as well as admirable for health. The Dominion government literature, descriptive of the country, is what all that are interested should read. Send for a copy to the nearest Canadian government representative.

The Dead Level

By LOUISE OLNEY

(Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.)

Emily Warren, in her sweet, slow way, lifted her eyes from the row of figures which she had just finished adding with lightning speed, and proceeded to listen to the younger girl who had been vainly talking to her the last five minutes.

"What are you saying, Madge?"

Madge snapped her irritation.

"Emily, you're enough to vex a saint, and I'm not one, as you know! Here it's ten minutes past closing time, the others all gone, and here you work away as if you enjoyed it—not that I believe you really enjoy anything!"

Emily, who must have been nearly thirty, rose deliberately, closed her desk, and reaching for her hat, a season or two out of style, began putting it on without even a pat at her unadorned, abundant dark hair.

Madge continued her plaint. "You act a hundred, Emily! If I didn't adore you I would give you up to go your way! But I won't be snubbed, as you manage to snub the other girls, though you're perfectly sweet in manner! I intend to pull you out of your hole and show the world what a wonder you are!"

"Cut out your hero worship, child, and go to supper with me. I'm getting it in my rooms now—it's more convenient and cozy—"

"And shuts you away from other people more than ever," interrupted the other. "How you stand this dead level you live on, I don't see! You never go anywhere, nor see anybody; if you have any friends you shun them. You wouldn't ask me to supper if you thought you could get rid of me some other way—would you?"

Emily flushed and laughed a little. "I do—like you, Madge, but I'm not very friendly, I suppose. Won't you come with me and see whether I mean my invitation?"

She Ate Her Meal With Little Appetite.

"I can't tonight—I'm going out with Bobby Peters to supper, and after that to the theater. And after that—some months after—I'm going to marry Bobby! I'm awfully in love with him, and I am glad to say so to you, right out, even if you are not human enough to care what love means! No, I'm not a bit afraid of you—somebody ought to tell you that you ought to be ashamed of the way you treat John Trenton! I know the whole story."

Emily stared. Nobody had ever talked in this way to her, but the girl went on after they had reached the street.

"He's been eating his heart out for you for eight years, and now he's junior partner, and has a home and everything, but you've crushed the courage out of him for so long that I suppose he has even stopped asking you to marry him. It would serve you exactly right if Sadie Morgan succeeds in getting him, the minx! She's trying, I assure you. Did you notice her get-up this morning? Won't she make him a lovely wife? She's about fourteen years younger than he—just the right age to appeal to a man who's tired of the dead level of business and looking every day at a woman he can't get. What you got against him? Well, here's where I turn off. Good-by!"

The little imp left the older woman shocked and dazed. Was all this true? Had it been eight years? Was she heartless? Had John asked her to marry him for the last time, because he really thought she did not care? Was the office becoming a habit? And was she selfish? She went home, got into a neat house dress, and began to prepare her lonely supper.

As she ate her meal with little appetite, she wondered what made her depressed, uncomfortable, vaguely miserable.

She sat thinking, her tea cooling. Could it be possible that that little goose of a S[illegible]—why, Sadie would make him [illegible] [illegible]crable, flippant, mercenary, [illegible] bud of a thing! And then she [illegible] that she was jealous—actually [illegible]. The wonder, and the hurt of it [illegible] her. She had been lost in a sort of apathy, so used to his steady affection that she had ceased to know when it probably had ceased.

She tried to think just why it was that she had not married him years ago—oh, yes, at first it was that his old mother lived with him, and she would not live with a mother-in-law. She had seen other families made miserable that way. And then he had taken to smoking, which she detested, and they had disagreed even on politics—and especially on religion. That is, she had found fault with his ideas.

Dispiritedly enough she washed her few pretty blue dishes, and thought what a fool she was. Dark had fallen, and the lamp was lit; she drew the curtains, and moved things about to homelike coziness. What for? She laughed bitterly at herself. Here she was twenty-nine past, acting like a girl expecting a boy lover! Well, John certainly was not coming. Probably he was taking that little nothing of a Sadie somewhere. She went into the bedroom, lighted the gas over the mirror, and looked at herself as she put on the soft but rather worn and old-fashioned rose-colored dress he had once liked so much. Ridiculing herself as she did so, she let down her thick dark hair and rewound it softly and becomingly about her head, loosening it about the temples. It took five years from her age.

Back in the sitting room she took her chair close to the light and picked up some sewing, but the stitches would not go in straight; she tried to read, but the story she picked up seemed inane and tiresome. What was the use? Then another thought came to her—what if she should call him up over the 'phone in the hall and ask him to come to see her! Could she? She never had done so—she had an old-fashioned dislike for a woman's making any advance to even the most trusted of friends. Perhaps he would not want to come, but would feel that he had to—and she would see that, and it would hurt a hundred times worse than never seeing him again at all. No she could not!

By 8 o'clock she had made herself so miserable that her face was flushed, and she was nervous enough to jump, calm as she was by nature. Several times she had even gone into the hall, intending to risk calling him up, and then her courage had failed. She was just deciding to 'phone anyway, and ask some trivial question—she could say she had a very bad headache, and could not come to the office in the morning. He knew she never had headaches, but this might alarm him—he might be sorry.

At this point the doorbell rang—not an unusual thing, and she wondered impatiently why on earth Mrs. Jones did not go to the door. Where was the woman? Finally she heard her lumber down the hall and open the door. A man's voice spoke a few words, and a man's foot sounded on the stairs—came to her door.

She jumped to her feet and opened to the light knock. John Trenton, hat in hand, stood before her with a serious face, making no offer to come in until she found her voice and bade him enter.

"Well, here I am," he said, while she closed the door, and he made no motion to sit down. "Can I help you in any way?"

His eyes were devouring her as she stood flushed and hesitating in her rose gown, her eyes suspiciously wet. Her gaze widened on him.

"Do anything? Not that I know of—will you sit down?" He took a chair tentatively and answered the question in her eyes.

"Just a few blocks up I met Madge and that Bobby-trailer of hers. They said you wanted to see me this evening. I thought it strange you should send me a message by anybody, when you know——"

Here things became too much for Emily. The tears came up and overflowed in spite of her. She stood before the man's questioning look, helplessly dabbling at her eyes.

He rose and reached her at a step, and took her into his arms.

"Tell me the truth—did you send for me?"

She hid her face against his arm and shook her head violently. He bent low to hear what she might say. But she said nothing. Then he tried another question.

"Shall I go away?"

She clung to him, and again found her voice, pulling bravely away to look at him while she said brokenly:

"I did not send for you—that Madge ought to be—spanked—but I—was going to 'phone to you—and I did want you——"

He stopped her there in her speech. "Well, if you want me, I shall stay. Not even you, Emily, can send me away again! Just exactly when are you going to marry me?"

"Would—next week some time be too soon?"

And then she hadn't breath enough to say anything whatever. Not that she wanted to talk—far from it!

Mistletoe Is Dangerous.

Few people who know mistletoe only as a desirable feature of Christmas decorations understand that the plant is a parasite dangerous to the life of trees in the regions in which it grows. It is only a question of time, after mistletoe once begins to grow upon a tree before the tree itself will be killed. The parasite saps the life of the infected branches. Fortunately, it is of slow growth, taking years to develop to large proportions, but when neglected, it invariably ruins all trees it reaches.

English Women Smoke Pipes.

The latest fancy of the woman-smoker is a pipe—not the tiny affair that suffices for the Japanese, but a good-sized brier or a neat meerschaum. The pipe is boldly carried along with a gold card case and chain-purse. For some time now the cigarette has given place to a cigar, small in size and mild in quality. Women said they were tired of the cigarette, and wanted a bigger smoke.—London Mail.

Cripple Rides Bicycle.

George Anstey, aged 12, a cripple, of Leicester, England, is one of the most remarkable cyclists in the country. Both his legs are withered and useless, but the Leicester Cripples' Guild has provided him with a two-wheeled pedalless machine, with a padded tube covering the axle bar. Across this he lies face foremost, and with wooden clogs strapped to his hands he propels himself along the streets and roads in a marvelously rapid manner. He has complete control of the machine, his hands acting as pedals, steering gear, and brake combined.

Pretty Good Definition.

We hear some funny things in Fleet street sometimes, and the following definition of the height of aggravation, by a gentleman in rather shaky boots, whom we encountered in a well-known hostelry the other day, struck us as being particularly choice.

"The 'eight of haggravation, gentlemen," said this pothouse humorist, setting his pewter on the counter and looking round proudly, with the air of one about to let off a good thing, "the 'eight of haggravation—why, trying to ketch a flea out o' yer ear with a pair of boxin' gloves."—London Tit-Bits.

An Alaskan Luncheon.

Runners of woven Indian basketry, with white drawnwork doilies at each of the 12 covers, were used on an oval mahogany table. The doilies were made at Sitka. In the middle of the table a mirror held a tall central vase of frosted glass, surrounded by four smaller vases, all filled with white spring blossoms. The edge of the mirror was banked with the same flowers. Four totem poles were placed on doilies in the angles made by the runners.

Place cards were water colors of Alaskan scenery. Abalone shells held salted nuts, and tiny Indian baskets held bonbons. The soup spoons were of horn, several of the dishes used were made by Alaskan Indians, and the cakes were served on baskets.

The menu was as follows: Poisson a la Bering Sea (halibut chowder), Yukon climbers (broiled salmon, potatoes Julienne), snowbirds avec auroraborealis (roast duck with jelly), Shungnak river turnips, Tanana beets, Skagway hash (salad), Fairbanks nuggets (ripe strawberries arranged on individual dishes around a central mound of powdered sugar), arctic slices (brick ice cream), Circle City delights (small cakes), Klondike nuggets (yellow cheese in round balls on crackers), Nome firewater (coffee).—Woman's Home Companion.

Not Altogether Dead.

Mr. Robert Butler of Marlborough, England, has had the peculiar experience of hearing his death announced. He was attending the poor law conference at Exeter when one of the delegates moved that, in consequence of the death of Mr. Butler, which they all regretted, another gentleman, whom he named, should be appointed to fill his place as one of the representatives of Wiltshire on the central committee. Mr. Butler rose from his place on the platform and announced to the conference, amid much amusement, that, so far as he was aware, he was still alive and in good health, and would be pleased to continue in the office if the conference desired.

Bankers and Bank Notes.

Four men, three of whom were connected with brokerage concerns in the Wall street district, were discussing United States paper currency and the disappearance of counterfeits. "We are so sure nowadays," said one of the party, "as to the genuineness of bills that little attention is paid to them in handling, except as to denomination." To prove his assertion he took a $10 yellowback from his pocket, and, holding it up, asked who could tell whose portrait it bore. No one knew, and by way of coaching the broker said it was the first treasurer of the United States. Again no one knew the name. "Why, it's Michael Hillegas," said the man proudly. "But in confidence, I'll tell you, I didn't know it five minutes ago."—New York Tribune.

Vivid at Least.

Dr. Hiram C. Cortlandt, the well-known theologian of Des Moines, said in a recent address:

"Thomas A. Edison tells us that he thinks the soul is not immortal; but, after all, what does this great wizard know about souls? His forte is electricity and machinery, and when he talks of souls he reminds me irresistibly of the young lady who visited the Baldwin locomotive works and then told how a locomotive is made.

"'You pour,' she said, 'a lot of sand into a lot of boxes, and you throw old stove lids and things into a furnace, and they you empty the molten stream into a hole in the sand, and everybody yells and swears. Then you pour it out and let it cool and pound it, and then you put it in a thing that bores holes in it. Then you screw it together, and paint it, and put steam in it, and it goes splendidly; and they take it to a drafting room and make a bluep rint of it. But one thing I forgot—they have to make a boiler. One man gets inside and one gets outside, and they pound frightfully; and then they tie it to the other thing, and you ought to see it go!'"

Echoes of Munchausen.

It was an absent-minded traveler who had lately taken to ballooning. "Yes," he observed impressively, "it was a fearful journey. The machine, a thousand feet up, and no more ballast, headed straight for Siberia, and the rarefied air—well, you know as well as I do what effect that has on a balloon. Yes, the peril was terrible." Then the old habit was too strong for him. "The wolves detected our presence. A desperate race ensued. We felt their hot breath on the nape of our necks."—London Globe.

Largest of Whales.

The largest whale of its type of which there is scientific record was captured recently off Port Arthur, Tex. He measured sixty-three feet in length, and was estimated to be about three hundred years old. Captain Cob Plummer, mate of a United States pilot boat, sighted the monster in the shoals off the jetties, and the crew of his vessel captured the mammal. The huge body was towed ashore, exhibited and much photographed before being cut up.

Rat Bounty Excites Merriment.

Seattle, fearing the introduction of bubonic plague by rats, has offered a bounty of ten cents a rat. This moves Tacoma, safe from infection from the sea, to raucous laughter, and the Ledger says that the bounty, "though not intended for rodents of Tacoma, Everett, Bellingham and other populous and busy centers, has been finding its way into the pockets of nonresidents of Seattle for nonresident rats. But the joke would be on us if it were found that our rat population had found its way into the Seattle census."

Two Very Old Ladies.

We have heard a great deal lately about long-lived people, but it is probable that the oldest two people in the world today are Frau Dutkievitz and another old lady named Babavasilka.

The former lives at Posem, in Prussian Poland, and was born on February 21, 1785. She is therefore one hundred and twenty-five years old. The latter, however, is nine months her senior, having been born in May, 1784.

She is still a fairly hale old woman, and for nearly one hundred years worked in the fields. Her descendants number close on 100, and these now make her a joint allowance. She lives at the village of Bavelsko, whose neighborhood she has never quitted during the whole of her long life. She remembers events which happened at the beginning of last century much more clearly than those of the last 40 years.—Dundee Advertiser.

Too Ardent a Lover.

Georgotto Fontano, an embroiderer who lives in the Rue Sevres in Paris, has found herself condemned to a month's imprisonment for what seems to her a harmless act.

She was going home from a concert a few evenings ago when she decided she would like to see her fiance. As he happens to be a fireman whose station is in her own neighborhood it occurred to her it would be very easy to summon him to her side by breaking the glass of the fire alarm and sounding a call.

She did so anr in a few moments fire engines came from several directions, all laden with firemen, of course, but alas! her fiance was not among them, and more than that all the firemen were angry, and before she knew what had happened she was taken to a magistrate, who proceeded to make the course of true love run unsmoothly by sending her to prison for a month in spite of her tears and protests that she thought it would be a simple way of bringing her fiance to her side.

"All flesh being grass," he reflected, "this must be Beef a la Mowed."

Kindly Intentions.

"A man who enjoys seeing a woman in tears is a brute."

"I don't know about that," replied Miss Cayenne. "One of the kindest husbands I know takes his wife to see all the emotional plays."

Takes Himself Seriously.

Nicola Tesla, dining by himself in a hotel's great dining room, takes a table where he can be seen. Throughout his meal he wears a deeply studious, a completely absorbed, attitude. He may bring to the table a portfolio filled with papers. These he may scan with prolonged solemnity. In any event, he sits an eloquent tableau of profundity.—New York Press.

Holidays in the States.

Washington's birthday is a holiday in all states. Decoration day in all states but Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and Texas. Labor day is observed everywhere. Virtually every state has legal holidays having to do with its own special affairs—battle of New Orleans in Louisiana, Texan independence and battle of San Jacinto in Texas, Admission day in California, and so on. Mississippi is like the federal government in lack of statutory holidays, but by common consent Independence day, Thanksgiving and Christmas are observed. A new one is Columbus day in a few of the states.

Planting Wedding Oaks.

Princess August Wilhelm, wife of the kaiser's fourth son, has set herself the task of reviving one of Germany's oldest customs, that according to which newly wedded couples immediately after the marriage ceremony plant a couple of oak saplings side by side in a park or by the roadside of their native town.

The town of Mulchausen, in Thuringia, is the first to respond to the princess' appeal. A municipal official appears at the church door after every wedding and invites the bride and bridegroom to drive with him in a carriage to a new road near the town and there plant oak saplings.

The tree planting idea was started by a former elector of Brandenburg with the object of repairing the ravages caused by the 30 years' war. The elector forbade young persons to marry until they had planted a number of fruit trees.

An Unnecessary Confession.

A hearty laugh was occasioned at the Birmingham police court by a prisoner who gave himself away in a very delightful manner. The man was the first on the list, and the charge against him was merely one of being drunk and disorderly. He stepped into the dock, however, just at the moment when the dock officer was reading out a few of the cases which were to come before the court that morning, and a guilty conscience apparently led him to mistake these items for a list of his previous convictions.

He stood passive enough while the officer read out about a dozen drunk and disorderlies, but when he came to one "shopbreaking" the prisoner exclaimed excitedly, "That was eight years ago, your honor." Everyone began to laugh, and the prisoner, realizing the blunder he had made, at first looked very black indeed, but finally saw the humorous side of the matter, and a broad smile spread over his face. His blunder did not cost anything.—Birmingham Mail.

That Suit for Libel

Against the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Gave a Splendid Chance to Bring Out Facts

A disagreement about advertising arose with a "weekly" Journal.

Following it, an attack on us appeared in their editorial columns; sneering at the claims we made particularly regarding Appendicitis.

We replied through the regular papers and the "weekly" thought we hit back rather too hard and thereupon sued for libel.

The advertisement the "weekly" attacked us about claimed that in many cases of appendicitis an operation could be avoided by discontinuing indigestible food, washing out the bowels and taking a predigested food Grape-Nuts.

Observe we said MANY cases not all.

Wouldn't that knowledge be a comfort to those who fear a surgeon's knife as they fear death?

The "weekly" writer said that was a lie.

We replied that he was ignorant of the facts. He was put on the stand and compelled to admit he was not a Dr. and had no medical knowledge of appendicitis and never investigated to find out if the testimonial letters to our Co. were genuine.

A famous surgeon testified that when an operation was required Grape-Nuts would not obviate it. True.

We never claimed that when an operation was required Grape-Nuts would prevent it.

The surgeon testified bacteria (germs) helped to bring on an attack and bacteria was grown by undigested food frequently.

We claimed and proved by other famous experts that undigested food was largely responsible for appendicitis.

We showed by expert testimony that many cases are healed without a knife, but by stopping the use of food which did not digest, and when food was required again it was helpful to use a predigested food which did not overtax the weakened organs of digestion.

When a pain in the right side appears it is always necessary to be rushed on to a hospital and at the risk of death be cut.

Plain common sense shows the better way is to stop food that evidently has not been digested.

Then, when food is required, use an easily digested food. Grape-Nuts or any other if you know it to be predigested (partly digested before taking).

We brought to Court analytical chemists from New York, Chicago and Mishawaka, Ind., who swore to the analysis of Grape-Nuts and that part of the starchy part of the wheat and barley had been transformed into sugar, the kind of sugar produced in the human body by digesting starch (the large part of food).

Some of the State chemists brought on by the "weekly" said Grape-Nuts could not be called a "predigested" food because not all of it was digested outside the body.

The other chemists said any food which had been partly or half digested outside the body was commonly known as "predigested."

Splitting hairs about the meaning of a word. It is sufficient that if only one-half of the food is "predigested," it is easier on weakened stomach and bowels than food in which no part is predigested.

To show the facts we introduce Dr. Thos. Darlington, former chief of the N. Y. Board of Health, Dr. Ralph W. Webster, chief of the Chicago Laboratories, and Dr. B. Sachs, N. Y.

If it were a little severe in our denunciation of a writer, self-confessed ignorant about appendicitis and its cause, it is possible the public will excuse us, in view of the fact that our head, Mr. C. W. Post, has made a lifetime study of food, food digestion and effects, and the conclusions are indorsed by many of the best medical authorities of the day.

Is it possible that we are at fault for suggesting, as a Father and Mother might, to one of the family who announced a pain in the side, "Stop using the food, greasy meats, gravies, mince pie, cheese, too much starchy food, etc., etc., which has not been digested, then when again ready for food use Grape-Nuts because it is easy of digestion?"

Or should the child be at once carted off to a hospital and cut?

We have known of many cases wherein the approaching signs of appendicitis have disappeared by the suggestion being followed.

No one better appreciates the value of a skilful physician when a person is in the awful throes of acute appendicitis, but "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

Just plain old common sense is helpful even nowadays.

This trial demonstrated Grape-Nuts food is pure beyond question.

It is partly predigested.

Appendicitis generally has rise from undigested food.

It is not always necessary to operate.

It is best to stop all food.

When ready to begin feeding use a predigested food.

It is palatable and strong in Nourishment.

It will pay fine returns in health to quit the heavy breakfasts and lunches and use less food but select food certainly known to contain the elements nature requires to sustain the body. May we be permitted to suggest a breakfast of fruit, Grape-Nuts and cream, two soft boiled eggs, and some hot toast and cocoa, milk or Postum?

The question of whether Grape-Nuts does or does not contain the elements which nature requires for the nourishment of the brain, also of its purity, will be treated in later newspaper articles.

Good food is important and its effect on the body is also important.

LUCKY SWISS HOUSEWIFE.

She Lets the Rain Do All the Family Washing For Her.

Swiss methods of laundering are original, practical and labor saving. The women there have learned well how to make the best use of their opportunities with the least exertion. How they use the tourists every one who has traveled in the country of the Alps knows. They also know how to make nature do their housework.

In most of the towns everything that is washed or cleaned is washed or cleaned in one of the big watering troughs that stand at regular intervals along the main thoroughfares. Into it goes everything from potatoes to human beings, and the only sanitary regulation existent is that it must be cleaned out with a large broom made of bush or twigs after the potatoes have had their bath. But when it rains then everything else gives way to the family wash, no matter if it is Thursday or Sunday or Saturday or Wednesday, for in Switzerland they seek the rainy days for wash days, instead of deploring a cloudy Monday.

The steady downpour provides running water in the village washtub. Into the sweeping current the family linen goes, and there it is whirled and twirled about until every speck of dirt is thoroughly rinsed away. The scrubbing board is not put into commission at all. Occasionally the good housewife, protected under the family umbrella held over her head by one of her youngsters, who is allowed to enjoy the drips from that same umbrella, takes a look at her wash and encourages it with a gentle poke with her husband's best cane. But the rest of the day she enjoys to the full in her snug chalet, while the elements do her work. In fact, with her conscience at rest that her day's tasks will be done, she can spend her time gossiping with her neighbor, whose conscience is also at peace.

On the next day the wash goes through a process of bluing and starching—all in that same basin—and finally, when the sun shines, it is laid out on the wonderful green grass of the Swiss matten and is there bleached to a snowy whiteness. If the glaciers and the landslides were to accommodate her by rolling down over her wash and ironing it out without soiling the Swiss housewife would not be at all surprised. In fact, it is not to be doubted that she now regards as an oversight the failure of Dame Nature to provide an ironing board.—New York Post.

LOST HIS LINEN JOB.

The Salesman Who Made a Caricature of A. T. Stewart.

A. T. Stewart was shown one day by one of his confidential employees an amusing caricature of himself done in pencil.

"Good, good!" he laughed. "That's excellent. Who did it?"

"A young salesman at the linen counter. He scratched it off as you passed the other morning. I managed to get it from him, and now he's scared stiff for fear you'll see it." was the laughing reply.

"Scared stiff, is he?" said Mr. Stewart, with a twinkle in his eye. "Just sent him to me, will you?"

A little later a slim youth entered Mr. Stewart's private office and said he understood he had been sent for.

"Yes," said Mr. Stewart gravely and, holding up the sketch asked, "Did you do this?"

The lad grew pale and stammered: "I beg your pardon, sir; it was only a bit of fun. I meant no offense."

"That's all very well, but you'll have to give up your job here."

The youth humbly protested, when Mr. Stewart burst out laughing and said: "Don't say any more, my boy. I'm only joking. Your sketch is excellent, and as it would be a sin to keep a man of your artistic talent behind a linen counter I propose to supply you with the means to study art."

Mr. Stewart's proposition was gratefully accepted, and it was thus that John R. Rogers, the sculptor, began his artistic career.—New York Press.

LOCUST PLAGUES.

Onslaught of the Ravenous Tribe During an Invasion.

GLUTTONS BY THE MILLIONS.

The Devastating Armies Fly In Clouds Dense Enough to Obscure the Light of the Sun—The Hoppers That Come After the Crops Are Devoured.

There are several species or varieties of the migratory locust, which are mostly to be found in dry, semitropical countries, such as the south of Europe, Egypt, Syria and Morocco, for their native home seems to be in the countries bordering on the Mediterranean, though migratory locusts are to be found in regions as remote as South Africa and South America, where they form a veritable scourge to the agriculturists. In Argentina, especially the northern half of the country, they are very destructive, for they will annihilate the farmer's entire crop in a few hours.

A locust invasion, writes John D. Leckie in Chambers' Journal, is an event not easily forgotten. The first sign of the approaching incursion is usually a long, dark cloud low on the horizon. But the dark cloud is no forerunner of rain. Instead of the precious liquid, which the farmer has probably long expected in vain, it portends the approach of his greatest enemy, the omnivorous locust.

As the dark cloud comes nearer it is seen to be composed of countless millions of locusts on whirring wings. Soon the cloud appears overhead and is sufficiently thick to obscure the sun, which is only seen opaquely, as through a mist, although the sky is cloudless and the air clear.

Now we are in the midst of a dense swarm of flying, whirling locusts which dash into our faces, enter our houses and fill our rooms with their presence. The air is simply alive with them. All open wells must be instantly covered or they will be polluted.

Fowls and turkeys welcome the advancing hordes. They simply fatten on the locusts as they run around and gobble them up. But this is no blessing to the farmer—far from it, for the flesh of poultry becomes so tainted by this form of diet as to be quite uneatable, and even their eggs have an unpleasant taste.

So well is this fact known that as soon as the locusts make their appearance in the locality the price of eggs drops to one-half or one-third of their former figure, and even then there are few buyers. All the animals about the farmyard seem to be affected adversely, for even the horses have a strong aversion to eat grass which has been polluted by the presence of locusts, and unless very hungry they will not touch it.

The advance of the locusts takes place as follows: First a few pioneers, the advance guard of the vast army, then the main body of the army, a host which is as invincible as it is destructive. All true locusts are migratory by nature, for the simple reason that, being gregarious in their habits, it would be impossible for them to exist without continual migration.

The ground on which they settle is completely cleared in a few hours, and they must perforce seek other fields and pastures new, where they can repeat their depredations. For the same reason the destruction which they effect is purely local. One district may be completely devastated, while another a few miles away is altogether spared from their presence.

When the locusts have eaten their fill the females commence to deposit their eggs, which they do by making an opening in the ground, in which the eggs are laid. The infant locusts soon make their appearance, scarcely so large as a pea, hopping about in countless swarms. In this stage of their existence they have no wings, but progress by hopping. While in this state—that is, before their wings are developed—they must be ruthlessly destroyed.

Long trenches are dug, into which the "hoppers" are driven by rows of men, women and boys armed with branches of trees, with which they beat the ground, driving the insects in the direction of the trenches. On the opposite sides of the trenches sheets of galvanized iron are placed upright so as to form an effectual barrier.

On arriving at the trenches the "hoppers" fall into them and cannot easily make their way out, especially as their progress is barred by the wall of galvanized iron in front of them, the smooth surface of which affords them no foothold.

The trenches are soon filled with millions of young "hoppers," the weight of those above crushing to death the under strata of their fellows. Earth is then shoveled on the top of the seething mass of insects, and they are thus smothered and killed.

This is the most effective method of exterminating the locusts, but in order to insure the success of the operation it is necessary that the attempt should be properly organized and that all the neighbors should act in concert.—Providence Journal.

A young man who was an enthusiastic lover of nature went to the seaside for a holiday and, approaching a typical fisherman, said:

"Ah, my friend, how well you must know the face of nature and know it in its many moods! Have you ever seen the sun sinking in such a glare of glory that it swallows up the horizon with fire? Have you not seen the mist gliding down the shrinking hillside like a specter?"

And, very excited and throwing out his arms, he continued:

"Have you never seen, my man, the moon struggling to shake off the ragged, rugged storm cloud?"

The fisherman replied, "No, sir; I have not since I signed the pledge."—Pearson's Weekly.

A Little Ambiguous.

The Ingrahams were entertaining two friends at dinner. After Mr. Ingraham had helped them to roast beef he happened to glance at the other end of the table, where his wife sat, and observed, to his horror, that the sugar bowl was the old one, with both handles broken off, that usually graced the dining table on wash days.

In vain he endeavored by mysterious nods and winks to direct Mrs. Ingraham's attention to it. She either did not see or would not see the mutilated piece of queensware, and his patience gave way at last.

"Cornelia," he said, with some sharpness, "do you think we ought to use a sugar bowl when we have company without ears on?"—Youth's Companion.

I have never been smitten with the use of the word "one" as a pronoun. It takes a word juggler to attempt it and get away with it. Teacher—Children, nature is superior to man in everything. For instance, there is nothing that travels so fast as the unseen wind. Willie—Huh! You ought to hear what my pa says about a sight draft!—Puck.

Her Sweeping Abilities.

Mrs. Neurich—Did you notice how grandly our daughter swept into the room at Mrs. Flippson's reception last night?

Neurich—Sure I did! When it comes to sweeping into a room Mamie wins in a walk. But when it comes to sweeping out a room she goes lame.

Wanted It Plain.

Mrs. Youngwife—I want to get some salad. Dealer—Yes'm. How many heads? Mrs. Youngwife—Oh, goodness! I thought you took the heads off. I just want plain chicken salad.

Knew Her Aim.

Willie Wiggles—Tommy Scrubbles' ma sent him to get a switch to use on him, and he fetched her a stone and told her to throw it at him.

Appearances.

Magistrate—If I remember rightly, this is not your first appearance in court. Prisoner—No, your honor, but I hope you don't judge by appearances.

The Parting.

"Benson was a good friend of mine, and I hated to lose him. He always wore a cheerful smile and seemed in the best of spirits. It will be hard to find another fellow so genial, so full of the joy of life."

"What's the matter? Has Benson left town for good?"

"No."

"Surely he isn't dead?"

"No. He borrowed $5 from me this morning."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Then He Made a Home Run.

He—What kind of stone would you like in the ring, darling? She—Oh, Jack, dear, I've heard so much about baseball diamonds. Do you suppose they are very expensive?—Boston Transcript.

At Boulogne during a royal reception some years ago a number of English ladies in their anxiety to see everything pressed with such force against the soldiers who were keeping the line that the soldiers were forced to give way and generally were, as policemen say, "hindered in the execution of their duty." The officer in command, observing the state of affairs, called out: "One roll of the drum! If they don't stand back kiss them all!" After the first sound of the drum the ladies took to flight.

The Exclusiveness of Caste.

An English officer who some years ago was wounded in a battle in India and left lying all night among the native dead and wounded tells this story: "Next morning we spied a man and an old woman, who came to us with a basket and a pot of water, and to every wounded man she gave a piece of coarse bread from the basket and a drink from her water pot. To me she gave the same, and I thanked heaven and her. But the Soobahdar was a high caste Rajput, and as this woman was a Chumar, or of the lowest caste, he would receive neither water nor bread from her. QUEER NOTIONS ABOUT CHRISTMAS

QUAINT and curious are some of the old customs, beliefs and superstitions of past ages which have come down through different countries regarding Christmas eve and Christmas. Many of these pertain so closely to the rites and ceremonies of heathendom that the connection may be easily traced; others spring obviously from legends, incidents and history surrounding the journey of Joseph and Mary to Bethlehem, the birth of Jesus, the adoration of the three kings and the shepherds and the life and teachings and final martyrdom of the Christ. Most of these described here are so strange and out-of-the-ordinary that it is safe to say few readers are familiar with any of them.

Throughout Europe the people engaged in farming and agricultural pursuits generally have always regarded Christmas eve and Christmas as a season for signs and portents regarding the success or failure of their endeavors for the coming year.

IF A DOG HOWLS HE WILL SURELY GO MAD WITHIN THE YEAR

If you beat your trees on Christmas night they were certain to bear better crops than they had the year previously. A like result would follow the tying of stones on every Christmas eve, or to tie wet straw bands around the orchard trees on Christmas eve would increase their fruitfulness. To make the grass grow well the succeeding year, thrash the ground of your garden with a flail on Christmas eve with only your shirt on.

In several of the old counties of England the custom long survived of "saluting" the apple trees on Christmas eve, and in Sussex they used to "wassail," or "worsle" and chant verses to them.

Christmas time is regarded by the maidens of many countries as the season when the oracles are pleased to give them information concerning their love affairs, telling them by various processes what will be the color of their lover's hair and his eyes, his occupation and whether present love affairs will terminate happily or otherwise.

Some of these curious beliefs hinge on the exact time of the birth of Jesus. Scotch folklore has it that he was born at midnight of Christmas eve, and that the miracle of turning water into wine was later also performed at that hour. This belief is also recognized in parts of Germany, where it is held that water turns to wine between the hours of eleven and twelve on Christmas eve, while in other sections of that country the change is believed to take place on Christmas night.

Gossips in Germany must find great satisfaction in the superstition that if one walks into the winter corn on Christmas eve he will hear all that will happen in the village that year. Likewise, if one goes to the crossroads on Christmas day he will hear "that which most concerns him for the coming year."

Dogs should have a care as to their actions the night before Christmas. If one howl on that night he will go mad within the year. Lights should be kept burning all of Christmas eve. If they are allowed to go out some one in the house will die. When the lights are brought in on Christmas eve, if anyone's shadow has no head he will die within the year; if it have only half a head the death will occur during the second half-year. If a hoop comes off a cask on Christmas eve, someone in the house will die during the year.

Somewhat more cheerful is the belief that if you make a little heap of salt on the table and it does not melt before morning you will live at least a year longer. Woe to him whose salt pile melts, however, for he will die within the year—the comforting part lying in the fact that a salt heap is not likely to melt, although some one having a spite against the maker of the salt heap might cause it to diminish and appear to melt away by carrying it off.

IF ANYONE'S SHADOW HAS NO HEAD, THAT PERSON WILL DIE DURING THE YEAR

Lead, steel and vermin may be circumvented if the proper precautions are taken. For the first wear a shirt spun, woven and sewed by a pure, chaste maiden on Christmas day; wear something sewed with thread spun on Christmas eve and "no vermin will stick to you."

If one be born at "sermon time" on Christmas morning he can see spirits; burn elder on Christmas eve and you will have revealed to you all the witches and sorcerers in the neighborhood.

Thieves will find it consoling to know that if they steal anything on Christmas without being caught they can safely steal things all the year. Likewise, steal hay and give to your cattle, and not only will they thrive all the year and grow fat, but you will not be caught in any of your future thefts.

A Christmas day passed without eating any beans and you will become an ass; eat a raw egg on Christmas morning, fasting, and you can carry heavy weights.

If you have been disappointed, save the crumbs for three Christmas eves and they will be effective as a physic; shake out the tablecloth over the bare ground under the open sky after your Christmas dinner and crumbwort will grow there; hang a wash clout on a hedge on Christmas day or Christmas eve, then groom the horses with it and they will grow fat.

Take great care of your fire on Christmas morning; if it burn brightly that betokens prosperity for all the coming year; if it smolder, beware, for that portends misfortune and adversity.

It is unlucky to give to a neighbor a live coal with which to kindle a fire on Christmas morning; also it is unlucky to carry a coal or anything else from the house on Christmas morning until something has first been brought in.

Our Christmas tree, which is a feature of most public Christmas eve celebrations, and in many homes, is comparatively new in Christendom, but it springs from some very ancient customs. The Egyptians regarded the date palm as an emblem of immortality and of the starlit firmament and at the time of the winter solstice decked their houses with its branches. It was held by them to be "a symbol of life," triumphant over death, and therefore of perennial life in the renewal of each bounteous year.

A Scandinavian myth speaks of a "service tree" sprung from the blood-drenched soil where two lovers had been killed by violence. During the Christmas season mysterious lights which no wind could extinguish were often seen flaming in its branches. A later explanation of the Christmas tree dates back to Martin Luther and tells of him attemptinig to describe to his family the beauties of a snow-covered forest under a starry sky. Unable to make them comprehend satisfactorily, he went into the garden, cut a small fir tree and set it up in the nursery with its branches covered with lighted candles.

At about the season when we celebrate Christmas the Jews celebrated their Feast of Lights, or the Feast of Dedication, of which lighted candles are a prominent feature. "The Night of Dedication," Christmas eve is called in Germany, while the "Feast of Lights" is celebrated also in Greece, at our Christmas time, although Christmas is a dismal time in Greece, being disliked by that warmth-loving people because it is cold and dreary—also a favorite season for ghosts and goblins to walk abroad.

During the middle ages the Christmas tree became an institution at Strassburg and was familiar along the Rhine for 200 years before its popularity extended throughout the rest of the world.

Christmas cards, which may now be had in every degree of elaborateness and gorgeousness at prices from a penny each upward, are comparatively new. The extent to which they are used has, of course, increased correspondingly with the general popularity of the post card.

TIE WET STRAW BANDS AROUND YOUR TREES TO MAKE THEM BEAR PLENTIFULLY

Joseph Cundall, a London artist, claims to have issued the first Christmas card proper in 1846. It was a lithograph, hand colored, about the size of a lady's visiting card. In 1862 cards of this character were first issued in large numbers. They were still of the visiting card size, inscribed, simply, "A Merry Christmas." Later holly, mistletoe, embossed robins and figures and landscapes were added until the present stage has been reached.

As a forerunner of the Christmas card were the "school pieces" and "Christmas pieces" of the early part of the nineteenth century. These were sheets of plain writing paper surrounded with elaborate pen flourishes and scrolls, and sometimes headed with copper-plate engravings, plain and colored. Schoolboys used them at the holiday season, says one writer, "for carefully written letters exploiting the progress they had made in composition and chirography. Charity boys were large purchasers of these pieces and at Christmas time used to take them around their parish to show and at the same time to solicit a trifle.

Modeling for Children

"Making Things" in Clay Give Pupils Idea of Artistic Beauty and Form.

There are sculptors who make a specialty of portrait busts and statuettes of children and recently a movement has been started to make plastic art, in the form of small models and figurines distributed among the public schools, a medium for teaching new artistic ideals in young pupils.

Strangely enough, the idea of giving the children a lump of clay and setting them to "making something" themselves seems never to have occurred except to a few of our school teachers. In many schools the kindergarten sand box is about the nearest approach to it, but in some of the public schools in great cities modeling in clay is taught in the primary grades.

Modeling, the concrete expression of the sense of form, is the beginning of all art.

"The vital law lying at the root of all that I have ever tried to teach," says Ruskin, "is the dependence of all noble design in any kind, on the sculpture or painting of organic form."

The appreciation of form, as Mr. Schreiber argues, can never be so well taught as when the pupil has a bit of clay in his hands, and that it is natural is well proved by the desire of every child to mold something out of mud, if no clay is to be had. The children at the seashore try their best to "build something," though the sand slips away. So they wet it, and do the best they can. Give any normal child some clay and see how easily it learns to model familiar objects and how eagerly it amuses itself with this artistic play. It is along the pathway of clay that a child can be most easily instructed, being taught to see exactly and to reproduce more and more skillfully as it gains skill by practice. It is education of eye and hand at the same time. The joy of creation is aroused and stimulated and the powers of production are given full play.

If left to its own free will the child is apt to attempt the complex rather than the simple and therefore a certain amount of suggestion and guidance is necessary. To this end an entire series of models have been set as a course that will help to lay the foundation for later artistic education.

FOR HEALTH AND VITALITY

Dairymen Are Feeding Too Narrow Rations for Good of Cows—Good Methods Are Needed.

(By W. M. KELLEY.)

I believe it is time that we dairymen took a more rational view of our business and feed our cows in a manner that would promote their health and vitality instead of forcing them to their very limits, as is the practise in many sections where dairying is the exclusive branch of agriculture. We are feeding too narrow rations for the good of our cows.

Cows that are raised and developed on clover hay, enslage, wheat, bran and oats, with good luxuriant pasture grass during the summer will make better cows than those that are overfed on a ration ill adapted to their needs. I will stake my reputation on this fact. We may not make as much milk, but we will have better producing cows and calves, and what milk we do make will be made cheaper and our herd will gradually be getting better.

I do not care whether a ration is 1 to 4 or 1 to 7 as long as it does the business and is beneficial to the health of the cattle. Then, again, the average dairyman does not employ methods best calculated to give the best results in breeding. Some dairymen will raise every heifer calf born on his farm, while another dairyman will not raise any. I wish we could induce dairymen to make some exchange of calves whereby only the best calves from high-producing cows would be raised.

In this way dairymen who had the facilities for raising and developing the heifers could go out and get the very best calves and raise them and sell them for a good price instead of growing the weedy, inferior calves that were born on his farm.

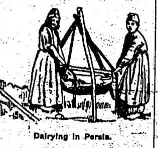
This would do more than any one thing to improve the quality of our dairy herds, and growers could realise greatly increased profits upon the cows that they raised.

MAKING BUTTER IN PERSIA

Churn Consists of Skin of Goat or Sheep Into Which Sour Cream Is Poured.

A missionary who has spent several years in Persia gives a most interesting account of how butter is made in that country. The churn consists of the skin of a goat or sheep sewed up in the form of a bag.

Into this bag the sour scream is poured and it is then agitated by the bag being swung on a rude frame hung on sticks, as in the illustration. It is said that this is the origin of the American swing churn.



Dairying In Persia.

Dairying, and all farm work in Persia, is now carried on just as it was centuries ago, and only in a very few places have any improvements been made.

Freshening Cows.

On a successful dairy farm, where a large number of cows are kept and milked, special attention is given to the freshening and drying cows. Three weeks before a cow freshens, if this occurs during the winter feeding period, the owner begins feeding about two pounds of wheat bran a day. No shorts are fed until after calving. This feed is gradually increased until at calving time the cow is receiving about four pounds of bran daily.

After freshening the cows, grain ration is gradually increased by adding shorts until the amount fed reaches a maximum of eight pounds for the best cows in the herd.

Dry Cows.

An effort is made to have each cow dry from six to eight weeks each year. The cows are milked regularly twice a day up to a week of the time they are to be turned dry. They are then milked once a day for three or four days, a small quantity of milk being left in the udder each time. After this they are turned out to pasture and are not milked again until the next period of lactation begins.

Handling the Separator.

If careless handling of the separator results in the loss of only one-half pound of butter fat per day, the accumulated loss for a year is a considerable item.

Butter Fat in Milk.

Milk low in butter fat is also low in total solids. The less the butter fat the more water there is in the milk.

Stepmother of Mint Julep.

Romance and poetry have delighted to weave garlands with which to celebrate and perpetuate the glory of the blue grass in old Kentucky, famed for its fine horses, beautiful women and mint.

Kentucky has been designated as the home of the mint julep, and its colonels have become famous all over the world for the easy and graceful way in which they drink whisky with a little dash of sugar and a sprig or two of mint in order, chiefly, to overcome the necessity for a large amount of water in the beverage. The true Kentuckian doesn't want his whisky drowned.

It transpires, however, that the real home of the mint and the mint julep is right here in Missouri, whose crop of mint last year amounted to 7,658 pounds, or enough to make 1,224,820 juleps. This amount includes the marketed product only, no account having been taken of the countless thousands of juleps which were compounded during the year with a base of the undiluted moonshine whisky that never paid a cent of tax.—St. Louis Star.

Kept Umbrella Thirty Years.

A faithful old umbrella which has shielded the family of Dr. James A. Mullican of Greenwood avenue from the storms of 30 years, was stolen on Sunday. During the rain on that day the physician lent the umbrella to E. A. Seck, and while the latter was in a store some one stole it.

"The umbrella belonged to my father and has been in the family for more than thirty years," said Doctor Mullican the other night. "It has been covered several times.

"To persons who are unable to keep the same umbrella for more than thirty days this may seem incredible, but it is true," concluded Doctor Mullican with a smile.—Chicago Tribune.

A Willing Witness.

"Did his actions have an air of verisimilitude?" the lawyer asked the witness.

"What was that, sir?"

"I say, did his conduct wear an air of verisimilitude?"

"Oh," replied the witness. "Sure! He was versimilitudin' all around the place."—Saturday Evening Post.

WONDERED WHY.

Found the Answer Was "Coffee."

Many pale, sickly persons wonder for years why they have to suffer so, and eventually discover that the drug—caffeine—in coffee is the main cause of the trouble.

"I was always very fond of coffee and drank it every day. I never had much flesh and often wondered why I was always so pale, thin and weak.

"About five years ago my health completely broke down and I was confined to my bed. My stomach was in such condition that I could hardly take sufficient nourishment to sustain life.

"During this time I was drinking coffee, didn't think I could do without it.

"After awhile I came to the conclusion that coffee was hurting me, and decided to give it up and try Postum. I didn't like the taste of it at first, but when it was made right—boiled until dark and rich—I soon became fond of it.

"In one week I began to feel better. I could eat more and sleep better. My sick headaches were less frequent, and within five months I looked and felt like a new being, headache spells entirely gone.

"My health continued to improve and today I am well and strong, weigh 148 pounds. I attribute my present health to the life-giving qualities of Postum."

New Head for University of Minnesota.

Minneapolis. — George Edgar Vincent, dean of the college of arts, sciences and sociology of the University of Chicago, was chosen president of the University of Minnesota by formal vote of the university regents, to succeed President Cyrus W. Northrop. His salary will be $10,000.

Dr. Vincent will enter upon his duties at the University of Minnesota, April 1, 1911, when Dr. Northrop will retire with the title of "President Emeritus."

The only other person voted for at the meeting was Frederick Jones, dean of mathematics at Yale and formerly dean of the college of engineering of Minnesota.

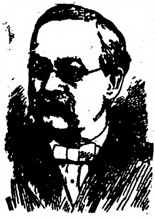
One Sticks for Dean Jones.

A. E. Rice cast a vote for Dean Jones in the first informal ballot. An unsigned vote with Dean Jones' name on it also was found after the informal ballot. After the first formal ballot, it was found that Mr. Rice had voted for Dean Vincent. Another unsigned ballot bore the name of Dean Jones.

Dean Vincent has accepted the offer of the presidency of the University of Minnesota. He is a graduate of Yale, president of the National Chautauqua association, an accomplished orator, and scholar.

Aid Asked for Farm Schools.

The regents decided to recommend that the legislature authorize the issue of $1,200,000 bonds for the university farm schools here and at Morris, Crookston and Grand Rapids.



CYRUS NORTHRUP.

According to Dean Woods, the approximate expenditures will be $950,000, to be spent on the agricultural college of the university proper, $160,000 at Morris, $80,000 at Grand Rapids and $100,000 at Crookston. Some of the bonds will be issued immediately if granted.

According to Dean Woods, $115,000 should be spent in alterations and additions to the dining hall, for heating, wiring and improving the power plant and the basement of the girls' dormitory.

Two New Dormitories.

For the additional plans to the engineering building, planned two years ago, $160,000 is needed. Dean Woods asks $100,000 for another girls' dormitory to house 100 co-eds. The same amount is asked for a men's building.

The new drill hall is believed to require $100,000, a new chicken plant $10,000, and general improvements, $60,000.

Dean Woods also plans to expend $100,000 for additional help and instructors and $175,000 to investigating drainage systems, canals, the study of insects, weeds and other fields of practical research.

SITE FOR CATHOLIC COLLEGE.

Winona Board of Trade Gets an Option on Land for Bishop.

Winona. — The committee of the Winona Board of Trade has secured an option on the 105-acre piece of property at the foot of Gilmore valley, owned by Mrs. C. C. Beck, upon which Bishop Heffron has looked favorably with the idea of locating his $300,000 Catholic boy's college.

The committee, which declares it will have no trouble raising by subscription the money for the purchase of the land, holds the privilege of buying the site for $25,000 should it be accepted by the bishop and it will be given him outright. On the land, which figures in the option, is an old and romantic residence, which could easily be utilized as one of the minor college buildings.

Three acres of the land is given over to an orchard, 90 acres to a farm, a greater portion of which is on table land, although some of it is on the slopes. Ten and a half acres is woodland. The remainder of it is given over to residence property.

OLD MOORHEAD HOTEL BURNS.

Mice Get Busy With Matches, and Fire Is the Result.

Moorhead.—The Farmers' home, one of the oldest hotels in the city and one that sheltered many of the early comers to Moorhead, was almost totally destroyed by fire. It is believed that a combination of matches and mice was the cause of the blaze.

The portions of the hotel not destroyed by fire were thoroughly soaked with water and the loss is nearly to-

UNREST IN ROCHESTER.

Rochester.—Rochester may be the next city in Minnesota to adopt the commission form of government. Other cities in this section that are contemplating the new system are Red Wing and Winona, but there seems little doubt that this city will adopt a new charter at a special election to be called for the purpose some time after the holidays.

A petition is to be started at once to secure the necessary number of signers to bring the new order to things about, and every one to whom the subject has been brought seems eager to adopt the plan.

Rochester has been operating for years under a charter said to have outgrown its usefulness long ago, and as a result the city is tied hand and foot. It has reached the limit of its ability in making improvements and its electric light plant is proving a losing proposition. Should the adoption of the commission plan come to a vote, there is every indication that it will carry. The result will be watched by many cities contemplating the move.

TAWNEY TO REPLACE BALLINGER

Present Chief to Resign at End of Congress.

Washington, D. C. — That Representative James A. Tawney of Minnesota, chairman of the committee on appropriations, will become secretary of the interior shortly after his retirement from congress on March 4, next is the prediction made in usually well informed circles. Mr. Tawney declines to affirm or deny the report that he is to succeed Secretary Ballinger.

Now that the report of the Ballinger-Pinchot investigating committee has been made, Mr. Ballinger is preparing to return to his law practice.

Ballinger Sought Vindication.

He has desired to rid himself of the annoyances that have come with his official duties but refused to retire under fire. The report of the committee will come up for discussion during the present session of congress and the incident leaving the way clear for him to go out of office under flying colors with the vindication of his judges.

Brainerd.—Two little sons of Thad Cooley, a farmer residing twelve miles east of Brainerd at Bay Lake, were playing with matches. One set fire to the other, aged 2 years, and the little one succumbed to the terrible burns received. Doctors were summoned from Brainerd, but the child died before they could arrive.

FIGHTING THE WHITE PLAGUE

Number of State Institutions Is Double During the Past Two Years.

Sixteen state sanatoria, 28 county hospitals and 21 municipal hospitals for tuberculosis have been erected and provided for since January 1, 1909, says a recent bulletin of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

Within the last two years the number of state institutions for tuberculosis has doubled, and the number of county and municipal institutions has increased from about 30 to 80. The expenditures of public money for the treatment of tuberculosis also has more than doubled. Not less than $3,000,000 of state money was appropriated for tuberculosis institutions in 1909, when 42 legislatures met, and over $500,000 in 1910, when only 11 legislatures were in session. The appropriations of counties and cities for tuberculosis hospitals and sanatoria in the last two years will aggregate fully $2,500,000, bringing the total of official appropriations for tuberculosis hospitals up to over $6,000,000 in the past two years.

In spite, however, of this good showing, the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis states that not one-tenth of the public provision for tuberculosis that is needed has been made. More than 250,000 tuberculosis patients are constantly without proper institutional treatment.

Fresh Air in Winter

In winter, it is hard to get fresh air in certain rooms. Some rooms in a house are usually colder than others, and if you open the windows it is hard again to heat the room properly.

If you keep the windows closed you don't get fresh air; if you keep them open you cannot quickly reheat the room. The solves the difficulty. You can leave the windows in a room open all day in winter, and when you close them apply a match to a Perfection Oil Heater and heat the room to any temperature you desire in a few minutes.

The Perfection Oil Heater is finished in japan or nickel. It burns for nine hours. It has a cool handle and a damper top. It has an automatic-locking flame spreader, which prevents the wick from being turned high enough to smoke, and is easy to remove and drop back so that the wick can be quickly cleaned. An indicator always shows amount of oil in the font.

The filler-cap does not need to be screwed down. It is put in like a cork in a bottle, and is attached to the font by a chain.

The burner body or gallery cannot become wedged, because of a new device in construction, and consequently, it can always be easily unscrewed in an instant for rewicking. The Perfection Oil Heater is strong, durable, well made, built for service, yet light and ornamental.

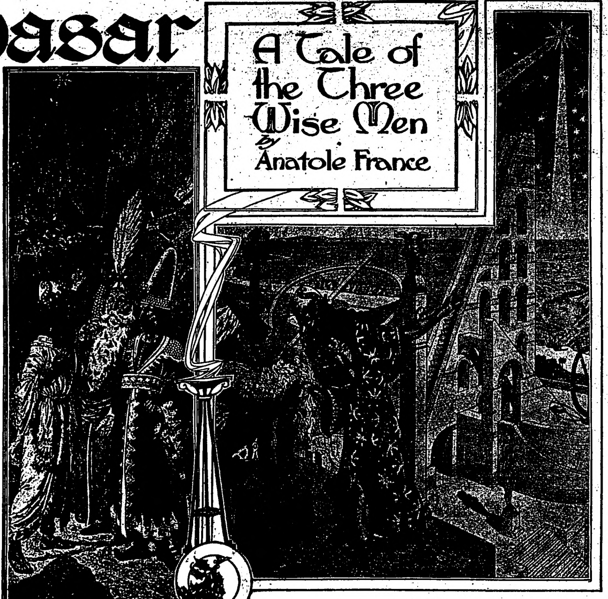
PUTNAM FADELESS DYES

Balthasar

A Tale of the Three Wise Men

by Anatole France



IN those days Balthasar, called Saracen by the Grecians, reigned over Ethiopia. He was black but comely, simple of mind and generous of heart. In the third year of his reign, which was the twenty-second of his age, he went to visit Balkis, queen of Sheba, accompanied by the mage Sembobitis and by the eunuch Menkera. He had a train of seventy-five camels, with loads of cinnamon, myrrh, gold powder and elephants' tusks. While they were journeying Sembobitis would teach Balthasar the influence of the planets and the secret virtues of stones, and Menkera would sing liturgic songs to him; but he was not listening to them, being all intent upon looking at the little jackals who were sitting, with ears erect, on the sandy horizon.

At last, after a march of twelve long days, Balthasar and his companions smelt a sweet smell of roses and they soon gazed upon the gardens which surrounded the town of Sheba.

There they met young maidens who were dancing under blossoming pomegranates.

When they came into the town they were amazed at the size of storehouses, sheds and workyards, which were stretching in front of them, as well as at the large quantity of merchandise stored in them. For a long time they walked along streets thronged with chariots, porters, donkeys and donkey drivers, until the marble walls, the purple tents, the gold cupolas of Balkis' palace came into view.

The queen of Sheba received them in a court cooled with fountains of perfumed water which fell in pearly streams with a clear-ringing sound. She was standing in bejeweled robes and she was smiling.

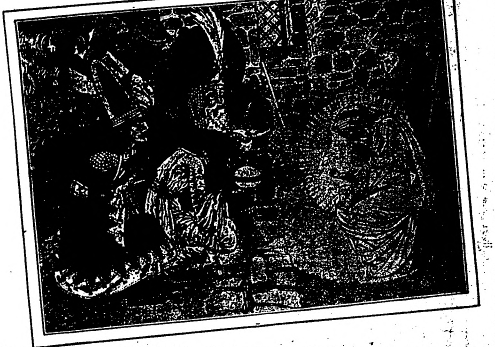
When he saw her Balthasar was deeply troubled. She appeared to him sweeter than a sweet dream.

"My lord," Sembobitis muttered to him, "be careful to conclude a good treaty of commerce with the queen."

"Take heed, my lord," said Menkera, "for she is said to use magic in winning the hearts of men."

Then, after bowing very low, the mage and the eunuch retired.

Balthasar, when he was alone with Balkis, opened his mouth, in an attempt to speak, but he could not utter a word, and he thought to himself: "The queen will be angry at my silence."



But the queen was still smiling and did not look angry.

She spoke first and said, in a voice sweeter than music:

"Be welcome and sit down."

And, with a finger which looked like a ray of light, she beckoned him to some purple cushions on the floor.

Balthasar sat down, sighed a big sigh, and seizing hold of a cushion with each hand, he exclaimed hurriedly:

"Madame, I wish these two cushions were giants and your enemies, so that I might wring their necks."

And, speaking thus, he squeezed the cushions so hard in his clenched fists that they burst, letting out a cloud of white down. One of the little feathers whirled round in the air for some time and then alighted on the queen's neck.

"My lord Balthasar," said Balkis, blushing, "why do you want to kill giants?"

"Because I love you," said Balthasar.

"Tell me," said Balkis, "is the water of wells sweet in your capital?"

"Yes," answered Balthasar, much surprised.

"I also would like to know," resumed Balkis, "how they prepare dried fruits in Ethiopia."

The king did not know what to say; but she pressed him:

"Tell me, now, if you would please me."

Then, with a great effort of memory, he described the practise of Ethiopian makers of sweets, which consisted of stewing quinces in honey. But she was not listening to him. Then, all of a sudden:

"My lord, they say that you are in love with Queen Candace, your neighbor. Tell me truly, is she fairer of face than I?"

"Oh! Madam, how could that be?"—and Balthasar fell on his knees at Balkis' feet.

The queen continued: "Then, her eyes? . . . her mouth? . . . . her complexion?"

Balthasar, stretching a hand toward her, said:

"Let me take the little feather which has alighted on your neck, and I will give you one-half of my kingdom, with the sage Sembobitis and Menkera the eunuch into the bargain."

But she got up and ran away laughing a clear-ringing laugh.

That evening Balthasar had supper with the queen of Sheba and drank palm wine.

"So, really," said Balkis during the supper, "Queen Candace is not so fair of face as I am?"

"Queen Candace is black," answered Balthasar.

Balkis glanced at Balthasar and said:

"One can be black and comely.

"Balkis!" exclaimed the king. . . .

He could say no more. Seizing her in his embrace he held the queen's forehead beneath his lips. But he saw that she was weeping. Then he spoke to her in a low, caressing, lightly singing voice, as a nurse would to her babe, and he called her his little flower and his little star.

"Why dost thou weep?" said he, "and what must I do that thou mayest weep no more? If thou hast any wish, tell it me, and I shall do even as thou wishest."

She had ceased weeping, and now she was in a dreamy mood. For a long time he pressed her to tell him her wish.

At last she said:

"I wish to feel fear."

As Balthasar did not seem to understand, she explained to him that for a long time she had been wishing to be exposed to some unknown danger, but that she could not, because both the men and the gods of Sheba were watching over her.

"And yet," she added with a sigh, "I should so like to feel, during the night, the cold and delightful thrill of fear go through my flesh! I should so like to feel my hair stand on end! Oh! how delightful it would be to be afraid!"

She threw her arms round the neck of the black king and said, in the voice of a beseeching child:

"Here is night coming down upon us. Let us both go through the town in disguise. Will you not come?"

He assented and she, running to the window, looked through the lattice into the public square.

"There is a beggar," she said, "lying against the wall of the palace. Give him your clothes and ask him to give you, in exchange, his turban of camel's hair and the coarse cloth which girdles his loins. Make haste while I get ready."

And she ran out of the banquet hall, clapping her hands for joy.

Balthasar took off his tunic made of fine linen and all embroidered with with gold, and tied the beggar's cloth round his loins. He looked a true slave. The queen soon reappeared in the seamless blue gown of the poor women who worked in the fields.

"Let us go!" she said, and led Balthasar through narrow lobbies down to a small gate.

II.

The night was dark and Balkis looked quite small in the darkness.

She took Balthasar to one of those drinking dens where porters about town used to assemble. They sat down to a table and they could see, by dim light of an ill-smelling lamp, through the thick atmosphere of the place, reeking brutes fighting with fists or knives for a cup of fermented drink, while others slept, with closed fists, under the tables.

Balkis, perceiving some salt fish hanging from the rafters of the roof, said to her companion:

"I should like to eat of that salt fish with pounded onions."

Balthasar ordered the dish, but when she had finished eating, he discovered that he had taken no money with him. He took little concern and thought they could go out without paying. But the innkeeper barred their way, calling him a slave and calling her a donkey, at which Balthasar knocked him down with his fist. Some of the men, with uplifted knives, rushed upon the two strangers. But the black king, seizing hold of an enormous pestle used for pounding Egyptian onions, crushed two of his aggressors and compelled the others to retreat. He felt Balkis by his side, which made him invincible. The friends of the innkeeper, not daring to approach, hurled at him, from the back of the shop, oil jars and cups, lighted lamps, and even the enormous brass pot wherein a whole sheep was stewing. The pot fell with a crash on Balthasar's head and split it. He was stunned for an instant, but, gathering up his strength, he hurled the pot back with such vigor that the weight of it was increased tenfold. The crash of the falling metal was mingled with horrible groans, and with the shrieks of the dying. Taking advantage of the terror of the survivors and fearing lest Balkis should be hurt, Balthasar took her in his arms and ran with her through the dark and deserted streets.

"I love thee," whispered the queen.

And now the moon, peeping from behind a cloud, revealed, in Balkis's half-closed eyes, a ray of light damp with tears. They were going down the dry bed of a torrent. All of a sudden Balthasar's foot slipped on some moss and they fell down holding one another in a tight embrace. It seemed to them as if the world of the living had ceased to exist. And when at dawn gazelles came to drink from the hollows of the stones, the lovers were still wrapped in oblivion.

At the same moment some brigands happened to pass by and saw the two lying on the moss.

Then they tied them to the tail of a donkey and went along their way with them.

The black king was hurling threats of death at them, but Balkis, although slightly shivering in the cold air of dawn, seemed to smile at some inward thought.

They walked through barren solitudes until the heat of the day began to make itself felt.

She was now laughing, and the brigand chief having asked her the reason why, she replied:

"I am laughing at the thought of having you all hanged."

"Truly, my beauty!" exclaimed the brigand chief, "that is strange talk in the mouth of a scrubber of pots! And your black gallant? he will probably help you?"

On hearing these insulting words, Balthasar was incensed with rage; he threw himself upon the brigand and squeezed his neck so hard that he nearly strangled him.

But the brigand stuck his knife into him, and the poor king, rolling on the ground, looked at Balkis with eyes in which all life soon seemed to be extinct.

III.

But now there came a big roar of armed horsemen and Balkis saw brave Abner who, at the head of her guards, came to release his queen, of whose mysterious disappearance he had heard the day before.

The mage Sembrobitis and Menkera the eunuch who were standing by Abner's side gave a loud cry when they saw their prince lying motionless with a knife in his side. They raised him with the utmost care. Sembrobitis, who was well versed in medical science, saw that he was still breathing. He dressed the wound while Menkera wiped the froth from the king's lips. Then they tied him on a horse and bore him gently to the queen's palace.

For a space of fifteen days Balthasar remained in a state of mad delirium. He spoke continually of the brass pot and of the moss in the torrent bed, and cried out for Balkis. On the sixteenth day, having opened his eyes, he saw Sembrobitis and Menkera by his bedside, but he did not see the queen.

"Where is she? What is she doing?"

"My lord," said Menkera, "she is in private conversation with the king of Comagene."

"I must see her!" cried Balthasar.

And he rushed out toward the queen's apartment before the old man and the eunuch could stop him. When he came near the bed chamber he saw the king of Comagene coming out of it, all bedecked with gold and as bright as the sun.

Balkis, lying on a purple bed, with closed eyes, was smiling.

"Oh Balkis! Oh my own!" cried Balthasar.

She turned a cold and hard gaze on him, and he saw that she had forgotten everything, and he reminded her of that night in the torrent bed.

"I really do not know what you mean, my lord. Palm wine agrees not with you. You must have been a-dreaming."

She rose to her feet and the gems in her gown clashed like hailstones and shone like lightning.

"My lord," she said, "now is the time when my privy council must assemble. I have no leisure for explaining the dreams of a diseased brain. Take some rest. Adieu!"

Balthasar felt as if he was going to die, but he made an effort to hide his weakness from the wicked woman, and, flying to his room, he fainted, his wound having opened again.

IV.

For three weeks he remained insensible, as if dead, and on the twenty-second day, when he came back to life again, he clasped the hand of Sembobitis, who, together with Menkera, had been watching over him, and he said, with tears:

"Oh! my friends, how happy you both are! But no! there is no happiness at all in this world, and everything in it is bad, since love is an evil and since Balkis is a wicked woman."

"To be wise is to be happy," answered Sembobitis.

"Then I will try to be wise," said Balthaser. "But let us return at once to Ethiopia. And, as he had lost all that he loved, he resolved to devote himself to wisdom and to become a mage. He had a tower built, from the top of which one could see several kingdoms and the vast expanse of the heavens. He used to go to its top every night, there to study the heavens under the direction of the sage Sembobitis.

"Sembobitis," he would say, "dost thou answer on thy head for the accuracy of my horoscopes?"

And the sage Sembobitis would reply:

"My lord, science is infallible, but savants are not."

Balthaser, who had a fine natural genius, would say:

"Divine truth is the only truth, but it is hidden from us and we seek it in vain. And yet I have just discovered a new star in the heavens. It is a beautiful star, which seems as if it were living, and, when it scintillates, it looks like some heavenly eye looking kindly down upon men. I sometimes even imagine that the star is speaking to me. Blessed shall be he who shall be born under that star!"

V.

But it had been noised abroad, through the whole extent of Ethiopia and through the neighboring kingdoms that Balthaser was no longer in love with Balkis.

When the news reached Sheba, Balkis resented it bitterly. She commanded her grand vizier to get everything ready for a journey to Ethiopia.

"We shall start this very night," she said, "and thou shalt lose thy head if everything is not ready before the sun sinks to rest."

And when she was alone she burst into sobs.

"I love him and he loves me not!" she cried in all sincerity.

Then one night Balthasar, who was on the top of his tower, observing the miraculous star, saw on looking down toward the earth, a long black line winding along the sands of the desert, like an army of ants.

As the caravan came nearer Balthasar saw distinctly the bright scimitars and the black horses of the queen's guards.

Then he saw her also; and he was troubled amazingly, and he felt that he was going to love her again. The star was shining in the zenith with marvelous brilliancy. Beneath, Balkis, in her litter of purple and gold, looked quite small, and she also shone like a star.

Balthasar felt drawn toward her as if by some irresistible force. But, turning his face from her with a great effort and lifting up his eyes, he saw the star again, and the star spoke and said:

"Glory to God in the highest, and peace on earth to men of good will!

"Take thou a measure of myrrh, sweet King Balthasar, and follow me, and I shall lead thee to the Child who has just been born in a stable between a donkey and an ox.

"For that Child is the King of Kings, and he will comfort those who wish to be comforted.

"He calls thee, Balthasar, whose mind is still as dark as thy visage, but whose heart is simple, even as the heart of a child.

"He has chosen thee because thou hast suffered, and he will give thee riches, joy and love.

"He will say to thee: be poor and rejoice in thy poverty, for that is indeed true riches. He will say: true joy lies in the renunciation of joy: love me and love men because of me for I am the only true love."

At these words peace divine shone like a bright light on the dark face of the king.

Queen Balkis, looking up toward Balthasar, knew that no love for her could fill that heart now full of love divine, and, turning, she ordered her caravan back to Sheba.

When the star ceased to speak the king and his two companions came down from the tower, and having procured a measure of myrrh, they formed a caravan and followed the star which went before them.

One day, being at a place where three roads met, they saw two kings who were coming with long trains of followers. One of them was young and white of face. He greeted Balthasar and said:

"My name is Gaspar; I am a king and I am taking a present of gold to the Child who has been born in Bethlehem of Judea."

The second king also approached. He was an old man and his white beard flowed to his girdle.

"My name is Melchior," he said. "I am a king and I am taking a present of frankincense to the Divine Child who has come to teach truth to men."

"I am going thither also," said Balthasar; "I have vanquished my lust and therefore did the star speak unto me."

"I," said Melchoir, "have vanquished my pride and therefore was I called."

"I," said Gasper, "have vanquished my cruelty and therefore do I go with you."

And, lo, the star which they saw in the east went before them till it came and stood over where the young Child was.

When they saw the star they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.

And when they were come into the house they saw the young Child with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshiped him; and when they had opened their treasures they presented unto him gifts: gold, and frankincense, and myrrh—as it is said in the gospel.

Odd News From Big Cities

Stories of Strange Happenings in the Metropolitan Towns

Police Sergeant's Belt Breaks Strike

JERSEY CITY, N. J.—Using his belt as a "pants duster," Police Sergeant Wolfe brought an inglorious finish to a glorious idea of liberty, shorter hours and an immediate transfer to the new school house. The strike leaders were boasting that not a pupil would return to the classrooms in the old school house. Their principal grievance was that other pupils were being transferred to the new building and they feared their places would be taken. Hence the strike was called.

Just to make sure there would be no trouble Sergeant Wolfe was sent to the school house. All was quiet. Presently half a dozen boys came along, stopped on the corner and began talking excitedly. Sergeant Wolfe frowned and walked over to them.

"Teacher's waitin'. Beat it!" said Wolfe.

"We're out on strike," retorted a bold leader.

"So?" said Wolfe, fingering the buckle on his belt.

"Y-y-y-yes," replied the bold leader. With a capable hand Wolfe reached for the juvenile agitator and lifted him about six inches from the pavement. The big, thick belt was dangling from the other hand, and, while the strike leader kicked and struggled in the air, the belt came round with swish after swish until the dust came out in clouds.

"Oo-ee! Ouch!" wailed the youth, as the belt stung again and again. When Sergeant Wolfe finally dropped him the strike leader darted like a hare for the school house door. Nor did his bold companions linger long on his trail as the whistling belt reached for their nether garments.

Parsons and Squires in Wedding War

LOUISVILLE, KY.—A unique "marrying war" is now on at Jeffersonville, Ind., the city just across the Ohio river, where, it is said, more couples have wedded than any other town in the United States. For many years the magistrates have, with the help of runners or solicitors, performed the wedding ceremony for practically every eloping couple that has gone to the Gretna Green to dodge church weddings or the wrath of parents.

The cause of the marrying war was a resolution adopted by the squires a short time ago to the effect that the runners should be dispensed with. Heretofore the runners have met all couples at the trains and boats for the purposes of escorting them to some particular magistrate, who after tying the matrimonial knot, would divide the fee with the man who brought the couple.

Following the adoption of the resolution doing away with the runners, this body of hustlers held a meeting and decided that they would work for the pastors of Jeffersonville instead of seeking other employment. As a result the pastors did a thriving business, while the magistrates waited patiently for couples that never came. The pastors divided fees and got the business.

Finding that without the runners business was at a standstill, the squires met and sent a committee to the pastors, stating that if the pastors did not stop dividing fees with runners each magistrate would again employ runners and take the "trade" from the clergymen. The pastors refused to heed the request and immediately the magistrates employed two runners each and the war was on.

The man who is regarded as the leader of the marrying justices is James S. Keigwin, recently elected to succeed his father-in-law, Benjamin Nixon, as justice of the peace. Keigwin's prestige is inherited, his father-in-law and father, Ephraim Keigwin, having held the office to which he succeeds for 25 years.

Southwest Cities Suffer for Water

NOT ENOUGH WATER TO DROWN A FLY -!-?-

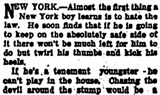
MUSKOGEE, OKLA.—We never miss the water until the mains run dry, but most of the towns in the southwest are missing it now. For many years there has not been such a drought as Oklahoma, Arkansas, north Texas and southern Kansas are now suffering. The drought began the latter part of August and has been in evidence since.

Muskogee and Tulsa are the only two cities in Oklahoma today that are not alarmed about their water supply. The former draws its water from the Grand river, which is fed by springs and in the dryest season will furnish water for a half a million population. Tulsa draws its water from a series of deep wells along the Arkansas river and this supply is supposed to be unlimited.

Oklahoma City, McAlester, Ardmore, Enid, Shawnee and practically every other town of importance in the state is now facing a practically exhausted water supply. The same is true of many cities in Arkansas and Texas.

While there has been considerable rainfall during the fall months, it has not been in quantities sufficient to increase a city water supply, either in a river or in an artificial lake. In one of the largest cities of the state the water supply is so low that it has become a menace to public health, the city water becoming unfit for drinking purposes, and the boards of health of half a dozen towns have issued warnings to that effect. In these towns residents buy the water they drink and it is shipped in in carload lots. Most of the cities are new, and they have never before faced so serious a question.

Children Who Have No Place to Play



DIS IS A RUM WOILD— NUTTIN TER DO BUT KEEP FROM GITTIN KILLED

NEW YORK.—Almost the first thing a New York boy learns is to hate the law. He soon finds that if he is going to keep on the absolutely safe side of it there won't be much left for him to do but twirl his thumbs and kick his heels.

If he's a tenement youngster he can't play in the house. Chasing the devil around the stump would be a roving life compared with the possibilities of play there. Anyway, when he's too big for his mother to step over him with ease if not grace she turns him out.

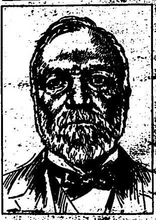
First to the fire escape—his porch—from which he is apt to take a short [illegible] ing, sometimes dead, to the disadvantages of fire escapes as playgrounds. One family last summer lost two children that way.

Dozens of others every year die or are crippled by falling from the roofs and windows and fire escapes to which the Pied Piper, Love of Play, has lured them. Other dozens and scores and even hundreds die in the streets while plucking perilously at pleasure. New York kills so many more children than dogs in its thoroughfares that it could get out a new version of an old phrase and talk of dying "like a child in the streets."

Even if the child succeeds in dodging death he has almost as hard work to keep out of the clutches of the law. The streets are his only playground and yet every inch of them and of the house walls flanking them is mortgaged for some other purpose. The roadway belongs to traffic, the sidewalk to pedestrians [illegible]

WHO'S WHO AND WHY

GIVES MILLIONS TO END WAR



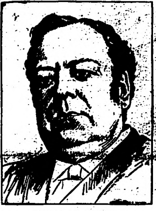
Andrew Carnegie.

The hundreds of millions of Andrew Carnegie, which he has declared he will give away before he dies, will become, it is believed, a perpetual power for the good of mankind, a fund controlled by a self-perpetuating board of trustees, the income from which is to be used through the centuries to aid human beings in ending war and combating all other evils that stand between them and the good of a perfect civilization.

This belief is based on the broad terms of a deed by which Mr. Carnegie has transferred to a board of trustees $10,000,000 in five per cent. first mortgage bonds, the revenue of which will be used first to "hasten the abolition of international war and establish a lasting world peace."

The lofty purpose expressed by the ironmaster to make this foundation a continuing force for reform suggests the probability that this $10,000,000 may be only a starter in a movement to which eventually he will devote the greater part of his riches. The method by which the annual income of $[illegible]00,000 shall be expended is left by Mr. Carnegie entirely in the hands of the trustees.

WHITE NOW CHIEF JUSTICE



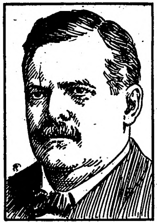
Chief Justice White.

Edward Douglas White, whom President Taft has appointed chief justice of the United States Supreme court, is a native of Louisiana.

He was born in the parish of Lafourche, La., in November, 1845. In his early youth he attended the school at Mount St. Mary's, near Emmitsburg, Md.; later he entered the Jesuit college in New Orleans, and finally he went to Georgetown college of Washington, D. C. Justice White served in the Confederate army during the civil war and practised law among the people of Louisiana.

In 1891 Mr. White became a national figure. A senatorial contest was waged in Louisiana and Mr. White entered the race. He had managed the campaign of Governor Nichols for re-election and had been prominent in the reform element of his state. He had fought in favor of the anti-lottery movement. The legislature finally chose him to succeed Senator Eustis. Chief Justice White has been on the Supreme bench for sixteen years and is the oldest justice in commission whose age is less than seventy. Justice White graduated from Georgetown university. In addition to practising law in Louisiana he was a sugar planter. He served in the Louisiana legislature as a senator, served for a number of years on the state supreme court bench and subsequently was elected to the United States senate

THE NEW SOLICITOR-GENERAL



Frederick W. Lehmann.

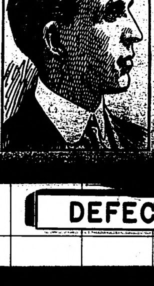
Frederick W. Lehmann of St. Louis has been appointed solicitor general of the United States to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Lloyd W. Bowers.

Mr. Lehmann was born in Prussia in 1853. He came to this country with his parents when a child, his father settling in Ohio and subsequently removing to Indiana. There, at the work bench, while his father was engaged in cobbling the brogans of a farming community, was laid the groundwork of Fred Lehmann's education. By the aid of a primitive Egyptian lamp—a woolen rag floating in a saucer of grease—the youth devoured such books as came into his possession.

A short time in the little red schoolhouse and he started for the west, determined upon acquiring an education without the aid of which he could not hope to achieve success. On the plains of Nebraska he herded cattle, with a view to acquiring the necessary funds to carry him through college. Day after day he rode after the herds, a "quirt" in one hand and a book of classics in the other, reading while the stock grazed.

Mr. Lehmann was a member of the directorate of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition company and chairman of the committee on ethnology of the world's fair. He is a member of the Mercantile, University and other clubs.

GOVERNOR WAS ONCE A WAIF



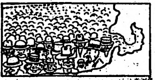
Politics aside, the case of the new governor of Tennessee goes to prove that the day of equal opportunity has not entirely passed in this country. The new governor signs himself "Benjamin W. Hooper," but what his real name is, no one knows. He does not know himself, and although now nearly forty years of age he does not know who his parents were.

He was found on the streets of Knoxville and committed to the care of an orphan asylum, whence he was taken ten years later by Captain Hooper of Newport, Tenn., who gave him his name and educated him. From orphan asylum to the executive mansion! From nameless waif to governor of a sovereign state! The way would seem always open in this country to those who work and strive.

It is said that Mr. Hooper, the lawyer from the mountains of Tennessee, was nominated because he hadn't a [illegible]

WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Impressive American Possibilities



WASHINGTON.—Census facts, tremendous as they are, fall short, as an appeal to the imagination, of the possibilities which they suggest and clearly point out. What is, however, vast, is dwarfed by what may be.

The three southern states of New England—Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island—are found to have a little more than 5,000,000 inhabitants. They do not seem to be near their limit of growth. The area of these three states is only 14,555 square miles. It is equal to less than one-half of one per cent. of the area of the United States, not including Alaska or the island possessions of the republic.

If the entire country were populated as Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island are, there would be more than 1,000,000,000 people in the United States—about two-thirds as many as there are on the earth.

It is true that Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island do not produce food enough for more than a comparatively small part of their population, but it is also clear, from conditions existing in Europe, that an equal area, more fertile and tillable, might do so.

Belgium is smaller than the three southern states of New England, and its population is at least 2,000,000 larger, and Belgium comes near enough balancing its imports of food by its exports to prove that it feeds more than 5,000,000 of its people.

France is much less heavily populated, but the French rate, in proportion to the area of the country, would make the inhabitants of the United States number not less than 550,000,000, and France almost feeds its own people. If isolated from the outside world they could all be kept in comfort, as far as food goes.

It is not necessary to make comparisons with crowded countries of Europe or with the most densely populated parts of the United States to discover in the census returns remarkable evidence of the possibilities of growth which almost daze thoughtful Americans.

Woman Who Counts the Burned Money

WONDERFUL —SHE CERTAINLY KNOWS HER BUSINESS

IN several of the departments of the government young women are proving more efficient than young men. In the treasury, in particular, they excel in many lines of work. Here is a story in point: Not long ago United States Treasurer McClung received a letter from the Royal Bank of Canada telling about a fire that had taken place in one of its branch offices in Cuba. The fire had destroyed, or almost destroyed, so the letter related, a large sum of money in American bank notes which were in the safe in the bank.

The charred notes were in such condition that if they were sent back to the United States they would probably fall to pieces. The bank wanted to know whether it would be possible for the treasurer to send one of his experts down to Cuba, there to examine and identity the money and supervise its shipment back to Washington.

The officers of the Royal Bank of Canada declared their willingness to pay the salary and expenses of the government expert who should be sent down. Miss Elizabeth Smith, who was selected to go, did not wish to make the trip alone and the bank also agreed to pay the expenses of her sister.

At the end of three weeks the work was accomplished. Miss Smith found that she had been able to identify $50,300 worth of notes. This was the exact amount which the bank had on hand in American notes, according to its books.

Signal Corps Man Not So Very Crazy

AERIAL warfare—battles between men-birds in aeroplanes, destruction of fortifications and battleships by shells and bombs dropped from dirigible balloons and aerial craft brought to earth by projectiles—was a vision of mania that took John W. Currell, soldier, sailor and inventor, to the government hospital for the insane, but today he is a free man and working almost night and day on his inventions.

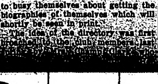
Now backed, it is said, by influential men and under the guidance of army and naval officials, he is working on instruments of destruction that will mark a long stride in aerial warfare equipment, according to friends of the eccentric genius.

A year before Currell was sent to the government hospital for the insane, he had submitted to the then Secretary of the Navy Newberry his ideas and his inventions, and they were being subjected to an examination. It was on the strength of letters he had received from the navy department and the testimony of patent attorneys that he obtained his freedom.

Both in the army and navy Currell was regarded as a crank. He became convinced in the Spanish-American war, he says, that the time was not far distant when aeroplanes or dirigible balloons would be important factors in warfare, and acting on this belief he began a systematic study of the problem that led him through several branches of the army and later into the navy and then to the United States army signal corps, and finally to the madhouse, after his discharge from the army.

Currell was released from the government hospital for the insane on October 6, and since then has bent all his energies toward perfecting his inventions in preparation for applying for patents.

Directory of Congressmen's Wives



IT'S THE GRANDEST IDEA— WE'LL SHOW THE MEN WE ARE NOT ASLEEP

WIVES of representatives and senators, who have already gotten even with their lieges by establishing a congressional club, immune from masculine interference, are now engaged in an even wider departure.

Not to be outdone by the statesmen, each of whom has a chance to spread himself in the congressional directory, the women are about to start a congressional directory of their own. They have begun already to busy themselves about getting the biographies of themselves which will shortly be seen in print.

The idea of the directory was first broached to the club members last [illegible] by Mrs. Champ Clark, who [illegible] associates and her faculty for collecting data about the persons she meets, gave rise to the idea. A close student of American history and genealogy, Mrs. Clark has come upon some interesting facts about congressional families.

The data already collected shows that the blood of the old Puritan stock flows in the veins of the wives of many congressmen. Whether it be that the sturdy descendants of the New Englanders have survived under the hardships of pioneer days when other strains have perished is a question about which many interesting speculations might gather.

At first the congressional women treated the request for biographical material as a joke, but soon they saw that the information they gave, if made accessible for all the members of the Congressional club, would afford mighty interesting reading. Now that the women of the present congressional circle are so shortly to scatter, some of them never to return [illegible]

HEALTH AND LONG LIFE.

"All men think all men mortal but themselves," yet all men are constantly seeking the sources of health and means of prolonging their lives, and nothing interests the average man more than to read the statements of persons who have attained great ages, and their version of the means which enabled them to prolong their lives. We have many of these. Moltke, when asked in his ninetieth year how he had maintained his health and activity, answered: "By great moderation in all things, and by regular outdoor exercise." Crispi said that "regularity and abstinence are the secrets of long life." Sydney Cooper also believed in regularity. Legouve attributed his long life to regular exercise, says the Washington Herald. An American nonagenarian, Hon. Neal Dow, of Maine, laid stress on the careful avoidance of fretting or disturbance of the digestive organs, and of exposure to sudden or protracted cold, with insufficient protection against its influence. Cornaro's rule was extreme temperance in eating and moderation in drinking. He took everything that agreed with him and avoided everything which did not. Many others could be named, but the constitutions and organism of men are as varied as their faces, hence no general rule can be laid down. What is meat to one may be poison to another.

Hundreds of thousands of Russians are going to Siberia. But not after the old style, when they were personally conducted by military guards and distributed as convicts among the mines and prisons. Siberia has vast agricultural and other possibilities, and the government in this instance at least is wise enough to encourage the utilization of such resources. It is announced from Russia that the migration to Siberia average about half a million persons yearly. This movement is encouraged by the offer from the government of cheap railroad rates and an allotment of forty-one and a half acres of land to each adult who makes a home in that part of the empire.

The Pennsylvania state board of health reports that the expenditure of $3,000,000 in four years in the interest of the public health has resulted in saving $23,000,000 to the commonwealth. This is conservation of a most desirable quality. It goes toward maintaining those greatest resources of a state which lie in a people rich in physical and mental wellbeing. The Pennsylvania board has fought diphtheria effectively with antitoxin. It has reduced the death-rate from consumption, "the white plague," from 134 to 120 per thousand, and is about to do better by adding two new tuberculosis colonies to the one now in operation.

According to late reports Mammoth Cave, that old-time geological wonder, and years ago a close rival to Niagara Falls as a show place, is going out of fashion, and has of late years had but few visitors, says the Boston Evening Transcript. It is now difficult of acsess by a little dinky railroad and the accommodations afforded by the dilapidated hotel are by no means up to date. It is proposed to ask congress to adopt it as a national reservation, fix things up and make it more accessible and attractive. Perhaps one reason for its decadence is the discovery of other great caverns and natural curiosities fully as wonderful.

A Washington man has been fined for violating the child-labor law because he induced a number of fourteen-year-old boys to engage in a pie-eating contest. Would it not have been more appropriate if he had been punished for cruelty to children?

When a man's wife sticks hatpins into him, and tries to suffocate him as he sleeps, the New York courts have decided that he has a right to leave home. The ruling, however, was confirmatory merely, the man having decided first.

One man has been sent to jail for nine months for smuggling at New York. The fact that he was only a musician and not a millionaire makes the lesson less impressive where it is most needed.

A dog that carried in smuggled goods across the Mexican boundary has been spared to be shown in a dog show. If he had been taken to a New York dog show he would probably have brought a fabulous price from the ultra rich.

So the government is going to issue $75,000,000 worth of $1 bills to replace $20 and higher denominations. This ought to increase the chance of get- [illegible]

TRAP DIAZ TROOPS

TRAIN BEARING FEDERAL SOLDIERS IS SHOT TO PIECES.

BATTLE LASTS FIVE HOURS

Official Report Says Federals Had 21 Killed, 10 Missing and 42 Wounded—Commander of Expedition Is Hit—Rebel Loss Unknown.

Chihuahua, Mex.—Confirmation of the report that the troop train which left here December 17 was shot to pieces in the mountain trap known as Malpaso, a few miles east of Pedernales, was given Tuesday when 42 government soldiers were brought in from the field of battle.

The official report states that the federals lost 21 killed and that ten are missing and 42 wounded. One of the latter is Colonel Guzmon, who was in command of the expedition.

The train left in two sections, carrying three field pieces on a coal car and 500 soldiers. Pancho Villa, the bandit, who, while operating independently, still regards the government as his enemy, fired on the second section as it was passing through Andania canyon, but did no damage.

The mountains of Malpaso, however, swarmed with revolutionists. They halted the first and second sections. Colonel Guzmon disembarked his troops and for five hours defended himself from the desperate charge. He was in a trap, however. The enemy was on the heights, sheltered by bowlders and other proection north to the mountains and poured in a deadly fire.

He was unable to use his big guns effectively owing to the nature of the ground. Notwithstanding his precarious condition and the numbers of the insurrectos, he held his ground for five hours. He was shot through the leg, while the third officer in command was raked across the stomach.

Although General Navarro was at Pedernales, or hear there, he was unable to lend assistance.

PRESIDENT SEES NO DANGER

Taft, in Speech Allays War Scare, Declares Nation Need Have No Fear.

Washington.—President Taft, in an address before the American Society for the Judicial Settlement of International Disputes, Saturday gave assurances that the country need not fear the so-called war scare.

He said: "There is not the slightest reason for such a sensation because we are at peace with all the nations of the world, and are quite likely to remain so."

Women Voters to Assemble.

Tacoma, Wash.—The first national convention of women voters will be held here January 14, according to plans perfected. The convention was called by Governor Brady of Idaho. Delegates from other equal suffrage states—Utah, Wyoming, Colorado and Washington—representing about 270,000 women voters, will participate.

CHARLTON GAINS TWO POINTS

JUDGE ALLOWS ORDER TO AMEND COURT RECORDS.

Father of Wife Slayer Confident Order for Son's Extradition Will Be Set Aside.

Trenton, N. J.—Not until January 3 will Porter Charlton learn whether he will be sent back to Italy to be tried for wife murder.

When he appeared before United States Judge Rellstab, pale and haggard and showing the effects of the six months' confinement and the hemorrhages to which he is frequently subjected, his lawyer, R. Floyd Clarke, asked for an adjournment on the ground that he needed time for the collection of certain important evidence. This evidence will be used to have set aside Secretary of State Knox's ruling that the young man be extradited.

Judge Rellstab allowed an order amending the records in the case by striking out the proceeding before the Hoboken recorder, following Charlton's arrest at the steamship pier after his return from Europe. Counsel for Charlton also secured an order eliminating from the records the copy of the complaint presented before Judge Blair of the Hudson county courts. These are regarded as notable gains for the accused man, as they greatly simplify the case which his counsel has to conduct in his behalf.

Judge Charlton is confident that the ruling of Secretary Knox in favor of extradition will be set aside. He does not think his son in his present condition would survive the journey to Italy.

GUNBOAT MAY START REVOLT

Hornet, Former U. S. Ship, Clears From New Orleans on Mysterious Voyage.

New Orleans.—The former United States gunboat Hornet, reported to have been purchased by Honduras revolutionists, cleared from this port for Cape Gracias with a crew of twenty men, 200 tons of coal and provisions for thirty days. Included among the crew are several men who are said to have been connected with previous filibustering expeditions directed against Central American republics.

One of the rumors current was that the Hornet would be turned over to Mexican revolutionists. Captain Johnson, commanding the vessel, says that the Hornet will be used in the Central American trade.

LORIMER REPORT IN

FIGHT ON FLOOR IS CERTAIN

Beveridge And Frazier Do Not Sign Committee Finding Which Is Presented to Senate and May File Minority Reports Later.

Washington.—The report of its investigation of charges of bribery made in connection with the election of Senator William Lorimer of Illinois was submitted to the senate by the committee on privileges and elections through its chairman, Senator Burrows, Wednesday, just before that body adjourned for the holiday recess.

The conclusion reached by the committee follows:

That, in their opinion, the title of Mr. Lorimer to a seat in the senate has not been shown to be invalid by the use or employment of corrupt methods or practises.

Charges that four members of the Illinois legislature were bribed and that three other members paid bribes are not ignored by the committee. The report declares that those who confessed to receiving bribes should not be believed and that the votes of those who were charged with paying bribes should be counted.

In relation to the charges that there was a corruption fund used in the Illinois legislature and that it was disbursed by one Robert E. Wilson, the report says that there is no evidence that it was used for the benefit of Mr. Lorimer. The committee suggests that any investigation of the use of such a fund should be made by authorities of the state of Illinois.

The statement of views of Senator Frazier was made public later. In his statement Senator Frazier declares that the four confessed bribe-takers implicated three other members of the legislature who bribed them; that these three votes were also corrupt, which would make seven tainted votes. Eliminating these seven votes, Senator Frazier holds, would make the vote received by Senator Lorimer less than a majority.

The report, as presented, was not signed by members of the committee, although it did not appear that there was any minority. On the floor of the senate, however, Mr. Beveridge made the statement that he had not been able to concur with or dissent from the findings because of the voluminous character of the testimony. He said that he would digest the proceedings of the investigating committee during the holidays. He asked that a specific time be named for acting upon the report, but objection was made by Senator Gallinger.

282 DEAD IN MINE BLAST

English Shaft at Bolton Is Scene of Terrible Disaster—Only Eight Escape.

Bolton, England.—An explosion followed by fire in the Little Hulton colliery here Wednesday entombed 290 miners, who had gone below to begin the day's work.

The work of rescue was pushed amid discouraging conditions. The rescuers, wearing helmets, went into the pit and succeeded in extinguishing the flames in an area 150 feet in length, but encountered heavy falls of coal and slack loosened by the explosion. Only eight of the 290 entombed men have escaped and the others are believed dead. A total of ten bodies have been recovered.

BRITISH POLLING IS OVER

UNIONISTS' CALCULATIONS ARE ENTIRELY UPSET BY VOTERS.

Liberals Have Net Loss, But Labor and Irish Allies Show an Increase.

London.—The government coalition at the close of the polling in the general election have a net gain of one seat.

The elections have been the most remarkable in the history of British politics, and have upset entirely the calculations of the Unionists, who had seriously expected to gain not less than twenty seats. On the contrary, the Unionists have not only gained nothing but are likely in the end to suffer a net loss of one.

A brief period of quiescence is expected to follow the final announcement and after that the government leaders will endeavor to carry out their plans for curtailing the power of the lords and carrying into effect other important measures in the new parliament.

The final result is as follows:

Government Coalition.	Elected
Liberals	271
Labor members	43
Irish Nationalists	84
Total	398
Opposition.
Unionists	272
Ministerial majority	126

RAINEY IS AFTER ROOSEVELT

Asks Congress to Probe Colonel's Traveling Expenses While President.

Washington.—Representative Rainey of Illinois introduced a resolution in the house, which he declares he will press to a vote, asking for a special committee for the purpose of ascertain whether Col. Theodore Roosevelt paid for his transportation while he was president.

A Pennsylvania stockholder recently asked President McCrea of the railroad company whether President Roosevelt had paid his transportation charges on the road which were alleged to have amounted to more than $100,000, or whether this money had not been taken from the stockholders of the railroad by charging the expense up to the company. In a diplomatic reply President McCrea states that Colonel Roosevelt did not owe the railroad company anything for transportation, but he did not say whether the company had charged President Roosevelt and his friends anything for the special trains used by President Roosevelt on his tours of the country.

Mr. Rainey wants this point settled and he wants to know also what other roads provided transportation for President Roosevelt and the officials of the Roosevelt administration, whether they paid for the transportation and how and when they were paid.

Democrat Elevated by Republican President Takes Oath of Office—Harlan Does Honors.

Washington.—Associate Justice Edward Douglass White of the Supreme court of the United States became ninth chief justice of that august body when the oath of allegiance was administered by Associate Justice Harlan Monday.

The public ceremony of the installation was simple, the oath being taken in the seclusion of the robing room of the justices.

Chief Justice White was embarrassed when he moved to his seat at the center of the bench. Presiding Justice Harlan announced the presence of the new chief justice and extended the congratulations of the court. Clerk McKenney read the commission. Justice Harlan administered the judicial oath and moved aside to take his old position at the right hand of the chief justice, vacating the chair which he has filled since the death of Chief Justice Fuller. Chief Justice White sank into the chair with a smile for his wife and other relatives who were present.

ONE REDEEMING FEATURE

When Papa Hears It He Urges Only Son to Grab Girl Quick.

The only son had just announced to the family his engagement.

"What, that girl!" remarked his mother. "Why, she squints."

"She has absolutely no style," commented his sister.

"Red-headed, isn't she?" asked auntie.

"I'm afraid she's flighty," was grandma's opinion.

"She hasn't any money," said uncle.

"And she doesn't look strong," chimed in the first cousin.

"She's stuck up, in my opinion," asseverated the second cousin.

"She's extravagant," was the opinion given by the third cousin.

"Well, she's got one redeeming feature, at any rate," remarked the only son, thoughtfully.

"What's that?" chorused the charitable band.

"She hasn't a relative on earth."

Papa had not yet spoken, but now he did.

"Grab her, my boy, grab her," he said.

HIRAM CARPENTER'S WONDERFUL CURE OF PSORIASIS.

"I have been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. D.'s. psoriasis, and others leprosy, commencing on my scalp; and in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skilful doctors, it slowly but surely extended until a year ago this winter it covered my entire person in the form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any labor, and suffering intensely all the time. Every morning there would be nearly a dustpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half as large as the envelope containing this letter. In the latter part of winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of, without any relief. The 12th of June I started West, in hopes I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr. —— treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I earnestly prayed to die. Cracked through the skin all over my back, across my ribs, arms, hands, limbs; feet badly swollen; toe-nails came off; finger-nails dead and hard as a bone; hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. O my God! how I did suffer.

"My sister wouldn't give up; said, 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied to one hand and arm. Eureka! there was relief; stopped the terrible burning sensation from the word go. They immediately got Cuticura Resolvent, Ointment and Soap. I commenced by taking Cuticura Resolvent three time a day after meals; had a bath once a day, water about blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura Ointment morning and evening. Result: returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left; and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper. Hiram E. Carpenter, Henderson, N. Y."

The above remarkable testimonial was written January 19, 1880, and is republished because of the permanency of the cure. Under date of April 22, 1910, Mr. Carpenter wrote from his present home, 610 Walnut St. So., Lansing, Mich.: "I have never suffered a return of the psoriasis and although many years have passed I have not forgotten the terrible suffering I endured before using the Cuticura Remedies."

Wants a Long Engagement.

"Do you believe in long engagements?" he asked after she had consented to be his.

"Yes, dearest," she replied. "I have always thought it was such a mistake for two people to rush into matrimony before they learned to really know each other."

"Well, about how long would you wish the engagement to be?"

"Let me see. Would you think it was too long if we did not get married until a week from next Thursday?"

Her Mother's Economy

By CLARA INEZ DEACON

Eunice always dreaded the coming of spring because there was always the distressing thought that just when all the living world was putting on its bravest and best she must go forth as usual wearing that old black leghorn hat.

Eunice's mother had bought the hat which was the best of its kind to be had because it was always her rule to get the best or go without. In vain Eunice begged for cheaper things and the privilege of having them changed occasionally.

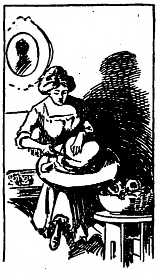
Mrs. Lys was English and obdurate. As she had been dressed she dressed her own daughter. The leghorn hat had been turned and twisted and coaxed into some semblance to prevailing modes until Eunice was ashamed to take it to Miss Adams, who was too conscientious to spoil it and thus make necessary the buying of new head-gear.

This season the styles were varied and bewilderingly beautiful. Day after day Eunice lingered before the enticing plate glass windows of Miss Adams' millinery parlors whence long ago the black leghorn had come to admire and yearn and choose with that sickening sense of futility which hurts to the very soul. She knew exactly the kind of hat she wanted—white horsehair with a froth of willow plume about the crown. Miss Adams had just such a hat and it was marked $20. Eunice had not seen the price, but Edith Benns had. In fact, Edith had tried on the wonderful hat.

"And, oh, it's the swellest thing, really, Eunice!" Edith said. "And I looked—well, of course, it's out of the question for me. My mother can't afford $20 hats, but your mother can. You ought to have it since you want it so badly. And anyway it's time you had a new hat. You must be deathly sick of that old leghorn."

"I am," admitted Eunce, faintly, swallowing at a sob. "But mother thinks it will do very well for a while yet. And, of course, it will." Eunice was loyal to her mother. "Only—only I do so want a new hat this spring."

"Well," said Edith conclusively, "all I can say is, if you don't have one you needn't expect Ward Royce to pay you much attention."



Desperation Had Lent Her Skill.

Eunice knew that. Her throat ached so miserably that she could not answer.

"I saw him with Belle White yesterday," Edith went on with the frank cruelty of youth and personal inexperience. "She was dressed to kill—everything new. You know that big black hat we both liked so much—one of the first Miss Adams showed? Well, she had on that hat. And she looked stunning."

Still Eunice did not answer. She went home helplessly unhappy to find her mother sitting in the cheerful company of an overflowing work-basket.

"I'm making over the sleeves of your shirtwaists, dear," she said. "I've found that by using a smaller pattern I can cut out all the worn places. The waists will wear for a good while yet. And I find," went on Mrs. Lys brightly, as if she were imparting the most pleasing information, "that I can turn your plaid skirt. It isn't faded a particle on the under side. That comes of buying the best material. Always remember that, dear. The plaid skirt will do very nicely to wear with your shirtwaists all summer."

Eunice's lips quivered. Ward would never look at her again. Men thought so much of a girl's being well dressed.

"I suppose," she said, making desperately one last appeal, "that if I am to wear that old skirt and all those old waists, I can have a new hat to go with them, can't I, mother?"

Mrs. Lys looked at her daughter in frank amazement. "Why, child!" she said. "Why, I expect that hat to do you for two seasons yet. It is a very good hat, indeed—much better than any I had when I was your age. I am surprised that you should be dissatisfied with it, Eunice."

Eunice was silent. But that night after she had gone to her room she sat a long time by the window, think-deeply, very hopelessly, she believed, in love. Suddenly there came the twang of a banjo and a sonorous voice singing:

> "Weep no more my lady,
> Weep no more today"—

"I won't," said Eunce to herself, softly, for her mother slept on the other side of the wall, "but before I sleep I'll have a session with that hat. I'll never again take it to Miss Adams' to have her city trimmer laugh at it."

Eunice had never trimmed a hat in her life. She felt a fierce pleasure now in stripping the faded pink roses from the black leghorn, and she wheedled the limp brim to assume stability. Then she applied some ribbon and her best belt buckle after a manner which she had observed in Miss Adams' window. She was amazed at her own achievement. Desperation had lent her skill. She tried it on before the glass. It was not unbecoming. Then she crept into bed.

She showed the hat to her mother next morning.

"It looks well," was Mrs. Lys' only comment.

"I'm sure," Eunice said, speaking of that new resolution which had come to her with her success, "I could learn to trim hats for other people. I should like to know how to earn money."

Mrs. Lys looked pained. "Why, my dear child, why should you wish to earn money?" she asked. "There is no need. You have enough of everything now."

Eunice was disappointed. She knew how her mother felt, but if only her mother had known how she felt!

That afternoon Edith Benns came running in. "Oh, Eunice, come with us!" she said. "We're going on the river—Hal and Kitty and I, and we want you. Do hurry. They're waiting now, down on the bank."

"Put on a hat, dear," said Mrs. Lys.

Eunice put on the leghorn. After all she felt a shy pride in the fact that she had trimmed it herself. And she wanted to hear what Edith would say. What Edith said was characteristic of her charmingly sarcastic self.

"If long association is endearing you must be awfully attached to that hat," she remarked.

As for Hal Kinch, Edith's irrepressible cousin, he had an appropriate conundrum: "What member of the vegetable kingdom does Eunice's hat resemble?" The answer, of course, was "The live-forever." He also warbled a song: "Shall good old leghorns be forgot——" to the tune of Auld Lang Syne. It was all very distressing. It did seem a pity that the delightful May afternoon must be spoiled for her because of that old hat.

"Look, Eunice!" cried Kitty. "Look, Ede! There's Royce and Elmer Brent out there in that canoe."

It was, indeed, Ward and Elmer, And when they saw the quartet in the larger boat they shouted greeting and paddled toward them. At that moment Eunice thought—she was never sure—that she felt something touch her hat as if a pin was being stealthily withdraw. But before she had time to lift her hand to her head a smart little breeze came ruffling over the water and whisked her hat from her head. She gave a little cry as she saw it go, dipping and skimming on the current in the direction of the canoe.

It was Ward Royce who rescued that hat finally at the risk of a good wetting. He handed it to Eunice dripping, a hopelessly sodden thing.

Hal was weeping elaborately, with one eye on Eunice, whose face was scarlet. She felt joy and shame and relief all at once. The hat was a wreck. Surely she could never wear it again.

Ward Royce detached Eunice from the others of the group and walked home with her that afternoon. He carried the hat and pieced out Eunice's explanation of the catastrophe to her slightly surprised mother.

"You couldn't have pinned it securely," Mrs. Lys said. "Well, you may go and get another hat, dear. You shall choose for yourself this time. You are quite old enough. Only get something handsome and wearable and remember I do not wish to pay more than $15."

Eunice bought the white horsehair hat with the frothy willow plume. And then because it was such a handsome hat that it put all Eunice's other belongings quite to shame Mrs. Lys decided that she must have a dainty lingerie frock to go with it.

So it came about that Eunice was as charmingly clad that summer as even she could wish to be. And because she looked so sweet and was so sweet Ward Royce paid her that kind of extravagant attention which only ends in the one perfect way, though he maintained with the absolute conviction of the man in love that he had learned to adore her not under the willow plume, but under the old black leghorn.

One From the Cashier.

The harmless customer leaned across the cigar counter and smiled engagingly at the new cashier. As he handed across the amount his dinner check called for he ventured a bit of aimless converse, for he was of that sort.

"Funny," said he, "how easy it is to spend money."

"Well," snapped the cashier as she fed his fare to the register, "if money was intended for you to hold on to the mint would be turning out coins with handles on 'em."

Had Money in Lumps.

Charles H. Rosenberg of Bavaria had lumps on his shoulders, elbows, and hips when he arrived here from Hamburg on the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria. In fact, there was a series of smaller lumps along his spine, much like a mountain range, as it is presented on a bas-relief map.

The lumps were about the size of good Oregon apples, and as Rosenberg passed before the immigration doctor for observation, the doctor said softly to himself, "See that lump." Then he asked Mr. Rosenberg to step aside.

"You seem like a healthy man," said the doctor, "but I cannot pass you until I know the origin of those lumps on your body." "Ah, it is not a sickness," laughed the man from Bavaria. "Those swellings is money."

Taking off his coat he broke open a sample lump and showed that it contained $500 in American bank notes. He informed the doctor that he had $11,000 in all, with which he was going to purchase an apple orchard in Oregon.

He was admitted to the country.—New York Tribune.

Why He Laughed.

On the morning following his arrival she told Tillie, the little colored maid, to take a pitcher of fresh water to Mr. Firman's room, and to say that Miss Mattie sent him her compliments, and that if he wanted a bath, the bathroom was at his service.

When Tillie returned she said:

"I tol' him, Miss Mattie, en' he laughed fit to bus' hisself."

"Why did he laugh, Tillie?"

"I dunno."

"What did you tell him?"

"Jus' what you tol' me to."

"Tillie, tell me exactly what you said."

Where He Was Queer.

The negro, on occasions, displays a fine discrimination in the choice of words.

"Who's the best white-washer in town?" inquired the new resident.

"Ale Hall am a bo'nd a'tist with a whitewash brush, sah," answered the colored patriarch eloquently.

"Well, tell him to come and whitewash my chicken house tomorrow."

Uncle Jacob shook his head dubiously.

"Why, didn't you say he was a good whitewasher?"

"Yes, sah, a powe'ful good whitewasher, sah; but mighty queer about a chicken house, sah, mighty queer!"—Mack's National Monthly.

"Gosh! But the colored race is a-comin' to the front fast!" whispered innocent Uncle Hiram, at the vaudeville show, as the black-face comedian was boisterously applauded.

"Yes, indeed," smiled the city man; "anyone can see that that fellow is a self-made negro."

Lo, the Rich Indian.

The per capita wealth of the Indian is approximately $2,130, that for other Americans is only a little more than $1,300. The lands owned by the Indians are rich in oil, timber and other natural resources of all kinds. Some of the best timber land in the United States is owned by Indians.

The value of their agricultural lands runs up in the millions. The ranges which they possess support about 500,000 sheep and cattle, owned by lessees, bringing in a revenue of more than $272,000 to the various tribes besides providing feed for more than 1,500,000 head of horses, cattle, sheep and goats belonging to the Indians themselves. No Slang for Her.

"Slip me a brace of cackles!" ordered the chesty-looking man with a bored air, as he perched on the first stool in the lunchroom.

The League of Politeness.

The League of Politeness has been formed in Berlin. It aims at inculcating better manners among the people of Berlin. It was founded upon the initiative of Fraulein Cecelie Meyer, who was inspired by an existing organization in Rome. In deference to the parent organization the Berlin league has chosen the Italian motto, "Pro gentilezza." This will be emblazoned upon an attractive little medal worn where Germans are accustomed to wear the insignia of orders. The idea is that a glaance at the "talisman" will annihilate any inclination to indulge in bad temper or discourteous language. "Any polite person" is eligible for membership.

The "Country Churchyard."

Those who recall Gray's "Elegy in a Country Churchyard" will remember that the peaceful spot where "the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep" is identified with St. Giles', Stoke Poges, Buckinghamshire. In the prosaic pages of a recent issue of the Gazette there appears an order in council providing that ordinary interments are henceforth forbidden in the churchyard.

How She Learned.

The mother of a family of three small children was discussing their comparative precocity with a friend. "John was very slow at everything," she said, referring to her oldest. "Tom was a little better, and Edith, the baby, is the smartest of all. She picks up everything quick as can be."

Master John, who had been listening, now contributed his share of the conversation.

"Humph!" he exclaimed. "I know why her learns so quick. It's 'cause her has us and we didn't have us."

Economy.

The late former Governor Allen D. Candler of Georgia was famous in the south for his quaint humor.

"Governor Candler," said a Gainesville man, "once abandoned cigars for a pipe at the beginning of the year. He stuck to his resolve till the year's end. Then he was heard to say:

"'By actual calculation, I have saved by smoking a pipe instead of cigars this year $208. But where is it?'"

Moslem Traditions.

Ramadan is the month exalted by Moslems above all others. In that month the Koran—according to Moslem tradition—was brought down by Gabriel from heaven and delivered to men in small sections. In that month, Mohammed was accustomed to retire from Mecca to the cave of Hira, for prayer and meditation. In that month Abraham, Moses and other prophets received their divine revelations. In that month the "doors of heaven are always open, the passages to hell are shut, and the devils are chained." So run the traditions.—The Christian Herald.

A Medical Compromise.

"You had two doctors in consultation last night, didn't you?"

Hard on the Mare.

Twice, as the bus slowly wended its way up the steep Cumberland Gap, the door at the rear opened and slammed. At first those inside paid little heed; but the third time demanded to know why they should be disturbed in this fashion.

"Whist," cautioned the driver, doan't spake so loud; she'll overhear us."

"Who?"

Exaggeration.

On her arrival in New York Mme. Sara Bernhardt, replying to a compliment on her youthful appearance, said: "The secret of my youth? It is the good God—and then, you know, I work all the time. But I am a great-grandmother," she continued, thoughtfully, "so how can these many compliments be true? I am afraid my friends are exaggerating."

Mme. Bernhardt's laugh, spontaneous as a girl's, prompted a chorus of "No, no!"

"Yes," said the actress, "unconscious exaggeration, like the French nurse on the boulevard. Our boulevards are much more crowded than your streets, you know, and, although we have numerous accidents, things aren't quite as bad as the nurse suggested.

"Her little charge, a boy of six, begged her to stop a while in a crowd, surrounding an automobile accident. 'Please wait,' the little boy said, 'Want to see the man who was run over.' 'No; hurry,' his nurse answered. 'There will be plenty more to see further on.'"

A Retraction.

"You shouldn't have called that man a pig," said the conciliatory man.

"That's right," replied the vindictive person. "There is no sense in implying that he's worth 40 cents a pound to anybody."

Blissful Ignorance.

"Were you nervous when you proposed to your wife?" asked the sentimental person.

"No," replied Mr. Meekton; "but if I could have foreseen the next ten years I would have been."

Economy in Art.

"Of course," said Mr. Sirius Barker, "I want my daughter to have some sort of an artistic education. I think I'll have her study singing."

"Why not art or literature?"

"Art spoils canvas and paint and literature wastes reams of paper. Singing merely produces a temporary disturbance of the atmosphere.

Home Thought.

"It must have been frightful," said Mrs. Bossim to her husband, who was in the earthquake. "Tell me what was your first thought when you awakened in your room at the hotel and heard the alarm."

"My first thought was of you," answered Mr. Bossim.

"How noble!"

"Yes. First thing I knew, a vase off the mantel caught me on the ear; then a chair whirled in my direction, and when I jumped to the middle of the room four or five books and a framed picture struck me all at once."

Even after saying that, he affected to wonder what made her so angry for the remainder of the evening.—Mack's National Monthly.

New Process of Staining Glass.

The art of coloring glass has been lost and refound, jealously guarded and maliciously stolen so many times in the history of civilization that it seems almost impossible to say anything new on glass staining. Yet a process has beed discovered for making the stained glass used in windows which is a departure from anything known at the present time. What the Venetians and the Phoenicians knew of it we cannot tell.

The glass first receives its design in mineral colors and the whole is then fired in a heat so intense that the coloring matter and the glass are indissolubly fused. The most attractive feature of this method is that the surface acquires a peculiar pebbled character in the heat, so that when the glass is in place the lights are delightfully soft and mellow.

In making a large window in many shades each panel is separately moulded and bent and the sections are assembled in a metal frame.

Our Voices.

I think our conversational soprano, as sometimes overheard in the cars, arising from a group of young persons who have taken the train at one of our great industrial centers, for instance, young persons of the female sex, we will say, who have bustled in full dressed, engaged in loud, strident speech, and who, after free discussion, have fixed on two or more double seats, which having secured, they proceed to eat apples and hand round daguerreotypes—I say, I think the conversational soprano, heard under these circumstances, would not be among the allurements the old enemy would put in requisition were he getting up a new temptation of St. Anthony.

There are sweet voices among us, we all know, and voices not musical, it may be, to those who hear them for the first time, yet sweeter to us than any we shall hear until we listen to some warbling angel in the overture to that eternity of blissful harmonies we hope to enjoy. But why should I tell lies? If my friends love me, it is because I try to tell the truth. I never heard but two voices in my life that frightened me by their sweetness.—Holmes.

What About Brain Food?

This Question Came Up in the Recent Trial for Libel.

A "Weekly" printed some criticisms of the claims made for our foods. It evidently did not fancy our reply printed in various newspapers, and brought suit for libel. At the trial some interesting facts came out.

Some of the chemical and medical experts differed widely.

The following facts, however, were quite clearly established:

Analysis of brain by an unquestionable authority, Geoghegan, shows of Mineral Salts, Phosphoric Acid and Potash combined (Phosphate of Potash), 2.91 per cent of the total, 5.33 of all Mineral Salts.

This is over one-half.

Beaunis, another authority, shows "Phosphoric Acid combined" and Potash 73.44 per cent from a total of 101.07.

Considerable more than one-half of Phosphate of Potash.

Analysis of Grape-Nuts shows: Potassium and Phosphorus, (which join and make Phosphate of Potash), is considerable more than one-half of all the mineral salts in the food.

Dr. Geo. W. Carey, an authority on the constituent elements of the body, says: "The gray matter of the brain is controlled entirely by the inorganic cell-salt, Potassium Phosphate (Phosphate of Potash). This salt unites with albumen and by the addition of oxygen creates nerve fluid or the gray matter of the brain. Of course, there is a trace of other salts and other organic matter in nerve fluid, but Potassium Phosphate is the chief factor, and has the power within itself to attract, by its own law of affinity, all things needed to manufacture the elixir of life."

Further on he says: "The beginning and end of the matter is to supply the lacking principle, and in molecular form, exactly as nature furnishes it in vegetables, fruits and grain. To supply deficiencies—this is the only law of cure."

The natural conclusion is that if Phosphate of Potash is the needed mineral element in brain and you use food which does not contain it, you have brain fag because its daily loss is not supplied.

On the contrary, if you eat food known to be rich in this element, you place before the life forces that which nature demands for brain-building.

In the trial a sneer was uttered because Mr. Post announced that he had made years of research in this country and some clinics of Europe, regarding the effect of the mind on digestion of food.

But we must be patient with those who sneer at facts they know nothing about.

Mind does not work well on a brain that is broken down by lack of nourishment.

A peaceful and evenly poised mind is necessary to good digestion.

Worry, anxiety, fear, hate, &c., &c., directly interfere with or stop the flow of Ptyalin, the digestive juice of the mouth, and also interfere with the flow of the digestive juices of stomach and pancreas.

Therefore, the mental state of the individual has much to do (more than suspected) with

This trial has demonstrated:

That Brain is made of Phosphate of Potash as the principal Mineral Salt, added to albumen and water.

That Grape-Nuts contains that element as more than one-half of all its mineral salts.

A healthy brain is important, if one would "do things" in this world.

A man who sneers at "Mind" sneers at the best and least understood part of himself. That part which some folks believe links us to the Infinite.

Mind asks for a healthy brain upon which to act, and Nature has defined a way to make a healthy brain and renew it day by day as it is used up from work of the previous day.

Nature's way to rebuild is by the use of food which supplies the things required.

NO MORE EXTENSION.

The petition that is being circulated to get further time for the homesteaders to make payment, and final proof on their lands will no doubt, and should be promptly turned down by our representatives in congress.

It is not now a question between the government and the homesteaders, but it is now one farmer and tax payer against the other There is now over one half of the land in the Eleven Towns that has been proved up, and a large part of it is being farmed by farmers that was compelled to prove up to get money to continue their improvements.

There are four organized school districts in this (Highlanding township), which all have good school houses and are maintaining schools from five to eight months every school year. The poorer class of homesteaders that have proved up have paid the most of the taxes to keep up the schools while them that did not prove have had their full share of the bennifit, and now it is time for them to prove up on their homesteads and pay their just share of taxes. No more extension! Get into the country you live in, and pay your share of the taxes to help your neighbors build roads and keep up schools.

The Eleven Towns seems to be of the opinion that we have forgotten that Pennington county has been established. Let us see how it comes out in court first, Mr. Lattimore, as we went to the expense of making a change in our business once for Columbia county, Minn., and will now sell you a Notary seal on that county at a big discount, if you can find the county.

WOOD WANTED.

Seald bids will be received by the board of directors of school district No, 87, for ten cords of green poplar wood, to be deliverd at the Highlanding school house by March 15th,. All bids should be handed in on or before Jan. 7th, at which time the bids will be opend and contract let.

Underground Hotels.

An extraordinary hotel is that in the sewers of Paris, immediately below the Church of St. Madeleine. It was built and is conducted solely for the benefit of the sewer workers. Nearly a hundred meals are provided every day, and for the sum of $2.40 a man can be comfortably housed and fed for a week in this gigantic drainpipe.

Very similar is the hotel which caters for visitors to the coal mine of St. Pierre at Mons. It is to be found at the bottom of the mine, 600 feet below the earth, and is carved out of solid coal. The electric light on the glittering black walls, which have been left unpapered, is extremely effective. Large reception and tea rooms splendidly fitted up are provided, and the hotel even boasts the luxury of a swimming bath.

Mark Twain as "Attraction."

A girl who was a stranger to Mark Twain once found her way into his Bermuda home with the hope of getting a sight of the author. She came suddenly in contact with him and frankly explained her errand.

"Have you seen the crystal caves," he asked, "or the aquarium?"

"No; I came to see you first," she answered.

"Well, you shouldn't have seen me first," he answered. "I am in opposition to the crystal and the aquarium. But they're not shucks to me. I'm lots better. I give them their money's worth. But you should see them. Then you'll appreciate me."

A FAMOUS PICTURE

Rosa Bonheur's Stirring Masterpiece, "The Horse Fair."

A PRIZE THAT FRANCE LOST.

The Artist's Native Land Permitted the Great Canvas to Find a Home In This Country—The Story of the Painting and Its Replicas.

One of the chief glories of the Metropolitan museum in New York is Rosa Bonheur's stirring masterpiece, "The Horse Fair," a picture which for its irresistible movement and living portraiture of man's most useful friend holds a unique position in the annals of art and the affections of lovers of paintings.

Few, however, are acquainted with the intimate history of that notable canvas, and fewer still are aware that there are no less than five horse fair pictures in existence. The one in New York is the original and, it will be remembered, was first the property of A. T. Stewart and then purchased for the Metropolitan by Cornelius Vanderbilt for 250,000 francs.

It was painted in Paris, the models used being the horses of the Paris Omnibus company and a few animals studied at the horse market of the French capital. It was first exhibited at the salon of 1853, but went back to the artist unsold.

A part of the further history of the famous painting is recorded by Ernest Gambart in his manuscript memoirs, which have been freely drawn upon for the "Reminiscences of Rosa Bonheur."

"After the closing of the 1853 Paris salon 'The Horse Fair' was intrusted to the Society of Artists of Ghent for exhibition in that town, where it had a great success, but whence it also came back unsold. In the spring of 1854 I expressed to Mlle. Bonheur the desire to buy it from her. At that time it was in Bordeaux, her native town.

"Her preference was that the municipality should purchase it for the city museum, and a price of 12,000 francs had been mentioned at which the town authorities might acquire it. But she said to me that if the canvas came back to her again she would let me have it. However, she could not let it go to England for less than 40,000 francs.

"I unhesitatingly accepted the bargain, and it was agreed that the picture should be mine unless sold to Bordeaux. As the picture was back in her studio again in the following year, I told Mlle. Bonheur that I wished to take it at once in order to have it in my 1855 exhibition and that I should like to have it engraved by Thomas Landseer, the celebrated engraver and brother to the painter.

"She was delighted at the idea of the picture being engraved and said to me: 'I have asked you 40,000 francs for my picture, although in France I cannot get 12,000, and I am pleased at your consenting to my terms. On the other hand, I don't mean to take undue advantage of your liberality. How can we arrange matters? Let us see. Well, the picture is very large, and it will be difficult to find a place for it in an engraver's studio. Besides, you want to exhibit it. Wouldn't it be better for me to paint you a smaller copy?'"

That suggestion she carried out and explains how the second canvas came into existence. That smaller copy was the one from which Landseer's well known steel engraving was made and is the picture which is in the British National gallery.

When she heard that it had become the property of the British nation Mlle. Bonheur decided to make a third copy, thinking the second was not good enough for the London collection; hence "The Horse Fair" No. 3. But the National gallery authorities were not able to accept the substitute, as the painting which it was designed to replace had been given to them as trustees.

Besides these three Mlle. Bonheur executed a water color replica and a drawing based on a large photograph. Of all these, however, the picture in the Metropolitan is by far the finest work, which is only as it should be in view of the fact that the artist always found her best public in America.

This was recalled to her detriment when the rosette of the Legion of Honor was requested in her behalf. "She has ceased exhibiting at the salon," objected the president, "and sells in America everything she paints." The complete answer to that was that the French government had had the opportunity to buy "The Horse Fair," but had neglected it.—Argonaut.

Japan's Giant Wrestlers.

Japanese wrestlers are not to be confused with Japanese exponents of jiu jitsu. The wrestlers belong to the older school, in which weight is a paramount quality. It is a remarkable thing that a race which is on the average four or five inches under the European standard in point of height should have produced a special cult of wrestlers who are giants in stature and strength. The leading wrestlers of Tokyo or Osaka or Hiogo are all men at least six feet in height and weighing perhaps 300 pounds. They are a race apart. Wrestling is an occupation which has been handed down from father to son for many generations. And the explanation of their prowess is that they have always been great eaters, while the rest of Japan [illegible]

Traveling Inspector (the same evening to his host, the squire of the village)—Most amusing thing happened today. I was questioning the class and asked a boy, "Who wrote 'Hamlet?'" and he answered tearfully, "P-p-please, sir, it wasn't me."

Squire (after loud and prolonged laughter)—Ha, ha! That's good, and I suppose the little devil had done it all the time.—London Answers.

Knocked Into a Cocked Hat.

The expression "knocked into a cocked hat" is familiar to every one, but perhaps its origin is not so generally known. Cocked hat was a variety of the game of bowls in which only three pins were used, set up at the angles of a triangle. When in bowling tenpins all were knocked down except the three at the corners the set was said to be "knocked into a cocked hat," whence the popular expression for depriving anything of its main body, character or purpose.

Napoleon and Waterloo.

There is nothing in the result of the Waterloo campaign to show any decline in Napoleon's powers of mind. The plan of the campaign as laid down by the emperor was a most brilliant one, and had it not rained on the night of the 17th of June Napoleon would in all likelihood have kept his throne. Had it not rained and made the land miry he would have had his artillery in position four hours before he actually did, and Wellington would have been disposed of long before Blucher's arrival. Even as it was, the Iron Duke was pretty well used up when the Prussian came up on his left. Napoleon's genius never shone more brilliantly than it did in his last campaign. He was defeated by the elements and by the unaccountable stupidity of some of his lieutenants.—New York American.

Assyrian Seals.

The ancient Assyrians nearly 6,000 years ago put in moist clay their seals, engraved in intaglio upon precious stones, on chests and doors, in order to prevent their being opened. There were no locks or keys in those days. If they wished to send a private letter they would often seal it with a hippogriff, which fabulous winged horse was regarded as the emblem of secrecy. Centuries later the Greeks and Romans adopted similar devices for the same purpose.

He Whistled.

Old Lady (to grocer's boy)—Don't you know that it is very rude to whistle when dealing with a lady?

Boy—That's what the guv'nor told me to do, mum.

"Told you to whistle?"

"Yes'm. He said if we ever sold you anything we'd have to whistle for the money."

Telling Eggs.

The problem of telling eggs is not an easy one by any means. Very few of us know how to do it properly. On the other hand, there are those who think they should not be told at all, but that is old fashioned nonsense, inspired entirely by false modesty. It is safe to say that eggs should be told at as early an age as possible consistent with their temperament. If allowed to go too long there is grave danger that the egg will become bad, and when an egg becomes bad it is hopeless. The world is full of bad eggs which might have been saved if they had been told in time.—Lippincott's.

Barrie and Kipling.

Mr. Barrie was one day at Waterloo station in a hurry to catch a train. He was hastening from the bookstall laden with papers, "a good many six penny ones among them," he dolefully related, when, in rushing around a corner, he fell into the arms of Rudyard Kipling, equally in a tearing hurry. They turned on each other with scowling faces, then smiled in recognition and asked each other whither he went. Then Kipling, exclaiming, "Lucky beggar, you've got papers!" seized the bundle from Barrie, flung him some money and made off. "But you did not stoop to pick up his dirty halfpence, did you?" queried one of Mr. Barrie's hearers and edly. "Didn't I, though?" returned Barrie [illegible]

Aaron Burr's Grave.

Aaron Burr died at Port Richmond, Staten Island, Sept. 14, 1836. His remains were conveyed to Princeton, N. J., where, according to his request, he was interred at the feet of his father and grandfather. Both his father and grandfather were presidents of Princeton college.

Concerning the tombstone which marks his burial place, we quote from the history of his life by Parton: "Some efforts were made and some money subscribed soon after his death to procure a suitable monument, but the project failed. For nearly two years the spot where he lay was unmarked when one morning it was discovered that a small, very substantial and not inexpensive monument of granite and marble had been placed during the night over his remains. No one in the town saw the monument erected or knew anything whatever respecting it.' There was no stonecutter in the vicinity capable of executing the work. The stone bears the inscription: 'Aaron Burr. Born February 6, 1756. Died, September 14 1836.'"—Philadelphia Press.

The Presidential Salute.

One explanation of the reason for adopting twenty-one guns as the presidential salute is that there might be maintained a uniformity in national salutes. Great Britain having in the distant past adopted twenty-one as the number for the royal salute. Of the many surmises as to why the number twenty-one was settled upon we mention two—first, that twenty-one was the number of years fixed by English law as the age of majority; second, that seven was the original salute and three times seven would signify one seven for each of the divisions, England and Wales, Scotland and Ireland. It is asserted that the United States adopted this salute to signify to the mother country that her child had reached his majority and was prepared in law to inherit the land and to this end fired the "gun of 1776," the figures of which year, 1+7+7+6, equal 21.—Philadelphia Press.

The Mississippi of Streets.

A street is like a river, with its human current carrying all manner of drift between its banks of residences or shops on either side. And if this simile be appropriate then New York's Broadway is the Mississippi of streets. Probably no other avenue in the world presents so many contrasts in the flotsam and jetsam it carries from Harlem to the Battery. Every type of humanity—uprooted saplings from farms and orchards, proud sailed craft in silks and satins—may be described in the surging mass. Banker and bootblack, the swaggering swell and the draggled derelict, walk shoulder to shoulder—rush, rather, for Broadway is a maelstrom, the embodiment of New York's bustle and hurry, the place where nothing can stand still. Richard Harding Davis once said that everybody "seems to be trying to reach the bank to have a check cashed before 3 o'clock."—George Seibel in Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

Grew Too Tall.

"I recall a case of genuine boneheadedness, mixed with enthusiasm, that cost a great many people a bunch of money," said an oil operator. "It was during the time when a big strike meant a drop in the price of oil. The foreman of a drill crew had been instructed by the employers to use a code in the event of oil being found. If it was a big flow he was to wire, 'Pine trees grow tall.' If, on the other hand, the flow was small, 'Pine trees grow small,' was to be the code message. The drill struck a gusher, and the following message was sent by the ivory topped individual: 'Pine trees grow tall as Hell, and she is flowing all over the derrick!' LARGE FARM VALUES

MINNESOTA IN LAST DECADE ADDS MANY MILLIONS TO AGRICULTURAL WEALTH.

CENSUS SHOWS ENORMOUS GAIN

Washington.—In the census bureau statement it is shown that the principal rates of increase in Minnesota in 1910, against 1900, are: In the total value of farm buildings alone, 120 per cent; in the total value of farm land and buildings 88 per cent; in the total value of farm land alone, 82 per cent; in the average value an acre of farm land and buildings 77 per cent; in the average value an acre of farm land alone, 76 per cent; in the total value of farm implements and machinery, 74 per cent; in the total expenditures for labor, 33 per cent; in the number of farms operated by the "all tenants" class, 22 per cent; in the total acreage 5 per cent; in the total number of farms operated by managers, 10 per cent; in the improved acreage, 6 per cent; in the average acres per farm, 4 per cent; and in the total numbers of farms 0.7 per cent.

The principal rates of decrease during the decade occurred in the total expenditures for fertilizers, 75 per cent, in the total number of farms operated by colored farmers, 25 per cent; and in the toal numbers of farms operated by the "all owners" class, 4 per cent.

Extraordinary Increases.

Comparisons between the 1910 and 1900 totals for Minnesota show many changes. The most noteworthy of these is the increase in the value of farm buildings. These buildings in 1900 had a reported value of $110,220,000, while the census report in 1910 gives them a value of $242,621,000—a gain of $132,401,000, or 120 per cent. A great increase was chronicled by all the counties in the state. In every section a few counties are found with the percentage of increase slightly above that of the state as a whole, and others are met with having a percentage below that average. This percentage of building increase in Minnesota can with propriety be compared with that for Iowa, which was 88.8 per cent. The farm buildings of Minnesota in 1910 had a value only slightly in excess of those in Iowa in 1900, when the farm buildings in that state had a value of $240,803,000.

The value of land alone in Minnesota farms increased in ten years from $559,002,000 to $1,016,889,000; and that of land and buildings increased from $669,522,000 to $1,259,510,000. The value of the land increased 82 per cent, and the land and buildings, 88 per cent. In 1900 the buildings on Minnesota farms constituted 16.5 per cent of the value of the farms, while in 1910 they constituted 19.3 per cent. These percentages can be compared with those of Iowa farms, which were for the two years 16.1 and 14 respectively. The smaller percentage in 1910 for Iowa than for 1900 calls attention to the fact that while in Minnesota the value of farm buildings increased faster than that of farm lands, the opposite was the case in Iowa, where the percentage of increase in land value was 122.7 and that of buildings only 88.8. In the ten years the average value of farm land in Minnesota increased from $21 to $37 per acre, and that of farms, including buildings, from $26 to $46.

The principal farm expenses concerning which the census collected data in 1900 and in 1910 were those for fertilizer and labor. Minnesota farms have never used much artificial fertilizer, and are now expending less money for it than ten years ago, the payments for this class of purchases declining in ten years from $251,000 to $63,000—a decline of 75 per cent.

The expense for labor increased in ten years from $16,658,000 to $22,186,000—an increase of 33 per cent. As there has been no great change in the number of farms or acres of farm land in the intervening period, this percentage measures the increase in the average daily, monthly, or yearly compensation paid for farm labor in the state at the present time as compared with ten years ago.

Farms and Farm Land.

In ten years the number of farms in Minnesota changed only 0.7 per cent, the increase being from 154,659 to 155,759. The acres in farms increased, however, from 26,248,000 to 27,623,000—a gain of 5 per cent. The greater increase in acres than in farms was due to the gradual consolidation of farm holdings, and thus a small increase in the average size of farms. That size was 170 acres in 1900 and 177 in 1910. In nearly all the older counties of the state there was a decrease in the number of farms, while in the newer sections there was an increase.

Of the noteworthy increases, mention may be made of Aitkin county, in which the number of farms increased from 768 to 1,345, and farm acreage increased from 112,712 to 175,434. Carleton county farms increased from 605 to 1,189, and farm acreage from 67,092 to 119,142. Cook county farms increased from 36 to 146, and farm acreage from 5,523 to 23,769. Of the counties showing decrease in the number of farms, mention is made of Blue Earth, whose farms decreased from 3,186 to 2,937. The decrease was accompanied by an increase in the size of farms from 141 to 153 acres.

Fillmore farms decreased in number from 3,477 to 3,210; and the average size of farms increased from 150 to 162 acres. Houston county had 2,130 farms in 1900 and only 1,910 ten years later. This decrease in the number of farms gave rise to an increase in the average size of farms from 156 to 171 acres.

The greater part of Minnesota farms were operated in 1910, as in 1900, by white farmers. The number of such farmers increased from 154,287 to 155,497. There were only a small number of farms in either year cultivated by other than white farmers, and the number of such farmers decreased in ten years from 372 to 280. The greater number of these farmers other than white in Minnesota were Indians. The number of Indian farmers decreased in ten years from 341 to 251; while the number of farms operated by negroes or those of negro descent changed from 31 in 1900 to 29 in 1910.

A glance at the table will disclose the changes that ten years have chronicled in the number of farms of the various sizes. There was a slight increase in the number of farms containing less than twenty acres; but these farms constituted but an insignificant part of the farms of the state. Of the smaller and medium size farms included in the three classes next largest in area (farms containing from 20 to 49 acres, those containing from 50 to 99 acres, and those with from 100 to 174 acres), there was a decrease in the number of each size.

There was marked increase in the number of the two classes of farms which contain from 175 to 499 acres and those containing from 500 to 999 acres. There was an increase of over 10 per cent in the number of both of these classes of farms, and a decrease in the number of large farms—those containing more than 1,000 acres. This decrease was from 365 in 1900 to 299 in 1910.

Mortgage Debt.

Of the 121,802 farms operated by their owners in 1910, 65,744, or 54 per cent, were owned free from mortgage debt, and 56,058, or 46 per cent, were owned subject to such debt. No corresponding data relating to the subject were collected at any preceding census of agriculture. These figures can, however, be compared with those of the twelfth census relating to mortgaged farm homes. The number of farm homes owned free from mortgage debt in 1900 was 66,922, and the number subject to mortgage was 54,338. The former constituted 55.2 and the latter 44.8 per cent of the owned farm homes of the state, from which the data relating to mortgage debt was secured. As these figures are probably a fair index of the situation ten years ago, they give rise to the conclusion that ten years have seen but slight changes in the number of Minnesota farms that are mortgaged; but that what change has taken place is to increase slightly the relative number of those with mortgage debt.

LIABILITY LAW IS DRAFTED

MINNESOTA COMMISSION MAKES PUBLIC ITS REPORT.

Rights of Workingmen to Be Protected in Cases of Personal Injury.

St. Paul. — With a few minor changes made at a final conference attended by George M. Gillette, H. V. Mercer and W. E. McEwen, the employers' liability and workingmen's compensation bill as drafted by these three, constituting the Minnesota commission, is practically ready for presentation to the legislature.

The measure is put in the form of a code and if passed at the coming session will supersede all employers' liability laws now in force in Minnesota. Several months have been spent in the drafting of the measure. H. V. Mercer is chairman of the drafting commission and has had several years' experience and investigation into the subject.

Some of the features of the bill as drafted by the commission are as follows:

Every employment from which injuries arise to be declared a dangerous employment.

Every employer of men in such dangerous employment to be subject to payment for injury arising therefrom according to conditions in the bill.

As to Hospital Expense.

Hospital expenses, specified in the bill, to be borne by the employer for a stated time after the injury to the employe.

Definition given of dependents on an injured employe and the payments to be made to such dependents.

Partial diability, total disability and all other questions liable to arise, are defined.

Contributory negligence, or the fault of the employe, changed to that of risk of an industry.

Employe's earning power to be used as a basis for the payment of a compensation.

One of the unusual features of the measure is the preamble. It is seldom that either state or federal statutes include this in any of the measures adopted by the legislature. The object of the preamble is to indicate to the courts the necessity for the object of the law and the evil intended to be remedied so that courts can determine the legislative motive of the law.

The present measure is the outcome of the conference of representatives of 10 states that met in Chicago last month. H. V. Mercer was the chairman at that meeting. The bill in its entirety carries the Minnesota idea of employers' liability, and is known to industrial workmen and their employers throughout the United States.

Its purpose is to do away with expense of law suits, the company claim agent and the personal injury "shyster" lawyer. Injured workmen will not be compelled to compete with the large array of legal talent employed by big firms, according to the framers of the measure. The sum to be received will practically be fixed by law before the injury occurs.

It has not yet been decided who will take the bill and bring it before the legislature. Several members have been considered and it is expected that final choice will be made early next week.

A board of arbitration will be provided for in the proposed code and will consist of three members in every county of the state. These members will be apppointed by the district court and will hold their offices so long as the court approves.

P. J. GIBBONS ON TRIAL.

Man Accused of Slaying His Wife and a Priest.

Hastings. — The trial of P. J. Gibbons, indicted for the killing of his wife, Mrs. Nancy Gibbons, and Rev E. J. Walsh, at South St. Paul, on May 29 last, is on here. Judge Albert Johnson, of Red Wing, presiding. Three jurors were selected out of ten put on the stand: P. W. Mullaney, a barber of Hastings; George Valentine of Randolph; and Julius Schmidt, of Inver Grove, both farmers. The officers in charge were Acting Sheriff A. G. Merts, J. M. Wasser, of the Hastings court, W. W. Carson, of Hastings, and J. J. McCormack, special deputies in charge of the prisoner.

The defense will entertain the claim that the defendant was of unsound mind at the time the alleged crimes were committed. Gibbons, it will be remembered was a well known commission man of South St. Paul and formerly chief of police.

On the day of the tragedy he returned from the Lawrence sanitarium in Minneapolis, where he had been receiving treatment, and, going home is alleged to have shot his wife in the head while she was cooking supper and then drove to the house of Rev. E. J. Walsh, pastor of St. Augustine church, whom he also shot and killed. He gave himself up at the police station and was taken to St. Paul for safe keeping.

FARM AND GARDEN

WINDOW GARDEN FOR WINTER

Simple Greenhouse May Be Utilized for Raising Early Plants Like Cabbage, Tomatoes, Etc.

The drawing shown herewith illustrates a simple greenhouse that anyone handy with tools can easily make.

It consists of ordinary window-sash fastened together on three sides and to the sides and sill of the window.

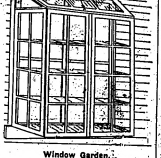
The roof is also a sash. It is loose and hinged at the top. It may be raised to any desired height, serving as a ventilator to the growing plants.

The best results are to be had from a south or southeast window.

The cut illustrates a window of four lights, 28x40 inches.

The shelves are 18 inches apart. In shorter windows the shelves may be closer, or fewer in number.

Sufficient heat may be supplied from the living room, or wherever there is a constant fire during the winter.



Window Garden.

This is where the plants of early cabbage, cauliflower, eggplant and tomatoes may be started, also the pansy, asters, petunias, nasturtiums and other free flowering annuals.

On the bottom shelf is a galvanized pan, 6 inches deep. This is filled with rich soil composed of leaf-mold and highly fertilized garden soil. In this the seeds are planted; the pot plants are arranged upon the shelves.

The whole thing should be put together with some screws so that it may be taken down and stored away during the summer.

Select a window for your garden that can be ventilated without any draught on the plants. One that is absolutely air-tight.

Do not have the shelves too near the glass, but allow space for a shade to be pulled down cold nights. When it is very cold, place several thicknesses of newspaper between the shade and the window.

The soil used for potting should be composed largely of leaf mould and sand. If leaf mould cannot be used resort to rich garden loams, sand and well-rotted manure, pulverized.

Pots, pans, baskets, boxes should be provided with holes for drainage and a layer of pebbles, stones, broken crockery or cinders put in the pots, etc., over the drainage holes.

When a plant needs water, the only safe way is to water thoroughly when the top soil is dusty and dry to the touch.

Spray once a week, and sponge off the leaves of the palms, rubber plants and all the smooth leaves with weak soap suds at least once a month.

Be careful about the temperature, and remember that plants can stand a lower temperature with greater fortitude than a high one. The hot, dry air in most homes is neither good for human or flower life, therefore provide ventilation to give fresh air to the home when cold weather comes.

Tools for the Farmer.

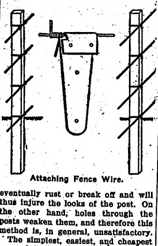
Are all the tools, from screwdriver to thrashing machine, snugly housed for the winter? They should be, but if not it is not too late to bring them in yet. Better do it now.

One of the best tools a farmer can have is a good riveter for mending leather straps of all kinds. One of these will save a good many trips to town and maybe more than [illegible]

ATTACHING WIRE TO POSTS

Numerous Methods of Fastening Fencing to Concrete—Simple and Cheap Way Illustrated.

There are numerous methods of attaching wire fencing to concrete posts. Some makers place staples or wire loops in the green concrete; others make holes in the posts. The former method is not desirable because the fastener cannot be located exactly where the wire of the fencing will come when the post is set in the ground; then, too, the fastener will eventually rust or break off and will thus injure the looks of the post. On the other hand, holes through the posts weaken them, and therefore this method is, in general, unsatisfactory.



Attaching Fence Wire.

The simplest, easiest, and cheapest way of fastening a wire fence to a concrete post is by encircling the post with a wire one size less than the corresponding wire in the fence proper and by twisting this wire around the strand of the fence. This is done in two ways. The fastening wire is placed around the post, twisted upon itself and then to the fence wire; or one end of the fastening wire is twisted around the fence wire, and the free end is then carried around the post and twisted on the other side to the same wire. Either plan is good, but care must be taken to draw the fastening wire tight, or else stock trying to get through the fence may raise or crush down the fencing with their heads. If any trouble is experienced, the post should be roughened at the fastening point with a cold chisel.

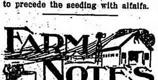
Expansion and contraction of the fence due to heat and cold are cared for by the tension curves or "kinks" in the wovenwire fencing, and no fear may be felt in drawing the fastening wires as tight as necessary. Wooden nailing strips should never be embedded in the posts, for moisture will swell the wood and crack the concrete.

Salt in Manure.

Salt added to fresh manure when in large heaps in the field four quarts per cord would not improve it. It would take up moisture and would tend to prevent heating, but nothing could be gained under the circumstances, while the salt itself does more harm than good to some crops. If salt is to be tried a better way would be to sprinkle a little in the manure gutters to soak up the liquid manure that might otherwise go to waste. But under any conditions not more than 200 to 300 pounds of salt should be used to the acre.

Good Cover Crop.

Melilotus (sweet clover), which is found growing luxuriantly by the roadside, has been found to be a good cover crop as well as an excellent one to precede the seeding with alfalfa.



A farm with bad roads is worse off than a farm with bad weather.

Sun is a fine thing for hogs and chickens, but it isn't good for grindstones.

Now that the general field work is over, keep the manure spreader in daily use.

A lighted lantern held between the feet under the robes means comfort on a cold day.

Instead of being an injury a good crop of aftergrass is an advantage for the following crop.

Corn fodder is one of the greatest feeds we have. It is easily handled and yields good returns.

Seed corn should always be stored in the ear. It should never be put into boxes, barrels or sacks.

In the cereals, barley has been found to require the shortest time for fixation of type and oats the longest.

Whether the corn is bought or selected from the field, it should be placed in dry, well-ventilated quarters.

A roll of tar paper and a bunch of lath applied with care will add greatly to the warmth of a cold barn or house.

There is really very little food value in ground corn cob. The cob itself is most all crude fiber and indigestible.

There are many methods of storing seed corn, but in all cases the place of storing must be dry and well ventilated.

The ordinary run of wheat screenings has a feeding value not to be neglected in this season of short feed and high prices.

Alfalfa is making good in the states east of the Mississippi and the farmers find that it is not so difficult to raise after all.

PRAYER IS WITHOUT RESULT

Boy's Patience is Exhausted After Frequent Petitions to Throne of Grace.

A young man who is prominent in church work in Philadelphia tells this about his nephew.

Harold is the youngster's name, and next door lives another boy by the name of Dewey. They are each seven years old, and like most children of their age are disposed to get into mischief as often as possible. Several days ago they found a man's coat lying on the front pavement while the owner was fixing a gas main. From the pockets of the coat the two boys abstracted several tickets, and when Harold's mother found it out she made him return the tickets and explained the sin which he had committed, warning him to pray that he be forgiven that night. He obeyed, and while on his knees added a prayer for Dewey as well.

The next night Harold's mother was in the next room when he said his prayers, and she heard him ask God to forgive Dewey for stealing a piece of cake. On the following evening he again was moved to ask forgiveness for his friend, this time for stealing three pieces of candy. Apparently his patience was exhausted, for the next evening his mother was in the adjoining room when he offered his evening prayer, and this is what she heard:

"Gosh darn it, God, I have done the best I could for Dewey. I guess you will have to watch him yourself."—Philadelphia Record.

Not What He Asked For.

A small boy hurried into the corner butcher shop and told the proprietor his mother wanted a nice, tender turkey for Thanksgiving, and she wanted it dressed. The butcher selected just such a bird from the lot in the window, and said, with satisfaction:

"Here's a dandy, my boy—just what your mother wants!"

"No, it ain't!" returned the youth. "That turkey hasn't any clothes on."—Judge.

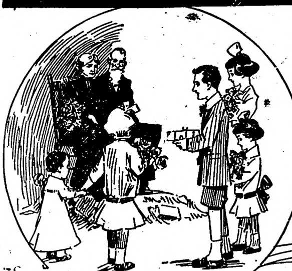
CHARGED WITH BOY'S DEATH.

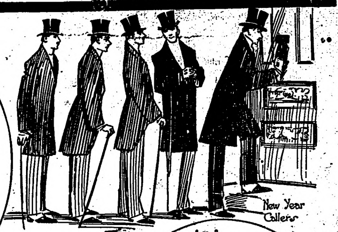
Accidental Discharge of Gun Results in Manslaughter Count.

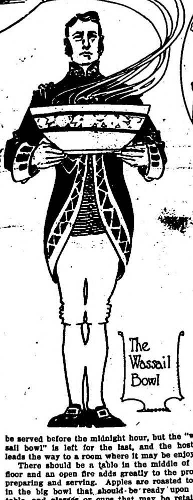
Stanchfield.—Walter Hegstrom, 18 years old, was arrested on a charge of manslaughter in the second degree, charged with the death of Raymond Larson, aged 6 years, about a month ago. Hegstrom had been out hunting and passing Larson's place, stopped. The gun was discharged, instantly killing the lad. Hegstrom is being held to the grand jury and is out on [illegible] bail.

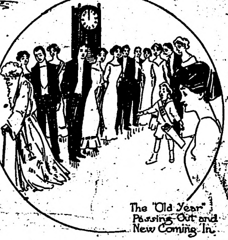
Celebrating New Year's Day



In France Grand-parents Sit in State to Receive the Children







The "Old Year" Passing Out and New Coming In.

IT HAS not been so many years ago that even young people cannot remember when New Year's day brought hosts of warm friends to exchange greetings and good wishes for the coming twelve months. Just why the custom of ladies receiving and men calling has fallen into disuse is a long story and not a very pleasant one.

Hostesses offered wine, eggnog and all sorts of drinks to soften the asperity of out of doors, to their men guests; a different sort partaken of at each house soon set brains in a whirl and manners suffered. The hospitality was abused; gentle ladies, outraged by having to receive men so far, under the influence of liquor that names even were forgotten.

So, of course, the matter rectified itself, as all such things will after a while. Women ceased to keep "open house" when men ceased to appreciate the honor shown by their reception in warm, softly lighted rooms by a bevy of fair women, daintily gowned and happy to extend greetings for the New Year.

But I have noted that in many cases the old-time custom is reviving; charming women are again welcoming their men friends, but not with a variety of intoxicating liquors to steal away ideas of propriety. It is not every man that can "look upon the wine when it is red" and partake of just enough. Better, then, to offer nothing stronger than hot coffee, or to those whom one knows well the foaming glass of well-made eggnog, that will not leave remorse along with a splitting headache the next morning.

This may not mean what it does bring, but where possible "let the dead past bury its dead," and grieve not over the mistakes of 1910. If they can be rectified, let them be so; if not, waste no vain regrets over what cannot be helped, but determine that exactly such mistakes shall not happen again.

Because what is experience for if not to teach? Harsh and seemingly without any feeling of pity, experience is indeed the "school for fools," and yet we do not learn. Like the inventive mind of the active child who does all sorts of things, nobody on earth ever thought of as possible, we mortals are forever forgetting lessons that may have been burned into our souls by this not-to-be-escaped teacher, and going into troubles anew, quite as bad, even if different.

By the time we learn it is time to die, usually, but we are fortunate to learn at all. It requires all the clearness of brain, all the activity of mind, all the fortitude of endurance to enable us to steer clear of the pitfalls of life anyway, and if we have not learned the lesson of caution by and through experience, how can we hope to escape these pitfalls again?

It is not in the making of good resolutions, but the determination to do the right thing, that our best course lies for this new year, that brings again the chance. If we can escape consequences, let us accept them without murmur; they are never so hard in the enduring as in the dreading.

And, first of all, let us all decide, deep down in the inmost recesses of our hearts, that our own failings are quite as great as those of our fellow-creatures. This in itself is so very worth while. To say, "I would not do so and so" is to mean that you know nothing about it; you do not know what you would do if you were situated as was the perpetrator of the very thing you are condemning.

Make allowances for temperament, for environment, for ancestry, for lack of education along the lines that perhaps you have been fortunate in traversing. Say to yourself, "Perhaps I should have done much worse." Then you will have reached the heights of understanding of the frailness of human nature and be prepared to make the new year better for yourself and all with whom you have associated. It is for this Christ was born and the calendar of years begun within the week after "the Holy Babe" came.

Where a hostess is quite sure of the congeniality of her guests, she can plan nothing more agreeable than the "watch party" for New Year's eve.

First, of course, there can be cards or dancing or music, or all three, with other attractive methods of entertaining, but as the hour of midnight draws near all assemble in one room. This should have two doors, and a big clock in full view. When the first stroke of the twelve sounds one of the doors is opened to admit "the old year," a feeble old man, who passes through the room with bows to right and left, disappearing through the rear door as the last stroke sounds.

Then appears a lovely boy, with beaming countenance and happy mein. He bears a quiver within which are arranged small gifts for each present, wrapped and tied to represent arrows; one of these he presents to each guest as he passes in turn before them. When he has distributed to all he disappears, but turns at the door to blow a light kiss to the assembled company. The windows are then thrown open, letting in the cold, fresh air, with the chimes of [illegible] may be served before the midnight hour, but the "wassail bowl" is left for the last, and the hostess leads the way to a room where it may be enjoyed.

There should be a table in the middle of the floor and an open fire adds greatly to the proper preparing and serving. Apples are roasted to go in the big bowl that should be ready upon the table, and glasses or cups that may be retained as souvenirs by guests are all made ready.

The genuine "wassail" is prepared as follows, according to a recipe that is centuries old: Boil half an ounce each cinnamon, ginger, nutmeg and four cloves, cardamom and coriander seeds in a couple of tumblerfuls of water; add to this half a gallon best ale and a quart of sherry wine, with sugar to taste; a pound or two will be needed. Heat again, but do not boil. Have the yolks of ten eggs and the whites of six beaten and put them first into the bowl; then slowly add the heated mixture, stirring slowly all the while; leave the other half of the liquor where it will come to a boil and add; lastly put in a dozen or as many as wished of fine apples that have been cored, filled with sugar and roasted.

The boiling of spices may be done beforehand, the ale and wine ready, the eggs beaten and the apples roasted when a hostess ushers her guests into the room to partake.

The Japanese, quaint, resourceful, quiet Orientals that they are, understand beauty better than we; they do not furnish rooms with all sorts of things to keep in order, with heavy curtains to keep out the fresh air and velvet-covered chairs to catch dust from every source.

So the hostess who is planning a "Japanese tea" will find it one of the easiest as well as most effective ways of entertaining. Cherry blossoms, the "flower of Japan," are to be had in paper, so perfect in form and color as to be mistaken for the real; cups and saucers for the everlasting tea, the favored drink of the little, nice Japanese woman, cost just what one cares to pay for them; some for a few cents are quite as pretty and characteristic as others worth several dollars the dozen.

And then the fans, and the parasols, and the chrysanthemums; the dainty confections and the pretty kimonos, with the big bow tied directly in the middle of the back—all these are distinctive and easily encompassed by the hostess of moderate means.

Every library has a list of books from which many customs of the Japanese may be collected. Jinrikishas, the queer small carriages in which natives and the ubiquitous tourist are carried to and fro, with the strong, if small, brown men as horses, may be provided for the amusement of guests. In these, if carriers can be obtained, short journeys from one room to another may be made, each room a province of the empire of Japan with decorations adapted.

Everywhere possible Japanese lanterns may hang; the favors may be Japanese, such as vases, fans, tiny parasols, etc. Fan-tan, a game played with cards, supposed to have originated in Japan, may prove interesting to guests. Not more than six should sit at one table for this game. No. 1 lays down a seven, or if there happens to be none in his hand he puts up a chip; these chips cost but little in celluloid, and each player may have so many counted out in the beginning of the game.

On one side of the seven is to be laid a six of the same suit, [illegible] A player who cannot build on one of these two must pay in a chip. Pretty trifles, Japanese characters, should be the prizes.

Japanese sweets can be had at any first-class grocery, and remember that tea served by the Japanese is made in each cup, and the cups are very tiny. They are lovely souvenirs.

As Christmas is the holiest of all days, the first day of January may be considered as emblematic of the happiest.

So it is that in some countries, notably France, the day is observed differently; all the younger members of families pay their respects to the older ones; grandparents sit in state to receive the children, and each of the latter, down to the tiniest babe, carries either bonbons or flowers to the revered elder ones.

It is such a pretty fashion; one the American mother might well adopt, in this land where old people are usually snubbed and rebuked if they venture to express an opinion, so conceited are the youth of today.

The Occidental can learn nothing more worth while from the Oriental than the reverence with which old people are treated in those so-called "heathen" countries.

Where the Latin races are so much in evidence, as in some of the southern states, this custom holds, and the French Babies are taken to visit "grand pere et grand mere" with all possible ceremony. Flowers, either bouquets or growing in small pots, are greatly favored as gifts to these dear old people, who, having tasted of the best life offers, are surely passing down hill, with memories sad and sweet as their companions.

Among pretty growing plants the dwarf peach trees in full blossom are lovely; after the fruit blossoms are gone tiny leaves appear and the little trees will live a long while with care.

Only in time of their blossoming are these especially pretty and florists manage to have them ready at this season of the year as gifts.

Where fresh flowers are so expensive, as in most northern climes, a single handsome blossom suffices, and in its stead a box of bonbons may be the gift. But the baby bears it in its rosy hands, and presents it with courtesy and delight to the aged ones. Is it not a beautiful custom? And may not all the mothers—and fathers—of little ones see that the dear older ones who may not, probably will not, be with them another year, adopt it with true understanding of how much, how very much, it means to the old to be remembered?

I have heard a dear woman say that among her recollections the most satisfying is the one wherein she gave an aged aunt a cup and saucer on a New Year's day. By the next the dear, patient aunt was not with her.

DYING

Silent and slow—silent and slow,
Over the hills in the glistening snow,
The old year goes to his final rest;
The moon looks down with a pitying eye.
The wind sweeps past with a quivering sigh,
And moans in the leafless tree tops nigh
Like a wandering soul distressed.

Feeble and frail, feeble and frail,
Swayed and bent by the northern gale,
Yet he falters not by the way;
His beard is white as the driven snow,
Off his forehead the scant locks blow,
Ah, me! and it was not long ago
He was young and blithe and gay.

Now let him rest, now let him rest,
The snow for a blanket to cover his breast,
And the winds to murmur a dirge.
We'll never forget him though brief was his stay,
He brought us much sunshine to brighten the way,
And taught us that all things must soon pass away
And into eternity merge.

No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach
A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion, or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength.
Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, invigorates the liver, strengthens the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

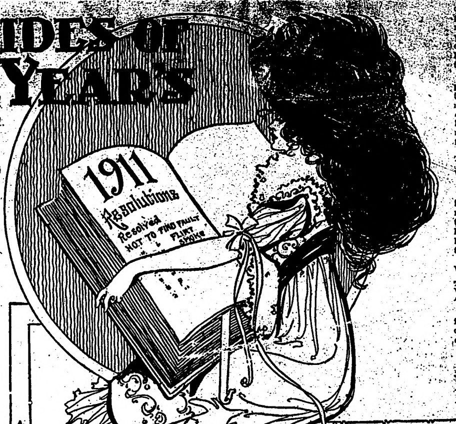
MANY SIDES OF NEW YEAR'S



THE custom of celebrating the New Year by leaving behind, in theory at least, one's pet pernicious habit or besetting sin, may be hackneyed, but it certainly is not entirely relegated to the limbo of things forgotten or outworn. Some time New Year's day, when a quiet moment in the day's swirl offers time for thought, there will be a hasty taking stock of the year that is gone, a recounting of errors and failures, a silent promise that this or that will not occur again.

And what does it all amount to, after all, this old custom of revamping threadbare resolutions or selecting new ones? The cynic will smile and say that it is all a waste of effort, a flash in the pan, a half-hearted glossing over of mistakes by wordy and none too sincere promises of reform. The humorist will have his little fling in cartoon and witty quip and jest. He will gurgle with the sardonic glee of Robin Goodfellow over the folly of mortals and find in every resolve new subject for laughter. From the pulpit on Sunday will sound the admonition of the minister and the moralist. They will take good resolutions seriously, and set upon them the stamp of divine approval. And whether the wry sneer of the cynic, the mocking grin of the humorist, or the approving smile of the moralist prophesy the fate of the resolutions and their maker, it will be true that even the most momentary impulses toward better things will not be entirely wasted.

There was a time when, in the simple faith of childhood, you set down in black and white your promises to do better. On the first page of your new diary, a yearly Christmas present, you wrote in your best Spencerian hand—we knew none better in those days—something like this: "During this year I resolve not to lose my temper; not to be saucy at home; not to put off doing the things I dislike; to read my Bible every day." Direct, sounding blows were these on the chain mail of your besetting sins of a quick temper, a wickedly sharp little tongue, procrastination, and childish irreligion. Behind closed doors, lest any one see him in so meek a moment, Brother Dick was scribbling earnestly: "I promise myself not to be late for dinner, not to forget to wash my neck and ears, not to get in debt to father for my allowance, and not to play hookey a single day." Of course you failed, both you and Dick, before the little diary had its new gilt dimmed or the soft penciling of the latter had blurred itself into unreproachful illegibility. But the effort wasn't altogether wasted, and there were fewer fits of temper and cleaner neck and ears than would otherwise have been.

A FLUCTUATING STREAM OF MEN IN HOLIDAY ATTIRE

We grown-ups miss, as we get older, some of the past and gone aids to New Year's resolves. The day was once upon a time more marked by pleasant social customs. Only in officialdom is New Year's now a stately day of ceremonial. But it is not hard to recall that a decade or two ago there still survived some of the dignity and good cheer that had attached itself to the day. Before the Christmas fruit cake had all been devoured, or the stone jars of small cakes suffered too severely from the inroads of rapacious children, preparations for New Year's day were well under way.

Children were not included in this celebration. This was essentially the festival of their elders. Orders to keep from under foot were rigidly enforced, and did you wish to see the fun no place remained but the second-story landing, which gave somewhat inconspicuously upon the hall below, with a strained view of the big parlors, and none of the dining room beyond. That it was there and in full working order was evidenced by a keen sense of smell.

It was always great fun to wander up and down the principal residence streets as noon drew near, to find out who were to be at home and who were not. A basket tied to the door knob with gay red ribbons said, for all the world to hear: "We are not receiving today." If you were a boy and daring, later in the afternoon you stole up on the step to peep in and discover, by the number of cards within, the respective popularity of village maids and matrons. Wherever the door lacked the basket, you knew that behind the drawn shades there was the soft glow of candles or the yellow glare of gas, poor substitute for sunlight on snow, but presumably kinder to complexions and gowns just a trifle passe. And you knew that in each house, subject only to trifling variations of background, there would be enacted the same scenes.

Into the front door that opened at the first touch of the bell passed a fluctuating stream of men in holiday attire. There were elderly beaux a-plenty in broadcloth that was brushed to the point of perfection, smart young dandies, sporting the newest fashion in ties; awkward beginners not quite used to the length of their frock coats—we called them Prince Alberts in the days when New Year's calls were in vogue—and a sprinkling of substantial-looking business men paying homage to the established custom of society. Everybody who was anybody in "our town" paid his devoirs to the incoming year by making the rounds of his friends' homes. [illegible] drops. "Happy New Year" resounded on all sides. In the course of the afternoon the indefatigable had seen all their friends, had sampled the choicest types of Christmas baking, had toasted again and again the New Year in punch of varying strength and pungency, or substituted coffee in homes where temperance principles were popular. They had said pretty things to popular dames in the stimulating atmosphere of holly and green wreaths, and had matched wits with fascinating damsels in the dangerous vicinity of mistletoe that still boasted some berries. It was all very gay, very informal, and very homey. At no other time or on no other occasion did the holiday hilarity reach so high a pitch.

"I'd like to do it all over again," is the testimony of one stately lady, whose home twenty years ago was the scene of yearly New Year's receptions. "No other social function on my calendar was such fun for the guests and so little trouble for the hostess. The decorating had been done a week before, and a few fresh flowers were all that were needed. Given bright lights, a dozen pretty girls to help entertain, the simplest cakes, and plenty of mildly exhilarating punch made from a recipe that my Kentucky grandfather declared harmless, and success was assured. When six o'clock came you had seen all the nice men of your acquaintance undisturbed by the usual influx of other women, and had sent them away at peace with the world in general and full of the spirit of neighborliness."

Meanwhile, upstairs in the library window seats curled the family small fry, watching the procession as it passed, commenting with juvenile frankness on the toilets of the callers, counting the visitors as they came, listening to the hum of voices downstairs, the girls hugging close to the sash, the boys making daring detours to "peek" through the balustrade, returning to report what young ladies were sitting on the steps with what young men, [illegible]

GREAT FUN TO WANDER UP AND DOWN THE PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE STREETS

guiled until six, when twinkling street lights warned the callers to retreat.

Not a serious way to start the New Year! No, but a friendly one, that left hostesses and callers with a glow of human friendliness to last as warmth for many a day. And if seriousness were lacking, the same decade that enjoyed New Year's calling found itself also at one with the custom of watch-night service. For, in "our town," as in yours, mayhap, it was the thing to spend the closing hours of the old year in the quiet seriousness of prayer and sacred song. Children had their share in this, for fathers and mothers had not in that simpler time learned to fear the giving of definite religious instruction to their sons and daughters. It was clear and plain that a child must be trained in the way he should go, and watch night was a part of that training.

And, indeed, no youngster ever tried to beg off. There was first of all the joy of doing the unusual and the fun of sitting up past his bedtime. So you hied yourself to the nursery couch or the sitting-room lounge, after a hot supper, an old-fashioned winter supper of sausage and fried potatoes or scalloped oysters and muffins, and took a long, long nap. At half-past ten, father waked you, tucked you into cap and overcoat, and the family party started out under the cold stars, snow crunching under foot, to the nearby church.

Not so very long ago the writer came across an old chromo, of the sort that looks, in a dim and favorable light, like a fairly decent oil painting. In its day it had doubtless been the chief ornament of a well-furnished, comfortable parlor. Now it cluttered the window of a second-hand shop, dingy and out of sorts with fate. But even in the unflattering light of a dusty show window, it had a certain charm for the one who found it. It was the picture of a watch-night service, such as she had once known so well. Bright moonlight flooded the scene, bringing out in sharpened detail the snow-laden boughs of drooping elms and the Gothic spire of a small stone church. From stained-glass windows and opened door came streaming the warm glow of shaded gas jets. From village streets flocked men and women and children, stopping to say a word of greeting as they passed into the vestibule. The spell of the picture took her with the speed of the magic carpet or of the seven-leagued boots, back to the New Year's eves of her girlhood.

So she had walked with father and mother [illegible] of those who had filled the pews, especially that of one man, the governor of the state, whose aquiline profile, flashing eyes and straight, glossy black hair formed a never-to-be-forgotten personality.

Watch-night hymns have a personality of their own, as those of Christmas or Easter, if not so widely known. They are naturally serious and a bit foreboding, with a touch of the melancholy that is associated with the rapid flight of time.

The year is gone, beyond recall,
With all its hopes and fears,
With all its bright and glad'ning smiles,
With all its mournful tears,

is an old Latin hymn to a common meter tune that illustrates the tendency of this branch of hymnology. Charles Wesley has been most prolific in voicing this thought.

Wisdom ascribe, and might, and praise,
To God who lenthens out our days;
Who spares us yet another year,
And makes us see his goodness here, is an old favorite. Often just on the stroke of midnight another of his voiced the feelings of the congregation, that beginning:

Join, all ye ransomed sons of grace,
The holy joy prolong,
And shout to the Redeemer's praise,
A solemn midnight song

A bit more joyful is the splendid, quaintly irregular,

Come, let us anew our journey pursue,
Roll round with the year,
And never stand still till the Master appear.

It was easy after this to go home filled with loftiest aspirations, ready to begin the new diary with ambitious resolves that were bound to o'erleap themselves because of their very loftiness. There was one watch night when there drifted into the ken of the child the poem that has since meant to her, as it does to many, the very spirit of this day. From the choir gallery, just before the midnight hour, came the softened chorus of a strange melody. Then into the silence of the vaulted church rose a wonderful message in a voice that bore conviction to the listeners. It sang to the organ and the hushed accompaniment of the choir:

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild skies,
The flying cloud, the frosty light;
The year is dying, in the night;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Through the whole of the splendid poem it swept, on to the triumphant conclusion:

"Ring in the Christ that is to be."

To the child the most dramatic moment of the evening came just on the stroke of the incoming year. While outside whistles blew and giant crackers exploded, bells clashed and clanged, inside hands clasped hands while together they sang the good old standby, "Blest be the tie that binds," before the hush of the benediction and the glad chorus of "Happy New Year's" that concluded the service.

There is another sort of quiet ushering in of the baby year that is conducive to the good resolve that counts so easily under favorable conditions. There were those in the old days, as there are in these, who felt that after the gala afternoon the happiest way of all was to sit quietly about the fire, chatting with half a dozen congenial spirits, singing a bit if the spirit moved, reminiscing as old times came back in the hush, and ending with the silent toast and the dash of sentiment that makes "Auld Lang Syne" the fitting song for such a moment.

That some such happy hour may begin little 1911's first appearance is the best wish one can offer to friends.

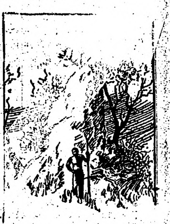
Let the auspicious morning be expressed [illegible]

AN INSECT "SKYSCRAPER"

A Termite "Ant Hill" in South Africa Which Is by No Means Extra Large.

Boston.—Though most abundant in hot climates, the termites, improperly called white ants, reach far beyond the tropics extending into our own hemisphere, from Chile to New England. The African species build great pinnacled nests, 50 feet in circumference at the base and sometimes 40 feet high. Formerly the plains of Africa were in many places thickly studded with these hills, but the advance of civilized man has driven them back from the neighborhood of the foreign settlements.

The nests are destroyed partly to obtain the clay, which is valuable for building purposes, but principally to rid the country of the insects which are the most formidable pests of that climate.



An Insect Skyscraper.

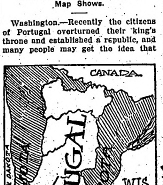
In founding a nest the termites erect first a single pinnacle several feet high and very small about the base, and then others near it; finally these are consolidated into a single dome and the middle pinnacles, having performed their part as scaffolding, are removed. When it has reached its maximum size the nest is a rounded dome of hard, solid clay upon whose outer surface grass and weeds grow freely, and in the dry season it looks not unlike a haycock.

The injuries wrought by these insects are terrible. They invade every vegetable fiber except cotton and destroy wood, matting, linen and woolen clothing, books and parchment by sap and mine. They habitually avoid the air and light, not because of an antipathy to them, but because of their helplessness and their necessity of a moist atmosphere. In consequence of this peculiarity their ravages are unobserved till everything sinks into ruins. When they desire to reach a certain point a covered gallery is immediately built to that point, that they may reach it unseen. African villages which have been abandoned, in a year or two have utterly disappeared and the ground on which they stood is found covered with vegetation. Posts are sometimes so riddled that a slight kick will dissipate them, leaving nothing in their stead but a heap of dust and debris. At Tournay, Charente, France, a whole dinner party, guests, host, table and all were let down through the floor into the cellar without a moment's warning in consequence of the termites' depredations in the flooring and beams.

PORTUGAL'S RELATIVE SIZE

New Republic Is Not Such a Great Country, as the Accompanying Map Shows.

Washington.—Recently the citizens of Portugal overturned their king's throne and established a republic, and many people may get the idea that Portugal is a great country; but it isn't. Portugal contains 35,490 square miles of territory, and the state of Minnesota 83,365 square miles. They are shown in comparison in the picture. The state of Maine, with 33,040 square miles, comes nearest the size of Portugal.



Portugal and Minnesota Compared.

The Canary's Ears.

Boston.—A canary's ears are back of and a little below its eyes. They are not hard to find when one has learned where to look. There is no outer ear, such as animals have, but simply a small opening which is covered by feathers. It is quite surprising that birds should possess the very [illegible]
